Muv-Luv Reversal

By: Zuoriel

Takeru has been leading a normal life until now. During the summer vacation of his second year in college he's invited by his high school friends to meet up again, to which he agrees. Shirogane doesn't know that this decision would release the nightmares that have been haunting him for some time, nightmares that would be better left forgotten.

Status: ongoing

Published: 2020-01-10

Updated: 2022-08-20

Words: 1291656

Chapters: 99

Rated: Fiction M - Language: English - Genre: Angst/Sci-Fi - Reviews: 592 - Favs: 147 - Follows: 151

Original source: https://www.fanfiction.net/s/13475123/1/Muv-Luv-Reversal

Exported with the assistance of FicHub.net

Muv-Luv Reversal

Introduction
One Last Day in Peace
Innocent Fighting
Integrate
Break Point
Back to the Battlefield
Unexpected Aid
Beginning of his Strife
The Remnants He Left Behind
Ace Recruit
Entangled Threads
Sore Point
As the Fog Sets In
Watering the Seed of Doubt
The Start of the Storm
Before the Downpour
Muddy Water Moody Hearts
Turbulent Winds
The Eye of the Storm
Clouded Horizon
Towards the Downpour
Isolated Rains
Rekindling Point
The End of the Storm
Conflict
Into the Undercurrents
Suspicions and Misunderstandings

Invited to a Masquerade
Ignited
First Answers
Ripples of Change
Introductions of the Masquerade
Links of the Undercurrents
Reluctance
Their Sacrifice
Turning Points
His Sisters
Debris Junkyard
Kriegspiel
True or False?
A Mistake Worth Making
Key Words of the Masquerade
Evoking Bonds
Resolve Underlying Shadows
Weary Homecoming
Ignoble Integration
Lull in the Masquerade
Left Behind
Disciple
Interference in the Masquerade
Enduring the Restart
At Square Zero
Guidance of the Claret Hollows Stranger
Lupine Seed
Shirogane (I)

My Beloved Brother
Shadows of the Silver Blossom
Burdens of the Setting Sun
Lurking Threats
Downtime in the Masquerade
Behind the Mask
Downtime in the Masquerade (II)
Downtime in the Masquerade (III)
One Last Night in Peace (I)
One Last Night in Peace (II)
Nicks in the Edge
Dancing in the Masquerade
Despair After Death
Rumbling Hearts (I)
Rumbling Hearts (II)
Rumbling Hearts (III)
Inflection Point - Waking the Dragon
Mind's Off Matter
Iceberg of the Soul (I)
Iceberg of the Soul (II)
Shirogane (II)
Riding the Undercurrents
Jester of the Masquerade
Nidhogg & Freyja
Tuning Duty
Roses and Ashes (I)
Roses and Ashes (II)
Landmines in the Masquerade
Link of Desire
Jester's Trickery

Pulling and Being Pulled Jester's Quiz
Cracks in the Masquerade
Jester's Dagger
To Be or Not To Be Unnumbered Excuse
Shrouded Silver Blossom
Steering in the Undercurrents
Small Steps
Wavering
Anchor
Distortion
Goodbye

One Last Day in Peace

This story is a fan-made work of fiction, made for entertainment purposes only.

I do not own Muv-Luv nor any of the other media referenced, either directly or indirectly, in this work. All copyrights belong to their respective owners.

Names, characters, organizations and events depicted in this story are either a product of the author's imagination or portrayed in a fictional manner to serve the narrative. Any relation to actual persons, living or dead, organizations, existing in the present or from the past, or actual real life events is purely coincidental.

The views and opinions shown in this story do not represent the author's nor the original source material author's.

This story is made as a direct sequel to Muv-Luv Alternative and it is recommended to have read the original VN trilogy already , due to the large details of the world that the narrative will assume the reader already knows.

However, as you'll see down below when you start reading, Reversal works as a sort of AU, Alternate Universe that is, and will diverge from canon at some points. Do not expect a carbon copy of Alternative's events in this fi c . This is not the story to read if you're looking for canon-compliant content.

There also will be unmarked spoilers present throughout the plot , pertaining to other media from the Muv-Luv franchise and other works from AGE, like Total Eclipse, some side-stories from the Photon games, and Rumbling Hearts/Kimi ga Nozumu Eien/[Insert official localization name here], to name a few.

This fic is also the starting point of its series, most of my other works for the Muv-Luv fandom will be related to this story in one way or the other. Author notes at the end of certain chapters will indicate when it is recommended to go and take a peek at the other material I write.

WARNING :

This story will contain themes that may upset certain sensibilities and aren't appropriate for some audiences. Reversal takes all the darkest elements of Muv-Luv Alternative and brings them into the lime light, exacerbating them at times. While not all chapters will contain such subjects, the story as a whole will employ said topics, at times without notice and out of the blue.

Thus, the following tags apply to this story: AU - Post-Canon, AU - Dark, H eavy Angst, Cruelty, Torture, Blood and Violence, Bigotry and Prejudice, Graphics Des criptions, Mental Health Issues and Anguish, Repressed Memories and PTSD, Tragedy, and Doomed Timelines .

Reader discretion is advised.

If any of the above tags could affect you negatively, do not proceed any further. Don't let the dark contents of this story ruin your day.

At times, I shall leave chapter-specific warnings at the start in an author's note when I deem the content warrants it. Do not take the warnings lightly, they are there for a reason. However, a lack of a warning does not mean the content cannot take a dark turn. Proceed at your own discretion, and do not expect this story to be anything other than what it's showing itself to be.

Due to the repetition of issues different commenters have had with th e plot of this fic , I suppose I should give you all a small heads-up:

S ome of my headcanons and takes on Muv-Luv have been considered toxic by a few , at times this story has been referred to as

'dark angsty shit', 'misery porn', and other derogatory adjectives and phrases . I know my writing isn't what the average Muv-Luv fan enjoys or seeks in a story but, while I appreciate constructive criticism, hatred won't be tolerated.

Reversal might be a swan dive into depression and does have a large serving of narrative and pacing issues , but this is my story to write. If it isn't to your liking, all I ask is for you to close the tab. Let's keep this civil and not resort to insults if the content does not align with what you hoped the story would be .

You're free to comment what you feel about the story, just please spare me the flames.

Also, as a little point of advice, the prologue on its own more or less tells the tone and way the story as a whole will go. If you don't enjoy what you' ve read by the end of chapter five, then you probably won't find the rest fitting to your tastes.

With all that said and without further delays , be welcome to my ride. Sit tight, bring some tissues, some cookies, and abandon all naive thoughts and romantic expectations.

Here's hoping your stay is a pleasant one .

---

"All I see is shattered pieces

I can't keep it hidden like a secret

I can't look away

From all this pain in the world we've made

Every day you need a bulletproof vest

To save yourself, from what you could never guess

Am I safe today?

When I step outside in the wars we wage

Our future's here and now

Here comes the countdown!"

Rise, by Skillet.

---

Muv-Luv Reversal

[ Prologue : Unalterable ]

Chapter 1:

One Last Day in Peace

---

August 5th, 2003. Extra Timeline

(Hiiragi District. Takeru's House. )

[Takeru]

---

"Come on, you have to straighten your hair! You can't meet her with these looks, Takeru!" Mom nags at me with a frown, getting closer and brushing my fringe, trying to 'fix' my hair.

So I raise an arm in defense, taking a step back. "That's enough, Mom! Leave my hair alone. And… it's not what you think. We're just meeting to pass the time, that's all."

"Yeah, right. And I'm a three-headed monkey," giving me a side glance for a second, she takes out her perfume and starts to shower me in it. "After all the prep work you did yesterday. You're not fooling your mother, young man!"

"Come on, sto- Cough ! Stop it with the perfume! Do you wanna kill me or what?!" Coughing a bit, waving a hand to send away the clouds of vanilla she had poured on me, I take a few steps back towards the door. "Really, it's… just a meetup, nothing more."

Narrow eyes, pursed lips, she then shakes her head. "Fine, whatever. But at least do your hair again. Why haven't you cut it already? It's the middle of summer, too."

"Shut up. It's not even that long, anyways," curling some of it behind my ears, rechecking everything was on me already, a shiver ran down my spine. Finally, it's time to set off. "Well, I'll be back before it's dark."

"Yes, you do that. But if you end up… sidetracked, make sure to at least call to-"

"Mom!"

"What? Come on, Takeru. Read the hints!" Waving a finger at my nose, her eyes start blazing. "You didn't do all this prep for nothing, right?"

"Sigh. Just… It's complicated."

"Ha! Now you finally look like an adult." Smiling much, she gives me a strong pat on the back. "Have fun, and don't be too nervous, okay?"

"Yes… Thanks, Mom. Later," putting on my shoes, giving a nod, I walk to the door.

"And if you do go to a hotel, make sure to use a cond-"

"MOM!"

Crossing her arms, she sighs and shakes her head, telling me to be careful out there in the city. Sighing, feeling empty all of a sudden, I just open the door almost apathetically and step outside. Taking a sharp breath, feeling the heat of the sun on my skin, I start making my way to the station.

Luck seems to be on our side today, though. We've had random rains every day recently but for now the sky is clear, it's nicely hot and according to the forecast it's not raining today.

As I walk out on the street of another summer, parents with their children on a trip, couples huddling close, and the usual bustling of the season, the soft caress of the wind reaches my face as it blows around. This summer has been weird, with all of these random rains, but it's also not that humid heat that always brings my mood down. It's nicely warm, yet not oppressing.

And yet, as I breath in, my legs grow heavy, a quiver in my ankles delays my steps. Running a hand over my hair, I can't help but to sigh. Plucking my lips as I see my reflection on a house's window, can't help but to wonder if she'll come.

And even if she does… What do I tell her? I gulp, placing both of my hands on my jean's pockets. Kicking the air as I pick up my pace, feeling the coldness of my keys and the odd shape of my wallet, I close my eyes and try to remember the lines I had practiced to break the ice, and yet my mind comes as blank as the clouds up there.

"Sigh… What's wrong with me?" Everyone else is gonna be there too, at least.

"Takeru-chan! Wait up!"

A voice I know well snaps me out of my inner worries. As I stop walking and look back, I see a red head running towards me.

Dressed with a cerulean sleeveless blouse with lines of white, cream colored shorts and her trademarked yellow ribbon, the woman in question leaves a cloud of dust in her trail as she rushes towards me.

"I said wait up! Why're you leaving without me?!" Sumika says, or rather shouts, while flailing her arms in the air as she tries to catch up to me.

Fuck… I totally forgot. Me and spacing out, name a more iconic duo. Thanks to Mom's nagging, it slipped my mind Sumika insisted on us going together to the meetup, even if it meant waiting for me. Looks like, for once, I was ready before her.

"Sorry, my bad," giving her a small bow, I try to rise a smile as she comes closer. "Mom was being real nosy, so it kind of slipped my mind."

"You're horrible!" Puffing her cheeks to the brim, she hits my shoulder once she arrives by my side, "I always, always wait for you. Why didn't you ring the bell to tell me you were ready?"

"I would have, but Mom was… well, being nosy."

"About what? You're not just lying to cover the fact that you forgot, right?" And again, that dubious side glance, that tilt of her head.

"Sigh… I'm not, she just got too bothersome at the last second. That my hair is too long, that I didn't put on perfume, to remember to use a… A-Anyways, sorry for not waiting."

"Well… Doesn't matter. So, everything's good?" Her usual smile back up, we start walking to the station.

"Yeah, same as always."

Making small talk, we keep going our way to the station. Crossing the streets, squeezing through the crowds that grow when we leave the calmness of the neighborhood, dodging rushing kids and douches that decide to make out in the middle of the fucking road, the station becomes visible in the distance. Just a few minutes more… Gulping, I hide my hands on my pockets, aware of my heartbeats for a second.

"H-Hey, don't walk so fast!" Sumika complains, slowly dodging the stream of people to come back near me with a light jog, and puffed cheeks.

"Come on, Sumika. I ain't even walking fast, you know?" I scratch my head, readjusting my jacket while she catches her breath once she comes closer.

"Lies, you're marching as if it were the end of the world. You didn't even slow down in the middle of that giant crowd."

"What? It's not like I was trying to. I just dodged the people, that's all."

"… Hmm. But really, don't walk so fast. We still have plenty of time, right? Let's just chat for a while, it's been so long since we had time off to hang out."

"… Did you forget why we're out so early today?"

"What's with the glare?" Plucking her lips, she again punches my sides as we wait for the red to turn green. "But yeah, I get how you feel. I'm anxious to meet everyone after so long, too. Being in college sure is hard, right?" She lets out a small sigh as I nod in complete agreement, but Sumika quickly recovers her smile as we start walking again. "So there's a lot of catch up to do today, especially about how we did on our tests! But, I wonder what should we eat? Takeru-chan, think some ice cream before coming back sounds good?" She asks with a tilt of her head and a smile.

So, she really forgot about it. How did someone with such a short attention span ever made it to college is a mystery to me.

Sumika has been in a great mood since she passed two major tests with a really good score and hasn't shut up about it for a single second, so it's understandable she's so eager to meet again with the gang. And yeah, ice cream before we part ways sounds real nice.

However.

I, on the other hand, have something to do today. Sure, meeting up with the gang is gonna be fun. But there's another reason why I made sure to get up early today.

Leaning closer to her shoulder, I narrow my eyes. "Sumika-kun, surely you did not forget why we're meeting specifically today, right?"

So she pouts. "What's up with that tone? We're meeting today because the weather has been awful lately and Yoroi-kun asked us to-" she stops mid-sentence as the realization comes to her, eyes going wide. "The tournament! You're gonna be late for the registration!" So she shouts while a single hair of hers starts to convulse violently as a few sparks fly off it, drawing the stares of a few onlookers.

Now that I think about it that antenna is always on the move, almost as if it reflected her feelings. What's the deal with her hair?

"If you remembered then let's hurry, if I don't make it in time you'll have to apologize to Mikoto."

As soon as the light gave us the okay, I start to pick up the pace. So Sumika starts shouting at my back to not go so fast. She keeps at it until we finally reach the train station, despite the onlookers. Despite the whispers, smiles, and gazes that assume the wrong thing about us.

---

A few minutes later.

(Train.)

---

Par for the course for this time of summer, the train is packed. Little children happily play with their Game Guys as their parents relax on their seats, friends chat away their excitement about something or the other, and a few lucky fellows lean closer to each other, speaking in whispers. Absentmindedly, I look out the window, towards the city that stretches far and wide. So little has changed, yet so much has.

"But for real, I think everybody is going to be shocked when they see you," Sumika says with a grin.

"It's just been half a year since we last got together. It's not like I got a new haircut or anything," I look away from her shiny eyes, choosing instead to play with the keys on my jean's pocket.

"Just look at you! You're so diligent now, you wake up super early to go jogging, haven't failed a single test yet, and you even learned to cook!"

"Well, I have to keep my shit together now. Can't be bothering my parents anymore and eating something you make yourself is a really nice thing, you know." It really is, I don't know why I didn't start cooking sooner.

Sumika gives me a dubious look as she pokes my arm, groaning a bit, clearly dissatisfied with my answer. "Then, what about this? You've been obsessed with training as of late. What's gotten into you?"

"I just want to be fit. With all the time I spend sitting if I don't exercise a bit I'll end up slow as a slug."

Not satisfied with my answer yet again she keeps poking my arm as the train shakes. "Really? Then, why are you so jacked? Just being fit is not the same as being a bodybuilder. Are you going to enlist in the army or something?"

"Maybe. 1st Lieutenant Shirogane, it has a nice ring to it, don't you think?" I smirk while moving my brows up and down, to try to lighten the mood.

"… What's up with that?" Expression sobering up, her shoulders fall as deep as her tone. "Joining the army? What about your studies, or your parents, or…" she trails off, her eyes locked on the floor.

Lightly hitting her sides with my elbow, I shrug back at her. "I'm kidding, you know? I'm not dropping out of college or anything."

"Okay, but you better not go join the army for real or-"

"I'm not. My bad, my bad. Sheesh, you're so dramatic as of late," I let out a small chuckle as the announcer marks our stop, as Sumika's stare falls down, as she says not a single word more.

Once the shaking ceases, I exit the train along the stream of people, someone stepping on my foot, making me bump into someone else, which then turns into the usual complains that happen when the trains are this packed. Waiting for her nearby, we double check everything is still on us before going to the stairs and out to the street. And again, we squeeze through the waves of people, Sumika complaining as a few rushing suits almost bump into her, me cursing them under my breath.

"But, hey, why are you so insistent on training as of late?" She asks once we begin walking side by side again.

"… I need to do something besides studying, that's all," I shrug, rolling my eyes. She holds my gaze, a finger on a cheek. I know I gained a lot of muscle in the last months but you really need to lay off.

"Well, whatever," she regains her smile, taking a few steps forward. "So, how do you think everybody else is doing?"

I reply with hums, thankful that she dropped the questions. It's been real hard to talk with you as of late. Always asking about why I do stuff, saying I'm being weird. I know you mean well but give me some space already. I'm not a kid anymore.

… I know. I'm a coward. I shouldn't have left things in the air. And now I can't bring myself to crush her hope.

Though, I do kind of understand her, since I did change my usual routine. Then again, she wasn't this bothersome when I started to do stuff on my own, and stopped her from coming to wake me up. Wonder why now of all times…

"So, hey…" Sumika speaks up as we crossed a street, her voice getting low, her shoulder touching mine. "You feeling fine today?"

"Yeah? What's up? Do I look sick to you?"

"No, I didn't mean it like that." Her gaze burrows away, the hand holding her purse tightening its grip. "You didn't have any of those nightmares today?"

"… Don't worry. I've got the thing under control."

"Are you sure? If you want to talk about it, I'm-"

"Yeah, I'm fine. I slept as well as I haven't in a long time. Don't worry, Sumika."

"If you say so. So… Oh! Did Meiya-san reply in the end?"

"… No. Mom told me nobody called, so I don't know if she'll accept the invitation," I look down, letting a sigh out.

"You didn't say anything weird when you called her, right?" That tilt, that sideglance again.

"Of course not. Tsukuyomi-san just cut me off suddenly. We might just be bothering her now that she's the head of the group," sighing again, my shoulders drop a bit.

"Well, yeah… Shame, I wanted to chat for a while with her," Sumika also sighs, a hand playing with her hair. "You think it's because of that scandal?"

"Yeah, I'm sure they must still be very sensitive towards showing themselves in public. I was hoping Meiya would find some minutes to come to a place she was comfortable with, but since they didn't call me back…"

We both look down, I pluck my lips again as I start to slow down, remembering that talk. I had never heard Tsukuyomi-san being so cold and direct to me. I don't know if I should be happy or not. On one hand, I don't have to be so nervous about what will I tell them today, on the other, I still wanted to see them, even if only one last time.

"Come on, Takeru-chan," Sumika pulls my arm, again getting as close as she used to back in school. Close enough to let me see my reflection as her eyes remain on mine, as she gives me a wide smile, bright as the weather today. "There's nothing we can do now. You called them and invited Meiya-san. If they come or not, that's their decision. Let's just chill and enjoy the day. And if Meiya-san doesn't come, we just call her later tonight. Okay?"

"Sigh… Yeah, I get it. Sorry for getting so down."

"It's fine. I wanted to see her too, after all this time," she moves back, making a small smile while looking up, slowing down her pace.

We stop at another crossroad, waiting for the light to change. Yet, the conversation dies down silently, like the Dreamcost. Still, she's stealing glances at me. Sigh… You just won't stop looking after me, no matter what I tell you. Though, it's not like I can blame Sumika.

These stupid nightmares are still fucking with me even during summer break. I had thought it was the pressure from the exams that was getting to me, but they don't stop coming. Always that same wasteland that extends everywhere, always that same feeling of emptiness in my gut as me and the guys from school get sent to war or some shit. Sometimes I survive and I see that eternal wasteland littered with corpses and debris, and a lot of black fire. Sometimes I die and feel like I'm being devoured by some horrible monster.

Maybe I'm scared of the eventual grind that will come once we enter the workforce? I mean, everybody seems rather tense lately about the economy and junk.

… But still, there are a few things that are way too weird and disturbing, even by my dreams' standards. There's this girl with silverish white hair in the dreams, a girl I've never seen before. She looks really sad for some reason but when I try to reach out she runs away from me. There's also a lot of other people with uniforms that are kinda mixed within the wasteland, buried or fused into it as they get devoured by the shadowy monsters. I knew I shouldn't have read Furiae, that damn eclipse must have fucked my brain up. And here I was, thinking the Dark Blader arc was too metal already.

But, thing is, that wasteland is not the most disturbing thing I see in the nightmares. Looking to my side, pacing right alongside me, vibrant and bright. She looks so full of energy, maybe a bit too much. The complete opposite of the Sumika I see in the dreams. Lying in some sort of bed, dressed in some perverted skin-tight suit, holding something close to her chest. And completely still, unmoving. And every time the dream gets to that part the girl with white hair appears, saying that Sumika is dead.

Focusing on my studies has been hard as of late, so jogging, cooking, and exercising have done wonders to keep my mind clear of the images and screams from my dreams. I haven't yet told Sumika about my nightmares in detail, but she kept insisting that I was being weird. The things being so vivid I sometimes couldn't even look at her in the eye, she got real nosy about what was going on. So, I once told her I have these recurring nightmares and that it's been hard to sleep sometimes.

That was the worst mistake I've made in this year since it only made her worry more.

Today, however, there were no nightmares, no echoes stuck on my ears, no cold sweat covering my back as I wake up. A welcome change, it was F-ing time this stopped. I absentmindedly look at the sky, so clear today with only a few rebel clouds dancing above. It's so different than the one I see in my dreams, turned gray and intoxicated. And yet, somehow, that emptiness comes back to my gut and I swallow the breath I was about to release.

Why does it make me feel so sad, thinking about these dreams?

Sumika keeps making small talk as we move towards our destination, with me answering in hums. About what to talk about first, what to eat, poking fun at how we'll play in the tournament.

"But really, it's such good luck today's so nice!" She says, as bright as the sun when her face enters my view to get my attention.

"Well, the fucking rain had to stop at some point. You all have been trying to find a good date, we just got lucky everything coincided like this," I shrug, nodding.

"Yeah, no joke. Sakaki-san and Miki-chan really pushed to see us all again but the weather was so shitty for so long. Lucky you, Takeru-chan," smirking, she chuckles as she sways, moving a finger at me. "You get to finally spend some time away from the text books, worrying about your grades, to play your beloved Valgern-On."

"Oi, don't get cocky. Just because you got some good scores doesn't mean you're suddenly a genius."

"Oh, I dunno. All I know is, you haven't scored anything near a ninety yet!" Pointing a finger at the sky, flashing an evil smirk, she cackles for a second. "But really, are you two serious about the tournament?"

"Yeah? Why, got a problem?" Narrowing my eyes, I eye her sideways. You better not have something against my beloved Valgern-On, Sumika-kun.

"Sigh… Just don't start sulking when you lose, okay?"

"Who's gonna lose?"

"You, of course."

"… Say that again, you punk. I fucking dare you."

"Hohoho, why so mad, Takeru-chan? Why so defensive all of a sudden?" Again chuckling, she bumps her shoulder on mine.

"Ugh, shut up. You're such a bother, really."

"What? Not my fault you're so serious about a game."

"It's not just a game!" Feeling my eyes blazing, I rise a fist and inhale sharply.

"C-Come on, don't shout. People are looking."

"The reason why Mikoto asked us if today was a good day wasn't just because there's a Valgern-On tournament in the Tokyo Grand Salon. The winners not only get prize money but they also get to try the new version of the game one full month before its release! Don't you get it, Sumika?"

"… I get the money part but, why are you so hyped about a new game? Isn't it just the same thing but with different graphics?" She says, void of fire and motivation, giving me a sideglance as we hurry to cross a street.

"Not at all, you stupid idiot. The engine's completely new, and Zegga said they want to make it their flagship series for the fighting genre, to strike back at Nientendo's Squash Mereenge. After how the Dreamcost failed, they're pumping everything they've got into their upcoming games," circling a finger in the air, I retell as we stop for a sec to catch our breath, nodding to myself.

She doesn't seem too enthused, merely blinking in silence as she crosses her arms. "Huh… But if it's just that, why not wait a month to buy the new game?"

"Because there hasn't been any leaks yet. Nobody knows what's the new game like, what new units will there be, or what the story mode is about, so that's why I wanna at least give this a serious shot." Also, because it's gonna come out in the PlayStallion 2 and I don't have the money to buy one.

"But if it's all about fighting robots, I don't think you'll be missing out much, right? Not like you have the time to regularly play in the arcade anymore."

"… Siiigh." My weakness hit, shoulders sag as my feet drag a bit over the indifferent asphalt.

"Come on, don't get so down," patting my shoulder slowly, she gets a bit closer again. "If we endured the allnighters until today, we'll brave all the ones coming right up!"

"Yeah, I guess. But still, I miss playing Valgern-On."

"Then manage your time well, and play it on the Dreamcost."

"It's just not the same as doing it on the cockpit or against other people. And there's only so much you can enjoy replaying the same story mode over and over again. That's why I really am looking forward to anything that's shown of the new game during the event. Maybe not at release date, but I really wanna see how they handle the sequel in a small PV or something like that," smiling again, picking up the pace, I place both hands behind my head.

"But, why are you so hyped about it?" Brows crossing, she stares as her arms overlap. "It's just giant robots exploding all over."

"Sigh… Not at all, Sumika," coughing, straightening my posture and pushing back both shoulders, I inhale to fill my stomach with as much air as I can. To make a good teaching impression, a stoic voice. "You see, Valgern-On's original setting was all about human warfare, about fighting off the cyber legion made of automatons commanded by Tango, a quantum supercomputer. All the foreshadowing points to the next game happening right after Tango's self-deletion, but some people in the forums have brought up a few finer details in the most recent updates, as if there were something else lurking behind curtains besides the threat of the automated robots going rogue. Many theorize that's the real reason why Tango spared the life of the main character instead of simply letting him die. So, since the game's remained under wraps for so long, this event is expected to be a very competitive one, since all the fans want to be the first to enjoy the new version. Don't you get all exited when you get to try out a new recipe or something, even if it's a variation of a dish you already knew?"

"Ah… Yeah, I can see that. Some spices and different steps can make a totally new plate," smiling, she nods in agreement. "But still, to think you'd be so hyped about a game… Oh, how childish of you, Takeru-chan," and again, she chuckles at my groans.

"I know I should be dropping the games now that I'm in college, but Valgern-On is that one game I can't let go off."

It's even making a nice impression in America and it looks like there's going to be official tournaments there too, but with the console and PC versions of the game. Poor Americans, they will never know the glorious feeling of playing in the arcade cockpit.

Sumika, you will never understand this feeling, this rush one feels when duking it out in the cockpit. Moreover, since this tournament was made to promote the online multiplayer functions of the new version, the format is going to be a two player team battle. Between my studies and the nightmares I wasn't planning on even going to watch, but when everyone else agreed to meet today and Mikoto asked me if I'd like to team up with him I couldn't say no. And so, today I go to my first, and probably last, competitive Valgern-On event, the Tokyo Salon Fighters tournament.

"Well, whether I win or not is besides the point. All that matters is, I get to play with Mikoto again, even if we don't learn anything new about the game."

"Yeah, I get that. Kinda surprising, how fast time flies. I swear, I think graduation was just a few months ago."

"Same. I think the books and towers of papers have warped our perception of time."

"More like they distorted time-space itself! It's been two years since graduation, and I still wake up some days thinking I have to climb that hellish hill," she then laughs, and I can't help but to join her.

Yeah, time sure flies, doesn't it? Two years, huh. It's kind of surprising, honestly. Maybe that's why Mikoto was so pushy on meeting up today. It has been a long time since we got to play together, and we only cross paths when we leave our classes nowadays. However, games aside, I thought this could be a good time to… well, see if we could talk with Meiya again. That enough time had passed, that she would be under less pressure now to at least come and say hi. It does seem like my invitation wasn't well received, though. Sigh…

"Oh! Takeru-san, Sumika-san! Good afternoon!" A cheerful voice returns me to reality as a small girl with pink hair approaches at full speed.

Wearing short jeans and a clear turquoise t-shirt with images of cat pawns all over it, along a small black purse, Tama waves her hand in the air vigorously as she crosses the street.

"Hi, Miki-chan! How's everything going?" Sumika moves to greet her, returning the vibrant smile.

"A-OK, I just scored a bit less on my last test than I expected. But everything else is good! How about you two?" She asks with her usual smile, slightly bouncing up.

"I'm great! I scored over ninety on my last two tests, can you believe it?!"

Why am I not surprised that's the first thing she mentions. Tama looks surprised as she asks about the questions and how Sumika studied for the tests. They exchange some tips as we move again to the TGS.

"Takeru-san, how about you? How's college treating you?"

"That's 1st Lieutenant Shirogane for you, civilian Tamase," I say in an exaggerated stern tone, giving her a stoic gaze, trying to poke fun at her.

"Eh? What's this about? 1st Lieutenant?" Tama's brows start to narrow as she slightly tilts her head.

"I dropped out of college to answer the call of du… honor to serve our nation, and I now am no longer the man you used to know." Straight and firm as a pillar, I strike a pose like the ones in my dreams to add more effect to the speech. "I am now 1st Lieutenant Shirogane of the Squad 207B of Yokohama Base. But to answer your question, life is treating me just fine," I say with a nod.

"Awawa… You joined the army? When? How? Why?"

"Miki-chan, he's just messing with you. He made the same joke to me when we were in the train."

She just had to go and ruin my fun. Teasing Tama is one of the things I miss the most of school. Damn you, Sumika.

"Takeru-san, you meanie! But it looks like you're fine. Are you doing okay with the tests?" Quick to forgive, she gives me a curious gaze.

"Yeah, my grades aren't that great but I haven't failed a single test yet," I say, puffing my chest in pride.

"Um, Takeru-san, when did you… get so fit?" Tama asks, trying to not stare.

"I began exercising around half a year ago, but I just started seeing the fruits of all the training," I scratch my head, looking up. It's kinda embarrassing to see her fidget like that.

"He's been obsessed with training, I tell you," Sumika says with a grin, poking one of my arms. "He even learned how to cook just to keep track of how much protein he eats. I think the pressure of college was too much for him and broke his mind," she giggles, making circles with a finger near her forehead, which makes Tama also start giggling.

Sumika, you have no idea how much I wanna flick your forehead right now, you little devil. Well, it's still all fair game. I laugh quietly along them as we walk.

"But if training makes you feel better then more power to you! I haven't been able to practice much with my bow as of late."

"For real? That's a damn shame, you were real good after all."

"Ahaha… I still get really nervous from time to time," she says while scratching the back of her head, then narrows her brows and loses her smile. "I do have to start training again, since I have a rematch coming up."

"Oh, about that thing that came up during the lacrosse match?" Sumika asks.

"Right, you had some sort of duel back then, didn't you?"

She laughs weakly, making a small fist and rising it to the clouds. "This time I'm gonna win for sure. But enough about me, how have you two been?"

We keep on doing some small talk as we go our way to where we'll meet up with the rest. Since the entrance for spectators is really cheap and there's supposed to be a resto bar in the building it's a perfect place for the meetup, and thankfully it seems Tama also has enough money just in case. So she's in full agreement with getting ice cream after the tournament. As we get closer to the TGS, through the crowds of people I spot a few familiar figures. Everyone is already waiting near the entrance.

Or so I thought, everyone except one person. So she really didn't accept the invitation, huh?

A short boy wearing an orange shirt with small red dots on it and white trousers starts jogging towards us as soon as he sees us- "Oooh! Takeru, long time no see! It's been like three years since we last saw each other!" Mikoto shouts as he gets in close range, followed by a strong high five between us. As lively as always, never change, Mikoto.

"Long time indeed, buddy. How's everything?"

"Hehehe, perfectly! Man, I can't believe I'm keeping up with the lectures," he laughs again jokingly, scratching the back of his head.

"Good for you, man. Frankly, I'm on the same boat," we both share a grin, then he turns towards the other two.

"Miki-san, Sumika-san, long time no see! How are you?"

"Hi, Yoroi-kun. I'm in a reaaally good mood, because I got two-" And while Sumika starts to brag about her scores, I go to greet the other two girls of the group.

The first one, with her brown hair let loose and her usual glasses on, was wearing an olive shirt with white stripes, and a matching white purse.

"Hey Class Rep, how's it going?"

"Hello Shirogane, all's good. You're still going to call me Class Rep after all this time?"

"Yeah, it just feels right."

"Haha, always doing your thing without a care. How are you holding up? You wouldn't be worrying Kagami again?" Despite the smile, she taps her glasses as her eyes bore into me.

The real meaning not lost on me, I play dumb and try to throw some misdirection. "Heh, I'm a disciplined student now Class Rep. I even learned to cook by myself!"

"Huh?! Really? That's a surprise."

"Chizuru-san, good afternoon!" Tama came over to greet Class Rep, saving me from her questioning.

I let 'em talk as I go to the raven haired girl eating a yakisoba sandwich. Her red blouse is doing a rather a poor job at hiding her deadly frontliners, but she looks as expressionless as always. A dark trouser reaches just above her ankles, and a pair of matching bracelets are on both wrists.

"Yo, Ayamine. All cool?"

"Yeah," as reserved as always, huh, "until some wild glasses appeared," she says with a slow, almost solemn, nod as she took a glance at Class Rep.

Oh God, not again.

"Ayamine, what do you mean?" Class Rep looks at her with furrowed brows.

"What do you mean?"

"Don't mimic me."

"Do I look like her?"

"No, you don't." Please guys, don't start fighting now.

"Oh, thank God." Ayamine says, with a dramatic sway of her hair as she wipes her forehead. I think Class Rep just popped a vein.

"You haven't changed at all!"

And there they go arguing again, here thar be dragons. I think Ayamine missed trolling Class Rep. And she doesn't seem to be that upset, I think they actually get along really well now. Ever since the lacrosse match, they stopped quarreling as they did before. Who would have said they'd end up as friends. Life is weird.

"Takeru, let's go register before they run out of spots!" Without warning, Mikoto grabs my arm and starts pulling me to the line. Sadly for him, with all the muscle I gained lately, he can't even move me an inch.

"Don't pull me! I can walk."

"Takeru, did you gain weight? You shouldn't just eat junk food, you know," he says with a worried look, waving a finger at my face as he gives me a once over.

"Dude, it's not like that. I've been training since-"

"You know, I read this article about a guy that lived only on coke and hamburgers."

"Mikoto, I learned to cook. I'm not so lazy to-"

"So, one day he collapsed on his job! His cholesterol was really high, between his horrible diet and all the pressure from his work."

I'm not going to get through him, am I? Sigh…

"Takeru, are you listening?"

"You're the one who's not listening!"

"Huh? About what?"

"Been training. Learned to cook. Got muscle." Perhaps if I speak in short sentences he'll listen.

"Really? Wow, you're right," a surprised look fills his face as he pokes my arm. "What happened? Is there a girl in your class you wanna date?"

And with that simple sentence and an innocent smile, Mikoto opened the gates to hell. I can feel the piercing gazes of the four girls standing behind us, with an overflowing killing intent.

He just had to go and say it. I know, he doesn't even register the teasing or the tension, but you really need to start paying attention, dude.

"… Takeru-chan, what's this about dating a girl in your class?" Sumika's eyes turn dark as that one hair stands upright with sparks flying out of it. Seriously, what's wrong with her hair?! Her tone may be small and calm, but it's hiding a scythe behind her teeth.

The other girls just stare silently at me. A knot forms on the base of my neck, preventing me from gulping or breathing in. No, I have no one in my sights, but if I let the conversation flow into the romantic realm I know what they'll ask.

And I don't want to answer.

"Mikoto, let's go register in the tournament. Ahora!" Swiftly yanking his arm away, I pull him towards the line.

"E-eeeeeh! Wait, don't pull meeeee!"

"Don't run away, Takeru-chan!"

---

A minute or so later.

(Salon's Reception.)

---

The roof has many rows of lights ready for the night of the event, some marble pillars decorated the entrance of the TGS alongside a dark blue carpet. Above, covering part of the upper part of the entrance, a banner with Valgern-On's logo and all the sponsors of this event hangs as it's swayed by the wind. The reception is no different, with its shiny white floor and walls, with some seats to the side.

As we take our place on the line, I let go of Mikoto's hand and finally sigh. His swirly eyes took a second to stabilize, letting out a groan he recovers his usual expression and gazes around. The line was not as big as I expected it to be. Well, Valgern-On is more of a niche game and its competitive scene isn't that big yet. Considering that, the people behind us, and the hour it is, I say some might get left out.

"Seriously dude, don't joke about that. You should know by now that the girls are really touchy about all the love business," shaking my head, feeling my back cold, I stare into his eyes.

He laughs weakly, nodding in apology. "Sorry. But it's truly a surprise to hear you're exercising, since you were always so lazy. Did anything happen?"

"No, not really. I just felt like doing something to not be sitting all the time. By the by, how much have you been practicing?"

"Once a week on Sundays, except when there's a test close. Valgern-On is that hobby I just can't drop."

So we are just the same in that regard. Great minds think alike. "I totally get what you mean, I can't believe we have tournaments that have to take place outside of an arcade. Two years ago this would have been a pipe dream."

"Yeah, after the console version was ported to America and Europe last year it totally blew up! All the net was in an uproar about it!"

Bouncing up, rebounding upon himself in excitement, his eyes shine bright.

"Yeah, it was great seeing all their reactions in the forums. Oh right, guess what? I finally got to play Magorea's Mask recently."

"For real?! So, what do you think?" Getting closer, he hurries.

"Man, you were right. Ocarina of Ages just doesn't compare."

"Hehe, I knew you were gonna like it more," he grins, nodding once. "I personally loved the Ice Temple, which one was your favorite?"

"Mmh… You're gonna hate me for this, but the Water one."

"Huh?! Really?"

We keep talking about games, about what little we did in our sparse free time until we reach the counter.

"Good afternoon, the inscription for the tournament is 5000 Yen per person. Please hand me your GR cards to register you in the tournament."

When she inserted the cards our stats appeared on the screen. Man, seeing my stats always gives me such a thrill. 48% Win-rate? Eh, I've been worse. My mech play-log is so unbalanced, 97% Kaiser usage. Haha, I really did use it exclusively for a long while. Wow, Mikoto has a 53% Win-rate. How the hell does he do that? Well, he is really good.

"Here are your passes with both your personal ID and the terminal's ID that you are to use during the event. Have fun!" The receptionist smiles as she hands us our cards and the passes.

"Hey Mikoto, how much time do we have before the tournament starts?"

Looking at his watch on his left hand, he groans a bit. "Less than an hour, wanna go to the bar with the others and grab something to eat?"

"Yeah, let's go."

---

Around twenty minutes later.

(TGS Resto Bar.)

---

"So, while it's been hard, I'd say I'm progressing just fine!" Mikoto says with a smile, clearly proud, before diving into his sandwich without mercy or restrain.

We've been catching up while we ate in the lounge. I told everyone I was progressing just fine in my engineering career, to their surprise. I can do my math just fine, you pricks.

Mikoto has gotten good grades on his medic career. He says that he wants to travel to harsh places where no other medics want to go, while also getting to keep traveling and doing something good while doing so.

Class Rep assaulted us with all the languages she'd learned while studying some corporate career. Ayamine is still studying to be a nurse. When she told the group we were all surprised, since she didn't look like the type to pursue such a career. I can't even imagine her treating patients with that personality of hers.

Tama is doing fine in her psychiatrist career. She had said she wanted to help children overcome their anxiety and fears, especially those who suffered from bullying and parental abuse.

While everyone kept talking and sharing fun stories, I can't help but to start thinking about the one that wasn't here. Meiya, why didn't you even call me back?

Tsukuyomi-san had given me a number to contact her after they left my house, but she didn't seem like herself during when I called, as if surprised I had the guts to call her for something like this. I already knew Meiya's schedule must be packed for quite a few months ahead, but I was hoping for her to spare some minutes to talk, even if one last time. Guess that's impossible. Given her position, we calling may be a bother to them now. Even I heard the news of the scandal, despite my obliviousness towards the news. And to this day, just thinking about that shitshow is enough to make me clench my fists. So I gulp some more juice, biting on my sandwich as Sumika goes on another tangent about her good scores and the others laugh. Looking to the TV, as if to mock me, a headline of the news comes up.

"-as there hasn't been a press conference done by the Head in quite some time, it is expected the occasion will be attended by many to hear the announcements the Mitsurugi Group has to make."

Heh, of course she hasn't done more conferences herself. All thanks to you vultures dunking on her, despite not knowing shit about who Meiya is.

One of the older men of the program shifts in his seat, sporting a shit-eating grin. "I wonder, could this finally be the announcement of her new suitor? After all, there are rising concerns from certain sectors about-"

Tch, fucking asshole. Turning around and finishing my hamburger, the rest hadn't paid attention to the program and were lost on a string of jokes about some teachers and campus. Sigh…

The debate on the news still reaches my ears, and I can only close my eyes and look away from it all. They dare to keep on feasting on all rumors and conspiracy theories about Meiya's life, but they ain't even talking about the bastard that screwed her over. Fucking vultures of the media.

To have been chosen for an arranged marriage with Meiya, the guy must have been some crazy important dude from high society, so I can see why no one wants to talk shit about him. Even the Mitsurugi Group backpedaled from their claims thanks to threats of the guy's family filing suing them over a case of defamation and slander. Worst, these same stupid vultures even defended it. That it's an affront against their brands' reputation, that it's dishonorable to make a show of their personal differences.

Shit, I don't even wanna eat anymore. Leaning back on the sofa, looking up with my mouth hanging open, feels as if I were being drained down a waterfall, and hearing the discussion on the program going on only makes my stomach more upset.

Things got heated real fast back then, since it seems that an investigation linked Meiya's ex to a murder attempt on her grandfather. That's when I heard of this, thanks to almost everyone and their mother gossiping about it. Someone from the staff was caught in a 'compromising situation', and the leads and testimonies linked to Meiya's husband as being the one responsible for it all. But then, all of a sudden, he stopped being mentioned in the news and blames started to be placed on Meiya and the Mitsurugi for jumping to defamation without 'conclusive evidence'.

Lots of debates flared up just like the one that's again starting on the TV again, composure shining for its absence as fingers and yells rise in accusation. The sad spectacle of gray-haired assholes that continue to talk shit on her, which causes the few younger ones' composure to melt into a rather unpleasant and heated pace of words.

Sigh… At least the little kids watching find it funny, I guess. But it's just like what I see around, some looking with a mild frown at the narrative told in the program, others instead nodding to it. Some people took Meiya's side back then, others started scorning her and saying she shouldn't be allowed to lead the group. Can't believe there was an actual fucking march in protest over this made by common folk. 'Don't corrupt the Group', 'Dishonor to Japan', and other banners like that were everywhere since, unsurprisingly enough, it looks like the Mitsurugi are actually related to the Imperial Household. Maybe I was the only one who didn't know, but Meiya having noble blood didn't really come as a surprise for me.

Back then, Sumika had to drag me out of a fight once when some of those jackasses made a protest in the station, talking shit about how 'letting a woman lead the Group was a mistake', before a cop came in to stop the commotion. Kind of how the host of the news program has to raise white banners in between the debating journalists that would rather add fuel to the bonfire.

Relaxing onto the seat as the topic in the news changes, I go back to eating. Yet, the face Meiya had back then remains in my mind, and my bites are slow, I can't really feel the taste of the thing. Still and grayed out like a statue, stoic and emotionless. Frozen, all alone in front of the judgment of the unending flashes of cameras and whatnot.

Some time after this accident, Meiya's grandfather took care of the conferences again, announcing that he had decided to let her stay in charge of the group despite not remarrying. He said that the safety of the Mitsurugi family should be their priority and that being married shouldn't be a requirement to lead the Group anymore as well as how women should also be allowed to inherit the position, which landed superbly with most younger people, that were happy to see change and a woman in charge, and horribly with the older generations, that still see this as treason to 'muh traditions'. Still, her grandfather didn't even mention the name of the suitor, and the guy was never brought up again.

And yet, the media kept on piling the pressure on Meiya, going as far as asking her if she had any plans for marrying during press conferences. Some journalists even started saying that there were rumors of her being into women. Every single little decision she took was put under the microscope, and the fucking yellow journalists had a field day during those months. And every time she comes back to the public eye, the same shitshow happens like it was just a while ago. Makes me sick that they only thing she can do is deafen herself and push through the horde of questions and tripwires.

I know it's for the better to keep a low profile and not stir up trouble, but fuck me sideways if it wasn't hard not to snap at the idiots talking shit in the trains and streets. The bastard that plotted to hurt her grandfather gets to not be named anymore, probably is out of jail too, and no one bats an eye. But quite a few kept dunking on Meiya for the stupidest reasons.

Sighing, my back and neck slump into the cushioning of the sofa. Given all the unwanted attention and issues that rose up, it's obvious why Meiya doesn't want to expose herself in public. Of course, if I didn't have the guts to answer to her way too obvious approaches back in school, much less could I bring myself to call her back then, as much as I wanted to let Meiya know all the gang was worried sick about her. And I can kind of get why she didn't even answer my invitation. Part of me thinks she might have taken us not calling her as a betrayal, but that might be my own guilt talking. Chances are, she doesn't care anymore, she has bigger fish to fry.

Absentmindedly drinking, slowing down as an image of her appears in the TV, stoic and imposing as an obelisk, my eyes flee the gaze from the TV. I knew it was a long shot, and the silence is enough of an answer. Maybe we can buy her a present or something, and I'll see if Tsukuyomi-san is willing to give it to her. Though, going by how the call went, I think they don't want me to contact them ever again.

That feels, for some reason, like a fitting end to our relationship. Sudden, yet once it was over, neither of us gained much from the other. Even after I remembered the promise at the park, many days after graduation, I couldn't bring myself to do anything. She went out of her way to literally live with me and spoil me for months, it's embarrassing to think I didn't get a clue.

Staring at her image until the commercial starts, I look up as my lips fold in. Resting my arms on the table, hunching over, a piercing sensation slices my stomach apart from inside.

… No, I chose to be oblivious. For some reason, I didn't want to choose. I didn't want to commit to a relationship. I also don't want to do that now. I just wanted to apologize to her, for all the trouble I must have caused her in those months. For being a coward that couldn't bring himself to at least call once when shit was hitting the turbine.

Sigh…

Whenever I think of Meiya as of late, there's this hollowness on my chest, needles or some shit tearing under my ears. It's as if I were thinking of someone who passed away. In a way it's almost like she's gone for good, since I'll probably never talk to her again.

"So Takeru, about our strategy…" Mikoto yanks me out of dreamland, back to the table. I thought I had left this bad habit of spacing out behind me.

"Yeah, what do you wanna do?"

"You haven't told me what mech you're gonna be using yet. I'm still maining the Xao-Myun, are you still using the Kaiser?"

"No, I switched to the Takemikazuchi a few months ago."

Coughing in surprise, bubbles rise up in his drink, a few stains on his shirt now. "The Takemikazuchi?! But I heard it's really difficult to control, and since it focuses on melee combat it doesn't have such a good range either. It's said to be one of the worst mechs in the game," Mikoto looks at me with downcast eyes, lips twisted, clearly worried about my choice. He's in for a nice surprise.

"But its speed is on a whole 'nother level, dude. It's perfect for my new hyper offensive style of play, since I abuse it to make many attacks in quick succession at close range." It also looks like the Greatzon from Mega Mecha Taisen, and thinking I'm fighting with Darkest Prison as my BGM is enough to hype me up.

"That's just reckless, if it were me you'd get countered without even hitting me once," he grins back at me, I return the gesture.

"No, because if I hit you with its machineguns you'll get stunned for a few seconds, which gives me just enough time to rush in and get a clear strike to the core with swords in both of my arms," I say, rising a finger and drinking a bit, leaning back on the couch.

"Hmm… I see what you mean. But more speed is not the same as more mobility, so your accuracy might not be so good against opponents like my Xao-Myun. The enemy can easily kill you when you run out of fuel and can't boost away."

"Not if I kill first, that's the whole point of my game. And even then I still have the Thunder Cannon if I'm grounded or I can't get to CQC. To give you an idea, I raised my Win Rate by 5% with this method just going to the arcade two days a month in this year. Do you understand how awesome the Takemikazuchi is? I definitely think it's been overlooked."

"Okay, I get your game now. So you rush in while I cover, we aim to split them up so we can pick them off in one-on-one with our superior agility. If you corner someone and they escape, do I join the chase?"

"Yeah, they're going to try to regroup. If you can keep up with me then we can split up and then pincer them. If we get split, try to keep 'em busy so they don't barrage me with more shots than I can dodge until I get them in my machineguns' range."

He nods, folding his arms, eyes focused onto nowhere in particular. "Okay, but what if they stay hidden to surprise us?"

"I go scouting with you following on land, when you detect anything go for a cannon shot and we start the chase. Even on Yguloch Fortress' narrow corridors the Takemikazuchi can do a back flip or an Albright Turn, so don't worry about me getting ambushed," I finished giving him a thumbs up, a wink, and a dramatic pose for bonus points.

"What's an Albright Turn?" Mikoto looks at me as if I were speaking in another language, slowly tilting his head.

"You know, it's that thing you do when you rush into a wall and just before crashing you turn the mech around by first slightly slowing down, jumping on the ground and immediately after going hard on the accel as you hit the wall. Then you propel at full speed towards the opposite direction."

"I never heard about that! Where did you learn that move?"

"Where? I… uuh… I think I saw it in a replay once." Why do I feel like I'm forgetting something?… When did I learn to do the Albright again?

"You're so lucky! You're full of surprises today Takeru, you changed your mech and you talk like a tactician. Are you sure you haven't been skipping classes to go play at the arcade?" Mikoto smirks as he leans on the table, then starts giggling.

"Dude! That's just rude, you're just jelly I finally surpassed you!"

"But I've never heard you doing such a through analysis. You sound like a regular at tournaments," his eyes glow up, surprised for real.

"It's been awhile since I got to talk about the game, so I guess I got carried away with the analysis." I shrug, lips pursing as I look away. Man, I miss the days when I could just laze about, talking nonsense with you back at the arcade.

"So guys, think you can go far in this?" Class Rep asks as she stares, raising a brow.

"If the Takemikazuchi is half as good as Takeru says it is then we may get into the top 48."

"Forty eight?" Tama's eyes widen a bit, "How many players are participating?"

"I think there's a total of 192 spots open, which means 96 teams in total. Teams will be grouped in three zones, fighting in one direct-elimination matches. The winners of each zone will then all fight in the final at the same time for the gold," I say with vigor, speaking from my stomach, trying to hype them up.

"That's going to be amazing! I remember when we played for a bit in the hot springs, it was really fun. Seeing so many games is going to be great!" Says a now sparkly eyed Tama.

Tama, you truly understand us. You are one of us, unlike the other three uncultured swines on the table.

"I wonder about that. I'm sure they'll lose on the first rounds and there will be no stopping the salt. I can already see Takeru-chan's tears, haha," Sumika says with a twisted and evil smirk.

Sumika you ungrateful girl, I'm not sharing with you any of the food I make anymore.

"I can already see Shirogane throwing a tantrum about how he pushed the button but he didn't attack or something," Class Rep comments, triggering her signature skill: Chain Teasing.

"Yoroi, hang in there." Not even Ayamine has any faith in me, huh?

"Heh, we'll show you guys a nice fight at least so do look forward to it. Right Mikoto?"

"Yeah! Even if you do get taken out immediately as usual," he says with a wide grin.

"Hey!"

We all share a laugh, it clears all of that awful cold feeling off me. I didn't knew I missed this kind of thing so much. Feels really nice just to hang out with all of them, sharing some laughs without a care.

"To all participants," a voice rings through the speakers, "please go to the Showroom. The event shall commence in thirty minutes. I repeat-" The announcement repeats itself as me and Mikoto stand from our seats. I grab my lemonade and finish it in one gulp, Mikoto also finishes his drink and gives a nod.

"Well, looks like its your call, guys. Yoroi, Shirogane, best of luck!" Class Rep gives us a thumbs up.

"Good luck, guys!" Tama says as we high-five before leaving. Ayamine merely gives us a slow nod while smirking.

"Takeru-chan, Yoroi-kun, no matter how it goes we're going for some ice cream after the tournament, so have fun and don't overworry, yes?"

"Yeah, you better be ready to be surprised! Let's go Mikoto, it's showtime!" I roar, unable to calm down my excitement anymore.

"Hehe, don't think I'll let you have all the fun, Takeru."

We joke around as we walk to the Showroom. This place is huge though, if there weren't any maps on the wall I'd get lost. How long is this hallway anyways? We also can't run, these tiles are really bothersome. We'll end up sliding if we try to hurry up.

After a short while we reach the place, and we both are taken aback by the vast expansion of the room. The Showroom is even bigger than the rest of the rooms combined! The walls painted in dark blue and white, with some wooden pillars every now and then stretching to the ceiling, where many lights hang from the metallic bars all over, illuminating the windowless space with cold white light. The place's big enough to hold all the terminals, give some decent room to walk around, and even has a small rest area to my left, where some people were finishing their meals before going towards their spots.

But man, look at those terminals! They're the latest models, and there's many rows of 'em all lined up as if this were some sort of training facility for Valgern-On. Kinda like, uh, a simulation room? Hmm… Yeah, sounds about right. Official tournaments are the best thing ever.

"ooOOOHHH! Takeru, look at them!" Mikoto says as he skips towards the terminals, fanboying over the things. Not that I blame him, I'm super pumped up for this, too.

Now, let's see… our ID is 51, so our terminal should be… "Mikoto c'mon, our terminal is this way!"

"Going!"

The terminals are just like the arcade ones but with two separated seats and monitors instead of just one. Once we reach ours, I see that there's a pair of headphones available in the units as well. The usual hyper music of the game welcomes us as we insert our GR Cards, we share a nod as we get on our seats and start the configurations.

In one of the last updates the devs added a lot of weapons to the game, so now each mech has a list of armaments you can equip to it. They're supposed to be balanced to fit different play styles, which seems to have brought a nice diversity to the meta according to the forums.

They put color customization in, so now we can paint our mechs in our favorite colors too. There's also a fuel bar and a timer now, to avoid the matches to drag on forever, and now certain parts of the mechs can be broken, like the boost thrusters and some weapons. So, setting your custom loadout is of utmost importance. Sure, you can run with the default set for each mech, but where's the fun in that?

Now, let's set two PB Longswords, two PB Shortswords and the Take's signature Thunder Cannon. Let's mark the 20mm machineguns on the waist as equipped and that should be it. For the last touch, let's get the color scheme done.

"You done Takeru?" Mikoto asks as I'm fiddling with the RGB sliders.

"Yeah, just finishing the color. Wanna go for a practice run?"

"Yup, let's do two short matches."

"Okay, I'm all done." I put on the belts, pushing the seat forward and locking it in. Putting the headphones on, the request for a match was already coming up in the common lounge. Tapping the mic to place it near my lips, I cough a bit. "Can you hear me, Mikoto?"

"Yeah, loud and clear. You ready?"

"You bet. Here we go!"

As the field description and the opening battle screen appears, showing both of our mechs and their loadouts, my breathing eases up, eyelids flicker as my back sinks onto the seat's cushioning. I've been like this for awhile, I don't know why but playing Valgern-On in the arcade makes me feel at ease. Like I'm in my element, doing my thing in my turf kind of feeling. Maybe the nostalgia of high school is already getting to me.

"Hweh? What's up with your mech?!" Mikoto's shout surprises me and for a second, taking me out of my relaxation.

I though there was a problem, but checking my screen everything is as always. "Nothing's wrong on my end, what's up Mikoto?"

"Pfft… Ahahaha! Look at your mech, it's so purple! Hahahaha!" Mikoto keeps laughing, repeating purple over and over.

"What's wrong with it being purple?!" All of you have been really awful with me today! Is this what people call karma?

"Sorry, I mean, I'm so used to see you maining the Kaiser that I didn't expect you to choose that color for your mech. I thought you'd use white instead."

"There's nothing wrong with this, and it's a striking shade of purple so it fits the Takemikazuchi perfectly!"

I don't know why but when I saw the Takemikazuchi for the first time all I could think was that it would look great in purple. And I wasn't wrong. However, Mikoto keeps snickering and chuckling. You prick…

"Alright, let's see if you think it's funny after I mop the floor with you!"

"We'll see about that! Show me how good your purpleness is!"

As we both roar taunts at each other our mechs flew off their starting positions, locking into each other in combat. I still feel really calm despite the screen blurring a bit due to the Takemikazuchi's speed. It's like this should be the normal speed of the game, even if it was already quite fast paced.

Mikoto opens fire from my left, nothing serious. He's still moving around, not letting me get near. I flick my joystick forward, boost jumping over his cannon shot and closing the gap. Unlike the Kaiser, the Takemikazuchi is very fast and can be difficult to maneuver precisely with, but even so I feel perfectly fine in it. It's like riding a grip-focused car tuned to do sharp turns on the curves on the racing games, if that makes sense.

He's charging another cannon shot, but not retreating further into the more narrow terrain filled with buildings. Reading him, I boost jump again and dodge, but this time I take some consecutive jumps to get closer in a few frames faster. He was expecting me to chase after him and then get me with his saber, so the Xao-Myun comes to meet my aggro. However, it's clear he doesn't know how fast this purple beetle can be!

"You're not getting away now!" I shout as I fire the machineguns, little sparks illuminating the otherwise vacant dunes of the stage.

Just 4% damage? Doesn't matter, because small jolts cover the Xao's entire body, its limbs twitching in paralysis. With the stun in place, I'm in the clear to approach and strike at you! Hit with the longsword, 20% damage.

The stun wears off, I sidestep away from a fast riposte, the Xao blasts away but Mikoto can't get the Take out of his shadow, nor can he stop boosting without getting into my machineguns' range again. Within the crumbled buildings and sand mounds, we play hit and run. He tries to shake me off with some missiles and doing some acrobatics between some buildings, but for some reason his jumps are kinda off and he's gliding too much.

Let's take a shot! I do a triple boost jump to dodge his missiles, getting to a nice position on midair. Now I can use the backthrusters to spin myself and shoot the TC at him at minimal charge. As my machine glides away in its spin, avoiding the cannon shots, my own cannon finds a frame in the eye of its storm. Unlike other weapons, the Thunder Cannon is a beam-based armament. So I get that the Xao-Myun is flailing like a bird under the rain, all to get away from the red lightning that pours off my weapon as I softly flick the button. A dune gets flattened, the cooldown icon appears in my sight, and a nice chunk of health vaporizes off Mikoto's health bar. Take that, 17% at minimal!

"I got you now!" Mikoto shouts as the Xao-Myun charges at me, my Take still descending in the air.

I got my guard down, unable to dodge while holding the large and bulky thunder-shaped cannon, and his saber smacks one of my shoulders for 26% damage, my Take ending up tumbled along the sand dunes. I'm not letting you get away! And yanking the lever, blasting a cloud of sand to the sky, the Take restarts the chase.

But something feels off about this…

Mikoto's tells and signs are too obvious, did she get rusty? I can't imagine her missing those shots on purpose, she's not even doing the barrages right. And she didn't punish me for lowering my guard in the air and not teching to return to the ground faster. What's with her jumps, too? She's relying too much on the air thrusters. On this kind of map, she could easily surface on the dunes or hide in between the few buildings that are around, to try and get me from afar. My speed on the Take is enough to dodge, yeah, but still…

Wait, if I go at her at full speed with all the boosters I could probably get in close range, and then I'll break the Xao's thrusters to show her how reckless she's being! I know, I'll let her corner me and then I'll show her an Albright while I'm at it. Two birds with one-

Beep!

BAM! BAM!

I hold my breath as two missiles graze me, forcing me to make a sudden dive to the sand. Shit, that was a close one. Her mid-range fire is still awesome. I can't let my guard down around her for a single sec.

…

… Her? Did I just refer to Mikoto as a she? The hell is wrong with me? Why did I say that?

Sigh… Whatever, let's show him what a good pair we are, Takemikazuchi!

He's keeping his distance to avoid the weapon shift. Alright, now!

I boost jump using all the thrusters, launching myself like a dragster after the Xao-Myun, the screen blurring and shaking. Slightly tilting the joystick to the left, the searing slash hits an arm, missing his body on purpose. Just as I thought, he takes his chance to take a jab at me at point blank instead of retreating, aiming at my core, but the reaction time of my other hand with a shortsword is enough to block you!

Sparks fly off, a small screech comes up in the phones, a momentary blade struggle ensues as our mechs fall and land in violence on the sand, sending small waves to the air. As I ready my other hand, Mikoto quickly boost jumps away like crazy. Once the weapon shift is over, he starts firing at me, turning this into a bullet hell game.

Hehehe… Now's when I lay my trap.

Instead of jumping to keep up the pressure, I retreat on land and take cover behind some fallen buildings. Just before retreating further in, to where his auto-lock cannot track me, I take out the Thunder Cannon and start to charge it, even though I unequip it right away when I got out of his sight.

Since I'm already near half shields, the TC would do a lot of damage now to a low defense mech like the Xao-Myun. If it did 17% at minimal before, anything above that is a curtain's call for Mikoto. It's dodge or die, and against a beam weapon there's no cover to save you. That's why he will surely try to get close without entering my range and using missiles to interrupt the charge or ruin my shot, to force me to return the aggression and drop the TC usage.

He took the bait as he starts to chase me, going by the bleep in the radar, but thanks to me going downhill on the sand mounds he can't close the gap fast enough. Alright, those cliffs up ahead look good. I take a sharp turn to my left in between some elevations, he shouldn't have gotten a clear view of me since he's still getting closer. Good, all these cliffs are perfect to do the Albright. Let's go, Takemikazuchi!

I advance into the passage with a boost jump, then just before jumping again I shift my direction without stopping the boost. Slightly lower my speed as I approach and the wall, and now…

"FULL ON THAT ACCEL, BABY!"

Our feet hit the cliff-side as I spin the joystick to change the direction of the thrusters. Immediately the screens flickers to shift my view as I'm now charging at Mikoto, who thought that he was safe just around the corner of the cliff since I couldn't hit him with the Thunder Cannon there.

"Eat this, Mikoto!" I roar as I let the machineguns loose on the Xao-Myun.

His shield drops to 23% and I damaged his thrusters. Landing hard on the sand, a bit farther than I wanted to and almost slipping when the heels sink on the sand, I quickly step hard on the pedals and yank the controls. Balance regained, I tap the triggers and change to my melee weapons.

As the stun wears off, Mikoto tries to boost away but can't, small sparks and smoke comes out of his thrusters. As soon as the small circle of the lock-on appears, my finger starts mashing that button and the machineguns again blaze up in life. The small stun time is enough to let me get a clear hit to the core of the Xao-Myun with my longswords, slicing it in three parts.

BOOM!

[MATCH OVER - PLAYER 2 WINS]

I throw a fist to the air as I pull the seat back, after a chuckle I remove the safety belts and do some circles with my neck.

"What the hell was that? What did you do?! How did you even change directions so fast at the cliffs?!" A bewildered voice rings at my side as I see Mikoto getting out of his seat, fuming more than my TC at full charge.

"That was the Albright Turn, but I kinda screwed up the timing and almost ruined my landing."

"When did you learn it? All your moves are on a whole 'nother level today, but that thing was Pro level for sure!"

"I told you the Takemikazuchi was great. Who's laughing at the purple one now?"

"I can't believe you actually dodged most of my attacks," he closes his eyes, brows low and lips twisted. It's obvious he'd be frustrated, Mikoto has never lost so badly against me.

Actually, I don't recall ever winning against him when he got serious. There's a first time for everything, I guess.

"Haha, well, it was weird that you kept gliding so much. It was easy to read you."

In silence, he stares at me. Sighing as he taps his foreheads, he gets closer. "Hey Takeru, let me see your play log."

"Sure, but what's wrong with you? You're really rusty, you know."

"I'm not rusty, you've gotten really good at this! You sure you're not skipping class?" Mikoto says as he throws a suspicious look at me, narrowing his eyes.

"Making excuses? Who would have said I'd see the day!"

"You jerk! Now, lemme see how you did those stunts."

Nodding and moving aside, I let him sit on my terminal. Man, to think I just beat him. I knew all that practice would pay off. Who's laughing at the purple one now?

"… Hey, Takeru."

"What's up?"

"Were you playing with these settings just now?"

"Yeah? What's wrong?"

"Well, you were playing with the first person camera then?" Looking right back at me, his own eyes seem kinda firm and confrontational, unblinking.

"Yeah, been feeling better with it since I switched to the Takemikazuchi."

"Are you for real?! But… But, how are you even aiming?"

"Like I always did?" Why is he so surprised? Sure, it was kinda hard at first, but now I can't see myself ever using anything other than first person controls, even if third person is the standard. "Well, lemme show you how I roll now."

---

Around the same time.

(Resto Bar.)

[Sumika]

---

Since the guys left, we started talking about fashion, cooking, and random stuff. About how Miki-chan is preparing for her rematch in her dojo, how Ayamine-san is planning to take a trip to Tokyo to search for more yakisoba recipes, and how Sakaki-san is anxiously awaiting a concert from a pair of violinists. I myself told them I've been progressing fine, and haven't dropped my cooking as well. Ayamine-san actually recommended me a restaurant, she said their curry is an otherworldly treat despite the staff being… a tad bit eccentric. Coming from her, who's never fazed by anything, makes me really wonder what's up with that place. I… did give up wanting to become a chef, in favor of a more traditional career. But that doesn't mean I'll quit my passion, even if I'll work as something else. Plus… I wouldn't be able to stay near him if I hadn't… Sigh…

"So he just decided to exercise out of the blue?" Sakaki asks as she finishes her drink.

"Yeah. Same with the cooking. It's like he woke up one day, said 'Oh, I'mma do this!', and then just kept doing it." Honestly, it is weird. Takeru-chan never cared about cooking, or about doing physical activity. But I had to go and end up blurting I'm worried about how he's being, and they took it the wrong way. Sigh…

"Weirdogane being Weirdogane."

"Kei-chan, that's rude! But maybe he's just releasing his stress?" Miki-chan tilts her head a bit.

"Maybe? He's progressing fine, as far as I know."

I can't help to think those nightmares are to blame. He never told me anything about them, but the day when he finally did he looked as if he had been crying for a while before. What are those nightmares about? Why doesn't he want to tell me?

… I wonder if he's regretting not speaking with Meiya-san before. Maybe… he actually has feelings for her? But despite the invitation she didn't even reply. Well, not like I don't understand, with all that she has on her plate. But Takeru-chan never gets so down without something serious going on in his head. Sigh… I press my legs together, drinking what's left of my juice, unable to purge the quiver in my chest.

I wanna be there for him. I wanna see him earnestly smile again. But does he want my help anymore? Should I… give him some space? I mean, after all this time, after all I do… he still hasn't…

"To all spectators," a voice comes from the speakers, "the event will start in 10 minutes. Please go to the main hall. I repeat-"

"Well, shall we go? Let's get some nice seats," Sakaki-san says as she stands up.

"Yeah, let's go. It looks like a lot of people just arrived, so it's going to get packed," I grab my purse and stand up along the rest. Let's not worry about that for now.

Talking about how things could play out, we go towards the hallways. Yet, in the exit of the resto bar, two men in suits stand watch, expressions neutral and wearing sunglasses. Despite letting most people leave without a sound, one of them raises an arm as we get close.

"Excuse me, could you be Sumika Kagami?"

"Eh? Yes, that's me. What do you need?"

"And would you all be Chizuru Sakaki, Miki Tamase and Kei Ayamine?" The other man asks, the rest nods and we all share a puzzled gaze. What could these security guys want with us?

"Forgive the inconvenience, but please come with us," the first says with a firm, commanding tone as he takes a step forward.

"What's this about?" Ayamine says as she also takes a step forward, a slight frown in her face.

"We'll have you follow us. This way," he says, pointing a hand towards another hallway.

Before we could react, two more men in suits came up behind us, blocking our path. The first two gesture for us to follow them, the ones from behind take a step closer, insisting that we do as they say. What's going on here?!

---

A/N: To explain the situation a bit: This fic takes place after Alternative, where Takeru returned to the Extra timeline instead of going to the Altered Fable world. After returning he lives normally, but due to the repressed memories he stays indecisive and cannot choose any girl, thus stays alone like in Extra's normal end. The story starts two years after the "end" of Extra, with Takeru now in college.

Also, Valgern-On's version of the Takemikazuchi is exactly the same as the one in the BETA timelines, just that it has two machineguns built into its frame on its waist, Paildramon style.

Innocent Fighting

A/N: I don't know how to describe the robots that Takeru and Mikoto are going to be fighting against in their matches without going overboard with the descriptions. So, to give you a mental image of how I see them I'll just compare them to the following mechs from the Super Robot Wars franchise. The Elefante is like the Gust Lander but it hovers instead of being grounded, the Frei is like the Bellzeute and the Ravager is like a Huckebein Mk. III.

---

Chapter 2:

Innocent Fighting

---

(Showroom - Terminal N° 51)

[Takeru]

---

Azure skies with pixelated clouds veer in the screen as I do a barrel roll, landing hard onto the rocky soil, making the awful, teeth-screeching sound of a hard landing rise through the speakers, making my brows narrow and wrinkles to appear on my nose. The alarm continues to beep like birds in the morning, the explosions keep silence at bay like cicadas in the summer.

I lick over my lips, taking a second of pause, as I land with one leg and do a sidestep to take cover under the large cliff I was near, its pixelated crunchy-looking surface shielding me from the missiles. Once the dust and stock explosions fade away, I move my Take forward into the narrow, bumpy canyon road in between the towering elevations that obstruct the direct sunlight, carefully watching my steps as I walk the pathway full of jagged rocks and pillars that looks like the last fashion trend among hedgehogs. A second later, the missile alarm begins to ring out again.

"Mikoto, I need back up!"

"I can't! The Elefante is blocking the way, dang it!" He instantly replies, his tone a bit faster than before.

"Tch, they got us good!"

Yanking the controls, my Take bursts into a double jump as more missiles come my way. In this narrow space I can't even try to counterattack, barely able to squeeze myself through the pillars and incoming missiles. Let's go for a triple boost jump then!

But as soon as I do, another wave comes at me. Spinning into a barrel roll, to not crash onto the cliffs or the stone pillars, I'm left with no choice but to go back to my prior position.

"Shit, fuck this shit, man."

These guys are the real deal, pro players. As soon as I went scouting they bombarded us with missiles, and when we got separated the Elefante took its position and started firing at Mikoto, while its partner cornered me with many consecutive long shots to my ankles from behind, forcing me to get even further away from Mikoto.

It doesn't help that we are playing on the Mirraoph Canyon, which has a lot of narrow pathways and tall cliffs. My speed works against me here, I can't boost as much as I'd like since there's the risk of crashing myself. That means game over in this situation. And to make matters worse, this field plays to the strengths of our rivals since they're a pair that focuses on long range attacks.

The Elefante, a dark gray and extra large sized mech, is the slowest in all the game but thanks to its size and defense it's the best tank. It also can equip more weapons than the other mechs and is one of the few that can equip an OTH Railgun and move with it. It looks more like a floating fortress than a humanoid robot, to be honest.

What were the devs thinking when they made it?! This guy should have gotten nerfed to hell a long time ago! Well, at least they removed its Beam Shield. With that it was practically unkillable without another heavy weapon.

Its partner is a Freikugel, a white coated, small frame mech that excels at long-range shooting but its completely average in everything else. Its range and accuracy are to be feared, since it can attack from beyond the radar's area you could get hit without any warning in big maps. Like what's happening to me right now.

Another wave of missiles comes my way, this is stupid. We're not getting anywhere like this, not with the Elefante blocking the way. We gotta do something now.

"Mikoto, how are you holding up?"

"I'm on the run, trying to get past it but it's hard due to the machineguns and the occasional missiles," he groans a bit then he seems to let out a puff of air, with a bit of strength since I could hear it through the mic. He won't hold out alone for much longer. "If it didn't have than OTH, I could try to fight at midrange, but if it charges that thing up I'm dead."

"Yeah, I know, this fucking sucks," I say, rolling my eyes sharing the sigh. The OTH can't hit you if you're up close and personal with the mech using it, since it needs to charge while remaining still, but fighting on CQC against a tank as the Elef is borderline stupid. "Alright, just keep it up for awhile. I'm going there now!"

"Won't you get stuck between their attacks?"

"At this point it's do or die! We're just getting worn down."

My Take draws an arc in the sky, doing a backflip to dodge another missile, getting into position to rush through once it lands. Alright, I've gotten the timing of the barrages more or less figured out. Since the Frei has to stay out of the radar's area it should be relying on its partner to get my position, so it doesn't know exactly where I am. Which means, staying in such a narrow space is doing them a favor.

As soon as the next wave hits, I'm forward dashing the hell out of here! I'll just use the TC to blast away the bigger rocks to make me a path forward. With my instincts as my guide, I'll maneuver through the rest of the canyon. It's better than to leave this go on and on. Now, they should appear in the radar right about…

… now?

What the… Where are they?

Still nothing. A few clouds pass over in the distance, the BGM keeps playing. No alarm is coming up, not even as I take a few careful steps in between the stones. Could it be that it went after Mikoto?!

"Mikoto, the Frei may have gone after you! I'm no longer under attack so I'm rushing there," I say while starting the dash, blasting the bigger rocks with a minimally charged TC beam shot.

"What? I can barely keep up with the Elef, how do you want me to dodge the other's attacks too?!"

"Just hold out for a bit longer! I'm trying to get there!"

Dammit, I'm too far away. I could get there faster if I use all the boosters, but that would use up a lot of fuel and I might crash myself. I have to make some sharp turns, some at a few crossroads in a 90° angle, so it's going to be risky. My swords aren't that good against the Elefante, so if I deplete my fuel by flying high to avoid the rocks, then I won't be able to go for the hit and run approach. Then I'm going to be a sitting duck against the fortress, even with the Thunder Cannon I can't possibly try to fight that monstrosity at long range. A single shot of the OTH and I'm dead. Mikoto is probably rather low on fuel with how much he's been dodging, so I can't leave him alone against two enemies for long.

Use all the boosters and risk losing the grind game or crashing? Keep this speed and risk losing Mikoto? Either way, it looks like we're screwed. If only I could hit them from- Wait a sec.

"Mikoto, retreat to a safer position right now!" I stop my boost, repositioning the Take's feet forward and stopping with a hop against a rock.

"The hell you're talking about! You'll get bombarded if I run!" Can't blame him for snapping like that.

"You can't take attacks from both at the same time, so if you try to retreat they'll surely try to block you. Just buy me ten seconds!"

"Ten seconds? What are- Oh! Got it!"

Heh, smart one. He got it in no time. Looking around, I'm met with the tall cliffs and pillars that litter the innermost side of the canyon. Alright, here should be fine. Gradually slowing down my boost, I take my position under a cliff while getting out the Thunder Cannon. Aiming it towards the exit gains me a small red lock-on circle. The giant ass of the Elefante is right at the end of my range, but I'm under lots of cover so I should be fine, no shot it can detect me from this position. Otherwise, they would have already effed me with the OTH as I was dodging missiles, after all.

Going prone, aiming at its core, I start the charge to full power, small sparks gyrating in my weapon. Thanks to all the missiles they shot at me I'm at 53% shields so this will definitely do a lot of damage. If Mikoto manages to distract them I'll get a clear shot to the core, which will probably put it near red numbers. Thanks to the cliff I'm safe from incoming missiles as well, so the charge won't get interrupted. And since the place is full of jagged rocks and obstacles, the Frei can't come near to snipe me in such little time.

10, 9, 8, 7…

A dot appears on my radar, what's the Freikugel doing there? Right at the edge of the radar, on the top of the canyon.

4, 3, 2…

BAM! CRASH!

An explosion shakes the cliff I'm under. Small at first, then larger by the second, rocks and boulders rain down on my Takemikazuchi, the screen vibrating and spinning as my machine is tumbled to the ground. But I still manage to shoot, after all the cooldown icon is flashing on my screen and I felt the vibration that comes through the controld when you fire a strong weapon, locking your position in.

Once the camera readjusts itself, I see my mech got stuck in between some fallen rocks, suffering 10% damage. Sigh… Thank God the Takemikazuchi is one of the sturdier mechs in the game, the Kaizer might have ended up really messed up after an avalanche like that. To think the Frei would use all of its missiles to destroy the environment… This means its loadout is probably lacking a melee weapon. Full commitment to the playstyle, kudos for that. Still feels cheap as hell.

"Mikoto, the cliff I was near collapsed on me. I'm stuck between some rocks, how did the shot go?" My Take's torso swings back and forth until I get fed up and use a sword to stand up again. On the plus side, the rock slide cleared most of the pillars on the area so now I can boost without worries.

"You got a clean hit on its head! Took 33% of its shields!" He yells, a bit too loud for my ears.

I was aiming for the body but wound up doing a head-shot. Well, at least I hit it.

Wait, if I didn't leave it in low health, that means… Mikoto is not going to be able to finish it off. And that means he's now in the range of both of them. Alone.

As I finish my trail of thought an alarm appears on my screen. Mikoto has 10% shields left.

"Mikoto, get outta there! Let's regroup somewhere else!" I flick my joysticks and pull the right lever hard as I stomp the pedals, entering a sudden full boost towards Mikoto's position, grazing a few pillars as I do.

"I can't escape! They're synchronizing their missiles to block me, and my air thrusters got hit so I can't glide anymore!" He shouts, I can hear the clicking noises of the controllers as he yanks them around.

Shit, they outsmarted us again. That's why the Frei didn't come after me immediately with missiles and instead tried to bury me under the cliff. He wasn't really trying to stop me from shooting at the Elef, he wanted to off Mikoto to later projectile spam me to death.

"Takeru, I'm sorry. I couldn't get past this thing and didn't do much damage to it."

"Hey, don't give up! We still haven't-"

"It was fun, you know! Playing together again. We should do this more often. Now let's go for that ice cream!"

Mikoto's dot stops moving in the radar, the missiles approaching its position. A loud explosion echoes in the distance as a message appears on my screen.

[PLAYER 1 KILLED]

Dammit! Dammit! Dammit! They read us like an open book! If I had dashed out of there faster this wouldn't have happened. Because of me, Mikoto is…

My eyes are glued to the crimson word flashing in the screen. I ease up on the boost, bringing my Takemikazuchi to a stop in between some rocks as the red fills my view.

Killed.

Mikoto got killed. He's… dead?

I know Mikoto isn't dead, this is just a game after all.

But as the crimson word flashes, as I'm showered in the red light, as I speak the words inside, a faint pain raises up on the back of my head, like a bunch of needles poking my scalp. A shiver, a shock runs through my arms, making me claw at the controls. Echoing closer and closer, distant yet constant, sounds I've heard before start coming back.

The sounds of a ruined world, of the eternal wasteland I see in my dreams. Fire spreads through my eyes, explosions blast away everywhere, dark smoke covers it all as if it were foggy. My breaths freezes in my throat as I once more hear the blossoming screams begging for help, disgusting munching sounds as well. Death, death as far as one could see. There is no sun, no light within this place. I see no hope, no salvation here.

The image of Mikoto being blown into a thousand bits fills my view, then it's Tama, then Class Rep, then Ayamine, then Meiya. Sumika appears in that bed, the white haired girl looks at me.

"Sumika-san is dead."

My throat wrings itself shut tight at the sight and sounds of this nightmare, hiccups in my chest as if I were trying not to puke for some reason. And yet, the taste, the acid taste of bile burns my tongue as some sort of melting echoes reach my ears, too. But in the middle of all the chaos, of all the smoke, something red is advancing towards me. Then slowly, so slowly, a black fire engulfs the battlefield, leaving nothing behind. The sky parts away, completely clear, the searing hold of the fighting was all burnt away from it. The screams stop, the red things are all gone, the fire also simply retracts and disappears. There's nothing left behind.

It's cold.

It feels so, so cold.

Complete, utter silence.

No screams, no begs for help, not a single voice. No one else alive is near…

No one…

… Alone.

" -like hell this'll be the end…"

Huh?

" If it comes down to it…" A voice, hoarse and low, creeps from behind me.

And looking back, a small dart encrusted itself onto my heart, making me choke on empty air. Yet, what I now see… is different than the rest of the nightmares. Rushing through the wasteland like a thunderbolt, a metallic human-like thing struggles against the red sea, making tidal waves of gore rise high beyond the cliffs. With the fire of war as its cloak, the machine keeps on braving the storm of the unending waves of monsters of this eternal wasteland.

Even in the middle of all this madness, someone is still pressing on? Why?

A tall, very tall shadow falls upon me. Looking up at it, some… odd monster tilted its head at me, shrouded in fog and shadows. Or… well, not at me exactly, but in my general direction. What the fuck is this thing?

And yet, that metallic mech-like thing blasts away towards the shadows, slicing its underside.

"Give me my world back!" Shredding its lungs out as it did to the flesh of the monster, the voice shock me into dizziness, pain all over my body, fingerscurling in as if hit by a hammer, nails crushed in half.

Is that… me? A voice like mine roars from within the steel giant as it rushes through the wasteland slashing at some kind of monsters with swords in each hand, enduring alone the onslaught. There is no road to follow, no clear hope of victory, and yet the force of his struggling does not yield to the monsters.

The screams, the voice, even some of the movements and backflips the mech does… That has to be me.

Who else could someone who speaks like me be? No one, except myself. But… why is his voice, or rather mine, so crushed? Screaming non-stop, cursing everything in sight, repeating that over and over. 'Give me back my world'.

Slowly, the haze of the smoke grows dimmer and dimmer, distant and distant. Everything sinks beyond the horizon, or maybe the tidal waves grow larger than the horizon itself. Feels as if I were floating on water but while standing up.

A small warm feeling lingers on the back of my head, like small raindrops gently falling on me. Covered by that faint lukewarmness, a deep breath fills me whole with fresh air. The tension evaporates, the pressure releases my chest. My unfocused vision clears up, my throat eases up as I yawn and scream at the same time. Blinking a few times, I'm back in the arcade cockpit, game still in session, cold sweat on my face and back, my heartbeats clanging against my chest as I gasp for dear air.

… What was that? I've never had such a vivid daydream in my entire life. Was I having a panic attack? Over a game?

Yes, I screwed up. But I was never that good on Valgern-On, truth be told. Then, why am I gritting my teeth? Why are my fists clawing at the joysticks? Why can't I wipe the frown from my face? Why… am I so pissed off? What's this cold feeling all over my back, this hole in my stomach?

"Am I gonna have a break down? Just for this shit?!"

Having to move slower than usual? Fighting two on one? Being low on fuel? I feel like I've been through worse things in my life. Or was it in my dreams? Am I dreaming about a ruined world to pump myself up? Or am I dreaming about this peaceful world to rest from all that carnage?

A flicker on my screens snaps me back to reality. Two waves of missiles incoming. I grip the joysticks tightly, to calm my shaky hands. No way in hell I'm losing like this. If I'm gonna lose it all then I'll struggle to the very end. I'll despair after I'm dead!

"Full accel on all boosters! I'm outta here, forward dash!" Stomping the pedals, the rocket boosters flare up and roar alive before sending the Take blasting away.

Grazing a few large stone pillars as I boost dash non-stop, the beeping alarm warns the closeness of the missiles. Heartbeats calm down, stop crashing against my chest even when the beeps intensify. Rebounding off the cliffs as I jump, the stock explosions fail to reach me. Sighing the pressure away as I lick over my lips, boosting so fast that the screen became as blurry as if this were a racing game and I was going at over 300 km/h, the cold feeling on my back finally disappears.

"Some simple dodging like this… won't hold me back!"

Getting the TC back online, focusing again onto the pixelated and blurry map ahead, I move my boosters so they're fully backwards and fly just a bit over the ground as red thunders roar within my cannon, the alarm of more missiles coming resonating yet again on my ears. Inhaling slowly through my nose, easing up the grasp on my joysticks, blinking fast, I let out a groan as the beam of red lightning blasts away a few pillars and rock formations on the cliff, creating a small escape route for me. Doing a power slide and squeezing the Take under the artificial tunnel my beam built for me, no damage I receive from the downpour of missiles. Exiting the tunnel, a vast expansion greets me, the cliffs parting wide and revealing a small desert in between them as the explosions roar behind me. Sand rises to the sky as the missiles miss their mark, yet for some reason, the sound of the explosions feels so… fake.

Why was I so nervous about these missiles? It's not like I'll… die or anything. Peeking at my health bars, the light yellow color tells that I barely took damage in my escape.

"Huh, check that out. Well, compared to that nightmare, dodge-tanking a few missiles seems like easy work." Finally resting my full weight back onto the seat, easing my pressure on the pedals, my purple mirage exits the cramped inner side of the canyon.

I should go for the Frei first, since the Elefante can't move much. Fighting at the top of the canyon should also give me some cover from the OTH, since it needs to have a clear line of sight to lock onto me. Even if it has a ridiculous long range, it can't break through a mountain like beam weaponry does. Thank God there's no beam cannon in the game.

Judging from where the missiles came from, the Frei should be somewhere around northeast of my current location, above the cliffs. Heels press onto the pedals, sending my Take into a double boost jump. Landing on a large pillar, jumping off it towards the cliff, and then jumping again off the rock walls to not lose momentum, veering the orientation of the boosters to draw an arc in the sky with a sharp yank of the controls and a sharper breath in. The Takemikazuchi safely reaches the top of the canyon before we lost more altitude or fuel, or missiles came in pouring.

I take a small breath, smaller steps into the terrain. The large view of the barren wasteland with all signs of life shining for their absence sends a shock through my back, another dart into my heart as those tall shadows crept into my vision for a sec. Gulping hard and exhaling strongly from my nose, my lips regress into my mouth, the cold feeling swallowed back down while I start to dash through the sinkholes and cracks in the map. I can still feel the sweat rolling down my face, though.

"Don't have time… to waste on hallucinations. Let's get moving, the Frei's bound to appear on the radar sooner or later." And not a second after, a dot bleeps to life in the corner of my radar. A few meters away, right in the middle of the area full of sinkholes. "Alright, position locked! Don't think your missiles will keep me back!" And neither will this bumpy terrain, it's nothing I haven't done before!

The boosters flare to life again, the Take shoots out like an arrow towards our target. Noticing my approach, the dot starts to escape before its white shape enters my vision. And yet again, the alarm beeps alive on my ears. As the missile clouds get closer, my hands choke the joysticks while I carefully give the terrain a good look, at the cracked floor and pitfalls in particular.

"Alright. Can't take damage and can't lose tempo. Piercing forward is the only choice left!"

Sidestep, half a tilt, dash, boost jump, tech, crouch, cancel, forward dash!

Sand explodes, the screen shakes, my controllers cry and click. But my health bar remains unchanging, and my lane of choice remains undisturbed. Missiles avoided, no speed lost, and no damage taken in the dodging either besides a small twinge in my wrists. Heh, and the Frei is almost in range.

"Time to rumble, spammer!"

The Frei might be one of the best snipers but on the open terrain at the top of the canyon it should be no match for the Takemikazuchi, so long as I don't fall in one of the sinkholes. And, if it gets too far away, my TC's charge should be a few frames faster than its weapon shift back to missiles. No need to rush, I'm the one hunting here. So I circle around it waiting for an opening, stalking its shadow, dodging missiles and occasional volley, opting to run on the ground to not waste fuel. And for a few seconds, it keeps trying to get me off as we play chase, hide and seek in between the creaks and crevices of this wasteland. But since it's trying to get me to the area full of sinkholes, the Frei also has to take care to not fall into them. And once it loses some speed-

I go into a full boost for a second, my unwary rival stalling a reaction as the purple beetle pierces through the twisting clouds of dust and approaching fast, enough to let me see the lock-on circle. Letting its shoulder pads cascade onto its back, the Frei cancels the missiles and switches to the machineguns, beginning to backboost as it sprays and prays. A quick press of the buttons sends me up into a jump, yet I pull the lever and immediately cancel it. The short hop turns into a tech, returning me to the ground in just a few frames as the missiles caresses the horn of my beetle. Heh, I got you to aim upwards!

"How do you like my machineguns?!" I shout as I push the triggers.

My bullets making their way to the Frei's platinum and slim body like moths to a fire. It couldn't dodge all the shots at this range, and now that you're stunned I'm gonna do you in! Falling towards it in a spinning dash, both shortswords lunge for its core and get a direct hit, sparks flying off alongside the screeching of twisted metal.

… Wait, why is he still moving? He's not down yet?!

The Frei punches me and tries to boost jump away as my Take stumbles back, but I finish it with the machineguns before it gets away, after button mashing like mad to regain my footing. The pincushion that it was made explodes away, its dot vanishes from the radar. I'm left in silence in the wasteland, wiping my forehead.

"Sigh… Damn, that was dangerous." If it was any other mech that little percentage it had left could have costed me the game, thank God the guy didn't have a melee weapon.

Now, let's see how I'm holding. Shield at 31%, fuel at 24%. Since I barely used my swords they're at full durability, but even then I can't go for the hit and run. I probably can do only one full boost if I'm careful. If we're talking about range there's no way I could fire the TC, even if I somehow dodge a shot from the railgun the Elef probably has either a rifle or long range missiles to disrupt my charge. And my speed does lower a bit while charging the TC, so dodging and charging at the same time is out of the question against an Elef that has an OTH. So, what do I do? Where's the safest place to attack such a giant enemy with my available weaponry?

I have an idea, but it's completely stupid. It's better than letting the timer run out on me, though. C'mon, Takemikazuchi! Let's show 'em how good we are together!

After running to almost the edge of the canyon, I start boost jumping towards the Elefante's signal in zigzags. I'll assume it has the OTH charged already and is waiting for me to appear in the radar. No sooner do I start descending that the danger alarm bursts to life, a twinkle in the distance that in seconds grows larger by the second.

Gulping emptiness, heels on the pedals I send myself into a barrel roll while descending at near top speed. Right besides me, the flow of bullets passes through. Almost looking like beam, the stream of charged ammo that explodes about, piercing across the wasteland… Ugh, why?

Shit, my head hurts again. What the fuck is wrong with me? Again, my vision twists a bit, my eyes hurt as if something were pressing them into my skull, and a ringing echo zooms into my ears.

A blasting beam of light… piercing a wasteland… while I fight and do some tight dodging… Did I have a match like this before? Huh… Feels like, for some reason. But why does this hurt so much, fuck.

No, no time to space out! Coughing, blinking fast to get back in the game, my Take is still safe. Sigh… To think I'd manage to dodge an OTH. I got lucky this time, so let's get close before OTH gets reloaded.

"Now's my chance, full boost ahead!"

Again, the background grows blurry as the Take exerts itself to full speed, as the engage alarm appears once more. Dodging some shots from the Elef's rifle and some missiles using the cliffs and rocks as cover while again grazing some as I moved, I'm safely approaching the towering fortress that now appears in my sight. Hovering in the middle of the cliffs, blocking the main crossroad of the map, the massive metallic gray hunk of metal shines amidst the heatwaves of the Mirraoph Canyon, its high-res model contrasting with the lesser details of the environment.

Mikoto was right, this one relies more on its guns than on the missiles, though. Carefully reading its shooting timings, I manage to get near the open area where it is, using stone pillars as cover. A second of peace later, it switches to using a heavy machinegun on each arm and I'm forced to sidestep to get out of harm's way, hiding behind the rock formations of the pathways. Luckily, these cliffs can't be destroyed so easily… but if it starts charging the OTH again while I'm still not close enough I'm as good as dead. Well, not actually dead, but… eh, whatever.

Peeking my head from behind the rocks, my Take's horn receives a hit. 2% damage, but the horn got destroyed. Two Heavy machineguns, long range rifles and missiles, a fucking OTH railgun, seems to be its loadout.

"How did this OP mech not get nerfed yet?! Seriously devs, what the hell?! How the fuck is anyone supposed to have a chance against this damn monster?"

Moving to another pillar in a sudden boost dash, the Take circles around the giant fortress, running through the dust and pixelated large rocks in the area that is being showered by incoming sunlight from the clear sky and searing smoke from the volleys of my adversary.

I just gotta dodge for a little while more, the heavy machineguns gotta cool down after a while. Dammit, my shields are at 21%. Am I gonna make it?! There's not enough places to take cover in if I wanna get closer. The recharge window should be coming up in-

The shooting stops, the player takes a little too long to switch its weapons, so in a sudden burst my Take approaches the floating fortress from behind. Just a bit more, if I land a hit with my machineguns it's as good as dead. It starts to spam the missiles again, but it's no problem! Forward dash, sidestep, boost jump to the left, cancel, boost jump to the right!

TC out and bolting, aiming it upwards as I rush on, all incoming missiles fall to the red lightning. Sand and smoke rising everywhere in my view, the red bolts shielded me well, explosions surrounding my unit, that inches closer and closer to red numbers, oil and bloody murder oozing from its visor.

Right behind that cloak of violence that surrounds me lays a towering shadow, the gray fortress filling my view as I look up. But now, unlike before as I circled around it, a small red circle appears in my view. The Lock-On is active, which means-

"Hehehe… You're in my range! Having such a big ass must suck right now!"

Diving like a meteor were my fingers onto the controllers, flicking the trigger with all my might. The machineguns hit its lower body while I dodge the fire from the turrets it has equipped on its sides.

"Hahahaha! 0% damage! This is hilarious!"

I can't help but laugh at this. Who on Earth designed this monster?! And you're telling me it had a Beam Shield when it was introduced? Seriously, what were they smoking? I want some of that shit.

The Elef spasms as little jolts cover its body, the stun now in effect. So, landing hard onto the sand, I rush forward towards it. Finally, I'm in position to execute my plan. Let's see if my gamble was worth it!

Back in my college class there's this guy called Onimura. He's also a gamer so we hit it off immediately. He plays this game where he's just a medieval guy hunting monsters with a giant horn that plays music or something. The thing is, one day I asked him how did he even approach one of those giant dragons he fights, to which he answered: "The safest place to fight a giant dragon is below him, ironically! Since most of its attacks can't hurt me if I'm there, and I can just keep beating it up no problem!"

Basically, what that weird shadowy me was doing in my daydream in that odd robot to whatever that tall monster was. Onimura, if this plan works I'm buying you lunch for a week, I swear.

The stun wears off as I take out a longsword and start slashing at the Elefante from below while shooting the TC without even charging it.

Slash, 2% damage. Slash, 2% damage. Laser Beam, 9% damage. Little by little I lower its shield, little by little its modular plating gives away like the skin of boiled chicken.

The Elefante tries to move, but since the Takemikazuchi's speed is better even on foot I can remain below him. He can't attack me with its turrets or any other weapon while I'm here, and the Elefante cannot jump since it's always hovering. So my Take keeps slashing and slicing, blasting it away with the TC. Repeating the rhythm time and again, yanking the controls and stepping on the pedals as if in a daze, in a dance. Metal starts to burn, yielding to the hammer.

sparks and screeches jumping as if you poured water onto a frying pan with warm oil in it.

"You son of a bitch! You okay winning like a scrub?!" I hear the venomous yell over the headphones, and a small yanking noise of controls. Heh… the Elef's pilot, I see.

"You two tried to win this by spamming projectiles, so I'm sure you won't complain about me taking the easy way out!" I retort in my old cocky tone, chuckling at their groans, speeding up my combo, tearing the Elef apart.

"You've no skill, noob! Sucker! Cheater!" The other guy of that team keeps calling me names, his voice heating up more with each insult as I cackle back.

The Elefante's shields are in red, let's finish this!

"Hey you two, GG. And by that I mean Git Gud !" I say, holding a chuckle.

Rising my blade above my shoulder, lowering my stance, I push the controls forward. The dash allows the Take to rise from the ground for a moment, releasing a vicious slash towards the damaged machine. And with eyes blazing, the Takemikazuchi slices its longsword into the Elefante, piercing it like a cannon ball would do to defenseless sheep.

Smoke rises up, sparks give way to a fire cloak that envelopes the entirety of the metallic titan, a loud explosions soon follows. Once the screen stops shaking, I see my Take taking on its victory pose.

[MATCH OVER - TEAM N° 51 WINS]

"WOOHOHOO!" We made it into the top 12 of our zone! "We won! Check that out! Wryyyy!"

Gasping, panting, I take off my phones and run a hand over my head. The back of it is still beating, and I can't stop feeling my heartbeats in full force near my neck. Leaning onto the seat, simply looking at the message with a goofy smile, I keep taking breaths with my mouth open, feeling a shiver on my sides. Sighing hard, I pull the seat back swiftly.

"Hey, Mikoto! Say something! What do you think about that?!" I must sound like a kid, but I can't hide my excitement right now. All that anxiety completely gone from me, I cannot help but smile like an idiot.

There's no answer. I get out of my seat and look around but I don't see him anywhere. Where could he… Don't tell me that he went away! He's not in his seat, not outside the terminal. And I can't see him near the rest area, either. It's odd he didn't chime in during the fight, now that I think about it.

How long has it been since he got shot down? Don't tell me you immediately got up and left… Mikoto, if you left and we get disqualified you'll never hear the end of it!

"COME BACK HERE, MIKOTOOOOOOO!"

---

5 Minutes later.

(Showroom. Rest Area.)

---

"I can't believe you! You have no faith in me!"

"What were you expecting?! One of them was unscathed and the other was a friggin' floating fortress with an OTH Railgun! You had less than half of your shields and fuel! I really thought it was the end of it!" Mikoto says, returning the blazing gaze. I mean, I guess anyone would think it'd be impossible to turn the tables on a situation like that.

"Whatever, let's go for a drink or something. Just lemme tell you that you missed one of the best matches in the tournament!" I shrug, walking towards the rest area in the showroom with my cheeks a bit puffed.

He sighs, scratching his head with an eye closed. "I'll just watch the replay later. But that was enough, you know? I mean, I was really happy that we made it to the Top 24 of our zone. I can't believe we're in the best 36 teams of the whole tournament!" He says as the glee returns to his face.

"Yeah, but from now on we stick together and watch each other's back. The next fight is gonna be brutal, too."

"Wait, you wanna win it?!" Mikoto looks at me with a surprised face, resembling an electric rat, little jolts on his cheeks and all.

"You don't?"

"Eh? Ah, no. I mean, yes, I wanna win but, you know, you kinda carried us here. Not just the last fight, I've not been much help in this," he lets out a sigh as his entire body hunches over like a little flower under the rain.

"Dude, this isn't like you at all. And last fight was all on me for not acting faster. You kept the Elefante at bay for, what? Two full minutes? That's awesome, you know?"

"Yeah, but I got taken down in the end. And it was your idea that took down the Elef, and you dealt with the Frei all by yourself too," he looks away, his pace slows down.

"That was more thanks to the Takemikazuchi's exceptional speed, if you had tried to get below that thing I'm sure you could have done it."

"You think?" Barely whispering the retort, his eyes remain glued to the floor.

He looks super down, dammit. How can I cheer him up? I'm not good at giving speeches, I always end up preaching when I do. Hmm…

"… What? Is this how you wanna go, with me showing you up? What's next? You're gonna start calling me Takeru-sama?" I say, smirking as I shrug, raising a single brow. Let's just do what I usually do, no point in overthinking this.

"Wha… I-Idiot! You're such a stupid idiot, Takeru!" Flaring back up, he lightly slaps my arm. "That's it, next fight is my turn to shine!" Yes! There's the competitive Mikoto I know!

"That's more like it! Now let's get some juice or something."

"… Hey Takeru, you alright?" He stops in his tracks, locking his gaze on me.

"Hmm? Yeah, why?"

"You look kinda… different. No, you look like you usually do."

"Huh? Then why did you ask me if I'm alright?"

"Because you've been weird for awhile. You didn't smile, rarely joined in the jokes, didn't react when you got teased. Even the tone of your voice sounded down."

"Well, what can I say? Beating someone up sure is nice. Especially with a sword!"

"Hahaha, see? That's our usual Takeru!"

"Ha, well, is it what it is. Let's relax for a bit and keep doing our best. Then we're hitting that ice cream harder than a triple boost jump landing!"

"Yeah!"

40 minutes later.

(Showroom. Rest Area.)

---

"AAAAHHH TAKERU!"

"Stop screaming. And stop running. Sit down already," I do sit down, finally biting into the sandwich I ordered.

"B-B-B-But we made it to the FINAL ! How do you want me to calm down?!" He starts running in circles again as he shuffles between all his character sprites at the speed of sound.

"Mikoto, you must chill! We just won a super close game, too. We're already here, so no matter the result we went way beyond our limits. Let's fight with no regrets!"

"Ah, what are we gonna do?!"

This is pointless. Ayamine I wish you were here to help me calm him down. And by that I mean suffocate him until he calms down.

"If you didn't want to be in the final then, why did you land all those cannon shots?" You really creamed the opposite team real bad last match while they ganged up on me. Still can't believe you got the two kills, to be honest.

"I was just having fun! And you were trying so hard to corner them, so when I saw my chance I just took the shot, I wasn't even aiming at the core. This is the first time I do more than 40% with a single attack!" He crashes into the seat in front of mine, sparks flying out of the thunderstorm of amazement that laid in his eyes.

He got not one, but two fully charged cannon shots to the core of the first enemy, taking 45% off its shields with each hit. Imagine my surprise, I'm having trouble at CQC while tightly dodging some mid-range fire, when suddenly one mech explodes outta nowhere. And then as I stunned the other, it exploded too in a flash after Mikoto got yet another cannon shot at its core, shaving its remaining life away.

A match that was at a standstill for two minutes ended in less than half of one, thanks to Mikoto's exalted mode activating or something.

"Well then, let's just keep having fun! This time it's really hard to think we could win it. So, let's go out with a blast!"

"Uh, but everyone is gonna be watching. And the final is going to be uploaded to the official website! What if we screw up and it ends up there forever?!" He keeps shaking, forehead full of sweat beads as he takes the first bite of his food.

"All the more reason to calm down, so that we don't make any stupid mistakes."

"Uuuh…" He seems to have calmed down a bit. But it's not like I don't understand him.

The last two matches were very hard, even when Mikoto upped his game. We went against pros and managed to somehow get out victorious. Honestly, if it weren't for the Takemikazuchi's speed and Mikoto's deadly cannon shots we wouldn't be here. So much for weapon balance! So many things are broken in this game! Though, I suppose that for my rivals my speed is broken too.

There's also this seething motivation I've been feeling since that match with the Elef and the Frei. Like, I don't even wanna lose this. Yet, this seems kinda… pointless? I mean, we're losing the final no matter what we do, we're nowhere near the level needed to actually win. But, I dunno, it's like something's missing here.

At least this is the end of the tournament. I'm really glad I got to be here, even if after this it's another half a year until everyone can get together again. After this we get some more time to hang out. I really shouldn't let my nightmares bring me down so much. I really rather be hanging out with the gang right now. I wanna spend some more time with them.

As I lay back onto my seat, I notice Mikoto playing with his keys. His gaze is clouded as he eats a sandwich, it's also rare for him to be so quiet.

"Alright Mikoto, let's make a bet!" It may be a stupid idea, but I want him to at least have fun in our last match.

"Huh? About what?"

"The first to go down has to give the other half its ice cream!" I say with a huge smile.

"What? No, you're just gonna rush away and leave me to die!"

"Of course not! We're both rushing in at the same time, since I don't think we stand a chance either way. Might as well go for the surprise attack."

"Huh? But…" He doesn't look convinced. Let's give him one last push.

"Wow, someone is not confident. Highschool Mikoto would laugh at you right now!" I see his face tighten, changing from doubt to anger in a second. Baiting: Successful!

"What?! Don't be a jerk, Takeru! I just… I'm really nervous, you know? Like this is the kind of thing I was always dreaming about when we were back in school!" He says as his face lights up, smiling again as he looks up to nowhere. "I was always getting dragged to the sea or the jungle, so when I got back home playing games was one of the things I looked forward to the most. But I could never go to any events… and now not only I'm in one but, I'm in the final match of the event! Do you get it Takeru?! We are on the final of an official Valgern-On tournameeeent!" And then his eyes start rotating in a counter clockwise way as he grabs his head, shaking a bit. Seriously dude, you must chill.

"Then all the more reason to go and give your best, right?"

"Huh?"

"With college and work in the future we probably won't be able to come to another event like this. This may be the last time for a long while that we can just have fun without worrying about what hour it is or if there's any studies to catch up to. So you must chill, dude. We came here, we played, we took down some pro players, and we got to the final. What else could a fan ask for?!"

"Yeah… I mean, today was great! I guess there's nothing else a fan could ask, aside from winning the thing. Thanks Takeru, you've matured a lot, you know?" He gives me his usual smile. I'm really envious of how easily you can change your mood.

"That's hardly a good thing, considering how much of a brat I was before. If I didn't grew up a bit I'd be in deep shit now that I'm in college."

"Hahaha, don't be silly!"

"To all finalists, please go to your terminal. The final match shall begin in five minutes. I repeat-" The voice echoes through the showroom.

All the players that lost have gone to the hall, I think, so the showroom feels empty right now. We were on the rest area but the other players didn't come at all. Who knows what kind of people we're against now?

"Let's go, Takeru! It's showtime!"

"Yeah, let's!" Let's do our worst and go down without regrets!

Heh, who would have said it? A videogame is what got me out of my cloud of negativity of these last months. Though, I do wonder what the hell is up with these nightmares. I hope I don't start having lucid daydreams while in college.

After getting ready and sitting back in our terminal, we heard the announcer on our headphones introduce all the teams before the match started. Can't believe they used our full names, I better not make a fool out of myself here or my college life might become hell. Please guys in my class, don't watch this!

Then, as we accept the connection for the match, we got to the field select screen and the battlefield is-

Heh, of course it would be this. Yguloch Fortress, the narrow circle of hell as they call it. Well, at least we won't have to worry about Rigulla's damage hazards. A small mercy, I guess.

And then, with a loud cheer of the announcer, the three-headed dragon match begins, the loading screen giving way to the map.

The Technopolis comes into view, imposing as always. Curved structures, shining silverish metal, oval shapes and lines of energy beams holding the city together. I'll never get tired of praising some of the maps. The backgrounds, BGMs and style they have is top notch. Yguloch really is very similar to the cities of Galaxy Wars, though. Still, if they wanted to make a reference to that, why do we not have any lasersabres? Imagine how cool that would be, dual wielding crimson lasersabres as you rush through the enemies while screaming 'Unlimited Poweeeeeer!'.

"Takeru, can you see any enemies?" Mikoto asks, again yanking me off dreamland.

"… Nope, nothing nearby or in the radar. Stay close, I'll go over that tower."

Walking on the platinum white streets, between the perfect cubes of the structures, I hop on top of some smaller buildings to get to the tower in question, that looks like an anchor in reverse pointing to the sky. I wait a few seconds but I can't see anything on the screen or in my radar, not even as I look about the place.

Yguloch has an open exterior filled with all kind of sci-fi, futuristic looking buildings and in the center of the map there's the fortress, that is a clear homage to the Doom Moon. But still, there's nothing in sight.

"See anything?" He asks.

"Not yet, no. Anyways, better make haste and get closer to the fortress."

"Huh? Why? Shouldn't we stay under cover to catch the enemies by surprise?"

"Have you ever played this map, Mikoto?" I ask as my Take hops back to the ground, landing besides the Xao-Myun.

"No, not really. I haven't got the time to try all the new maps from the last updates."

"Well, you see, Yguloch's interior is very narrow, kind of like an actual building. It's perfect for hit and run tactics, or just to hold the fort. There's very few mechs that have the speed or defense to traverse one of the hallways while under constant fire. But there's one special thing about this map," I stop, on purpose to make the silence all the more grand, licking my lips and inhaling sharply, to speak from my stomach. "In the dead center of the fortress there's a room with a control panel, and if you interact with it you'll make nukes rain down on the outside. It basically destroys all the outside map, forcing players to fight within the fortress." But the nukes are programmed to drop automatically after three minutes anyways. So waiting is kind of pointless.

"So you want to win by using those nukes? This… feels really cheap, you know," He sighs as we start walking, the Xao-Myun lagging behind my Take.

"The inside of the fortress is like a labyrinth, so it's not like we have a clear road towards the panel. And we can get sniped on the outer sections of the building. But as soon as any team shoots for the fortress, there's gonna be little we can do besides rushing to it. So we have no time to waste, we gotta try to get close to the entrance in case anyone pushes the red button," I say with a nod, Mikoto groans a bit but still agrees.

Even if fighting breaks out outside Yguloch, getting closer is for the better. And if the match drags on, the nukes are gonna come down raining anyways. So, chances are, someone is gonna chase that control panel. Or we could just rush and do that ourselves? Nah, no way in hell that's gonna work, we'll be exposing ourselves unnecessarily.

"Takeru! Enemy to your left!" He warns and we both stop walking, crouching behind a spinning anchor-tower.

I check my radar, there's two signals near and getting closer. Wait, I got another reading to my right. Two more coming from over there. Are they… rushing into the fortress? Looks like, at the speed the dots are moving. So much for being cautious.

"Can you see anything, Mikoto?"

"Not yet, I still can't- wait, is that… an Elefante?!"

"Times two actually, there's another to the right," I say as another Elef becomes visible to my right as it flies above the buildings in the distance.

"Eh?! For real?!" That match against the gray Elef must have left quite the impact on him.

So much for a balanced and diverse meta. Let's see what are the others piloting.

"Mikoto, stay on the ground. Let's lay low for awhile."

"Huh? What about rushing in case the nukes come down?"

"Just let me see what are the others piloting." Just a little more and they'll get in the radar's area.

And there we go! Let's check what are they… Slim build, spiky head, long backthrusters. Huh, well shit. This is gonna suck.

"Takeru, can you see them?"

"Yep, both of them are using a Ravager," I say as I start advancing again, Mikoto following me.

"Both? So the other teams are identical?" He asks, a bit puzzled.

"Yeah, balance and diversity be damned. I can see what they were going for, but this is just ridiculous. Both teams are rushing to the entrance, and if I were a betting man I'd say they're trying to block it with the Elefante while the Ravager gets to the control panel to wipe all other players with the nukes."

"Huh? And you think that'll work?"

"Honestly, yeah. The Ravager is the fastest mech in the game, and while most of its weapons are light and don't do much damage, its signature weapon, the Homing Missile, is really good. It dodges covers and obstacles and can stun just like my machineguns. With those it can keep any pursuers at bay or hop in for the kill if it needs to."

"So what do we do?" He sounds worried. Can't blame him.

"What we were going to do anyways. Rush 'em!"

"R-Really?" I can feel his incredulous look through his voice.

"Yeah, the Elefantes are going to knock each other trying to seize the gate, while the Ravagers will infiltrate the fortress. That way if we get past the giants we can kill off each Ravager individually. Since the hallways are so narrow the Elefantes can't get inside the fortress, so once the nukes get sent they're as good as dead."

"Sigh… I really don't like where this is going," He complains, sounding sour.

"Not like we have a choice, do we? The second Yguloch was chosen, this became a possible outcome. No point in complaining, right? Let's go have some fun!"

"Okay, right behind you!" Again sounding cheery, he replies as we both start boost dashing through the streets.

As we get close to the entrance, crouching and hiding behind a building, we see that the fight has already started. Explosions littering the sky, a few buildings blasted away, debris filling the streets. The once pure white of the Technopolis, ravished in an instant by all the missile spam. A green Elef has taken the gate while the other team tries to get past it. This one is firing missiles everywhere, not letting them get close. Another spammer, huh? The green one seems to have equipped missiles for all ranges and is holding a single machinegun.

The other team has an orange Elef repelling some missiles with its own, trying to cover a blue Ravager. Sadly, the crossfire of missiles leveled the entire area near the entrance to the fortress, the buildings reduced to ashes and small mounds of burnt metal.

All right, they seem to be so focused on the gate that they haven't noticed us getting closer, or they just don't give a damn. Whatever, I think that one full boost dash followed by a triple boost jump should get us close enough to just dash under the green one, then we can slide under it and enter the fortress. There should be one Ravager inside the fortress already so we should hurry.

"Mikoto, on my mark we go for a full boost dash followed by a triple boost jump, that should get us close enough to get past the green one. You ready?"

"Wait, don't you see that mark on the radar? Just above the gate?" Mikoto says with a shade of doubt.

"Huh? I just see one dot, what are you- It moved! There's two dots!" They're overlapping their signals? Is that even possible? I'm sure this is as legal as a loli.

"What do you think they're doing?" He seems surprised this kind of thing is even possible, watching as the explosions keep on screeching, yet the dot above the gate remains still.

"If they didn't get into the fortress, then I have no idea. There's no advantage to fight on top of the gate, since launching homings from inside would be safer now that all the cover got blasted away to hell."

"What if they were waiting to catch them by surprise? Takeru, you said that the Elefante can't get inside, right? So, if they kill the Ravager of the other team…"

"They have the match in their pocket! You're totally right!" Mikoto, you're a genius.

Of course anyone would assume that rushing to the panel is the safer strategy. But when they saw that the other team also had an Elefante, they decided to seize the chance to kill its partner, to have no one to compete for the panel later, since it seems they don't care about us or think the Elef is enough to either deal with us or keep us away from the fortress until the nukes come down.

Still… Look at all those explosions. It's literally a field of fire and smoke. Can we really make it safely inside the gate? If they have a Ravager ready to stun us with the homings, we're gonna be target practice for the Elef.

"What do you think we should do, Mikoto?"

"Um, the Homing doesn't do much damage, right? The Ravager on the gate must be waiting until they get low on shields, to use the surprise factor to its fullest and get rid of the other Ravager. So, I think that after the other team realizes that they're hiding on top of the gate, they'll try to kill it. And that's when we should rush into the fortress, while they fight between each other."

"Why don't we reveal the Ravager to them, then?" Light bulb moment right now, I have an idea we can exploit.

"Reveal it? Charging in into those two Elef's range? No, thanks!" He really is scared of them, after all.

"I was thinking of sniping it, we're in range I think. They haven't focused on us because we are not a threat to them, or they don't care, but when they look at where we shoot, even if we miss…"

"They'll see the other Ravager! Nice thinking, Takeru!"

"Nah, this is all you noticing the second dot."

We slowly approach a building, but we gain no attention so we take our position. Mikoto readies his cannons, I prep up the TC. Looking with the scope, it's obvious there's a mech above the gate, but if you don't look closely you can totally miss it. Looking at it from the front must be almost impossible, since it's hiding behind those light poles and the Elef's missiles deserve more attention.

Alright, let's get this baby charged up. Let's aim at the light poles!

"I'll use my TC to blow up the lights and most of the cover, you target the Ravager."

"What do we do after we shoot?"

"Wait and see, depending how things turn out we either take advantage of the chaos or wait until they stop bombarding each other with missiles. No point in rushing if we can't get to the gate in one piece."

"Okay, got it."

3, 2, 1… GO!

Both of our mechs shoot in unison towards the gate, our volleys parting the pixelated smoke. Burgundy streaks of lightning course through the air, melting what little protection is above the gate, everything blown up to smithereens. The ensuing smoke does not get a chance to settle down and rest as Mikoto's shot pierces through and further cracks the entrance. Yet, a small frame sways away from within the mushroom of dust and fire caused by our shots, the red Ravager that was forced to jump to dodge Mikoto's shot. The other team stops moving, taken aback by our attack to the gate, but as they see the other Ravager the missile spam immediately follows suit. The green Elef now has to cover its partner, and more explosions cover the sky in its entirety. Happy New Year, I guess?

"Looks like that went well. What now, Takeru?"

"They're nuking each other, we should- Mikoto, to your left!"

A homing missile heads towards Mikoto, luckily he reacts in time and shoots it down.

A screech comes through the speakers, followed by a livid voice. "You damn casuals! Go back to the Dreamcost with your low tier shit!" I think this is the guy in the red Ravager.

"What does he mean by low tier shit?!" He better not be insinuating what I think he is.

"You don't check the tier list, Takeru?"

"No, I just read the summaries on the forums and saw some replays of each mech." I thought the Take looked sick as fuck, so I gave it a spin one day. Been maining it ever since, and my Win-rate skyrocketed since then.

"Really? No wonder you of all people picked up the Takemikazuchi, then." What's up with that sarcastic tone?

"Which tier are our mechs in?"

"Mine is Mid tier. Yours is in Bottom tier."

"What?! This baby is at the bottom?! I call bullshit!"

"You're the only one I've seen to be able to use that mech without crashing and exploding at some point."

Our chat is interrupted by more missiles coming our way. Seems like camping is no longer an option for us, now that we got ourselves noticed.

"Mikoto, let's go! No point in staying here taking the missiles!"

"All right, right behind you!"

We dash towards the gate dodging and taking cover to avoid taking damage. This doesn't look like a battle that just started. Both Elefs are already at less than half shields and the blue Ravager is around 60%. I think this is going to turn into a slaughter, control panel be damned.

The red Ravager turns around when it notices us, shooting a homing along two grenades. Dammit, he's trying to split us up!

"Mikoto, to the left!" We take down the homing and get out of the grenades' damage area.

"Aren't you good for being a casual? At least you'll put up a fight!" The red's pilot screams at us.

"Masa, stop screwing around and leave the weaklings to me!" A women's voice rang on the headphones. So she's the green Elef's pilot. Weaklings, you said? Heh, we'll show you!

"Takeru to your left!" Just as Mikoto warns me, a grenade was about to explode. I quickly boost backflip out of danger, luckily sustaining no damage. That was too close.

"Thanks dude!"

"Stay focused, who should we target?"

"Let's go for green and red! The other two have taken more damage than them and will keep getting damaged in the crossfire. Don't let your guard down though, they'll surely try to hit us when they get a chance. I'll try to get under green to get red's attention, then we can pincer him. After that we can deal with the blue one as we retreat into the fortress. Give me some cover!"

Stomping the pedals, bringing the boosters back to life, I dash towards the green Elef at top speed. Now that I know how much damage it takes from below I know I can lower its shield enough for it to get killed by the other Elef.

The red Ravager tries to go after me but it's stopped by the blue one, then Mikoto joins the fray and sprays his deadly cannon shots about. Both Ravagers run away, but the red one ain't leaving me out of its sight.

Alright, let's do a full boost and do this quickly! Once we bait the red one, we can retreat into the fortress.

The warning chime beeps, a grenade is already falling my way along a homing right behind. A few buildings turn dark, covered in smoke, as the Elef's shots miss me by a hair.

"Heh, now we're talking. Come on, let's play ball!"

Integrate

Chapter 3:

Integrate

---

(Showroom. Terminal N° 51)

[Takeru]

---

With a blasting sound, my Take gets sent into a wall again. Its joints shouting at me in complain, it takes a sec for it to come back to its feet. By then, the red frame is again out of sight.

"Sigh… Damn, didn't think it'd take me so much to knockout a single enemy."

If Mikoto were here, we could have done this quickly. The damn blue Ravager got in the way of our plan, disrupting our pincer maneuver. The green Elef bombarded us with all it had to let Red run into the fortress, and I tried to give chase. Being left in between two Elef's missiles, it's a miracle I made it into the fortress, to be honest. Mikoto and the blue Ravager got done in during the crossfire, so now it's just me and-

BEEP!

"Me and the fucking homing missiles every damn second!" TC out, I don't even bother to charge it, releasing a small ball of red sparks that collide against the missile.

Taking a second to sigh, I run a hand over my forehead to clean the sweat that's been tickling down to my chin for a while now. The red Ravager has managed to keep its distance from me for about two minutes. I'm at a disadvantage in this fight, not only he can shoot homings at me from anywhere as soon as he locks onto me but also has better range with his guns and grenades. The guy is also not bad at CQC, though I did manage to get two clear hits.

But simply by hearing the creaking sounds of my Take as it walks, the once regal purple painting now peeling off and revealing the crude metallic gray beneath, one can see I'm almost a dead man walking. Down to my last long sword, I gotta make this count.

Blasting into a jump just before the corner, the Take keeps boosting in midair. No sooner do I take the turn that the alarm starts beeping again, the homing is coming already. A quick flicker, I shoot it down with the TC and start dashing forward as I land. Sidestepping and moving through the clogging smoke to avoid as many bullets as possible, my Take keeps on rushing while firing the machineguns. I don't care if I'm not in range yet, I have to take down the grenades before they get too close! The red frame is at the end of my radar, I can get close if I deal with these!

Grinding its feet against the ground, the Take comes to a sudden stop. The explosions start ahead of me, missing their expected target, as I quickly click and yank the combo. Pulling out the big and clunky TC again, the red circle of the auto-lock appears on my view despite the fire and smoke veiling my sight.

In a quick counter, my red adversary fires off a few more of his weapons at me. Sadly, I'm too far away for him to interrupt my charge. Lightning surges forth, grenades burnt to mere pixels, the beam roars through the hallway. The Ravager is forced to boost jump in a panic to avoid it, and shoots another homing as it does.

"I'm starting to think that having infinite projectiles is not a good idea. At least make the cooldown a bit longer, dammit!"

Piercing the clouds and flames, exploding the homings when required, I advance and try to counter. The Ravager manages to stay always out of range, a hazy shadow nearing the horizon, while never stopping to send those damn grenades to not let me use the TC again. But since that's what he thinks is my win-con, as soon as he gets locked into the animation-

Now's my chance! I pull the joystick forward, crouching first then going into a full boost dash, readying my blade. Red throws a grenade upwards, which misses my Take entirely as it crouch-dashes, my eyes see again that nice red circle of the auto-lock for a second. Instead of fleeing, Red starts taking out its saber. Feet planted on the pedals, joystick kept in place, I push my Take forward while ignoring the grenade.

Explosions tickle the Take's back, taking 3% off my shields. Couldn't get out of the damage area, at top speed? Whatever, I take my stance and slash at the Ravager. We trade blows, sparks and screeches echoing about, parries and ripostes exchanged like trading cards, but neither of us can get a clear hit either on the frame or the limbs nor find the space to use our guns without risk of a hit to the core. As we try to outmaneuver each other, taking sharp turns and power-sliding on the corners and around the few pillars that divide the hallways, our slashes keep meeting the other's blade time and again. This guy's technique in CQC is really something else, he must have played a melee-eccentric mech before.

After reaching a hallway with a 90° curve, the Ravager does a sharp drift and moves further in as it barely grazes the wall, leaving a trail of grenades in its wake. With a sharp yank of the controls, almost hitting my ribs, I take my distance from the corner as the stock explosions fill my view. Taking a second to sigh and do a circle with my neck, a chill runs down my spine as another chime appears. A homing again zooming towards me.

"For fuck's sake!"

More thunders meet the missile, more smoke fills and paints the once sleek walls of smooth and curved metal of the place. Once the pixelated smoke scatters, I resume the chase on foot again. He's gone into the next open area at the end of the hallway, he's trying to ambush me for sure. As I reach the place in question, however, I see a giant hole in the middle of the area. A giant, triangular elevator that is already activated.

"Oh… Oh, fuck no." A hand firmly planted on my forehead, all I can do now is is just close my eyes, shake my head and… and just… Man, fuck this shit. "How could I forget about this. The damn tunnel to the underground, fuck!"

Worst part is, the underground part of Yguloch is even more narrow than the aboveground building. This is bad, there's no way I'll be able to keep dodging his shots in the underground. Once he gets the lead and arrives at a narrow enough place, the Ravager can simply opt to employ a stationary defense tactic with the missiles . If my TC can't blast away the walls, which I think it shouldn't, then its all up on whether I can dodge the ammo or endure the damage.

And looking at my numbers, it's enough to make me gulp the sigh I was about to release. Fuck… Well, he still should be descending so I gotta be quick! The chase is on!

As soon as I set foot on the room a homing appears in my radar. Dammit, barely had time to take out the TC to protect myself from the damn thing. But now I can't shoot at the Ravager on the way down, the cooldown of the homing is shorter than that of the TC's if I base myself in how quickly he's been shooting the damn things when I was chasing him around.

"If I let him get away now that's it, it's my loss. I tried so hard and got so far, but in the end…"

The tunnel changes directions twice and he already has a lead on me. The Ravager is faster than the Takemikazuchi, so I suppose I won't be able to catch up.

"Well, at least I'll keep fighting to the end! Despair after you're dead, Takeru. No point in admitting defeat before the final curtain!" So, with a strong stomp on the pedals, I bring my Take to life, making it run and jump into the downwards spiral of a tunnel that's ahead.

Is there anything I can do to catch up to him? If only there was a way to get him by surprise. Without the TC or missiles, is there anything I can pull off? Hmm…

Lost in thought as I descend into the tunnel, looking at the gray walls that resemble some sort of odd research facility, my head starts to hurt right below my ears. It isn't a strong pain or anything, but it's definitely bothersome. Too much time in front of the screen, maybe? Focus on the match, man. Sigh…

But, wait… Haven't I done something like this before? Chasing something down a tunnel, rushing it at top speed. I haven't played much games on Yguloch, much less in the underground. I wonder what's this weird tickling sensation in the back of my head. But it does feel like that, kind of… nostalgic. Huh.

Leaning back onto the seat, I exhale loudly. Licking my lips, I simply stare at the tunnel while thinking through the small pain in my ears. Looking at the patterns that the metallic shine of the hexagonal steel plates and the twister of cables in between them makes in the tunnel's walls, at the blinking firefly-like lights of whatever the equipment is made to represent, at the blurry and momentary sight as I rush downwards… Ugh, it hurts.

My vision grows a bit narrow, as if everything were graying out. What the hell is- Why is my body feeling so heavy all of a sudden? And why am I not scared? I can barely see anything well but, again, it feels oddly calm. Blinking fast to try and get rid of this dizziness, a blurry darkened mess fills my view when opening my eyes fully, voices distorted by static reach my ears.

"Eight Laser-Class firing on the Hangar 90 barriers! There's still some of the bastards left!" Says a voice that sounds like me, despite the fact that I am not moving my lips. Laser what?

"Let's take 'em all down!" Roars a female voice I don't recognize.

Light flashes before my eyes as a flurry of bullets fly towards some hazy shapes in the distance.

"HQ to Alpha 2! We're… and 5th barr… your route!" Another female voice I don't recognize speaks but I can't hear clearly what she's saying.

"We'll be boost vectoring in reverse forty meters above the barrier. Kick off the walls to change directions twice!" The first female voice says, dry and harsh, almost as if out of breath.

Wait, what? Boost vectoring? In reverse? Kicking the wall? Does she mean to do consecutive Albrights in reverse or what?

"Feeling nervous, Shirogane?!"

A jolt in my stomach, a twist in my gut, I can't help but to bite my lips as acid rushes up my throat.

I clearly heard it, she said my name! Well, duh, this is a daydream after all. However, hearing that voice… Why do I feel as if I had a tight knot on my chest?

An alarm snaps me out of my daydream, a homing is coming my way. Taking a sharp breath, blinking fast and feeling my eyes almost molding shut as if it were spring and the air was full of pollen, my heart is still rumbling inside. Swallowing whatever caused this acid taste to come up, I lick my lips and readjust my position on the seat, my hold over the joysticks.

I'm already at my limit in this game. There's nothing to lose, right? I feel strangely good now, the light pain is gone, everything seems so much more clear. Could I try to do that thing the woman was saying in the dream? I mean, I was there and everything sounded so real, even if it was all kind of blurred. And anyways, I'm losing either way. Might as well take the shot. Yeah, as she said I am nervous right now, so let's just have some fun!

Alright, let's do this reverse consecutive Albright or whatever the hell it is! You don't just screw a Storm Vanguard and get away unscathed!

"… Storm Vanguard? What's that?" Man, I need therapy. Whatever is causing these hallucinations has to go, I can't keep living like this.

Taking another deep breath and gripping my joysticks firmly again, feeling the thin veil of sweat that had built up, I start to accelerate towards the wall.

But instead of lowering the speed, my feet remain firmly planted on the pedals for a little while longer as the Take breaches the wall's personal space. Rebounding off it, the Takemikazuchi is sent flying away towards another wall in the narrow spiraling tunnel. I keep doing the same every time I kick the walls, and as I keep rebounding off them I get closer and closer to top speed. Since I'm using the momentum from the jumps I'm using less fuel, since I just boost when in contact with the wall.

When the alarm beeps in my ears, when the homing starts to get closer, I try to get an image of what was happening in the dream. How the maneuver turned out, how the thing played out.

The wall is getting closer. I spin the joystick, press the trigger, and go hard on the accel. The homing explodes just above where the Take kicked the wall, but my purple beetle keeps on dashing downwards without losing any speed or receiving damage.

"Ha! Take that one!"

Usually you can't stay at top speed for long, even during a full boost, without eating up a lot of fuel. But now I managed to just lower my remaining fuel to red.

Falling down like a meteor, my Take reaches the pit of the tunnel. An odd giant egg-shaped machine awaits at the bottom with something that resembles exhaust pipes coming out of it, releasing cerulean mist onto the underground facility.

For a second, the voice I had heard before seemed to return in the distance. Looking at the map, there's some sort of command center nearby. A low polygon model of an attendant with long hair is in it. Seeing it as I fly by, for some reason, makes my throat close up. Something turning in my stomach, red flashing in my eyes for a sec, I have to pull back my tongue to not bite on accident.

A small ding rings in my ears, a dot appears on my radar. Located in a hallway that is connected to the bottom of this tunnel, there is my target. Letting out a short sigh, clearing these odd feelings before I end up daydreaming again, with a simple click I start to charge the TC.

"Just one shot, that's all I need."

My heart starts beating in my neck, the screen keeps moving fast, the walls of the underground blur, filled with those hexagons and cables, and now also accompanied by the mist and shine coming from the egg-machine.

Looking away from the odd machine, I kick the ground to keep my momentum and fly into the hallway leaving the mist and odd cerulean glow behind. After a second to focus on what's ahead, the red frame comes into view. Pressing hard on the triggers, I shot at it.

Clearly startled, the Ravager just barely jumps out of the lightning's way. But now that you're in the air, you won't be able to dodge this! Spinning on itself, the Take propels itself from the walls again, long sword ready to slash.

Sparks, screeching, a beep in my ears. I hit his left side, but not his body. Damn, he dodged at point-blank when I was at almost top speed?!

Instead of stopping my rush, I keep my feet on the pedals as the Take fires off towards another wall. With a few quick pulls on the controls, I spin around and land feet first onto the machinery, jump units blazing up in full force. With a smirk, I pull the accel lever again.

Blasting away from the wall, my purple beetle again charges at the red frame, a killer arrow diving straight for the heart. The Ravager, that now has its saber out, does not retreat. With a light dash, it comes to meet my aggro as the auto-lock circle confirms my target. Gulping hard, I swing my sword downwards as he tries to do a low slash after a crouch cancel.

Our mechs crash into each other, everything gets blurry in the screen as it shakes after a moment.

And then, fire. And smoke, and an explosion, and my controls lost their response from them.

Within the smoke, on top of a wreckage of parts, a pair of damaged red eyes glimmer through the fire. And raising its sword, the haze of fire as its cloak, the Takemikazuchi takes on its victory pose, a golden sign with confetti and fireworks filling my screen.

[MATCH OVER - TEAM N° 51 WINS]

…

Letting out a long and heavy sigh, I slump onto the seat. Gasping for air, I wipe the sweat of my face and move my bangs away. Eyes close tightly as I throw my head back, both hands come to cover my face. Ants march on my back, and I can only quietly breath in.

"Hehe… Hehehe… Ahaha… I won? For real?"

I relax into the seat and take off the belts, barely managing to undo the bindings. I'm feeling real tired all of a sudden, a small jolt comes through my ankles as I try to move my feet off the pedals. I stay like that for a minute, until I hear Mikoto.

"Takeru!" He calls out from behind the locked seat.

I pull the seat back to greet a teary eyed Mikoto with a small smile, shrugging.

"Looks like I ended up winning us the tournament, I guess."

Lips shaking eyes sparkling, he looks at me, at my screen, back at me, dazed like a deer in front of a dragster. "You won, right? This ain't a dream, right?"

Curling my fist, I punch my stomach, making me cough. "D-Doesn't feel like it."

He pinches his cheek, stretching it a bit, leaving it reddening. "Ow," he rubs it slowly, making a silly grin, "this isn't dream. We… We won the tournament? We won the tournament!"

"Ahaha! Yeah, we won the entire thing, dammit!" I raise a hand, we slam into a high five, laughing like idiots. "We are the champions, my friend!"

"And we'll keep on fighting till the end!" He sings along, we finish the song as I get out of my seat, striking a pose, raising fingers to the overhead lights. "Damn, that match was so tight! How did you even manage to avoid all those homings on the way down the elevator?"

"What can I say, you don't just screw with a Storm Vanguard and get away with it," whatever that means.

"But man, those consecutive wall jumps were truly something else. One thing was the Albright, but chaining so many in a row? You gotta totally tell me where you learned that!" He says, lightly slapping my arm.

"Ahaha, I was kinda desperate so I just improvised on the spot." Laughing dryly, I scratch my head. Can't exactly tell him I had a few fever dreams while I was playing.

As we keep doing idle chitchat about the match, complaining about the Elef, Mikoto telling me he got stunned by a homing from the blue Ravager as he tried to follow me, then me going on a tangent on how broken the homing felt to play against in such a narrow map, someone from the staff approaches us.

"Excuse me, it's time to give the prizes. Please follow me."

The attendant guides us to a room that looks like it's used for press conferences, painted completely in an unassuming light blue. It wasn't that big, but there were four rows of seats, already occupied by journalists, and a lot of cameras and cables going around, and people hurrying about too.

There's a lectern on the stage with the logo of the game on its front and some monitors on the wall behind it, the other teams is already up there. We're guided to the stage, and try to greet the other players but they barely respond, giving one word answers. I guess it can't be helped, they did lose the final. Must be hard for pro players to get here and then be the first ones to lose.

The journalists are all bustling, waiting for the conference to start. How many cameras do they need for this? Well, I guess that if Zegga wants to do another announcement of an announcement, this might be the day to do it.

One woman in a suit has the medals and two trophies, and that one there dressed all in black looks like the announcer. After he finishes talking through a small mic, they tell us where to stand and, after confirming something with the staff, the announcer makes a sign to the people behind the cameras, and he starts his speech with a grand swipe of his hand.

"And now, it's time for the awards of the Valgern-On Tokyo Salon Fighters Tournament! Here we have the three teams that made it to the final match, a round of applause for them!" The announcer makes a gesture towards the camera, clicking his fingers, making the cameras lock onto us.

He introduces the two members of each team as he hands them a medal and an envelope with the prize money. While each team member gets introduced the monitors shows footage of their fights, numbers of their performance in a table to the right, the details of their chosen unit and weapons to the left.

Mikoto's shivering a lot. Looks like his joints are made out of plastic. So I elbow him a bit. "Chillax, man. We're just going to get the medals, right? The worst part is already over, dude," I whisper to his ear, smiling.

"Y-Yeah. Just nod to the camera… just that. Look ahead, and just smile and nod."

It doesn't look like he calmed down at all. Sigh… As we are introduced and a reverberating clapping starts, I take the first step towards the center of the stage. Mikoto slowly follows behind, but the announcer moves aside, again gesturing to the cameras as we look at each other, wondering what the hell is he doing.

And raising a hand up in another grandiose gesture, he brings the mic to his lips, "And for the champions, the creators themselves shall give them their prize!"

WHAT?! The devs themselves?!

"… Takeru, did I hear that right?"

"Yeah… I think we did."

Two faces I know well enter the room from another door behind the rows of seat. Slowly, they come towards the stage in style. It feels as if the floor was giving out on me, my knees shaking as I pinch one of my cheeks. This isn't another of my weird daydreams, is it?

"Hello! We're MofuMofu and…"

"Andoku! Congratulations on your victory!"

The devs introduce themselves with their artistic names as they bow to the cameras, before turning around, coming up towards us with a smile, giving me and Mikoto our medals, offering us a handshake later.

This is a dream come true! THE makers of Valgern-On in the flesh, dude! Looking at Mikoto, he has a giant silly grin plastered on his face as his hands tightly join. We both can't help but to laugh a bit. Colored papers fly out for a while and, after a round of applause, MofuMofu steps forward with a mic in hand.

"We hope everyone enjoyed today's event, from the participants to the spectators here, on TV and through the net. As you know, in one month, a new version of Valgern-On will be released to the market." He starts explaining things about the next game, whose official name is Oratory Tango, like how many new mechs it'll have and its new online functions.

On the screens behind us, a few scenes with the new models of the mechs play out as they fight each other in some old and new stages, moving way faster than in the current version.

"Wow, they really reworked the mechs?"

"Now they really look, you know, smooth," Mikoto says, barely stopping himself from squealing or doing a short hop.

After answering some questions from the journalists as the logo of Oratory Tango was displayed on the screens, MofuMofu takes a step back and hands the mic to Andoku.

"However! That is not all there is to it! There's a new style of gameplay added to both single and multiplayer mode. A brand new campaign setting, with harder missions than the original one. And a new multiplayer mode in which the players will have to fight together against our new AI and defeat it under strict conditions! We've fine tuned it with the help of the best players in the game and took inspiration from other, more hardcore games to bring a new challenge to the Valgern-On universe! And it's this new mode that the champions will have the privilege to enjoy after this celebration!" He strikes a pose for the camera as both devs point at us.

Right, I forgot all about the new version trial!

"This is amazing, Takeru! What do you think it's gonna be?!"

"I dunno, we've been fighting against machines gone rogue in the first setting, so maybe aliens this time?" Maybe like the red things from my dreams? Heh, would be hilarious if that were the case.

As the makers finish their speech and the questions, they come to our side and gives us the trophies. Me and Mikoto send our poses to everyone watching, unable to not make the silliest of grins. We wave for the camera one last time, and the celebration is finished. The journalists surround the devs for some off-the-record words, and the announcer takes us to another room. One that looks like a Headmaster's room, with a table in fine black, a few nice looking sofas, with a jar full of cookies in the middle. After a brief wait, the devs come in along some other people in suits.

"Well, Shirogane-kun, Yoroi-kun, what did you think of the tournament?!" MofuMofu ask us with bright eyes as he sits down on a sofa in front of us.

"It was so awesome! Team battles are really great, but I'm a bit shocked at how much better a few mechs are." Honestly I still don't know what were you two thinking when you made the Elefante.

"It was so much fun! Especially the last fight, I was on edge all through it!" Mikoto says with a giant smile, leaning just a bit forward, eyes shining while wiggling both hands up and down.

"Shirogane-kun, could you explain me how you came up with those wall-kicking moves? It's the first time I've seen them, and I watch a lot of replays of the Top fights!" Andoku asks me, with clear expectation in his unblinking stare as he takes out a notepad and a pencil, which makes his partner chuckle.

I try to explain the Albright Turn and the consecutive jumps I did in the tunnel as best as I can, without mentioning anything about the dream I recalled midfight. Yet, he kept his eyes firmly on mine, noting everything down so quickly as if this were some top secret interview or something. It's kind of embarrassing…

They keep firing questions at us, about why I picked the Takemikazuchi, how it felt to play, how did Mikoto felt the Xao-Myun compared to its rivals in its game style, which mechs and weapons we thought were unbalanced or unfair, and what would we do to fix it.

It's no wonder this game is rocking it right now, with such passionate developers behind it.

"Well, we've kept you long enough. They should be ready with the set up, are you two ready to try the new version?!"

"Hell yeah!"

"Of course we are! Let's go Takeru!"

We then go back into a hallway and into the showroom again, walking as if pushed by the wind, as both of them tell us to keep what we see as a secret if at all possible, that we won't be able to take pictures of the new mode and all, but since we had no such plans the conversation devolved into more gameplay talk, to the distress of the official Zegga staff that follows us. Reaching the showroom again, this time we go to a terminal in the far back, separated from the rows of units used for the tournament.

"Knock yourselves out! I hope you have fun with it!" MofuMofu says with a giant grin.

Man, oh man! This is gonna be great! I share a look of pure joy with Mikoto before boarding the terminal.

As I jump in the seat and fasten the belts the screen lights up. The opening starts playing after the usual logos.

"Oohh! Hear this thing! It's so epic!"

The menu music is so much hype! It has some trumpets making it sound like you're charging into a war or something. Wait, these vocals… Oh my God, is it JellyProjection?! Shit, they got them for the opening of the game?! This is so fucking awesome! I'm definitely buying the OST as soon as it goes out.

The epic intro ends, the usual angular logo appears with a slick cyber theme, but unlike the prior version this menu looks kinda ashen, burnt and bruised. There's also a small and low rumble in the synth that's in the background music, kinda ominous.

"Man, even the menu song is a banger. Now, let's see… this is a single player terminal. Damn, now I wanna keep fighting in a team with Mikoto after the tournament. Oh well, let's get this started! Campaign Mode, here I come!"

An anime opening of stars and galaxies plays out, the colony ships from the first game slowly come into view at the distance, a slight trail of light in the vacuum of space. So it is a direct sequel, huh.

The year is 213X. Humanity has survived the onslaught of the cyber legion after Tango's rebellion .

Now, all the surrounding star systems are in control of the solar system's Human Race.

Decades of peace and prosperity dulled humanity's fangs, they stopped to develop weapons and starcraft, instead choosing to live in gigantic star colonies filled with luxuries and pleasures that numbed the mind.

"Man, this opening looks so sick!"

The anime-like 2D models, the music, the ambiance sounds. It looks like I'm truly in space, flying in some gigantic fortress or something, watching the stars from the window. Even the futuristic yet luxurious relax zones of the cities look, you know, smooth. Kinda hard to believe just a few years ago the polygons were all spiky and shit.

But this peaceful dream is about to be shattered by a horrible adversary…

… that was nothing like anything mankind has ever faced in its history.

From where they come from? Nobody knows.

What are they after? Nobody knows.

But what we do know is… they want us dead.

And they will stop at nothing to kill every one of us!

This is so hype! I knew it was gonna be the aliens! I wonder what kind of twist they are going for. Would be kinda lame if it ends up being the same cosmic horror ending, like most mech animes have gone for since Gospelion. Since they got JellyProjection for the opening, maybe they got some other insert songs? Would be awesome if this had an endgame like GhettaMech Armageddon.

The cinematic plays on, showing a large crater from which shadowy silhouettes crawl out from, surrounded by the many mechs of the franchise.

They came in a meteorite, and started attacking us without warning.

They don't speak, they feel no fear, they don't retreat.

It's almost as if they were soulless beasts.

Since we don't know where they come from but know that they're our enemies we decided to call them…

… the BETA.

A cold shiver went down my back, something turned in my stomach just now. "W-What did he say? The BETA?" Why do I feel like I've heard that somewhere?

Beings of Extra Terrestrial Origin, Adversaries of the Human Race.

BETA for short, are the monsters that have destroyed the outer colonies and planets of our space empire.

Short animated cutscenes on the screen show the monsters destroying a military base, blowing up an entire city with lasers, and ripping apart many mechs from the game in a matter of seconds.

Laser Class, Tank Class, Grappler Class. That's the name on the screen referring to these monsters as they curbstomp and massacre the forces of the game. The opening continues to play, but I'm no longer focused on it.

Like a dam breaking apart, vivid images and voices flood my head. Strong pain like I've never felt before sears up, as if a pair of screwdrivers were injecting themselves right under my ears. Grabbing my head and massaging it, gritting my teeth, I try to take deep breaths and relax, to touch my eyes and blink fast, but this time the daydream doesn't stop.

The sounds of the opening fade away, the animated cutscenes fade away. The pain only gets higher, tighter, as if I had a noose on my neck. And the floor is fading.

Leaning back onto the seat, closing my eyes real tight, the screwdrivers pierce in, ears ringing as if I were right besides those big speakers from a concert while someone decided to blast off hardcore metal. It bangs, and slams, and hurts, and hurts so much.

As the sounds seem to ease up a bit, as I slowly open my eyes again, something… something hazy comes into view. Distorted, obscured, kinda like seeing something behind a glass of water. As if I were daydreaming again, or remembering something that… happened a long time ago…

A ruined house in the middle of a destroyed town, is what this looks like after everything comes into focus. Wait a- Is that my house? What's that thing to the side? A robot? What the… Why is Sumika's house crumbled apart?

Why am I seeing a ruined version of my neighborhood? What is going on here?

Then, after blinking, I find myself in some sort of office with a large blue flag in a wall, babel towers of papers filling the place. Wait… Yuuko-sensei? Why does she have a gun? Why is she aiming it at me?

… Why does this hurts to watch? Ugh… Clawing at my head, Sensei's voice distorted by static, she seems willing to shoot me. Why would you- I'm not your enemy! Why are you giving me that blazing gaze of anger?! I… Sensei, you're… to me…

No time left to process what the hell that was, as I put a hand over my mouth and blink again everything mixes and swirls, I see myself running in the school track field for some reason. I fall to the ground and eat dirt, as I stand up someone scolds me. But that harsh voice is… And looking up, I see her. The hell is Marimo-chan doing in a military uniform?!

Flashes of images of Marimo-chan in an odd formal dress come up, sometimes scolding me, sometimes encouraging me. In a rooftop, in some sort of odd barebones room, in an odd place as light is showered on me and I can only see her silhouette.

The freezing grip on my neck eases up, I take a really, really deep breath that clears away most of the clogging in my chest, then another image comes up. I can only hear her voice while I look at some remains of a robot, the sun seems to be setting. Distorted by the static, her voice doesn't sound hostile now. It's… heartwarming, as she always was. Like a warm blanket on a winter night.

Then, without me actually moving or wanting to, my vision turns around trying to see her-

I couldn't stop the image nor the sounds, I cannot look away. Marimo-chan's head is being bitten off by a monster.

There's an eye ball rolling down up to my feet.

Pieces of flesh teared into the floor.

Teeth falling from its roots, like small wind chimes in front of an incoming typhoon.

Behind her… the monster… the bastard…

… No, a Soldier-Class. That's a Soldier-Class BETA.

How do I know that?! A Soldier-Class…

And in a flash, both she and the monster… were blown up. Disappearing in an explosion of red.

Again feeling my stomach turn, I claw at my mouth and gag, sharp and sudden pain on my sides and lower back, as if just stabbed. The static getting higher, the screwdrivers now going up, the back of my eyes also begins to hurt as a cold sensation sinks into me.

Another image flashes, not giving me time to even get my shit together. Tama's corpse is being held by something while starting to become deformed. Before I could react in any way to the vision, an explosion rings out.

I can hear Meiya's voice! But what is she doing here?! But… What the hell is a Takemikazuchi doing here? It looks so… real, as it slices the monster's tentacles. The machine looks, like, legit for real. She sounds odd, though. Nothing like I know her to be, on edge, desperate…

… Different.

Air seems to be missing from my lungs when Meiya's face appears before me, she's bleeding badly. Crying, whimpering in pain. Again, it feels as if I were being forced to breath into sand.

And then, she looks my way, twitching, hiccuping, shivering as if electrocuted. Her eyes crying non-stop, the blood running down her forehead wanting to compete with the tears.

"I would like to die… by the hands of the man I love!"

There was a blast.

And then, silence.

It felt as if I were being rocked back and forth, like a very violent roller coaster spinning in all directions.

And then, quietness.

I could hear people cheering from somewhere.

And yet, it feels so cold, so empty.

And as I look up, I find someone near me. There she was, the white haired girl…

Kasumi Yashiro. Repeating the same words, like in my dreams.

"Sumika-san is dead. Your fight is already over!"

No.

" Sumika - san is dead. Your fight is already over !"

No, don't fuck with me…

" Sumika-san is dead. Your fight is-"

Shut the fuck up! What fight?! What the hell… Why are they dying?! What's going on here?!

Blinking, I see myself hugging the girls of my school group as they cry. They tug at me, they pull at my shoulders. They cry and cry, staring intently, begging me not to send them away. They're going somewhere. Far away.

It hurts.

I see Sumika having some sort of breakdown, screaming kill over and over again before almost falling flat on her face to the floor.

It hurts. Stop this…

And there she is, lying still in that pod while hugging a wooden rabbit. Silent. Cold. Stiff. Dead.

It hurts. Let this all end… dammit…

And, once more, the eternal wasteland comes into view. Thousands of BETA in the radar. We don't have enough supplies. I can only watch as my squad gets killed by the monsters. No, not just my squad. The whole army we were fighting with got killed. In the wasteland and inside the earth. And then, the black fire… The G-Bomb. No, not just one. Like a downpour of arrows coming from atop a rampart, that is what the unending stream of black fire looks like to me, as everything else in front vanishes from sight, both BETA and whatever remains were left of my comrades.

And then, silence again.

Everyone is gone.

How many times?

How many times did I do this?

Why?

For what?

In the end, did I save anyone? How did this madness end?!

And then, as if beckoned by my question, like a child timidly peeking from behind a door, a small glimmer comes up at the edge of my vision. And slowly, it grows, and grows, until the black fire is all I can see, shapes and voices distorted within the gigantic orb. Those images and sounds, the nightmares I had since-

"No, these aren't nightmares. These are… all the lives I've lost."

It wasn't a dream, it truly did happen. I was sent to another world. A world in ruins. Where everybody had different lives. Where everybody fought just to live one day more.

"Haa… Haa… It hurts…" My neck wrings tightly again, chest and eyes hurts as I try to suppress the acid that comes up from my stomach. I don't know if I should be clawing at my head, ears, stomach, or all at once.

And the echoes repeat themselves as the images rush through, making me relieve the unlimited pain I've had to endure across all my extra lives in that alternative world. The sting of seeing my beloved leave to a distant world, the horror of seeing and hearing Marimo-chan and my squad be slowly devoured by BETA before my very eyes, the shock as I realized everyone was again dead at the end of Kashgar.

I'm a coward.

I ran away.

I forgot them.

… I failed them. I couldn't save them. I just sat on the XG while they risked their necks. They had asked me to remember them. To be there, so that someone knew they had lived, suffered, and gave their lives for a future that seemed lost.

And what did I do?! I ran away! My eyes become strained, but they remain dry. I'm coward that cannot even cry.

It wasn't enough. Nothing was enough.

I… I… did kill the Superior. I did it. We did it. Their sacrifice wasn't… but…

A stalagmite pierces my heart as the memories come back. The Captain's and Kashiwagi's sacrifice, Haruka-san getting squashed in the control room, Hayase remaining in the Reactor to blow it up. The base getting destroyed, Munakata and Kazama sent to medbay, Akane left in bandages.

The perfect solution doesn't exist, you will always have to sacrifice something. At least I got the world twenty years more in the fight, according to Yuuko-sensei.

… But remembering that doesn't make me feel any better.

I… loved them. All of them. They were my guiding light. I could fight on because they were there. Alone, I'm worthless. I can't even… I can't even cry for them.

And now I'm here, enjoying a peaceful life. Like a coward that ran away. But what else could I have done?! There was nothing I could…

"Hic… Nothing, really? Why couldn't I at least save one of them?!" To give them the happiness we have here, even if only for a short while.

I wanted to keep fighting, to protect the base we lived in, laughed in, cried in. I wanted to stay there, where they needed my piloting skills.

But no! You had to back down! What did it matter that you were no longer a conductor?! Why didn't you stay?! Why did you run?! Why did you break the promise?! Why did you forget them?!

A loud noise plays in my headphones. A noise I recognize all too well. That rumbling… that avalanche-like shiver in the ground… Tank-Class closing in. Two hundred of them.

BETA, it's all because of you. Because… No, the Americans too. The bastards that plotted Alternative V. The bastards that used us as fodder just to save their own lawn. Fucking shitheads, the world ended up flooded because of you! And then… And then…

"Flooded? What the fuck- How do I even…"

As I shiver in cold, a distorted image of Sensei and Kasumi appears, but I can't hear them well. What are they-

I see myself ripping through the BETA in a hive, someone else dropped an S11 into a Reactor. What are those… Rafale. Those are Rafale along the Raptors and Takemikazuchi units. Did I always know about those models?

The wasteland appears again, I'm crying for some reason. Lamenting a comrade that died, a comrade I found within the hive? Who was- Ugh! Acid up my throat, a knot on my gut, vision going double. Someone, left abandoned. I… crushed them? Spared them the pain?

"K-Kgh… Gwaa! Cough! Cough! Shit, what the-" hiccuping and out of air, pain and pain at the pit of my throat.

More and more death is all I see. Pointless, it feels empty and void of meaning. The fighting, the briefings, the nights staring at the sky.

Hope had withered in that world, until we gave our blood to water its roots once more.

I should be proud, I should be happy. We did it. We changed history, we avoided that rotten future that still has me coughing by merely thinking about it.

… But what's the point in saving the world if there's nothing left for you? There's no joy in martyrdom. Those that have to carry on find no happiness in this solitude.

In the end, above everything else, above every formal speech, above every duty that was thrust upon my shoulders, above any and all excuses I may hide behind-

"I failed them. I wasn't enough… to protect them, any of them."

I had to leave behind Chizuru, Tama, Mikoto and Kei.

… I killed Meiya.

My failure to operate the XG in a better way forced Sumika to overheat.

I abandoned Kasumi over there, I left despite knowing she'd be all alone. Left despite knowing Sensei would be made responsible for everything, having no more allies to count on.

I knew all that and still left. And to top it all off, I forgot it all. I failed them.

… No, they didn't even believe in me. They tampered with my radar, right? Yeah, Meiya fucked up my radar. Because they didn't think I had it in me to move forward. Neither Yuuko nor my squadmates, not even Sumika or Kasumi.

They all thought I was going to screw it up, that I was the weakest link in the squadron. That's why they sent me to the XG, where all I could do was fire missiles. They didn't even… after all we went through together… they didn't-

A sound beeps in my headphones. The Tank-wave approaches, the red fills my view. These bastards… They… They… The BETA… The Superior… They took-

It feels cold.

Really, really cold.

As everything seems to dim, as the light seems to go out within a cockpit that is in emergency mode, I look up.

Up to the sky, to the stars.

Raising my hand towards it, trying to and failing as it falls limply by my side. Arms slightly burn, can't even move my shoulders before the pressure sends a twinge of pain into my back.

Everything grows blurry, dampness in my eyes, can't feel my limbs at all.

And a final image.

A rocket that departs, far away into the stars.

A parting word I couldn't say.

A face I'll never see, a voice I'll never hear, hands which will never embrace me again.

And then, silence.

Absolute.

Total.

Unbreakable.

Complete, utter silence as everything blurs to dark.

…

Something rumbles, shakes in my hands. Hands that shake as my lips do as I blink and a few tears fall off. BETA, everywhere. No one left besides me, the Red Zone of the Tank-Class covering my sight and radar.

You… You motherfucking sons of an eldritch bitch!

"Give me back my squad!"

---

Around fifty minutes later.

(Outside the terminal.)

---

Legs feel as if they were chained to an iron ball. Stomach is empty, eyes hurt as if I had been using a PC without any light for hours. The lower side of my back is completely stiff, and my throat is a bit dry after shouting so much.

… None of that comes even close to whatever the hell is piking at my heart right now. I might as well have deepthroated a Fort's stinger. And yet, I still can't cry. Seems like I've no more tears left to shed. Not even for my loved ones.

"That was truly something else!" MofuMofu's brimming with happiness, voice high and spirits further beyond. "I didn't expect you to make it to Stage 12 in your first go!"

"As expected of one of the champions, you're a truly great player! So, what did you think?!" Andoku is delighted too.

"It was… a nice experience." Calm down, deep breaths.

"You look rather down, Shirogane-kun. Did the game tire you out?" They're obviously minding their words. I'm sure I must look like a mess.

"Yeah, I just got a bit too scared on one of those… gory cutscenes." Why was there a scene of… what happened to Marimo-chan built into the game anyways?

They then start talking with Mikoto about the game. I answer when they ask me some stuff, but I can't calm my hands. They're hiding in my pockets, shaking like a kitty in front of a bulldog.

It was like doing catharsis, killing all those BETA. Thank God there were no mics, I couldn't restrain myself and ended up screaming my pain away. I think I broke the joysticks, too.

Luckily, the rush of emotions has subsided by now. I can still feel my heartbeat in my chest and this cold ant march creeping its way up my back. I know, we did what we had to. But I couldn't do anything for them. I know I got lucky to survive, I know Alt V was hanging over our heads if we took too long to complete the mission, but I still feel like shit. Not only at the outcome, but at my own lack of resolve.

Who gave a shit I wasn't a conductor anymore? Wasn't my willpower what tied me to that timeline? Why the fuck didn't I want to stay and fight? Yeah, sure, I admit you were right XO, being the sole human that ever talked to a BETA would have gotten me in the nasty lists. But still, that also made me a valuable asset, right? Why did I just accepted it was all over?

… Why did I forget about you all? Sumika, was this your doing? Trying to give me a fresh start? Then, why even try if I'll end up recalling anyways? Sigh…

Head hurts a bit, and I'm a tad bit dizzy. To be honest, I don't even remember what hour it is. All these memories… Ugh. Just thinking about it is enough to make the pain blaze up. I just gotta stay chill and make it back home.

But if they made a game about the BETA, that means stuff is coming into this world. Or is this a coincidence? If my memory isn't wrong, Sensei and Kasumi said I no longer was a conductor before I returned, and that I'd end up in a world aligned to Sumika's wishes as she fixed whatever it was required to be fixed. So everything should be fine. I think.

All I wanna do right now is go home and bury myself under my pillow to cry until I fall asleep. Guys, Valkyries, Kasumi… Sorry. I forgot about you. I couldn't keep my promise. Sigh…

"So, is there anything you didn't like? Or that you would change?"

Seeing their almost pleading faces, I give them some pointers based on what I felt different from this game and how I remembered the simulators to be back home.

Home? Which world is my home? I guess both are, in a way.

They keep throwing questions at us, looking like abandoned puppies, so I suggest to them the idea of the hives as if it just occurred to me. That seems to pique their curiosity even further. So they didn't knew of the hives before, huh. Maybe it really was just an unfortunate coincidence?

When they finish questioning us, they give each of us a really sleek box made out of polished steel with the game's logo imprinted on it. Inside were the gold medal that had Valgern-On Cyber Legion Champion written in it and a special GR card with our names. They say it's a special present from them to the last champions of their first game. Now that I think about it, this is the first thing I win in my life. I never got awarded in the other world and I never won any kind of competition back here. Life sure is weird.

"You have no idea how thankful we are. The hive idea is really a stroke of genius!"

"We hope you keep playing Valgern-On! And we'll be looking forward to the next tournament you participate in! It was a pleasure Shirogane-kun, Yoroi-kun!"

"No, it was our pleasure! Right, Takeru?"

"Yeah, it was… an honor to be the first to play the new version." I force a smile and nod. I can't lose it here. I won't cry, not here.

The duo gives us one last handshake and someone from the staff takes us out of the showroom, back to the normal hallway. Giving us a bow, she sends us off and, as slow as a snail, I turn around and begin making my way to… Where to? Wait, where was the exit here? Eh, let's just follow Mikoto.

"Man! This was awesome! Takeru, how did you get so far?! It was really hard hitting those small red spiders," her tone had sunflowers blooming in every word.

She looks so… alive, dazzling, happy. Heh… At least something good came out of winning this tournament. Glad to see you enjoying yourself so much.

"Well, they're Tank-Class. Being fast bastards is what they do best."

"Yeah, but when the big one with the claws appeared I was like 'This is the boss!'. But then another popped up, and another, and then there were like ten of 'em!"

"Their numbers are their biggest strength, after all. If it were just one it would be too easy to dodge and kill them."

"Hey Takeru, what's wrong?" She lowers her brows, giving me one nice and direct stare.

"… Hmm? Nothing's wrong."

"Liar. You've been super cold since you got out of the terminal, in front of THE makers of the game, too." You're so sharp at the most inconvenient times, you know?

"I… don't know if my brain is exhausted or I'm basking in the afterglow of winning this thing." I say as calmly as I can, looking up to avoid worrying her. Err, right, him.

This is gonna be as hard as when I first got into the other world. But I guess that doesn't really matter, Mikoto's a friend here. That won't change.

"Oh, I see. It is kinda hard to believe we ended up winning, you think people will recognize us in the street?" Quick to change moods, she… he's all smiles now.

"Please no, the last thing I need is people bothering me while I run." I already will have enough trouble facing Sumika without crying my eyes out for awhile. Or any of you, for that matter.

"Well, but man… I can't believe we're the champions!"

"Yeah…"

"I am so going to brag about this for months, you know."

"Haha… Guess fighting so hard had a nice reward."

"Hey, Takeru… You sure you're alright?"

"Huh? Yeah, why?"

Playing with his hair, lips twisting in as his eyes leave mine for a sec, he tries to hold my gaze. "Well, you've been staring at me rather… weirdly. It's odd for you to be so sincere and honest, too."

… Can you blame me? I just remembered about- No, this isn't my Mikoto. He isn't even a she. Chill down, your Mikoto is… gone. And I can only hope the fleet made it safely to the Barnard System. Clawing at my palms inside my pockets, I release a sigh as heavy as a set of full gear.

"Sorry, that gory scene really messed me up."

"Was it really that bad?"

"… Yeah. It was horrible, for real." I hold back the urge to bite my lips as the memory flashed for a sec in my mind.

"Well, don't worry. Let's go meet the rest and then we'll go get that ice cream!" She- He returns a smile as warm as my Mikoto's at me.

… Yeah. Yeah, he's right. I'll see the rest now. Huh… Right, everyone is… alive here.

Yeah, they're all alive. Safe and happy.

Huh. Weird, how just recalling that talk as we ate before the tournament is enough to make me feel giddy, to smile a bit. They're all truly safe and sound here, living their own lives in peace. Sigh…

But, is this even safe? What if… that stuff makes its way here, like when I came back for the theories? No, calm down. You're no longer a conductor. Yuuko said it herself, now that Sumika's wish to see me again was fulfilled I'm no longer an anomaly. That's why I'm back here.

That's why… I can spend some time with them. It's alright for me to enjoy that… Right, Sensei?

"Takeru? Hey, are-"

"Sorry, Mikoto. I was just lost in thought. Let's… Let's go." I smile back at her- him, and we again walked back to the hall.

We go to the tables and start looking for everyone, but we can't find them. Where could they be? I mean, they must have seen the fights, right? Maybe something came up and they had to leave? Let's see if they're near the entrance. I can also take in some fresh air while I'm at it.

"Mikoto, I'll go look at the entrance."

"Okay! I'll check the other side of the bar."

Turning back, following the maps on the wall, I pace towards the exit. A few people look at me and smile, probably because of the final, so I nod and smile back. Once the stream of visitors pipes down, my feet start to drag on the floor. Sighing hard, I close my eyes and stop, leaning on a wall for a second.

"Okay, inhale, exhale… Inhale, exhale… Calm down. Remember Sensei's words."

The more you remember, the worse it might get. It's all right, nothing is going to happen. No accidents, no deaths. I move my shoulders up and down, eyes still closed as I exhale again, resting a hand on the cold wall to propel myself off it. The loop is over and done, you're no longer a Conductor. But, what's up with the BETA in the game? Why did I regain these memories? No, why did I forget everything in the first place? If Sumika wanted me to forget, why did I remember? Why did the BETA appear in Valgern-On along the Takemikazuchi?

While walking towards the entrance, I notice someone closing in on me from behind, matching my pace. No, there's two of them. Calm down dude, you're no longer in the military. I take a turn in a hallway, maybe I'm being paranoid and they're just leaving.

… Nope, still following me. Coincidence? After taking a glance at the entrance and seeing that the girls were not there, I pick up my pace as I take random turns. Thanks to the maps in the walls I'll end up in the lounge, anyways. But those two keep following me, and they're speeding up too. What the hell is going on?! Why are they following me? I ain't walking particularly fast either, if the staff wanted something they could jog for a bit or call out to me.

As I reach the lounge, two men in dark suits were with Mikoto in the elevator just before the door closed. They were holding him by his shoulders, his expression stiff and tight. Scared.

My hands tighten into fists, I start taking loud steps towards the elevator, heels stomping the floor. Damn, what the hell? We just won the tournament, what is this shit?! How dare they lay-

"Excuse me, sir, could you be Takeru Shirogane?"

The two that were following me catch up. Both sporting the same dark attire the bastards in the elevator had, both wearing sunglasses. But their uniforms don't have the logo of the TGS nor do they have the ID card dangling from their neck like the rest of the staff. So, some idiots think they can fuck with us, huh. I'm not in the mood for this shit.

"Why do you ask? Do you need something?" Not even bothering to clear my frown, I glare at them.

Which makes the one who spoke up take a step back, cough softly into a hand hastily. "Forgive me, it's that… that I saw your fight in the finals and I wanted to ask you some tips. For my son, he likes this game a lot."

Nice bluff jackass, you better keep walking back or I'm gonna punch your brains outta your head.

"Excuse me, but I'm kinda tired and looking for my friends. Sorry." I fake a bow without losing eye contact with them as I start to put some distance between us.

Which makes the other guy shake his head, giving out a short sigh as he pinches his nose. "This is a pointless waste of time. Shirogane-san, we'd like you to come with us. Please, follow us to the elevator," he asserts, rising his voice and taking a stoic pose in intimidation.

Sincerity is a virtue, I'll give you that. But you laid your hands on my friends… And I'm not feeling merciful today.

"I refuse. I have no reason to go anywhere with you, and you can't force me to follow you." The hell do you want, bastard? Are they… Do they want to harm them for some reason? Is this some payback from a rich asshole that we defeated in the games?

"Please don't make a scene, we were just ordered to take you somewhere. No harm will come to you," the first guy says, trying to sound as amicable as possible while waving both hands down, slightly wincing.

"Would you at least let me find my friends? I'd like to tell them to wait for me." I can tell the second guy is upset by my stalling, unlike the first guy who is trying to remain chill.

"It won't take long, someone just wishes to… speak with you. Please, we assure you we have no bad intentions. We rather not have to insists, could you follow us in good faith?" he says, giving his partner a glare, placing a hand in front of him.

He sounds sincere enough. But I can't just ignore the other's glare and posture, and the fact that I saw them taking Mikoto forcefully with them. Nobody lays a hand on my squad and gets away with it. Even if they're not my squad here.

Smirking first, I make a gun with a hand, pointing the barrel at 'em. "So we jump to threats now? What makes you think I'll go with you?!" The staff is clearly looking away, the onlookers take their hurried leave, none of them have any intention to help me or get involved. What the hell is this?!

"C'mon kid, stop acting tough. If you don't cooperate I'll bite your head off!"

"Hey, we can't hurt him! We were ordered to escort him!"

"Screw that! Why do we gotta be so respectful towards a bunch of kids?! In my days-"

"What did you say you'd do?"

They both stop arguing and look towards me. The tough bastard smirks, chuckling a bit. "What's up, pup? Scared?"

"Say it again, c'mon. Say it." You've no idea how horrible it is. To see someone get decapitated. What the fuck do you know?

One of his brows twitches, lips contort into a scowl. "Eh? Hey, what's with that tone? I said I was gonna bite your head off, brat! Now, stop talki-"

"What makes you think I won't chop your head off first, motherfucker?" I spit out venom, cracking my knuckles as I do.

They look shocked, gaping for a sec. I'm trying to hold back, but I'm sure I must look enraged going by their expression, and that slight flinch on their postures.

"What do you-"

"I'm trying real hard not to snap here. Could you do me a solid? Leave me the fuck alone. Oh, and you wouldn't happen to know where my friends are? The dude I was with in the tournament should have been around here, but…" I take a glance to the elevator before looking at them again.

I don't like this. Maybe it's the memories of my training, but I really feel like beating them and getting some answers quickly would be the better choice. But I don't know if I'm being watched or what they want with us. I'm not a soldier and I don't have Sensei to cover my mistakes in this world. If I harm either of them is off to prison. Then, why is nobody doing anything? If someone wants something with me, why did they take my squad with them?!

"Who do you think you are talking to?! That's it! I'm gonna teach you some manners!" The second guy's face goes red as he charges at me.

He launches a jab at me, using his taller stature to try and overpower me. I block, gliding outwards by using his own strength against him. My fingers dig into him, grabbing the arm with a vice grip, and after planting my heels firmly on the ground, after tensing my lower back and recalling all the times Kei did this to me, I lift the guy off the ground, sending him crashing against a table with an STA. Compared to her you're a rookie, Pops. No way in hell I'll lose in hand-to-hand combat to anyone other than my Kei.

Dishes fly off, cups are broken, and the circle of the table gets split in half, the legs crumbling away. The guy is out cold, and the poor people that were nearby yell as they move away, yet they don't look away. Fucking onlookers, when they harass me it's all well and good, but the second I defend myself you start with the nasty and judgmental glare. Heh, typical.

The other guy is still gaping, before looking back at me very slowly. As I take a step forward, he rises both hands in a hurry, "Please calm down! We really mean no harm to you! If my partner offended you in any-"

"Shut it. I'm not following you. Not unless you answer my questions. Who sent you and why? Where are my friends?!" Looking straight ahead into his eyes, I take a fighting stance.

"I'm sorry, but orders are orders. I cannot answer your questions, but I can assure you your friends are-"

THWACK !

A clear hit to the jaw before he finished blabbering sends him onto a nearby table, making the ashtray fly off. I'm done with this. You think I'll believe you?

"Who sent you? What do you want from us?" I say in the most cold, threatening voice I could muster while grabbing and lifting him by the collar.

"… I can't tell you who, but we were told to take you and your friends with us."

"Where?"

"Floor thirteen, that's where we have to take you. I swear, they're fine and we won't hurt you or anything." Disciplined one, aren't you?

I take a look around the room. The staff is staring but they won't get closer, the normal customers are whispering and shooting venomous glares my way. So, I'm alone in this.

"Alright. You'll take me there, but one wrong move-"

"We mean no harm to you."

"Tell that to your friend."

I let him go and step back, the guy goes and tries to wake up his partner, to no success. Yeah, that ain't happening. I threw him with all my might, he's knocked out cold and probably won't wake up for awhile.

"Okay, please follow me," the man says as he gives up on waking up his partner.

We get to the elevator, he presses the button and a moment of waiting in silence ensues.

I was kinda expecting more of them to come pouring out of it as the chime of arrival rings out, but it was empty inside as the door parts away. Lodging myself in a corner, the elevator soon begins to move.

I can only hope the rest are safe. Of all the times where shit could hit the fan, it had to be now. I'm feeling awful, having trouble keeping dark thoughts out of my head. The more I think, the more images of them suffering in the other world pop up in my mind.

"We were told you were a rather happy-go-lucky fellow. Didn't expect you to be so strong. Do you practice a martial art?"

I stare at him in silence and he looks away. Can't exactly say I received military training.

Now that I think about it, my body feels a bit different. I wasn't in this good shape as of late. Did my memories trigger some sort of causality effect on me? But… I shouldn't be a conductor anymore, no, the pipeline should have been severed. What gives?

"We are here," he says, nodding back at me.

The door opens, there's nobody waiting outside. I look around, trying to see if there's a trap. Can't hear anything either. The hallways on this floor are wider than the ones back down, and it looks like this place is some sort of high class restaurant or something. Glass separates different sections of tables and areas, everything looks so regal, as if meticulously crafted to perfection. Pottery of the fine class can be seen everywhere, a few paintings guarded by glass also decorate the walls.

I don't sense anyone's presence nearby. Was he telling the truth then?

We start walking towards a grand door on the other end of the hallway, saying nothing, as I look around and about at the details of the place. Looks like this is the VIP floor, but considering there was an event just now, one would expect at least some customers or members of the dev team would be here enjoying some good quality food or-

A sudden noise behind me, a rattle of a chair or a vase.

Quickly moving away, I barely dodge a hand that was outstretched, lunging for my shoulder. Shortly after, hurried footsteps and shadows crawl out of hiding.

"Restrain him! We have to confirm that he has no dangerous objects in his possession. Take anything that could be used as a weapon," says the guy that tried to grab me as four other guys surround me, my escape routes.

"Then you might wanna cut my arms while you're at it! I'm done with this shit!" I scream as I leap at them.

They clearly weren't expecting resistance, they aren't even in a fighting position. I punch one guy in the stomach, grab him, and throw him towards the others.

Another one grabs me from behind, trying to bind my arms, but I shake him off with an elbow to the ribs and a clear back punch to the face, my knuckles hitting his nose. The others then charge at me all at the same time.

You're on! Like I'd lose to a bunch of cowards like you!

THWACK! POW!

CRASH!

These guys aren't that strong. The other world's Kei and Meiya were better fighters when I had just arrived. Hell, I bet even Chizuru could beat them up without breaking a sweat.

THWACK! THUD!

The five of 'em lie in the floor, knocked out cold. A few vases were broken in the midst of the fight, and a glass is cracked. Well, whatever. They attacked first, serves 'em right.

Where did the one that brought me here go, though? I was hoping they really weren't enemies, but if the staff of the Tokyo Grand Salon is ignoring them… Who the hell are these guys?!

No, calm down. Keep those dark memories out of your head. Stay cool. I can't kill them or I'll go to jail. Then… What do I do?

I approach the grand door that's in the other end of the hallway slowly, sharpening my ears for any other hidden threats, looking around at the minimal doubtful shadow. What can I do? If these guys have guns I'm done for. I don't think I could use the trophy as a weapon. And what do they want with us, anyways? They better not be harming my squad or they'll regret it.

As I was getting closer to it, the door starts opening. A slender figure slowly comes out to the hallway, closing the door and pacing forward to meet my stride. Huh… She's…

"It has been a long time, Takeru-sama."

"Tsukuyomi-san?!"

"You've changed much in these years. Kagami-sama was right, you did take your training very seriously it seems. To knock out five of our guards, I cannot imagine what kind of regime you must have undergone," she says, giving me a one over, looking further into the hall, brows and lips lowering as she sees the other guys, I guess.

… Who the hell is this? Why is she here? Their guards, she said. You're telling me you sent these guys after us?! No, this world's Tsukuyomi-san would never… Tsukuyomi-san would never do something like this! Who are you?!

"What's the meaning of this, Tsukuyomi-san? I didn't think you were this kind of person."

"Please be at ease, Takeru-sama," She looks at me with her usual smile, speaking softly as she takes a single step closer, giving a minute bow. "You've misunderstood our intentions, our men had no reason to harm you. They were just following the security regulations of the Mitsurugi Group."

"Don't dodge the question," I retort, frowning. Is she the real Tsukuyomi? Why would she send them to after us? Makes no sense.

She briefly looks away, sending a hand to her hair. "I'm certain you'd understand why we went to such lengths to bring you to this location. Away from prying eyes."

"What do you mean? Is there any reason for you to send these guards after us? Why couldn't you come to talk to us yourself?"

"It was necessary to do it this way. We couldn't risk to be noticed by a journalist, or by anyone. That's why we reserved this whole floor, to be able to come to the meeting you invited us to."

… Invited to? Oh, right.

With all the memories flowing back I completely forgot I had called Tsukuyomi-san to tell her about today's meet up. Then it makes sense for her to be so secretive about all this. Still, it doesn't justify sending those guards after us so violently. What the hell were they even thinking?

Wait, but that would mean-

Meiya's here.

Her smiling face appears on my mind, then it changes to the other Meiya's face during her last moments as tears and blood covered her eyes. Before I shot the cannon on her.

"Takeru-sama, I believe I've always treated you fairly. Please relax, your friends are all within this room. I'm certain you know who sent for you and why it had to be this way."

Her screams come back to me. Everything keeps repeating itself like in a loop.

I hug Meiya tightly as she cries, as she tugs at my uniform. I force her to use the pass for the migrant fleet, she falls to her knees. She left without us saying our goodbyes.

The image changes once more, now filling my ears with static and shards of glass.

The Takemikazuchi flies in, gets rammed into the XG, she looks at me through the blood and tears, confessing her love to me. And I shoot. I kill her.

Then, everything loops again.

She cries and begs me not to leave her alone, not to send her away. But I do.

And again, it repeats.

She hiccups in pain, begging me to end her suffering, to fulfill our mission. I hesitate, but I shoot. I kill her.

And again, it repeats.

And again, and again, and again, and again-

No, make it stop! Don't look at me like that! Shut up! No! NO! NO! I didn't want to kill you! I never wanted to! Shut up!

The signs of my teammates in my radar vanish. Everyone is dead. And all I did…

… was sit down on the XG and press some buttons. I abandoned them as I abandoned Kasumi at the end. Why was I so proud about it?! That's no victory for me! I was… so useless…

The best war machine humanity ever made, a pseudo-life form with a quantum brain, a fucking gravity-bending force field and a legit beam cannon. I had all of that and I couldn't even… save anyone…

"So, please give me a smile! I prepared ample servings of the pudding you favored so much. Everyone is having a great time within the room. I truly do apologize for the behavior of my men. So please, come inside. Meiya-sama is-"

Blood fills my view, her crying face fades within the light, away to the stars. She's gone. Meiya is gone. My squad is gone.

Because of my uselessness. Because they felt forced to keep up a facade, so that I didn't screw it all up. And in the end… if it hadn't been for Meiya, I would have failed them all.

… I shouldn't have been the one to survive. I ended up leaving and forgetting. What kind of comrade am I? What kind of soldier, of friend am I? So weak, that Sumika felt it was necessary to erase my memories just so that I could sleep with a clear conscience despite the never-ending fuck ups I did.

I don't want to be here. I don't want to see her or anyone.

This world's Meiya… I never had a bond with her as strong as the one I shared with the other. Sure, I did remember the promise on my own after graduation, but in this world we just fooled around in school. We never shared anything as important as all the things I've shared with the other Meiyas. All the things she taught me, all the times she helped me get up when I thought I had hit a wall. And I ended up hurting her, I didn't realize how much I meant for her.

And I sent her away, alone, to who knows where.

And I killed her. Not even out of conviction, I made her suffer at the BETA's hands before I gathered the balls to shoot.

I know I'm important to this world's Meiya too, with the promise and all. I know I'm her first love and how dear I am to her. But I can't face her. I'm going to break down. If I'm having this much trouble keeping my emotions in check now, when I see her face… No, when I see everyone…

A small, slow flash, something faint within my palms. The letters they left me come back to me. All of them, in the end, all of them loved me. Well, maybe not love… but still, they held something for me in their hearts. And what did I do for them?

No, don't cry! Don't be an idiot!

I gotta get out of here before I break down, because if I do, I'll end up talking. And the last time I did that… Marimo-chan died.

Just focus! This world's guys are not my squadmates! They're just my… acquaintances. We're not as close. We're just old classmates. Yeah, we're no longer who we used to be. Time has done its thing, I'm sure. That's all.

"Takeru-sama? What is the matter? Would you be injured?" Tsukuyomi-san looks at me with downcast eyes, taking a few steps, slow and hesitant steps towards me.

Heh, I never though I'd see that worried face on her again. At least I know the guys are safe. Yeah, she's this world's Tsukuyomi-san, alright.

But I can't stay here. After all, the fact that I remembered is dangerous. Who knows if I'm still bringing causal information to this world. Not even Yuuko-sensei could explain clearly how did I keep my memories. She once said I might not get another chance to keep them, but here I am now. This just might be an oversight in her theory or something.

… And I can't allow anything to happen to my dear ones again because of my own stupidity.

"I'm leaving."

"Excuse me?"

Not even answering, I turn around and start walking towards the elevator. I take a few breaths, letting out the vile air that now fills my chest. Wiping the water in my eyes, my feet barely lift themselves up to take me down the hallway towards the elevator.

"Takeru-sama! What's the meaning of this? Weren't you the one who invited Meiya-sama today?!" She's enraged. Of course she is.

"Tell Mei… Tell Mitsurugi-san that I'm sorry. For everything."

Changing the way I name her is just a stupid way to not mix them both in my head. And I know apologizing to her for something that happened in a parallel world is the most stupid thing I could do.

But I needed to say it. I couldn't apologize to that world's Tsukuyomi for failing to protect her when I said I would.

And I can't allow this Meiya to fall to the causality's effect. She, who resigned months of her busy life and held such a pure love for me, doesn't deserve to die like that. And like hell I'll let the rest also be affected by this shit.

"Takeru-sama, what do you mean?"

"… I remembered. All of it."

"Remembered? You don't mean-"

"I couldn't keep my promise. I wanted to apologize. Now that I'm in a different world than hers, that's all I can do. I don't feel so good, so I'm leaving." I did make a promise with this Meiya, so hopefully I can make them misunderstand my words.

"Wait, Takeru-sama! If you truly remembered the promise you made, then-"

"Don't! Just… leave me alone, okay? I think it's for the best if… I don't see Mitsurugi-san again. I just wanted to be honest and apologize… for being a dense idiot who couldn't see what was in front of him. She deserves an apology and… a-and…"

Shit, I'm crying dammit! Get your shit together! You know what's at stake here!

"And give her my thanks. For everything she did for me. Goodbye, Tsukuyomi-san."

"Takeru-sama! Wait! At least tell her in person how you-"

A strong hold over my shoulder, firm and commanding, preventing me from moving. As if reacting instinctively, I grab what restricted me and throw it off me.

When I realized what I had done she was holding her head in pain, blood dripping from her forehead and dirtying a wall, looking at me with a confused gaze and tears in her eyes.

"I'm sorry. Please Tsukuyomi-san, let's never meet again."

I run to the elevator. This time she didn't try to stop me.

---

Same day. Near 8 PM.

(Takeru's Room.)

---

I ran until I got to the train station, and after getting out of the train I ran home at full speed.

After resting under the shower, it feels like I'm calming down for real. So, grabbing a paper and a pencil, I sit down on my desk and start scribbling and noting down what I've remembered, trying to detail the events in the timeline.

After a few minutes, I stop and read what I wrote, images and voices coming back as I do. There's no gap in the dates and, even if some details are kinda fuzzy, I definitely remember a lot of stuff not only about last loop but about the other loops I took.

Last time all I had was some vague memory of my time after that Christmas when Alt IV was canned and the dread of Babylon, but now I have clear recollections of those days, even if some events are kinda mixed together.

Be it planting the sauntpaulias with Tama, visiting art galleries after a break with Chizuru, going to parks and mountains with Mikoto, simply resting with Kei, or getting slashed in half by Meiya as she insisted on training me in kendo. All of those memories clearly belong to that other world.

"Sigh… But some of these memories aren't from there."

Sumika gifting me a cake, me and Meiya rolling in the snow while we laugh, Tama asking for my help to nurse some of the kitties that gather in her dojo, Chizuru hiding behind me as I introduce her in a bombastic manner to my parents, or me and Kei cooking some yakisoba together before cuddling in the sofa as we watch TV.

Huh, so I also could have gotten together with any of 'em in this world. Wait, didn't I feel kinda weird during my first loops at times? Yeah… like, when thinking before the Christmas exchange party. Hmm. Maybe some data from other possible futures in this world seeped into that parallel world and that's what made me feel weird at times?

Sigh… I may never find an answer to that. And then there's one other future that I rather think was nothing but a nightmare. Marimo-chan… wouldn't do something like that to me.

R-Right?

But, well, back to the other world's memories. Pencil in hand, I write a particular date. December 25th, 2001, the first day officially under Alt V command of Yokohama Base. From that date onward, it's as if all the memories got bundled together. For example, I know for a fact I did multiple loops in my original state, to call it something. And in those loops I ended up in different relationships with the girls in my squad.

But instead of remembering them as separate things it's like those loops happened all at the same time, from the way I remember it. From that Christmas onward, I remember some days in which I was training the sword with Meiya but I was also watering some flowers with Tama. Perhaps it's because I wasn't that different through those loops, so the memories got jumbled together? I may never find an answer to that, too.

Shrugging as I see the light fading already, I stand up and turn on the light. Cracking my knuckles again, I resume my scribbling.

The coup and meeting Her Highness during it, making the XM3, the 00 Unit and the battles that came. No lakes there, I can recall most of last loop no problem.

Hmm… There is one thing, though. I can't remember what happened after Operation Iceberg on my first loops. I know that when I didn't die during it I ended up in… Hawaii? Seattle? Well, thing is, I remember some sort of briefing in which they told us the world got fucked hard after the G-Bombs fell. I think Eurasia and Northern Africa ended up under water, and that's as much as I can remember. The rest are just bits and pieces scattered.

I'm taking out a Reactor with Japanese, American and French troops, I kind of see Sensei and Kasumi but I can't hear them, and the Shogun was also there at some point, I think? If I die, it's the same regret as I claw at the skies, if I don't there's that hollowness when I cry after putting down a 'comrade'.

" Cough ! Ugh… Just thinking about it all makes me sick to my stomach," I wipe my mouth, taking a deep breath to halt the echoes that try to resonate again. "Anyways, I will have to live as if I hadn't remembered anything, in the case that I'm still bringing data from that world here. Wish Sensei would have given me more intel about the next world I'd end up on."

She did say I'd find myself on a place crafted to meet Sumika's wishes, but then again, I'm not even dating her now. Don't know what I can do if things start happening, but assuming I somehow find a way to return to that world there's still the risk of losing my memories, since Sumika is no longer alive there. Worst case scenario I'll have to hope this world's Yuuko-sensei can somehow lend me a hand in reverting whatever it is that made me remember.

But that's just a what if. Things might be fine this time around since I didn't came back forcefully, and I had forgotten everything when I came back here. There's also the chance that my memories aren't the cause of the leak but an effect of it. In which case I'll have no choice but to take cards in the matter.

Resting the pencil on the desk, I stand up and stretch. As I do, I run a hand over my biceps and chest, feeling the firmness of the muscles. So my body returned to how it was in that world for some reason, the six-pack strikes back. I wonder why did I regain my past body's muscles? That may be yet another question I might never find an answer to.

Well, on one hand I'm glad I got my memories back. If I forgot it would be like everyone who died was truly gone forever. So long as I remember, they will live with me.

Ring! Ring!

I can feel my heart skip a beat as the phone started ringing. Is it the guys? I'm sure they would want to know what the hell happened to me. I mean, imagine you're chilling in the room, eating some good luxurious food with the whole gang, and then Tsukuyomi-san comes back with blood on her head and tells you:

"Takeru-sama beat the living shit out of our guards, started crying like a bitch, threw me like a ragdoll against the wall, and then went home. Shucks! Here, have some more pudding!"

I suppose I'll just have to make stuff up and keep our talks short. I guess… staying away from them is all I can do, until I see whether people lose their memories when interacting with me.

Dragging myself downstairs towards the phone, I pick up the receiver.

"… Hello, Shirogane residence."

Nobody answers back.

I wait for a few moments… Still nothing.

"Hello? Is this a prank? Because I'm gonna hang up." Not in the mood today.

"D-Don't!" A familiar voice yells on the other side of the line all of a sudden, as if stung by boiling water. "Please don't hang up, Takeru."

Meiya. Why is she calling me?! No, I can't risk any causality leak to affect her. If she interacts with me and, for whatever reason, I'm still pulling stuff here she's gonna die. And a horrible death, no less.

"… Takeru? Are you there?" Don't make that creaky voice. It's going to be hard enough with Sumika coming to college with me everyday. Let's make this quick.

"What can I do for you, Mitsurugi-san?" I grip the receiver tightly, closing my eyes. Gotta keep my cool, don't do anything stupid, myself.

"Why… Why do you not call me by my name, Takeru?"

"It's not proper, I… should show respect to you. I'm just a civilian."

"That's not true! You're important to me. Takeru, you don't have to-"

"Mitsurugi-san, did you need anything? I'm kinda busy at the moment." I can hear her trying not to cry. Or is she just angry? Definitely angry. Please get angry and hang up.

"Takeru, can we meet? I'd like to have a talk with you. In private."

"No, I already told Tsukuyomi-san all I had to tell you. If you have any business with me, you can simply tell me now." I can't drag this conversation anymore. I don't wanna hang up suddenly, but she IS stubborn.

"… Are you mad at me?" A small, almost broken, voice. Again, the acid of a Fort goes down into my chest.

"What?" Why would I be mad at her? Of all the people in this world, why would I be angry at her?

"You're not upset about… how I broke our promise?"

Promise? Oh, the promise in the park? When did she… Oh, so that's it. She thinks I'm mad because she married somebody else since I told Tsukuyomi-san I remembered everything. Thanks Meiya, you just gave me my excuse.

"I guess, I simply realized how stupid I was. There's no way I could stand by your side. I'm a normal person, I don't belong in your world." Sorry, I can't risk you dying in that way.

"That is not true! I've… I know you're faring well in college. And I do not care in the slightest how others see you. These two years… Takeru, I… When Tsukuyomi told me you had called me, I…"

Such a soft, sweet voice. So honest, so creaking. Like a falling glass before it's forever shattered, slowly as if walking over spikes. Scared.

Closing my eyes, the back of my head hurting, one of my hands clutches my collar. Heartbeats present in my neck, that odd ringing returns to my ears. And for a brief second, everything goes white.

A tall mountain, a heavy pain on my shoulders. Hits and pain over my arms, that feel swollen. It's hard to move my feet, my heels wail at the mere touch of the ground. But beyond that heaviness, that crushing sensation on my nape… there was warmth, the warmth of someone's hold over me.

By my side, as when we first met. Cradling my head, whispering a good morning as she embraces me. Those azure eyes… of my Meiya… as we lean closer, for a morning kiss as we hug each other, enveloping the other in our body heat.

"T-Takeru? Are you still listening?" She asks, making my breathing hiccup. "Please answer me, Takeru." Crumbling like a tree in front of a Destroyer, that's her voice as she hurries me to reply. So scared, so tense.

Why… Why do you have to make this so hard?! Couldn't you just have forgotten about me?! If you keep this up… you might die. Meiya doesn't deserve that fate. No, I can't- I won't let her die like that. Hell no, never. Forgive me, but if I have to be cruel to keep you away, I'll do it.

So, taking a sharp breath in, drying my mouth, knees shaking at the images that faintly continue coming up, I speak from my stomach, "Meiya."

"W-What?" She seems to have tensed up as I address her by name. "I'm here, listening."

"I was the one who broke our promise first." I can hear her gasping. I'm sorry. "I… fell in love with someone else. But now, we can't be together anymore." This is technically not a lie. Even when one of those I fell in love with was a parallel version of her.

"… What are you saying?"

"I dated her for some time, but…" I recall the times I had to send off the girls with the Alternative V fleet, eyes watering. "She had to leave. Somewhere far away. I'll probably never see her again." My voice breaks at the end, that moment of clawing at the stars choking all air outta my lungs for a sec.

The fact that the fleet may have actually exploded before reaching its destination will forever haunt me. No, now that I know that there are billions upon billions of BETA out there… Even if they reached the planet safely, the BETA would eventually make their way to it. They died too. There was no way they could have survived with so little people, unless the BETA took centuries, or maybe thousands of years, to reach the planet. And maybe even then…

Sigh… I truly never managed to save anyone, not a single person. Heh, to think Yuuko-sensei called me a hero before I left. You were the heroine, Sensei. Me? I just was the hammer in your hand… or maybe not even that.

"You're lying! That's… That's not true!" She screams into the receiver, not even holding back her anger. Her eyes are full of fire, I'm sure.

"So, this one's on me. Forgive me for not giving you an answer and running away when we went to the hot springs. I still don't have the guts to tell you in person. I'm sorry."

"Then, why did you call me?! Why were you so angry at the salon?! Why did you beat up the guards?! Why didn't you tell me this there, when you were the one who invited me?! Takeru, why!?"

And she finally snapped. Let's finish this, one more cold blow and she surely will never forgive me.

"Because I… wanted to apologize, because you deserve an apology. I'm sorry, for everything. Farewell, Meiya. Please don't contact me again."

"Takeru, wait! I haven't-" I hang up, slamming the receiver with a shaky hand.

"Please don't call back. Please forget about me. Just move on, and live a happy life. You deserve it, Meiya."

Slowly walking to the table, crashing onto a chair, I bury my face into my arms. Repeated strikes of cold on my back, tears that don't stop but also don't want to come out. Just limply lying onto the wood, clawing at my scalp.

This is for the best. I can't risk anyone dying. I wouldn't be able to forgive myself if anything happened because of me. But, how can I know if I'm still a causality conductor? I mean, Sensei said I was no longer one after Sumika died since she was what turned me into one to begin with.

Should I try speaking with Yuuko-sensei? No, I should just act like I've been so far. Remember her advice, act as if you don't remember anything. Otherwise, I just may end up bringing all the death in that world here, and this time I might not be able to just infiltrate the U's nuclear reactor.

… I feel awful. I'm going to take another shower, fix me something to eat, and hit the sack early. After all next Monday is back to college, so I gotta start preparing my stuff.

Hopefully everything will stay the same. I just gotta deal with Sumika. I have to keep being cold to her, keep going alone to college, keep avoiding her on the weekends. She'll eventually get fed up with me, we stopped talking by the windows after we started college so it's a matter of time.

I turn the TV on as I go to the fridge, to have some background noise and keep the silence away. Let's see here… I'll use some eggs, the cabbage and…

"Yeah, this should do. Compared to the synthetic food we had back there, this is luxury."

Grabbing the stuff, getting the knife and table ready to start cooking, I simply rest everything there. Just looking at the food in silence as the news drone on. Looking back at my house, remembering my time with them here. My times with them over there. The now empty table, where alone I'm going to eat. As opposed to all the times when we…

"Why? Hic… Why did I…" I don't fight the tears this time, and they stain the wooden table that I was gonna use to cut the cabbage.

All that fighting. All that suffering. To end up being the only-

"No. W-Wipe those tears. I have one last duty to do."

To live. For all the ones that gave me this chance. I gotta protect this peace, so I have to calm down. I'll let it all out tonight, in the loneliness of my room. I can only hope I'm not a conductor anymore, otherwise…

Well, no getting depressed. In a few days I'll know. No, wait, I can test it out tonight. I just gotta talk with mom and dad when they come back, and if they forget me-

Then, what? What if Sensei forgets about me too before she can help me?

I'll have to steal the microwave and get into the reactor myself. Like hell I'll let this world get screwed again!

I hear the door being unlocked, their usual loud voices as they enter the house. Gulping down, feeling my body tense up, my vision grows hazy for a second as a shiver ran down my back.

Let's roll the dice. Will it be a one or a twenty?

Break Point

Chapter 4: Break Point

---

August 11th. Around 9 AM.

(Street.)

[Takeru]

---

A red head was spewing steam behind me, trying to get my attention. I grabbed my bag tightly and kept walking in silence. That didn't last for long.

"Takeru-chan, can you talk to me?" Sumika sounds slightly annoyed as she gets to my side, leaning her face near me. I ignore her and continue walking. "Hey, you idiot! You deaf or something?!"

Scream all you like, you won't get a reaction out of me. I'm gonna cry, I know. Been having nightmares of all the deaths every single F-ing day since then.

Mom and Dad didn't forget about me when we talked, and they also haven't forgotten about the things I asked them to test if their memories were working. Same for everyone I have interacted with, and nothing seems to be wrong. For now.

So, I think I'm safe. Probably. But I don't wanna risk it. Maybe the leak only happens with people that interacted with me in the other world. There's so much I don't know. I mean, I shouldn't have regained my memories in the first place. Sensei said it wouldn't happen twice, so much for that.

But I gotta keep my cool and not think about it too much. That means being chill and trying to avoid the guys.

"Takeru-chan? Hey really, what's wrong? You don't have to tell me why you went home alone after the tournament, but at least-"

"I'm fine. Cut it out already."

Her shoulders drop as she slows down her pace. Sumika has been trying to talk with me since she got back from the salon. At first I couldn't even look at her without having to hold back the tears, but now that I've had time to calm down I can hold it together, almost.

I know she is also stubborn to a fault, so I can't expect her to just stop talking to me overnight. I can only hope these little interactions don't cause her to be affected by the causality's influence, if I am a conductor.

There's also the possibility that I'm not a conductor and that the information is out there, waiting to be accessed by someone. Like with the Takemikazuchi and the BETA in Valgern-On. Or did that happen because I played Valgern-On a lot? I have no idea what's going on, and that only makes me more anxious.

Either way, I gotta calm down. And while I pushed Meiya away I might try to wait and see what happens, since I don't have enough info to know for sure what is going on. But openly talking about it with Sensei is the last resort, to use only when I confirmed the worst case scenario. After all I'd have to reveal a lot of info to her, and that means remembering a lot of little details from that world. I don't know if that's safe right now. I do not want to see everything going to hell again.

Today's classes went by rather fast, I didn't bump into anyone from the gang today. Some of my classmates did congratulate me for the tournament, and I told Onimura about how he inspired me to beat the Elefs, as well as my inner promise to buy him lunch for a week.

When I got out to the gate I saw two little silhouettes waiting for me. Mikoto and Tama in their casual clothes waved at me as I exited the U's campus.

"Takeru-san, good afternoon!"

"Hey Takeru! How are you?"

"Yo Tama, Mikoto, what's up?"

"We were waiting for you, since today we get out at the same hour." Tama says while tugging at her pink jacket. It looks like she wants to say something else, but chose to remain silent.

"Hey Takeru, what are you gonna spend the prize money on?" Mikoto asks me curiously.

"I saved it up, I don't really need it right now."

"Huh, I was planning on getting a PC for myself. I'm tired of having to go to an internet cafe whenever I need to search something."

"Yeah, that's a pain. Shame we can't have something like a portable browser machine, similar to the Game Guy."

"Totally that! That would be really awesome!"

We kept doing some small talk in our way home with me just answering yes, no and some three worded answers. I wonder if they'll remember this talk tomorrow. Since they have to go to the station it was a short travel.

"Well, see you later guys!" I said as I went my way.

"Um Takeru-san!" Tama raises her voice as she calls out to me. "U-Um, you see, the thing is… I wanted to… Eer…" Her eyes dart down, and it looks like she's quivering.

"Tama, I don't bite. What's up?" I try to calm her down, but I don't know if it worked.

"Takeru-san, what happened on the day of the tournament?" And there it is. THE question.

I can feel Mikoto's gaze on me too. So, here's our second chance Takeru. What do you do? Act normal or push them away?

"I was… not feeling so good after fighting with the guards, so I went home."

"Takeru, why did you fight the guards? That was really dangerous! You could have been sent to the hospital!" Mikoto scolds me, looking upset at my recklessness.

"They started the fight, and I just defended myself."

"But Tsukuyomi-san said you injured some of the guards!" Tama seems serious right now. She truly is worried.

"And they would have had no problem in harming me if it meant doing their job. It was their fault for resorting to violence first."

"I mean, you're right, but…" Mikoto couldn't bring himself to agree with me.

"I was in a foul mood and I didn't want to ruin your party. At first I thought you guys were in danger, but once I knew you had Meiya there I had nothing to worry about."

"But that's… not what I asked…"

"What was that Tama? Couldn't hear." Playing dumb is all I can do. Can't really explain what's going on in my head to them.

"Nothing. If you're fine that's enough, see you tomorrow!" Tama recovers her smile and goes her way.

"See you tomorrow Takeru!"

"Yeah, later."

I arrived at home, ate something light and went to study to my room. Just gotta keep living like I was, can't screw this up.

---

August 15 th . Around 9 AM.

(Street.)

---

The rest of the week went by fast. My studies were going steadily, I kept doing normal conversation with the guys when I ran into them and they didn't forget about me. Maybe I'm not a conductor after all, otherwise something would have happened already.

I've been having trouble balancing my feelings towards the girls and Mikoto. While it kinda hurts when they treat me as just another friend, it also feels weird when they do act nice towards me. It's also a problem when they remind me of the times we spent together in the other world, my heart is a mess right now.

During my walk to college I ran into Tama and Mikoto again.

"Yo guys, good morning!" I wave at them, finally releasing a bit the cuffs on my heart.

"Good morning Takeru-san, Sumika-san!" Tama's cheerful smile greeted us. Always so bright, so charming.

"Hey Takeru, Sumika-san! Morning!" Mikoto also is always smiles. Though he's usually lost in his own tempo. Usual Mikoto stuff.

Spending my days like this fills me with both bliss and regret. On one hand I'm really happy to be here, to not have to worry about a sudden BETA invasion or to always have to eat synthetic food, to be with my beloved ones spending our days in peace. And it also fills me with regret, for how I failed my squadmates. They also deserved this life, more than anyone. They didn't deserve to die like that, not the girls from squad 207, not the Valkyries, not a single of the MP of our base. I didn't stay to make sure they saw how beautiful a peaceful world can be. It makes me feel like a coward, like that time I ran away while the fight was not yet over.

No, that fight is not over. And I'm still here.

"Takeru, Takeru. What do you say of going to the arcade tomorrow?" Mikoto throws the suggestion out there.

"I'm fine with my studies, but what about you?"

"All good, don't worry! I've been wanting to challenge you to a match again!" He seems really motivated to beat me.

"Guys, do you think I could go, too?" Tama wants to tag along? Didn't see that one coming.

"Sure Tama, don't see why not. You wanna come too, Sumika?"

"Sure! Miki-chan, wanna try playing with me? You won't get better teachers than a pair of champions!" Sumika says while pointing at Mikoto and me.

"Ahahah, thanks! It does seem to be a lot of fun, so I might give it a go. Just be patient with me, please?"

"Don't worry Tama, I'm sure you'll do just fine!" I give her a thumbs up.

Having made plans for the weekend, we part ways at the gate to go to our own classes. This will be a nice chance to see if they forget something, I remember that Meiya did forget the plans we did when I got back and trying to recall that caused her to forget about me. So, this is the last test, to see whether they truly forget or not. But I'm truly at a loss right now, I don't know if I'm being paranoid or relaxed.

So far, I've been acting as usual and nobody has forgotten about me. There's also no incidents going on, no sudden accidents on Kashgar or Canada. Maybe, just maybe, everything will be fine. Here's hoping I can finally put this fear to rest.

---

August 16 th . A bit over 10 AM.

(Takeru's House.)

---

"I'm just going with the guys to the arcade, don't worry." I say to Mom as I tied my shoes.

"Even so, are you sure? You won't fall back on your studies?"

"It's fine. I'm keeping up alright. And I need a break." I double check everything is in place.

"Hmm… You have been strangely down for a while. OK, don't be late, yes?" Mom gave me a smile and went back to the kitchen.

This usual routine is something precious to me. I didn't knew I missed my parents so much. Of course, my feelings are kinda weird. I do remember being here for, like, forever. But I also know that I got sent to the other side.

Sharing lame jokes with Dad, receiving a hug from Mom when I come back home, always having them pestering me about my studies.

… I missed my family. Funny, I had forgotten about them back there, and yet I can't see how I could do that now. Am I such a coldhearted bastard? Maybe the war just didn't give me time to think about them.

I get my little bag and grab the doorknob. As I open the door, the clear sky greets me. The wind blows, and as I get out I look around the place. No fallen Gekishin, no ruins.

"Hey, Takeru-chan!" Sumika's happy shout calls out to me. I smile at her and we make our way towards the station.

I'm back. I'm back home. Even if I failed to protect you… We did it. As an outsider, I'm glad I could lead you to a better world, according to Sensei.

… I think I could slowly start feeling truly part of this world again. Maybe I'll write the story of our struggles and make a book out of it. So that your memory never dies.

---

[Takeru's Parents]

---

"So you don't think he's being weird?"

"No? He's usually in his own world, right? Leave him be, he's doing fine in college right?" Kageyuki says as he eats his breakfast.

I turn to the sink again and start washing Takeru's plate.

"So… When do you think he'll bring a girl home?"

"What? Are you in a hurry to become a grandma?"

"Kage! Why you!" I throw a small paper that was near, he just laughs as he looks at me.

"Let him be. He'll eventually find someone. Can you blame him? That Mitsurugi girl came here and played with him in the end. I still don't know what that was about."

He's right, Takeru did seem heart-broken at the time when we came back. I was sure that Meiya girl wanted to make him her consort, but what happened? Did Takeru screw it up? Knowing him, that's probably what happened. He's as dense as his father.

"… So we lost again, huh?" Kageyuki makes a sad face as the results of the baseball games appear on the news.

"Stop getting sad over a sport."

"Oh, shut it. This season's being totally awful for us! We haven't won one… Huh?"

Hm? Kage became quiet all of a sudden as his eyes widened. He placed a hand over his mouth as he watched the news. What are they showing now?

"… the police have finally detained the man responsible for the murder of Marimo Jinguuji."

… What? What did it say? Marimo… Wasn't that Takeru's teacher during his last year in high school?

"The incident happened on the late evening of the 5th of August. Apparently Jinguuji and the murderer were in a relationship since January, and during June they had an argument that caused Jinguuji to break up with him. This is the reason why the man carried out the murder, the police found out that he had posted in an internet forum that he was going to make his ex pay for ridiculing him a few days before the murder, after they accessed the PC on the suspect's house. He already had a story of violent breakups and was addicted to a certain illegal drug."

"Honey, this Marimo was…"

"Takeru's teacher, yes."

I can't help but feel bad at this. She was such a sweet person, from the impression I got during the few times I met her.

"That's why the man intercepted her on a street near the victim's house around 7 PM on the 5th, and tried to ran over her with his car. Witnesses say that she managed to dodge him the first time but he turned around and tried again. He was clearly conscious of his actions. And when he tried again, Jinguuji-san couldn't dodge it. However, the man was not satisfied and ran her over once more, this time running over her head. After that, the man proceeded to make his escape, and had managed to avoid being caught thanks to a friend of his that-"

I turn away from the news. That's sickening, I can feel my stomach turning as the image unwillingly made its way to my mind. Who would do that kind of stuff? What is the world coming to?

---

Some minutes after that.

(Train Station.)

[Takeru]

---

"Takeru-chan, you sure it's okay to go have fun now? What about your studies?" You sound like my Mom, by the gods!

"If you're so worried you can leave before we get on the train."

"That's not what I… Oh, whatever. So, how's everything? Feeling fine?"

"A-OK, no problems. Hey Sumika, random question. What did I ask you to bring yesterday?" Let's see if she still remembers.

"Huh? The guidebook you lent me some time ago? I got it here, don't worry." She shows me the magazine folded in her bag.

So she does remember. Unlike last time, where people that talked to me would forget what they spoke with me the day before, now there's no such issue. It's been, what? A week? I think it's safe to say I'm in the clear. This is a different world, I don't have to be always on edge or marching at a high pace.

I exhale, relaxing my shoulders. I feel as if I got under a warm shower after a really long day.

My fight… is over.

We rode the train, and when we got to the arcade Tama and Mikoto where already waiting for us.

"Takeru, Sumika-san, how you doing?"

"Good afternoon Yoroi-kun, doing just fine. Hey Miki-chan, here!" Sumika gives Tama the guidebook I asked her to bring.

"Huh? What's this?"

"It's a guidebook with a lot of info about the last updates of the game." I said in my hype voice. "It would be boring if you didn't recognize which mech is which. It also has a very nice section of beginner tips, to give you an idea of what to expect when you get to play."

"Thanks a lot Takeru-san! Sumika-san, do you know how to play Valgern-On?"

"Not really, I just tag along. I know the controls but I'm not that good."

"Alright! Let's go! Before all the terminals get occupied!" Mikoto rushes into the arcade, only to be met with a loud roar.

It seems people recognized him. Of course they will, some of the regulars here are die hard fans of the-

"OOOOOOOOOOOOHHHHH IT'S SHIROGANE-SAMAAAAAAAAAAA!"

Wait, what?

And before I knew what was happening, I was in the center of a human twister. People asked me for autographs, pictures, game tips and who knows what else. After a little while, people literally stepped aside for us to use whatever terminal we wanted to use, the owner even said he'd let us play for free, since he'll use it as advertisement for his arcade. I let out a heavy sigh, but everyone else seemed to be enjoying themselves with the treatment so maybe it's not all bad.

We played some matches, I ended up defeating Mikoto twice. Sumika and Tama were having a lot of fun too fighting against each other. We then played a two man battle with Sumika and me versus Mikoto and Tama. Sadly I was backstabbed by Sumika, who landed a fully charged ballistic shot at my core. If she actually tried to do that she wouldn't be able to do it, but of course when she DOESN'T have to…

"Takeru-chan, don't look so angry please? I'll pay the lunch, okay?" Sumika was trying to stop my epic pouting maneuver, and failing miserably at it.

"Not even Mikoto could land such a hit! How on earth did you hit my core from that far away?!"

"I dunno! I just started button mashing because I forgot which combos to use!"

"You just had to push the first trigger to give me some support! Why did you push both triggers and the lever?! And why did you aim at me when you were charging?!"

"I was aiming at Yoroi-kun! You are the one that was jumping around super fast! I didn't even see you!"

"You bastard, I don't think anyone has ever done such a good shot with the laser ballista either. And to waste it on your partner…" That really was a nice shot. If she hadn't hit me with it, I'd be showering her in compliments.

"What do you mean, 'you bastard'?! I was doing my best to help you!" She starts punching me lightly while pouting. She's really cute when she's flustered. Sadly, she's also so much louder.

"Ahahah! That was truly something else. Who would say Takeru-san would end up being defeated by his partner?" Tama joins in the teasing. My child, how much have you grown.

"Totally! Sumika-san, the partner killer! You already have a nickname!" Mikoto gives Sumika a thumbs up. You're probably mad that she took me out when you couldn't do it in our matches.

"Don't go giving me weird names Yoroi-kun!" She makes her pouting face as she whines at Mikoto.

"Ahahahaha, he's right though." I can't help but to laugh. We all start laughing.

Today's been really fun. This is how things should have always been. I really shouldn't have let my emotions ruin our reunion at the salon.

Yeah… This is my life. I finally got my peace back.

We stayed in the arcade for a while longer, playing other games. Mikoto again beat me in the racing one, and we got Tama and Sumika some plushies from the crane games. All of us enjoyed ourselves, it feels good to let loose after so long. Then, we went to eat something at a family restaurant, sharing jokes and jabs, and after that we made our way to the station.

But as we were getting closer to it, a slight tremor could be felt. It then turned to shaking, and it grew more violent in a matter of seconds.

"An earthquake?!"

The land shook with a raging fury. We had to lay against the wall to not fall. It was becoming more and more violent. Glasses shattered, the little children started crying, some cars had to stop suddenly, almost starting a chain of crashes.

I can barely stand as it is, what about the others?!

And then, as if in slow motion, I saw it. A light post was falling on top of Tama and Sumika. In an instinctive reaction I dashed from where I was, trying to reach them.

But I couldn't.

I managed to grab Sumika by the collar, making both of us fall backwards as the shaking made my footing unstable. The thing fell just by my side. Blood was splashed onto me.

Tama's blood.

Right besides me… Tama's hair… Tainted with blood…

She was… completely… squashed, beyond recognition.

"A-Aaaahhh!" I try to move away, but my eyes cannot release themselves.

The image of the Superior turning her into a Soldier-Class returns. My throat dries up and my hands start shaking. Again, I can't even cry nor look away.

Sumika was speechless with fear, she just grabbed me, shivering with tears running down her face like a waterfall. We couldn't stand up, the shaking wasn't stopping. I grab Sumika tightly, closing my eyes. T-This has got to be a nightmare…

No. This is no nightmare.

Tama was squashed by the light post. This isn't an accident, this the causality isn't it? Is this is how she died in Kashgar? Tama… Is this my fault for interacting with them? No, wait, if this happened to Tama then…

Mikoto!

And then a tearing noise could be heard. I looked upwards, and saw how some power cables got loose and broke. Mikoto, alongside many other people that were nearby, couldn't react to it. The cables fell with sparks flying out of them. And as they hit the group of people, an electric shock was discharged.

I could only watch in silence as Mikoto and at least another ten persons were electrocuted to death, all the while the ground kept shaking.

Time stopped. At some point the shaking stopped too. Sirens could be heard in the distance. What didn't stop was the irregular beating of my heart and the searing pain that was splitting my head apart.

The scenes play one after the other. Mikoto's death in her Gekishin when we were sent on a suicide mission, the last words we crossed during Operation Ouka, the letter she had left me, the times we spent together.

Tama's sauntpaulias appear on my mind, how we grew them on the base. How she died fighting to the last breath when I couldn't help Sensei with Alternative IV. Her shape as the Superior was twisting it into a BETA.

Forgive me, Mikoto. Forgive me, Tama. I got you killed again.

What an idiot I am. What am I doing?! I was just slacking off, living the easy life and because of that…

If my memories came with me… There was the chance that something else…

No! I already knew of the Takemikazuchi and the BETA being on Valgern-On. That was proof enough, right?

So, does that mean that my inaction killed them once more?

Again… My hands are stained with the blood of my beloved. The realization makes a sting drive itself into my chest. I did this… This is my fault, isn't it?

"Takeru-chan, are you alright?" Sumika asks me, with a broken voice.

Only then I realized what was around me. A familiar and unfamiliar landscape. It's almost as if our city had fused with the city of the other world, creating a chimera with some buildings intact, some completely collapsed, and smoke rising to the heavens.

"What the hell is this?"

"What are we gonna do? How are we gonna go home?" She said with a tiny voice holding my arm tighter and tighter.

"Look, there are some officers coming. They'll get things under control." I rub her head slowly, to calm both her and me.

I can't… If I focus on the memories again… Sumika… Meiya… Kei… Chizuru… Marimo-chan and the Valkyries…

I gotta get out of here. I gotta get back before it's too late. Sensei… I gotta find Sensei!

Police officers were running around. I could hear the chimes of the firefighters. The city was probably in a horrible state. Will it go back to how it was? Or will this place turn into some ruins, too?

We, and many other civilians, were taken to this 'safe area' until the police guarantees we can go back safety. We were later questioned about what happened and what we saw. I told them that the corpse under the pole post was Tama and about what I saw in as much detail as I could, since Sumika was made a wreck of tears.

Eventually, things settled down a bit and we were made to ride a bus of the police to be escorted to our houses along many other people. Sumika's eyes were completely red by that point and she said no word during our travel.

I gaze at the aftermath through the window as we move. This was no doubt done by a leak from the other world, yet I'm supposed to not be a conductor anymore. I'll have to look for Sensei as soon as possible, assuming she didn't die during this.

Sumika's head falls on my shoulder, she fell asleep. I saved her from that pole, right? I saw how they were going to be crushed and managed to react just in time. Was Sumika going to die? Or was she going to be reduced to a brain like the time I ran away?

No, what does that matter?! That means I just changed the outcome of the causality! How was it that Yuuko-sensei said? Things get reversed so the effect appears before the cause?

Regardless, I just contradicted Sensei's theory again. Something that should have happened, didn't. So, if I sense that an accident may happen before I go back, I can try to prevent it.

Well, none of this should be happening so I can only pray Sensei has an answer for this and is willing to hear me out.

---

Same day. Around 9 PM.

(Takeru's House.)

---

My house was okay, but Sumika's house looked exactly like the one from the other world, minus the collapsed Gekishin of course. Her parents were found below the rubble. My parents pretty much forced her to stay with us. There's still some sirens in the distance, a lot of people are probably trapped in the fallen buildings or injured so it's going to be a long night for the rescue teams.

"… half the city has taken severe damage, with many important buildings collapsed. There's also places where the electric service is not available. The municipal forces are doing their best to both rescue any survivors and repair the basic services as fast as possible. The only hospital that hasn't taken serious damage is-"

The news continue to report the status of the city, with images taken from a copter filling the screen. It's obviously not as bad as the other world but this is still really bad for what we're used to in this world.

"… the estimated amount of casualties is somewhere around a hundred. However, since we haven't scoured all affected areas yet the number will surely rise."

My mind drifts to what happened to Mikoto and Tama. Was that how you died back there? Just to protect me?

And yet I couldn't stand up. I saw how the cables were going to fall, but I couldn't even move with all the shaking. I couldn't reach Tama, even if she was just a bit farther away. I couldn't warn Mikoto, even when he was also close by.

Again, all I could do was stand by and watch someone important to me die.

"Takeru, go call Sumika. Dinner's ready." Mom tells me.

I'm not the only one hurting, so I have to keep my shit together. Like Hayase said once, I can't go pushing my emotional burdens onto others.

I go to the small storage room where we put a futon for her. Knocking the door before I speak, I call out to her.

"Sumika, dinner's ready."

No answer. I don't think forcing her to come out is a good idea. She must be feeling horribly right now. Not only she saw what happened to the guys, but when she came home there was no home left. Not the building, not the people.

Maybe I should just bring her food here. As I was leaving, I heard the door opening. She slowly got out, gaze on the floor, and walked up to me.

She looked so faint, as if she would vanish into the air when I stopped looking. She never looked so weak, ever.

"You okay? Want me to bring the food to you here?" She shakes her head. "Okay then, let's go to the table."

We go to the kitchen, but she's walking so slowly. I wait in the hallway, just to make sure she doesn't fall or anything. She looks devastated, I can't even imagine how she must be feeling right now. How did I feel the first time I lost everybody?

I go up to her and grab her arm to help her walk.

"Thanks, Takeru-chan." Her voice is almost a whisper.

As we got to the table I was going to lower the volume of the TV, but the person on the screen prevented me from doing so.

"… believe that it's in these situations that those at the top must do everything they can to aid their fellows. That's why the Mitsurugi Group will donate the materials for the reconstruction of the city, as well as food and medicine for those in need of treatment or shelter. We will also cooperate by hiring laborers to bring the city back on its feet as fast as possible." Meiya looked completely different. Right now she was like the other Meiya, resolute and unwavering. Her usual smile and light tone were nowhere to be found. That's Meiya for sure, always ready to rise to the occasion.

And here I am, doing nothing again. If only I could do something to help, but I'm merely a civilian here.

"Meiya-san truly is amazing." Sumika said. "Even in this situation…"

"Well, we do know she always goes overboard when someone needs help. She is so used to doing things in an extreme way, this is like the perfect work for her." Even indirectly, you always bring me back on my feet Meiya.

"Sumika-chan, here. I hope you like this." My Mom had finished placing the food on the table.

"Thanks, really." She said quietly as she sat down.

There were no words to say. We just ate in silence, listening to the news. Some streets looked destroyed, a school caught on fire, the train station got wrecked.

Even if I want do something, right now I don't think I could do anything. Not only I'm just a civilian here, but I'm feeling horrible now that everything is sinking in. It's clear that this happened because of me, and with all that's going on I can't go ask Sensei for help. Not like we could just snuck into the reactor again in this mess.

I go back to my room and throw myself onto the bed. I need to get back there ASAP. Let's start preparing an explanation for Sensei. At least I can do that right now.

---

August 19th. Around 8 AM.

( Takeru's House. **)

---

Yesterday I caught a broadcast where they said that the public security force was taking people to help as volunteer workers. Since there will be no classes with all this, maybe I should go help. With my current strength and stamina I'm sure I'll be of use. And this is my fault, least I can do is try to do all I can to help. I also can't meet with Sensei until things settle down, so, even if it's just a little, it's in my best interest to help.

I told Mom and Dad that I was going to help out during dinner last night. They objected. They don't know how strong I am now. My reflexes are also much better than before regaining my memories, so no worries there either.

As I was getting ready to leave Mom kept pestering me.

"Takeru, I know you've been exercising a lot. But you shouldn't push yourself to help. There's other people that can-"

"Mom, I'll be fine. If we young ones don't rise up to aid in times of need, this country is screwed." I know that the values I learned over there may clash with how things are here, since nationalism is seen as a rather bad thing here. But I want to help my city, in any way I can.

"There's an emergency alarm, do you know what that means in Japan? To forbid people to go to work? That's how bad this is. The city is in ruins, what can you do to help?"

"A little something is better than nothing." And this is no ruins. We still are very far from that reality.

"You're so hard headed. Why did you have to take after Mom like this?" She sighs as she fumes and complains about Grandma, apparently giving up on stopping me.

"Don't worry, Mom. I'll be back before dusk."

"You better! If you get injured, I swear, I'm not letting you off easily!" She starts waving her finger menacingly at me.

She says I'm stubborn, but she's the same. Both her and Dad are always doing whatever they want without telling me anything. And if I ask they just insist they're doing fine, because they're adults.

And then they get surprised at how I turned out, hehe.

"Takeru-chan? Where are you going?" A frail voice comes from the hallway.

"Good morning, Sumika. I'm going to volunteer to help with whatever it is I can do."

"Eh? Will you be alright?" Despite being so weak herself she still worries about me.

"Don't worry! I'm going to be fine. You rest up and eat, yes? You look like a ghost. No pushing yourself or anything, alright?" I pat her head softly before going towards the door.

"Okay. Be careful." She gives me a small smile and goes to sit at the table.

"Well, I'm off. Mom take care of Sumika."

"Like I need you to tell me! Be careful, okay?"

I wave as I leave. I catched the address of the office where they are accepting volunteers on the news while eating breakfast. I read the paper I had written the address of the place to go volunteer and take off.

They gave me one of those yellow things that the transit people use, but in blue. I was assigned to a team of another five volunteers under a police officer. It looks like they are sending my group to deliver supplies to shelters and hospitals.

The others seem to have some problem lifting some of the boxes, but this is nothing for me. I end up delivering three or four more boxes than what I should have, but thanks to that we were speeding up the process.

We started at 10 AM, and it now was around 3 PM so we stopped to have lunch.

Since I've been training I'm still as fit as when I was a soldier, this kind of work is nothing to me. The other guys asked me what kind of routine I did, I shared some advice with them on how I exercised as we finished eating our lunch and got back on the van.

"All right, listen up crew! We are going to pick up some more supplies and take them to the last hospital. Then we go to Hakuryo Highschool, that is currently being used as a shelter for people of the neighborhood until the nearby shelter is repaired. Then we will deliver water and food to the neighborhood, since it seems some places have no water and electricity. You got that?!"

We all replied in unison. This guy… I think I've seen him somewhere. Can't remember well where. Wait… isn't he one of the MP that was on guard when I arrived at Yokohama Base?

So the school is being used as a shelter, huh? Wonder how many people are there.

We delivered the supplies to the hospital and went our way to the school. When we got there it was obvious it was filled with people. Some kids were playing near the gate, a few teenagers were hanging around the courtyard.

The leader confirmed with one of the guards our order, showing them a paper. He then gave the us the okay to take the boxes to the gym. As I was taking a box with medicinal supplies to the gym a voice called out to me.

"Shirogane? That you?" Kei was also here, with a nurse hat on her head.

"You helping out too, Ayamine?" Don't think about what happened. Stay cool.

"Yes. What's that?" She says pointing at the big box I was carrying.

"Medicinal supplies. Taking them to the gym."

"They send me to get those. Lucky." It's amazing how you can keep your cool and smile in a situation like this Kei. Even though I know that inside you're also nervous and scared, I'm still amazed at how strong you are.

We go to the gym together. The hallways are full of people, to think all of them lost their homes is just horrible. And like Sumika, they may have lost their families too. It reminds me of how Yokohama Base was after the attack of the BETA.

We reach the gym and another familiar voice reaches my ears.

"Ayamine?! Why did you come back without the supplies?!" Chizuru berates Kei, like she usually does.

Of course this would happen. They volunteer to help and end up together. Those two are joined at the hip by some cosmic force.

"I did bring them. With Shirogane."

"Shirogane? What does he has to-"

"I'm the one bringing the supplies, Sakaki. Give me a minute and I'll bring the rest." I tell her as I put the box on the floor.

"You're helping, too? Heh, that's reassuring. Ayamine, go and help him bring the boxes please." Chizuru says as she starts taking the supplies in the box to the other nurses and doctors.

"Okay."

"Thanks for lending me a hand Ayamine." I told her as we made our way back to the van.

"It's nothing. Can't believe you are helping."

"Hey, I also a have a good side, you know? And since I can lift this is something I can reliably do."

"What's up with that? When did you get so buff?" She starts poking my sides with an accusing glare. Kei stop that, please. That dubious look…

It's just like when we got together in both worlds and she got suspicious of something. I look away, embarrassed and sad after remembering our relationships.

"I just exercise a lot, that's all."

"You're blushing. How cute." Damn you, Kei. You have no idea how much it hurts to hear that from you.

"E-Enough with the teasing, that van over there is where the supplies are."

The guys in the crew were surprised, but the leader welcomed the help. We finished bringing all the supplies in a flash.

There were more people here than I thought. I haven't had the chance to go look at the city from the top of the hill, it must be a shocking sight to behold.

"All right boys! Is that the last one?" The leader says as one of the other guys brings the last box. The man nods and we all prepare to leave.

"Alright, guess I gotta go. Keep up the good work Ayamine."

"You too, Shirogane." She smiles as we part ways.

As we were making our way to the van we hear a commotion. Someone seems to be fighting. Then a loud noise could be heard.

A gunshot.

When we got outside we were greeted by a horrible visage.

The guy we left to watch over the van and the guards of the gate were on the floor in a lake of blood. There were a lot of people with their faces wrapped up in clothing with baseball bats and other blunt weapons, one of them had a pistol. What the hell is happening?!

"Get inside! Everyone get inside!" The leader got most of the other guys back into the school, but some of them were shot by the aggressors.

"Who are those guys?! Terrorists?" I can't believe these guys choose to do this now. Why is this…

… The attack on Yokohama Base. It's repeating itself right now. Or is it the coup? Are both incidents mixing each other here?! I don't even know anymore.

"You know the orders, boys! Let's thrash this place!" One of the hooded men screamed as he started running towards the gate with a metal bat on his hand.

The rest soon followed. There were maybe thirty of them.

"Hey! All of you! I'm a police officer! Drop your weapons or I'll have to arrest you!" The leader screamed at the mob, showing his badge and pistol to them.

They didn't stop. All the other people had ran inside already, only me and the leader were at the gate.

"Shirogane, it's brave of you to stay. But I can't involve a civilian in-"

"Sir, I've received some military training. You don't have to worry about me!" I said to him while dodging a bat and countering the guy with a punch, knocking him out in one go.

As the one with a gun shot at the air, we hid behind the gate. The thugs used that slight breach to rush into the school, we leaped from behind the walls towards them, I took on three of them as they came at me.

Some of the guys flat out ignored us and ran inside the school as others blocked us. The sound of shattered glass and screams tainted the air. Five of the thugs tried to prevent us from following the rest after they had gotten inside.

We quickly knocked them out, they were just runts. I'll never lose to scum like that, it'd be an insult to the Instructor and all the people that trained me in the BETA world.

"Shirogane, on me! If you have to use a bat or something to subdue them, do it!"

He had to shoot some of those guys on their feet to make them stop thrashing about before knocking them out. We rush into the school without waiting a second.

We had to split up since they had gone in different directions and were destroying the school and hurting the civilians inside. I smack a bat into the head of a guy that was trying to beat up some boys. There's another one on the end of the hallway chasing someone!

I ran after him, but hearing something I stop and take a step back.

BANG!

A loud noise rang in my ears. One guy was in a nearby classroom and threw a homemade bomb at me. I dodged the thing just in time, talk about the devil's luck.

The thug kicks me in the face as he laughs.

"What's this?! A hero! The hell you think you are, bitch?!" He starts kicking me in the stomach while I'm on the floor. But his kicks don't hurt me, if he were kicking my head that would be another story.

I grab his leg when he goes for another kick and twist his ankle. I stand up, a little sore from the kicking, and give him a strong chop to his neck. Out cold, you won't be kicking nothing for awhile.

With all the noise it's not hard to find them, but the damage is already done. Some people were hit on the face with a metal bat, some were cut with a knife.

All the training in close combat I did with Meiya and Kei allowed me to best them in combat, even when they had a weapon. And when they threatened a civilian and I 'surrendered', my reflexes and muscles allowed me to strike them when they didn't expect it or to withstand some hits from the bats until I could counter. Luckily I wasn't the only one fighting back, but I was the only one with training fighting back.

After a short while, the police arrived at the school. The leader vouched for me, as well as many people that saw how I fought to stop the aggressors.

"So, is it over?" I ask the leader as I put some bandages over a cut I got on my hand.

"No, they took some hostages to the gym. Since it's separated from the school building it only has one entrance. Don't worry, we have it surrounded."

I breathe a sigh of relief. It was a rather short fight, but it feels as if I had been running around for an hour straight. I sit on the floor to catch my breath, I can feel my heart in my neck. The leader hands me an ice pack to put on my bruises. This is nothing, compared to how I was after the BETA attack on our base, I can endure this much.

I stood up and we went to the courtyard since the leader wanted me to tell the head officer that came here what happened when I fought with the thugs, in case what I knew was useful.

When we got there, it seemed that the thugs were trying to negotiate with the police, showing all the hostages inside the gym.

I felt a shiver when I saw that Kei and Chizuru were in the group of hostages. The hooded men opened the door to show that all the hostages were fine.

"So, officers, as you can see all the hostages are in prime condition. But depending on your actions, some of them may have a little accident."

One of the thugs inside the gym waves a bat towards the head of a little boy in slow motion. Those bastards!

"So, what do you want? A helicopter?" An officer that was dressed like Chief Yoroi addressed the thugs.

"Hoho, you catch on quick! That and five million yen."

"What? Five million?" I can't help but be surprised at his claim. How on earth is the police supposed to bring them that crazy amount of money?

"Crazy, right? Can't tell what these guys are thinking." The leader is as surprised as I am.

Actually, all the officers here are surprised by the claim. Where do they want the police to get that much money from?

"We do not know if we can get you the amount you ask of us. But, we can bring you-"

"Nope! Five million or nothing! Didn't the Mitsurugi Group said that they'd take care of the expenses of the city? Then, just think of this as another expense and that's it! Problem solved, amirite?"

"We can't confirm that they'll agree to do so. We can get you the helicopter and a smaller-" The thug interrupts him again.

"Stop wasting my time! For every hour that you take, we'll kill one of the hostages! So, that's what? Eight hours? So get it done, we clear? Unless you don't care 'bout their safety." The guy waves his gun towards the hostages. And with that, he went back inside the gym.

All the officers started to discuss what to do frantically, while the one with the coat took out his cellphone and made a call.

"Shirogane, after you tell us what happened you can go home. You've done enough today." The leader gives me a pat on the back.

"I appreciate your concern, but my friends are in there. I'd like to stay here, until this is all over."

He looks at me in the eye, smiles and gives me a strong pat on the shoulder, like how Kyozuka-san used to.

"Okay, boy. But go back inside the school. Leave this to the police, no matter how much training you've had, you're still a civilian."

I can't do nothing but accept that. Here, I'm just a college student. I'm not a Cadet nor a Lieutenant anymore. Imagine if I flew here in a TSF, heck even the suit would be an awesome thing to have. I bet I could take a gunshot and shake it off like it was nothing.

The man that was dressed like Chief Yoroi came over and asked me about what happened. I told him everything truthfully.

"… And then I ran into the police and the leader, who told me about the hostages. After treating my wounds, we came here."

"I see. You've done a great deed today, Shirogane-kun. You have my thanks."

Just as he said that, another younger officer comes the man in a suit looking pale, brows arched.

"Sir! We have contacted with the Mitsurugi Group, but they do not wish to cooperate."

"What?! You did tell them of their threat of killing each one of them for every hour that passes?"

"Yes, sir. Of course we did. But they claimed that this is the responsibility of the police. They do not wish to give such a large sum for some hostages."

"Damn them! It's not like I expected them to agree to that crazy amount, but at least give us something. We can't get anywhere close to that amount."

The officer then goes up to the phone they had set up and called them himself. Soon after that he started cursing whoever was on the other side of the line. I don't know who they are talking with, but it's probably a third or fourth line employee. Damn, if the Mitsurugi Group doesn't give us a hand… There's no way anyone can fork that amount of money. Kei… Chizuru…

Wait… Do I have Tsukuyomi-san's number on my cellphone? Yes, I do.

Should I… Would she even pick up? After what I did on the salon? After what I said to Meiya? No, this is not the time for dark thoughts. I can help the police. I can help Kei and Chizuru.

I'm sure that if Meiya hears about Kei and Chizuru being in danger she would definitely help us. She may even bring more than double of the amount they ask, knowing her.

They might hate me, but those two should be important for Meiya. So, even if they yell at me and insult me, I have to do what I can to help them. If I don't…

The final moments of Tama and Mikoto resurface within me. I'm not letting the causality take anyone else from me. Finding my courage I dial the number.

…

The tone rang, but she didn't pick up.

Heh, of course she wouldn't. Not with all the horrible things I said to them.

At least I tried, now it's up to the police. This is so frustrating, to have no power to do anything. It's not like I can rush in there and beat them up, that'd only make things worse. Not like the police would allow me to have a part in this.

I lay against a wall, looking at the courtyard from afar. Now that I get a good look at it, it's amazing how similar the school and the base are. Sensei must have ordered the aboveground building to be rebuilt to the smallest detail over there.

But, how did Chizuru and Kei die in Kashgar? As I was trying to recall how things went in the moments before I went into the reactor my phone started ringing.

This number!

"Hello?" Tsukuyomi-san's voice, with a cold tone, sounds on the other side as I answered.

"Hello, Takeru-sama. Did you call me before, by any chance?"

"Yes, Tsukuyomi-san. I have something to tell you."

"Is there anything I could do for you? I'm a very busy person." She's mad. Can't blame her. And despite that, she still called me.

"I didn't call you to ask something for me. Ayamine and Sakaki need Mitsurugi-san's help, would you be willing to listen?"

"Your friends? If this is a trick-"

"They are being held hostages in the gym of Hakuryo High School. We were here as volunteers, but suddenly a group of thugs broke in. They started to hurt people, and then took some of them to the gym. They asked the police for a helicopter and a crazy amount of money, or they will kill one hostage every hour. They said that the Mitsurugi Group could easily fork over that amount. The police has no way to get the money, and they are negotiating with someone from the group. But it seems that it's not going well."

"… Is this true?"

"If you don't believe me, you can ask your employees. With your position I'm sure you could get more information about this incident than what I know." I heard her shout some orders to the Three Idiots, and after a few moments she replied back.

"So, you wish to ask Meiya-sama to save your friends, by giving some lowly thugs a giant amount of money."

"Well, yes. She's the only-"

"However, we have no obligation to do so. This is the police's job. The Mitsurugi Group is not the state, and it is certainly not responsible for the well-being of Japan's citizens. Would you have us do the same for every criminal that asks the Group for ransoms in the entire country?"

She has a point. If they do this once, other criminals may try to do the same. And if people start expecting the Group to do it, when they eventually refuse to do so, who knows what problems that will cause them? No, think of the political implications it would cause to have them fix the problems of the state. The ripple effect may just be terrible.

Now that I think about it, the first guy did say something about orders, and they specifically requested the Mitsurugi Group to bring the money. This may just be a play in someone's chessboard.

"You're right. I shouldn't have asked you to take responsibility for this. Forget I called you."

"I didn't say we weren't going to help."

"Huh?"

"If Meiya-sama finds out her friends were harmed while we knew of this and didn't inform her, she would certainly ask for our heads. So Takeru-sama, I'll talk with Meiya-sama about this. However, we won't let the criminals escape either. And I'd like you to know that we will ask you to repay this favor tenfold. Please put the police on the phone."

"Wait! There's… something I should tell you."

"What is it? Can it wait?"

"The criminals… may have powerful explosives with them."

"What?! How do you know this?!"

I remember there was a giant explosion just before I went to the reactor in Kashgar. At that point, Mikoto and Tama were still alive dealing with the door BETA, I think. And Meiya was the last one to die, so if I had to guess, I'd say Chizuru and Kei used their S-11s to blow themselves up. They died in a giant explosion. And if what's happening right now is the causality trying to balance itself…

"I have a hunch it'll be like that. I know it sounds crazy, but…"

"… I suppose it would be in our best interest to remain ever vigilant. After all, this whole accident would seem to have been staged. Thanks for the warning, Takeru-sama. Let's hope it's just a hunch. Could you put the head officer on the line, please?"

I go up to the officer, that was still shouting at the receiver, and after a short and vague explanation he agreed reluctantly to talk with whoever was on the phone. His face changed as they spoke, the agitation left his voice.

"Shirogane, who did you call?" The leader asked at me, curiously.

"An old friend. I just hope they go easy on me when they want me to pay this favor back." I say with a light smile.

I'm glad they agreed to help, but that bit about paying the favor sounded really ominous. Who knows what kind of revenge they have in mind for what I did.

"Shirogane-kun, I won't ask how you did this, but you have my most sincerest thanks. You may just have saved the hostage's lives." The officer said as he came to give me back my phone.

"I just did what I could to help, sir." I had to keep my hand in place to not do a salute.

The officer informed the thugs that they agreed to their terms, and asked them some time to bring them the copter and the money. And so, we waited for the help to arrive.

…

This may just have been the longest hour of my life. After what felt like an eternity, a helicopter appeared on the sky and landed in the track field, and from it Tsukuyomi-san came out with…

Wait a sec… Did Tsukuyomi-san use glasses? No, she didn't. Her hair color is different too.

A woman that looks very similar to Tsukuyomi-san, alongside some people in suits, came out of the helicopter.

"Hello, officer. My name is Maya Tsukuyomi, I was sent by Meiya Mitsurugi-sama to deliver both the helicopter and the money. What is the situation like?"

So her name is Maya. I wonder if she works with an attorney…

I stayed near the school building, letting the police and Maya-san deal with this incident. I can only hope that these guys truly do not have any explosives.

As the police called out to them, the same thug came out to talk. If I could explain with words the face he made I would. It's like in those manga where the eyes of a character shoot out in a dramatic fashion when they get surprised. He definitely wasn't expecting the police to bring the money, so what was his goal?

The guy goes back inside, and slowly the thugs go out of the gym towards the copter. They had a teacher with them, holding a gun to his head.

But when they got near the helicopter, in a split second, the thugs ended on the floor crying in pain. The Three Idiots appeared outta nowhere and smacked them hard. Thank God they can be reliable when we need them.

"Hey! Get off me, dude!" One of the thugs tried to fight back as an officer was cuffing him.

"This isn't how it was supposed to go, dammit!" Another was kicking up a fuss, until Maya-san punched him hard in the stomach.

I forgot how scary Tsukuyomi-san was in the other world, and if this Maya is just like her, that guy is not waking up soon.

"Hehe… Heheheh… You think this is over, dogs?!" The thug that did the negotiations with the police started laughing like a mad man.

"Hey! Stay quiet, or we will have to use force to detain you!"

"Who cares if you have me?! We won't go down without doing our part! MAY THE SAKURAS BE TAINTED RED!" He screams something at the top of his lungs. What the hell is he… Was that some sort of code? What could it-

BOOOOOOOOM!

There was an explosion inside the gym, wings of blazes stretched out of its windows. The hostages… were still inside. An image of Kei and Chizuru dying in an exploding Gekishin came back to me.

Just like on Kashgar, everything is repeating itself. They're… They're going to…

"Chizuru! Kei!" I leap towards the gym, but hands grab me from behind preventing me to go to their aid. "Let go off me!"

"Oi, Shirogane! Calm down! You'll die if you into the gym!" The leader and another three officers were tightly grabbing me, and even so couldn't fully stop me.

"Shut up! They're going to-"

"Shirogane-sama." A sharp and cold tone spoke to me, and Maya-san came into my vision. "There is no need to worry, Meiya-sama sent with me capable people to take care of this. Take a look."

She gestured towards the gym's gate, where the men that came with Maya-san charged into the gym wearing something that looks like gas masks and some weird looking black suits. Slowly, the tension leaves me, and as the hands release me I fall to the ground.

I can't do anything… Useless again. I can do nothing but watch…

They managed to rescue all the hostages in mere minutes, without anyone of them suffering injuries or burns. Had I jumped in to help, I would just have been a burden.

I got closer to see the people as they were carrying them out, but I couldn't believe my eyes. Kei and Chizuru were burned. Badly. Their bodies looked scorched.

I feel a twister tearing my heart from within. Again. I failed again. How many more times am I gonna screw up? I should have left as soon as I regained my memories.

… No, it would have been better if I weren't here to begin with. I shouldn't have come back if this is what it would cost.

The men took some of the hostages in the copter to a hospital after treating them with some of the supplies we had brought. The thugs were taken by the police.

This little incident was over. Was this enough? Did I manage to save Kei's and Chizuru's lives? Had I not called Tsukuyomi-san they would have died, the fact that the thugs set those explosives on the gym is proof enough they didn't have plans to leave the hostages alive. But, can I call this a good result? Are they even going to survive? How will they live from now on? Will they recover? How long will that take?

If only I had acted as soon as I got my memories back. No, how would I have convinced Sensei to help me? Sigh… Useless…

I didn't think today would be such a crazy day too. Everything was fine last week, why did everything start happening now all of a sudden?

As I was resting against a wall while looking up, I heard someone approach me.

"Shirogane-sama." It was Maya-san.

"Hello, did you need anything from me?" Get your act together. I'll cry when I get back home.

"Yes, allow me to introduce myself. I'm Maya Tsukuyomi, cousin of Mana Tsukuyomi. I also serve Meiya-sama as one of her personal retainers." So she's just like Tsukuyomi-san. Cousins, huh?

"I'd like to thank you for coming to help today. I know it was selfish to ask you to take responsibility for this."

"Please, do not thank me. I was just carrying out the orders Meiya-sama gave me. She's the one you should be thanking."

"I know that. But you were the one that came here, along all the other people. You also deserve my gratitude. Thank you very much." I say as I bow to her. This is the least I can do, it's all thanks to them that the hostages may survive.

"Hmm, I was told you were a rather rude person. Seems like you do know how to be polite when it's needed." She adjusts her glasses as she looks at me intently. Can't blame her for thinking that, I used to be quite a prick.

"So, Maya-san, what did you need from me?"

"Maya-san?" She looks surprised I used her first name.

"Sorry, if I called you Tsukuyomi-san I'll end up confusing both of you in my head. Is it alright for me to call you that?"

"If that is how you wish to address me, you may do so Shirogane-sama. Now, regarding my business with you. You shall be receiving a call shortly to inform you of what we desire in exchange of this favor. Considering what you just went through, I believe it best for you to return home now."

"I'll be awaiting the call then. Thanks again for coming to help, tell Mei… Mitsurugi-san that I'm truly grateful for this."

"There is no need for such words. I just did what I was ordered to do. I shall relay your words to Meiya-sama. Well then, I have some business with the police yet. This will be all." She gives me a small bow and goes her way.

Right now, I don't know what could I tell Meiya regarding what happened at the salon. Don't know if I'm still a conductor or if there's a leak, but the matter is that I have to find Sensei and get her to listen. Before Meiya suffers the same fate as her other self.

The police thanked me for my actions a thousand times. Some of them even asked me if I had any interest in joining. I gave the leader the blue uniform of the volunteers before leaving. He insisted it was okay for me to leave, and that he'll take care of explaining what happened to his superiors.

I wanted to walk home, but the leader insisted on driving me there. Nothing was said as we got in and he brought the car to life. I remain looking up through the window, feeling hollow and exhausted.

"You know, Shirogane. Many officers go their whole life without firing their guns even once." I look at him, his jaw tense as he slowly drove through the ruined neighborhood.

"I can see that happening in this peaceful country."

"Yeah. I'm not one of those." His face is covered by the shadows that only someone who has seen a dead body could possess. A face I know all too well. "It was something similar to this, in a hostage situation we couldn't pacify the aggressor. The hostage ended up falling from a window at the fourth floor of an apartment. That shit messed me up. So, I'm not gonna tell you to not worry, but don't hold back the tears. These things… It's better to take them off your chest. Let it out. You did enough today, kid. If it weren't for your help, those bastards would have messed me up big time at the gate, and thanks to you the hostages might survive. You did more than the police, when you think about it." He laughs dryly.

I guess that from his point of view I did a great deed. And I can totally understand what he means, about letting things out. After all it's what I did when I came back. When Marimo-chan comforted me.

… Wait one second. The leader… He was one of the MP back at the base, right? Didn't he die during the attack? Does that mean that… I prevented his death?

"We're here." I look out the window to my right and see that we arrived at my house. I feel a palm on my shoulder. "Rest well, Shirogane. You deserve it. You'll have to go for a visit later at the hospital. Can't be all gloomy when you go there, right?"

"… Yeah, I can't look like this. Thanks sir, take care." I return his smile and get off the van.

"You too, kid."

Slowly, the van goes its way into the street. I saved him, didn't I? That means that… Chizuru and Kei will live too, right?

When I got inside Dad was in the kitchen, which is weird since he doesn't know how to cook.

"Dad? What are you doing?"

"Takeru! Where were you?!" He looks worried as he rushes to my side. Who are you and what have you done to my Dad?!

"I was in the school when there was an explosion, and…"

"You were there? I just saw it on the news. Thank God you're safe. Were you kept there by the police?"

"Yeah, something like that." He doesn't need to know, let's just shut up about it.

"Okay. Now Takeru, I want you to stay calm. I know that what I'm about to tell you isn't nice…" What's up with him? He sounds really on edge. Don't tell me something else happened… "We had to take Sumika-chan to the hospital. When your Mom went to call her for lunch she was very weak, couldn't even stand by herself."

"What?! Is she still in the hospital?"

"I came back when we saw that it was something serious. So that when you came back you wouldn't find the house empty. But you took more time than I thought." It is near six PM after all, the sun is already going down. Visiting hours may end any second now.

"Can we still go to see her?"

"I think so, get in the car. We may have to go over the speed limit. We gotta pick up your mother anyway."

We got to the hospital in no time, cutting it close to driving through some red lights. Dad took me to the room she was in. With heavy footsteps and even heavier breathing, I marched through the halls despite Dad telling me to slow down and some nurses complaining. Please Sumika, be alright. I prevented the event that would have crippled her, so she should… She has to be alright!

Drowning out every other sound, almost breaking into a sprint, pushed forward by a cold shiver on my back, recalling our times together, I kept a lead on Dad until the flow of nurses died down.

When we got to the room, Mom was crying by a bed. Sumika was laying still in it. There was an annoying sound in the room.

The sound that the thing that counts heartbeats does when a heart… stops beating.

Slowly, I went near her. She looked as if she were sleeping. I grabbed her hand, it was cold. It had no pulse.

…

Why?

"We couldn't determine the reason, but her vitals were plummeting very fast. Her heart stopped just a few minutes ago. We tried everything we thought of in the little time we had, but to no avail." The doctor explained to us in their usual slow, detached, and calm tone.

Huh? Sumika is… dead?

…

Huh?

… This can't be. Why? I avoided her death. She shouldn't have… No, wait. Just like after Operation Ouka, sleeping peacefully in her bed, Sumika laid unmoving. However, the one in my dream isn't Sumika but the 00 Unit. And to make it…

That's right, Sumika had two accidents in the other world. The first was when the BETA reduced her to a brain. The second when we killed the brain to give birth to the 00 Unit. I prevented the first one, but…

Kasumi's words echo through my mind: "Sumika-san is dead. Your fight is over."

Over. Tama's shape squashed by a pole comes back. Again.

Over. Mikoto's screams as the cables fell play on loop. Again.

Over. Kei's burnt arms and face flashed in my mind. Again.

Over. Chizuru's scorched hair and upper body overlaid themselves with my vision. Again.

Over. And Sumika… peacefully sleeping, lacking all heat and life. Again.

They're all dead. All over again.

My mouth can produce no sound as my lips part and move in vain, my eyes get hot as the tears start to pour from them. I fall to my knees abruptly, I feel my Dad arm's on me as he hugs me.

Everything became a black void. I don't remember what happened after that.

When I came to I was in my bed, and it was bright outside.

---

August 26th. 0 8:45 AM.

(Takeru's room.)

---

Knock!

I rustle under the sheets, barely opening my eyes. Looking towards the window, rays of light greet me as I frown. I cover my head with the sheets, diving back into my pillow.

There's another knock. I ignore it and shut my eyes tight. Then, I hear the door opening and a few steps coming nearby.

"Takeru? Hey, are you awake?"

"… What do you want, Mom?"

"You haven't left your room in these days and you expect me to simply leave you alone? Come to the kitchen, have breakfast at the table."

Sigh, what will that even achieve? Just let me rest, there's nothing to do now. Mom takes my blankets off, then takes my pillow from under me.

"You're getting off that bed, now. Go take a shower and come eat, Takeru."

"Sigh, I got it." She gives me a side glance, I sit on the bed letting my feet search for something to wear. "Sorry, Mom. Didn't mean to make you worry."

"Okay, that's enough of that attitude." She clenched one hand as her brows furrowed, then sighed. "I'm not scolding you, I understand how you must be feeling. But you need to take care of your health, Takeru." She turned around after giving me one last good look.

No, Mom. You have no fucking idea how I feel. But I can't keep acting like this, even if it feels like there's nothing I can do now.

After taking a short shower, I go to the kitchen and fall onto a chair. Ruffling my hair, I look up as I lean back onto my seat. Can't get a hold of Sensei, she isn't answering her house's phone. Without her, I can't do anything. Is the Conductor still active? And if it is, why? But if it isn't, how do I fix this? What if… there's nothing that can be done?

Mom serves me breakfast and we eat as the news play in the TV. A report of the contributions of the Mitsurugi Group was being shown. I wonder when will Meiya call me to tell me what she wants in return for the favor. Poking at the food, I slowly munch and swallow, drink and rest. Nothing can fill the void left running amok in my chest now.

Some days ago, when I went to the hospital where Chizuru and Kei were supposed to be, I found Chizuru's Mom crying on the reception. As well as Akane near her, looking just as she did when we left for Ouka with one eye patched up and one arm bandaged. I told them of what happened at the school, of how the Mitsurugi Group managed to rescue them before they were scorched to death. However, they told me they had died the night before despite the doctors' best efforts and some stuff that the Mitsurugi Group provided for their care.

Chizuru's Mom thanked me for calling for help, since it seems they could say their goodbyes thanks to that. Me and Akane talked for a second about how crazy everything was, as she also thanked me for calling Meiya since also could at least talk with Chizuru one last time. To say she was destroyed would be an understatement, she didn't even try to hide her tears and her creaky voice as I was doing.

But, thing is, in the middle of her cries, she told me her sister died too during the earthquake when I told her of what happened to Tama and Mikoto. Haruka-san died that day too, during the earthquake. She then was taken by the nurses so I couldn't ask her anything else, but that in turn got me to check the list of victims of the earthquake, to quell my doubts and fears.

As it turns out, all the Valkyries are dead already, save for Munakata and Kazama it seems. Even worse is that… Marimo-chan was killed in an all too similar way to her previous deaths on the evening of the 5th, just as I recovered my memories. That's all the proof I needed. I'm the cause of this shit, conductor or not. The only question that remains is whether this can be reversed or if it's permanent.

My nightmares have become more and more vivid. It's like I'm cursed, Operation Iceberg, Marimo's deaths, Ouka. I brought all this shit with me. All that's been happening just like the end of last loop, it's too similar to be a mere coincidence. Of my squadmates that died over there only Meiya is alive now, and probably not for long.

Apparently, going by the news, things are settling down and soon everything will 'return to normal'. I want to get out of here as soon as I can, but I guess it'll have to wait until we can use that reactor. And even then… What if…

I hunch over into the table, hiding my eyes behind my arms, feeling the back of my head going numb.

"Sigh…" In the end, I can't do jack shit myself.

Ring! Ring!

Mom was cleaning the dishes, Dad had gone to pick up the laundry. Slowly getting off my chair, I go pick up the phone and answer it.

"Hello?" A familiar voice sounded on the other side.

"Hello, Takeru-sama. Would you happen to be free as of now?"

"Yes, Tsukuyomi-san. I suppose this is about the favor I owe you?"

"Indeed. Would you be free this afternoon?"

"Yes." Not like I have anything to do now, I don't know where Sensei lives.

"Well then, Ichimonji will go pick you up at four. Meiya-sama wishes to have a talk with you." I suppose she herself wants to tell me what she wants in person, along asking for some explanations about the matter on the tournament probably.

"Roger. I'll be waiting then." She gives me her goodbyes and ends the call.

I fixed myself up, and then told Mom and Dad that I was going to visit a friend. When I heard something by the door, I looked out the window and saw the familiar giant limo. Takahashi-san greeted me as he opened the door. I never thought I would ride this thing again.

We eventually reached a very tall apartment in the nice part of the city. It looks like this part is in good shape despite the earthquake. At the door, Maya-san was waiting.

After our greetings we got inside and we rode the elevator.

"Meiya-sama will meet with you in her personal room. You shall be alone with her during your talk. I believe there is no need to remind you, however should we hear anything-"

"I'm not going to do anything to her, Maya-san." At least not physically. I don't know how she may take whatever I end up saying.

"Forgive my rudeness, Shirogane-sama. But now that Meiya-sama is the head of the Mitsurugi Group we have to be extra careful. And now that we know that you can defeat some of our best guards, it would be foolish not to warn you. Though I suppose it was just a waste of words."

"Were those really the best guards you had?" I'm genuinely curious. Those guys weren't so strong, and they were not particularly skilled either.

"Yes, while they were not as skilled as me or my cousin, they were certainly some of the best men we have."

"Huh." I never really realized how strong I got over there, compared to how things are here my squad would be like an elite team or something even before getting commissioned.

"If I might be so bold to ask, how did you get so strong? I was under the impression that you were a normal boy."

"So long as we have an objective, humans can do anything we put our minds into."

"Did you have a particular reason to pursue such strength?"

"To… protect those I care about. I don't want to stand watching when someone dear to me needs help."

"I see. So that's why you called us for help, despite knowing what you had done could have made us unwilling to listen to you."

"Basically. I knew that if it were for me, you wouldn't lift a finger. But since Sakaki and Ayamine were in danger…"

"You knew Meiya-sama wouldn't allow anything to happen to her friends. But there's something wrong with your reasoning, Shirogane-sama."

"Huh? What is it?"

"Had you been the one in danger… Meiya-sama would have taken far more drastic measures to ensure your safety."

… Huh?

"What do-" Before I could finish my question the door opened and Maya-san got out of the elevator.

She took me through some hallways until we reached a double door. Tsukuyomi-san was standing in front of it.

"Good work, Maya. Takeru-sama, Meiya-sama is waiting inside. Please, do go in. Just walk forward and you should reach the living room"

"Alright."

"Takeru-sama, if I may…" Tsukuyomi-san stops me just before I went into the room.

"What is it?"

"Could I ask you to refer to Meiya-sama as you used to? I know not of your reason, but please refrain from calling her by her surname." She was serious, I don't know what got into her.

Shouldn't it be the other way around? You should be telling me to show respect to her, not to talk to her casually. After what I did to you and what I said to her, she still wants me to call her Meiya? Does she still have feelings for me?

"… If you say so, I'll do it. Anything else?"

"No, forgive the interruption." She stands aside, leaving the way open.

I give a little bow to both of them before going into the apartment. But more than an apartment it looks like a mansion. This place is probably bigger than my house, though it's not surprising considering who is waiting for me here.

As I got to the living room, slowly minding my steps… I saw her. Couldn't help to squint my eyes, bite my lips, as I tried to bury those times where I wasn't enough. She was in a suit that reminded me of the UN uniform, gazing out the window.

Sighing hard, inhaling sharply, I swallow my fears and take that first steps towards her.

"H-Hello Meiya." I should try to start the conversation, whatever it is she wants to speak with me.

Just because she's always been nice to me doesn't mean she will always be like that, even less now after what I said. I have to give her my thanks properly.

She twitches as she heard my voice, but doesn't turn around to face me.

"… How are you faring, Takeru?"

"Feeling fine, despite all that has happened."

"I see. Please, sit down." She finally moves from the window and sits on a sofa.

I sat on a sofa that was in front of her, waiting for her to speak. She grabbed a cup and drank, keeping her gaze down. As she put it on her lap, she remained silent.

… How much time has passed? She's just there, drinking without even looking at me. Should I try to start the conversation? I can't really read her poker face now, so let's try to be civil.

"Um… Thanks for sending help so quickly in such short notice, Meiya. If it wasn't for you all the hostages would have certainly died back then."

"I see." She takes another sip, still not looking at me.

Is she collecting her thoughts? With how busy she is I don't think she would have called me here to do this.

"Uuh… I owe you an apology for what happened at the salon, assaulting your guards and Tsukuyomi-san. Sorry." I bow to her, but she still doesn't move an inch.

I don't know what else I can do in this situation. Why did she call for me? Or did she do it on impulse and is now regretting her decision? If she's having trouble putting her feelings in order, just talking might do the trick.

"Meiya, what did you want to talk about? Why did you call me here?"

"Would you happen to be in a hurry, perhaps?"

"No, just curious. It feels weird to be called by someone, and then be totally ignored."

"I am not ignoring you."

"Then, why-"

"Sakaki and Ayamine… passed away. From what the doctors I sent have told me, they had severe burns all over their body. They passed away yesterday."

"… I know. I went to check on them and ended up seeing Sakaki's mom devastated on the reception." She grimaces as she hears me.

So she was just being considerate. Sigh… Gotta stay cool. I can cry all I want back home, but for now I gotta keep my emotions under control.

"Sorry to have pressured you, and thanks again for sending help."

"You have no idea how worried I was." She finally looks at me, purple fire coming out of her eyes. "You suddenly call again, tell us about hostages and bombs, and you even expected us to give five million yen to the criminals?!" I have never seen Meiya so enraged, not even on the other world. Guess that's to be expected since we're not on good terms anymore.

"… Sorry." That's all I can say right now, since I couldn't do a thing yet again to help those I care about.

"Stop apologizing. It is unnecessary." She clears her throat and speaks again. "So, Takeru… How have you and Kagami been faring? I'm sure all this must be taking a severe toll on both of you. I heard from Tsukuyomi that Kagami's house crumbled during the earthquake, and that she is living with you now." She adverts her gaze at the end. So you still have feelings for me? "With all that has been going on, I didn't have the time to call you, and I needed Tsukuyomi by my side. Are you two alright?"

"I've been fine. Still have Mom and Dad, after all. Sure, can't say I'm alright, but I'm hanging in there."

"I see. You do seem… different, somehow." Our gazes met, she looks so different. This world's Meiya was always so shining, the other so resolute. Yet, her eyes now had a hint of a shadow in them. That confident air almost gone, Meiya was stiff as a statue. "And what about Kagami?"

"Sumika… died." No use in sugar coating it.

"Eh?"

"The day of the attack, when I returned home, Dad told me she was very weak, that they had to take her to the hospital. When we arrived, she was already…"

"What happened to her? Did she have some kind of internal damage?"

"No, the doctor couldn't find anything wrong with her. Her vitals just plummeted according to him." I know what happened. The digitalization of the brain or whatever it was called, I don't know how the causality balanced that but it's the source of her death.

"… How could this happen? Forgive me, Takeru. Making you remember this…"

"You didn't know. I'm sure you have more on your shoulders than me right now." She must be so busy with all the rescue and rebuilding efforts. And yet, she's sparing some time for me.

"Even so… Well, I'm truly sorry." She takes her cup again and drinks a slowly from it. After closing her eyes and taking a deep breath she faces me again. "Now then, about what I called you here for. Could you explain to me what happened in the salon?" She's dead serious. I don't think I'll be able to lie much, but she deserves an explanation.

"I was looking for everyone with Mikoto when we split up. I felt like someone was following me so I started to take random turns until I made it back to the lounge, where I saw Mikoto being forcefully taken to the elevator by some men in suits. Then the ones that were following me got close and asked me to go with them. I refused and they got violent."

"Why did you not agree? And why did you react so violently?"

"They started it. I was… tired, and I thought they wanted to harm us. When one of them started to threaten me and attacked me, I defended myself and lost my cool. The other guard said they weren't going to harm me, but when we got out of the elevator five other men tried to assault me. Then I stopped caring and started fighting seriously."

"I see. Did you not hear that they were sent by the Mitsurugi Group? I told them to inform everyone of that as soon as they got out of the elevator."

"No, I don't recall them saying anything about that. Maybe I was so angry I didn't hear them."

"Alright. Now then, can you tell why did you hurt Tsukuyomi?" This time I could feel the anger in her voice and eyes, those purple embers darkening as she frowned.

After all, Tsukuyomi-san is very dear to her and I smashed her against a wall. But how do I explain this? Can't tell her about my memories, that's for sure.

"I… was in a foul mood. After Tsukuyomi-san told me you were there, I knew the others were safe. But I felt that if I went inside, I would have ruined your party. Then I tried to leave and she grabbed my shoulder, I reacted on impulse and threw her away. That was not my intention, I swear. I'm sorry, I was just… angry at the time." At myself, as I remembered how useless I was during Operation Ouka.

"You still were angry after Tsukuyomi told you I was there? You weren't… happy that you could see me again?" Don't look so sad, dammit. You're only making this harder on me.

"I had just… recalled some bad memories. I didn't want to be near anybody at that time." Meiya's death comes back again. No, dammit! Keep it inside, don't lose it.

"Takeru? Why are you wincing? Is there a problem?"

"Sorry, I just…"

"What happened to you? You told Tsukuyomi you had… remembered our promise, right?"

"The one in the park?" She gives a nod, avoiding my eyes.

"You also told me… that you had someone else. But you were lying. Why did you say that?"

"What? Lying?" How does she knows that I'm lying? I mean, technically it's not a lie. "Meiya,I wasn't lying about-" She interrupts me mid sentence, as she suddenly speaks up in a louder tone.

"I've kept a close eye on you… since I broke my engagement." She says as her voice slowly fades into a whisper.

"You got a close eye on me? You were stalking me?!" Meiya, what the hell?! I didn't knew she could be so… obsessive? Well, if she still has feelings for me…

"Huh? No, nothing of the sort! I just knew how you were doing in college and your general routine. Nothing more!" She says waving her hands around with a blush on her face.

"That's what stalking is, Meiya."

"No, it isn't! Nobody was following your every step, so it is not." Just how much does she know of what I've been doing? She's seriously scaring me right now.

"But why did you do that? Couldn't you just call me or something?"

"Well… yes, but…" Her gaze returns to the floor, as she starts fidgeting in her sofa. I wait for her to find the words to whatever she has to say. It's not normal to see her like this after all.

If anyone were watching us they wouldn't be able to tell this was the head of the most important business group in all of Japan talking with an average college student.

"Takeru, are you… angry about the promise?" Again with this?

"I told you I'm not, and I was the one-"

"No, you didn't. You haven't been in a relationship since you entered college." The way she says it as if it were a fact is somewhat scary, it's almost as if she were scolding me for even saying it. "Why do you lie? Are you trying to make me not feel guilty?"

"No, that's not it."

"Then, why? Do you not want to say that you truly are angry, and are using excuses to end the conversation?" Her cold tone returns as she shoots daggers at me with her eyes.

"Again, no. Just… I thought that you didn't want to see me anymore. That's the impression I got when I called Tsukuyomi-san to invite you to the meetup."

"Huh? Why would you-"

"She didn't talk to me like she used to. She kept the conversation short, was really cold to me, and it sounded as if I were a bother." That's how I felt after the thing, she kept answering in one or two words and hanged up without letting me finish talking.

"Tsukuyomi was just surprised. We didn't expect you to suddenly invite me somewhere after such a long time without contacting us."

"You live in a different world now, it's not like I can call you whenever I feel like. And with all that happened during the scandal…" I did feel conflicted back then, but settled on keeping my distance. What could I have said to her? Getting closer at the time would only have given her more problems with the media.

"That… was my fault for not standing my ground and accepting to marry another. I know you must have felt betrayed when you remembered our promise. Forgive me."

"No… that's… Don't apologize for that. I'm sure you were under a lot of pressure. You did nothing wrong Meiya. I don't hate you or anything, you're still Meiya to me. And I also didn't get a clue until it was too late." That's a lie. I looked the other way so that I wouldn't have to hurt anyone.

"Takeru… Thanks, you don't know how much it means to hear those words from you." And for the first time since we started talking, she smiles. "So, um, Takeru… now that we have cleared all the misunderstandings, would you tell me how have you been since we ended school?"

"Don't you already know that? Since you've been observing me." She shoots a glare at me while folding her arms.

"No, I don't. And I want to hear it from you. As well as the tournament, I was watching the entire time and it was truly amazing!"

Is this even safe? I mean, I shouldn't be a conductor anymore. But with everything that's been happening…

She stares at me with pleading eyes. What are you, a puppy?! Stop that! No, don't remember her last gaze. Don't remember her last words. And yet, she starts groaning while remaining staring. Ugh, fine. If it'll make her stop that, I'll talk with her for a little while. My heart can't take this.

"I mean, I don't mind telling you but, do you have the time? Are you not busy?"

"Do not worry, I left Tsukuyomi in charge of everything." She declares with her usual confidence.

"Which one? Tsukuyomi-san or Maya-san?"

"Maya? Takeru, why do you use her name?" Is she… upset? And why is she folding her arms like that? Oh, she's jealous.

"If I called both of them Tsukuyomi-san it would be confusing, right?"

"Yes, it would. But you could have simply called her Tsukuyomi." I can't believe she's slightly pouting because of something like this.

"I guess… But, well, before anything there's something I'd like to tell you."

"What is it?"

"Listen to me closely, and please don't freak out. I know that what I'm going to tell you sounds crazy." If I don't warn her now, I might not have the chance to do it later. Who knows what the hell is going to happen to Meiya if the causality brings her death's information here.

"Alright, just say it. I shall remain calm."

"Meiya, your life is in danger."

"What?" Can't blame you for not believing it.

"Remember how I told Tsukuyomi-san that the thugs may have explosives?"

"Yes. What has that to do with me? Are you saying they're going after my life?"

"Would you believe me if I told you I saw what was going to happen to Ayamine and Sakaki in a dream?"

"In a dream?" Of course she wouldn't believe me, I know this sounds crazy.

"Yes, I saw them dying in an explosion in many dreams I've had. And in one of those dreams I've been having lately…"

"You see me dying?"

"Yes, you're being… restrained by something. You cannot move, and there is a blast that destroy the place you were being restrained at." That's the best explanation I can come up with now, if I try to remember anymore I might start crying again.

"I'm restrained? And the place where I am explodes too?"

"You don't have to take me seriously, it might just have been a coincidence that what happened that day was similar to my dreams."

"If you felt like it was important enough to warn me, I'll take it to heart. Don't worry, Takeru. I'm not dying so easily." She shows me her usual wide, confident smile. The one only this world's Meiya makes.

"Heh, I know you won't."

"Now then, tell me about your first year in college. How was it?"

I think Meiya spent two hours asking me all kind of questions about college, my everyday life and the tournament. She told me how much her grandfather suffered to recover from the poison, and how horrible it was to be married to that man. She made an effort to remark many, many times that there was no love in their relationship and that nothing happened between them. She also told me of how hard it was to remain calm when all the media ganged up on her. She felt so far away from the life she had led when she was living with me, and she felt so guilty about breaking the promise that she couldn't bring herself to call me, or anyone from the school group. If only I had the guts to have called her back then…

"Meiya-sama, forgive me for interrupting you, but it is rather late. Dinner will be ready in a few minutes." Maya-san spoke from the door that lead to the entrance.

"Is it so late already? Forgive me for keeping you here, Takeru. Would you like to have dinner with me?"

"Thanks for the offer, but I better go back home. Mom and Dad are surely worried about me."

"That's a shame, but we've spent enough time talking today. We'll continue our conversation another day. Maybe then I'll ask you to…" She breaks eye contact with me as her voice fades away.

"Ask me what?" She now looks somewhat sad, eyelids going down and lips twisting. I can guess what she wants to say, but since I want to leave this world I better shut up.

"… Nothing. Do not mind me. Tsukuyomi, please escort Takeru to his home. Takeru, I'll call you when I have some free time. If you ever are in need of anything, do not hesitate to call me."

"Thanks, but I'll try not to bother you too much. Well, I'll be going. Later Meiya. And… sorry for how I acted at the salon, and for what I said when you called."

"Do not worry about that, it's in the past now. See you later, Takeru." She gives me a smile as we stand.

Smiling suits you the best Meiya, I can only hope my warning was enough to prevent whatever is going to happen.

"Please follow me, Shirogane-sama."

"Sorry for the trouble, Maya-san."

"Just call her Tsukuyomi like I do, Takeru." Why is she so upset about it? She shouldn't get jealous of her subordinates.

Maya-san takes me to the elevator and later to Takahashi-san's limo. In just a few minutes I was back home.

I definitely didn't expect her to be so nice to me. It almost feels like she forgave me too easily. At least I got to warn her about what might happen.

Now, I gotta keep up with my training and wait until things settle down again. And I need to think on what I'm going to tell Sensei.

---

August 28th. 7 PM.

(Takeru's house)

---

The city was slowly being brought back to life. Mom and Dad returned to their jobs and their routines. My classes started again too, but I haven't gone back to college. I couldn't do a thing to help them, even though I knew something was going to happen. I find it amazing that I can even get out of bed. I usually wake up without opening my eyes, waiting to somehow find myself in my room in the barracks. Or that I would warp myself after setting foot outside. But obviously nothing happened.

I've been debating with myself what should I do now. Talking with Sensei was my first idea, but I don't know if she will help me. Last time she had some papers that the other Yuuko had sent her, so she may not believe me. And even if she did she may not be able to help me this time. At least nobody is forgetting about me this time.

Going back to the BETA world is my best option, but what would that achieve? Yuuko-sensei has forgotten about me there, going by her words, and if I'm not useful to her she won't be willing to help me. There's also the fact that if I'm not a conductor anymore I might not be able to return there in the first place.

Maybe I should just stay here and do what I can to save this world. But then, what can I do? If all the deaths in the BETA world come to this one things are going to get ugly. Who knows what humanity will do in the face of such a crisis without a common enemy to fight against.

As I left a kettle atop the fire, I sat down and turned the TV on.

"And in just a few minutes, the new power plant will be inaugurated. The Mitsurugi Group helped speed up the process by bringing professionals from-"

Right, part the old power plant stopped working after the earthquake so the new one got priority to get in working condition. It's apparently rather far away from the city since there were plans to expand it in the future.

This kind of thing will always surprise me, how on earth does Meiya arrange these plans in such a short time? We're talking about a whole power plant here, in just over a week.

She appears on the screen and starts giving a speech. She looks so different, almost as if the Meiya I know is another person entirely. This, somehow, feels as if I were seeing her imitating Her Highness as she did in front of Sagiri during the coup again.

Then the Mayor announces that they will start the plant, as Meiya cut a long ribbon that was on the gate of the power plant.

Then it came to life, many lights started shining. The news showed some houses light up again, the streets that were completely in the dark now were illuminated with bright clarity.

The city will recover from this, but that doesn't mean this will be the last incident. After all, the other side's city was ruined beyond possible repair, it wouldn't surprise me if suddenly the school got turned into a military base too.

Then, in one of the images, there was a spark. Then another. A light bulb broke. What is happening?

As the screen went back to the power plant I saw Tsukuyomi-san take Meiya away from the stage. Smoke was coming out of the power plant, then there was a bright flash. The signal was lost.

"What did just…"

"We are trying to connect to the site. We are awaiting for… Huh?" The lady in the screen made a horrified face.

I did too once she announced what had happened.

"It seems that… that the power plant has exploded. The cause is still unknown, and the damage is still being-"

Exploded? The power plant? Meiya was there, was this…

She died in an energy blast, almost like an explosion. What killed Meiya was the XG, the fact that she couldn't move was secondary. I killed her by shooting the blaster.

I don't think she could have made it out alive of such an explosion. She's… She's…

"… You've got to be kidding me." This wasn't an accident. This was, once more, the causality's ripple.

No tears fall this time despite the dread that floods my heart. It happened again. I got all of them killed again. I couldn't do a thing. Again. The deaths come back once more as I slowly shiver in place and the color vanishes from my sight as the world around me becomes black and white, a noise ringing in my ears, a cold sensation creeping up my back.

Didn't I stop being a conductor? Why is the causality following me then? Am I cursed to be followed by these disasters all the times I return here? I keep shivering in place, feeling a tightening noose on my lungs as if I were holding my breath underwater. Unable to cry, my chest moves up and down, my heart pulsating with the intensity of a full boost jump inside.

"Why… Why did she have to die too?! Sensei, you said everything was going to be alright once I wasn't a conductor anymore!"

I hit the table repeatedly in long intervals as I rest my head on top of it. Meiya died, Sumika died, Mikoto died, Tama died, Kei died, Chizuru died, Marimo-chan died. All over again.

What is this shit?! She said everything was going to be normal, that destroying what made me a conductor was enough!

"Why? Did she lie to me?! Was this another of her schemes or something?!"

Is this what I get after all that fighting?! To watch as my beloved ones die again in front of me?! To end up alone again?! To be unable to protect them?!

Or is all of this my fault? If only I wasn't here… this wouldn't have…

I should have erased myself when I recovered my memories. The timing of all the deaths is just after I regained them. Conductor or not, this isn't a coincidence.

This is my fault.

This is all my fault.

I shouldn't have come back if this was the price that had to be paid.

Why did she lie to me? Why, Yuuko? Was that last smile of yours a lie too? Why didn't you tell me this would happen?! I trusted in you… After all that happened… Why…

"Takeru we're home! Hey, you left the kettle on the fire!"

Doesn't matter, it's just a kettle Dad. I think I'll just go to sleep, I'm feeling like shit.

Like always, I can't do anything when it matters the most. In my first loops I was just a useless Cadet, when I got full of myself I went berserk and got the Instructor killed, then when I said I was a man I made Sumika unstable and fucked up the Sadogashima Operation, and in the end…

I was just a spectator pushing buttons. I couldn't even do it out of conviction, I hesitated to do it. Meiya was the one who, like always, got me on the right path. And then I ran back here. I didn't try to argue or to question anything. I accepted that my part was finished and ran away.

Humanity's hero… I'm nothing grand like that. The Valkyries and Yuuko were the true heroines of the war. I was… a liability most of the time. And in the end… all I achieve is to bring more and more pain to those around me.

… I shouldn't have returned.

"Takeru, I'm talking to you! Help your mother make dinner or something, did you take out the trash?"

Shut up, Dad. Can't you just give me some space?

"Hey, answer me when I talk to you!"

"… What?" He took a step back, he seemed scared.

"What's wrong with you, Takeru? Why do you look like that?" He got closer, curving his brows downwards.

"Look at the news." He seemed shocked about it, Mom had her jaw on the floor.

"Oh shit, things are going from bad to worse. How many people died this time?" Dad grimaced as a heavy sigh left him.

"Meiya was there."

"Huh? What?"

"Meiya was at the power plant when it exploded."

"You mean… the Mitsurugi girl that came here when you were in school?"

"Yes, she was inaugurating it."

"I see. But you don't have to be like this because of her, Takeru. You just knew her for a few months and then she disappeared from your life. With all the ugly rumors I've heard, you got lucky she got bored of you. Don't shed a tear for that woman, you got lucky to not have been wrapped up in her sick life."

…

… Dad, what the fuck did you just say?

"What did you say about Meiya, Dad?"

"Huh? She was just a thot, she only played around with you."

"You're wrong." I slowly stand up, taking a sharp breath. You better apologize now… while you still can.

"Huh? How so? She just came here, bribed us with money to do whatever she wanted, and when she got bored she left and never talked to you again. She was just a spoiled rich bitch. Sure, I don't wish a death like that to anyone, but-"

THWACK!

I sent Dad crashing into the wall with a single hit.

"You take that back! Apologize right now!"

"Ouch… Dammit, what the hell is wrong with you?!"

"Shut up! Apologize Dad! Say you're sorry!" I scream my pain, shredding my lungs out. For the first time ever, I saw him shaking.

"… Hey, what's gotten into you all of a sudden?"

"I told you to apologize! You take back those words or-"

"Takeru! Calm down! Are you out of your mind?!" Mom grabbed my arm and placed herself between us, glaring at me.

"Mom, stay out from this. He better apologize, or else-"

"Hey, Takeru… I'm sorry, so please calm down. Okay?" Dad said slowly as he got up, moving both hands down as he did. I felt my heart in offside once the rush subsided. "Were you two still in contact?"

"It's not about distance. She… Meiya was…" I narrow my eyes, biting my lips in silence.

Dad sighs, rubbing his chin and looking away. What do you know anyways? You never had to fight for your life ever. I close my eyes, feeling tears come out of them.

"Takeru, why are you crying?" Mom gets close to wipe my cheeks of the rain that had started to fall. "What happened? Were you two still friends?"

"She was… important to me." I claw at my palms, having nothing to throw my frustration at. Meiya… and everybody else… Because of me being here, they had to die all over again. I close my eyes and finally let the tears out without fighting the pain.

"Um… Sorry for saying bad stuff about her. I shouldn't have… not after what happened to Sumika-chan… I'm really sorry, Takeru." Dad comes closer and clasps my shoulders, shaking me a little as he stared into my eyes. "Takeru, these things… It's completely out of our control. I've lost many friends during these days too. I don't know how much it must hurt, but… don't take it so hard. Life goes on." That's the problem, Dad.

What's the point? Why live on if you end up alone? If I can't go back to the BETA world… I don't think I'll be able to live with this guilt. How could I carry on… How could I move on from this? How could I try to help this world if… all the shit over there comes here? Who would believe me? What could I do?

Nothing. There's nothing an average college student like me can do. Again… I would only be able to watch.

… I shouldn't have remembered, I shouldn't have come back. Because of me being here…

"… I'm going to bed. Night." I don't feel like dealing with these two. They know nothing, and they were never there when I needed them. Always doing whatever they pleased without any explanation.

"Takeru, you should eat something. It'll be bad for your health if you don't." Thanks Mom, but no thanks.

"I don't feel like it." I feel like dying right now. Just give me some space, dammit.

"Takeru, you sound like a dead man. You have to eat something!"

"You're wrong." I'm still alive. They died. Because of me.

"What do you mean? If you don't eat, you won't have energy to-"

"Just leave me alone."

"Takeru! Wipe that look from your face! You're having dinner and that's final!" She grabs my faces and drills her gaze into me.

She was trying to hold it together, but the darkness of worry in her eyes snapped me out of my inner misery. I'm not the only one hurting, after all.

"Sigh… Fine. I'll go take a shower. Sorry." I really can't get mad at them. They're just worried about me. They're… all I have right now, until the causality comes for them too.

The sudden realization froze my heart. They… were dead over there, weren't they?

"That's better. Don't be so down, I know it's going to be hard, but you can't let your sadness ruin your health." She smiles and gives me a gentle push towards the bathroom.

I got in there, went into the shower, and opened the water. I just stood there, letting the water flow over me for minutes. Hidden under the warm water, my tears run amok. I lean on the wall, coiling my fists and letting the sounds of the shower drown my pained screams.

According to Sensei I shouldn't be a conductor anymore, so she was either mistaken or something is wrong here. But she said I would end up in a world that was affected by Sumika's wishes as she died… I don't see this as that world.

That world's Yuuko-sensei lied to me. Either that or this is something so messed up even she didn't see it coming.

But that… doesn't absolve me from the guilt. I could have acted before this got to this point. And I didn't.

Sumika, Meiya, Kei, Chizuru, Mikoto, Tama, Marimo-chan, everyone from the Valkyries, and all the innocents I involved in this… Forgive me for failing again.

I'll do better next time… I swear… so please…

Give me another chance… to truly fix this mess.

Please, tell me there's a solution to this madness. Please Sensei… Tell me you didn't lie. Tell me you have an answer.

Back to the Battlefield

Chapter 5: Back to the Battlefield

---

August 28th. Around 10 PM.

(Takeru's room.)

[Takeru]

---

I'd be lying if I said I was alright. I'm amazed at how calm I was during dinner, honestly.

The news were in an uproar, since the Mayor and many important politicians died during the explosion. Of course, Meiya's death was another topic of discussion for the vultures of the media. Mom and Dad didn't say much, but it's clear they're devastated by these events.

These two years they've been supporting me with college. They gave me freedom, trust and encouraged me to follow the career I wanted to take. Even if they aren't always around, they always took care of me. Sure, they may not be the best parents but…

Knowing the causality might take them too was enough to make me lose my appetite.

Is it alright for someone like me to just enjoy a peaceful dinner? I can have at least that little, right?

Thinking that it might have been the last dinner we ever share again makes me wanna puke. I didn't realize how much I had missed them in the BETA world. And now that I've recovered my memories it only hurts more to know that they could die any minute now. We might not have the best parents-son relationship but…

Dad is just like I used to be. Arrogant, kind of jerk and prone to use violence. But he always seems to know when I need a kick in the butt, even if he isn't the most tactful parent alive. He's always making lame jokes, just like me.

Mom is more nosy than me, she's always nagging me about something. But she always works as hard as she can. Always making breakfast for us, always making dinner alone even when she comes back as late as Dad.

Death is always lurking, waiting for its time. But now it's not waiting, it's inching closer with every passing second. Like a dark cloud that slowly, but surely, covers the moonlight, my parent's death is getting closer.

I feel that my nightmares will return with full force tonight, taking away from me the safety of sleep. As I change into my pajamas and turn off the lights, I feel a pair of cold hands on my shoulders.

What caused this shiver I just felt? Was this darkness always here, by my side, without me noticing it?

The night has come, and I know what awaits beyond the dusk. Despite my struggles and tears, sleep took me to the wasteland within myself. No amount of wailing could stop the atrocities from repeating themselves before me.

The memories flowing back, one by one. Slowly, cruelly, softly drilling my sanity away. People that wanted to protect their home, their families, their freedom, or just their own future. All of them, without difference, killed by the BETA or by the G-Bombs.

Their hands stretch out towards me, begging for my help. I move away, but I can't seem to be able to shake them off, just like a shadow they follow me everywhere.

Running and running, in the middle of this wasteland, I can't lose all those cold hands that reach out for my shoulders.

No, leave me alone! I can't save you, I'm no hero!

"Coward."

"Huh?… Kasumi?" Floating above the madness, Kasumi got closer to me. Scowling as if smelling a corpse, she gave me a side glance.

"You abandoned them. You forgot about us. Traitor."

"T-That's not true! I didn't want to forget. You all mean the world to me!"

"Then, why did you let us die, Takeru?"

"Meiya? And everyone?" All my squadmates were before me now, but all deformed and wounded. Shards of steel encrusted into their limbs, deep cuts on their faces.

"Because of your weakness, I was eaten alive." Marimo-chan, I never wanted to-

"Because you fucked up Operation 21st, we all had to die." The Valkyries said, biting their lips so hard a stream of blood came out from them.

"I wasn't… I don't know why that happened! It wasn't my fault!"

"Because of you, we had to sacrifice ourselves." The girls say, peeling off the burnt skin off their elbows.

"I didn't… I tried… I-I just couldn't…"

" And do not forget, Takeru." Meiya scowled at me too. "Because of your hesitation, I died. You killed me. You killed all of us, Takeru."

"That's wrong! The XG wasn't working! I… I never wanted to kill you!"

"But didn't you cause their deaths all over again, Shirogane?"

"Sensei?" Kicking the wailing corpses, that world's Sensei skipped towards me with a smile.

" Yeah, you knew what could happen and did nothing. You ruined your world all over again."

"B-But I shouldn't be a Conductor anymore! You said… You said…"

"Didn't I tell you this before? You're like the BETA, a harbinger of death for millions. You are our doom, Shirogane."

"That's… It's a lie. This should have ended already! This isn't my fault!"

"So… you want to run? You can't do that, Takeru-chan."

"Sumika? What…" She was… deformed. Like when I saw her at the basketball court that day.

"How can you be so cruel, to want to forget again? You can't do that, Takeru-chan. It's all your fault…"

Then, the ground under me began to crack. As a fissure opened up, I tried to move away. But everyone surrounded me, and extending their hands they pushed me towards the hole.

Their faces were brimming with hatred, showing no remorse at all in their widening smirk. As I fell and the coldness covered me, I found myself inside a hive. And there, once more, I was made a spectator to everyone's deaths.

Unable to move, I can feel the scar that lies within my heart aching with regret, hatred, powerlessness, sorrow, and guilt. For I've lost my peace once, only to then lose my loved one, to keep fighting beyond death, only to then fail once more. After our battle, when everything was supposed to be over… Ruin followed me, and yet again took my peace and close ones away from me.

And it all comes together in one gargantuan, horrible nightmare. Where all is twisted into an abominable carnage. A wasteland within the hive made out of corpses and debris, yelling non stop, as the monsters devour them, as the explosions dismember them, as I stand there, unable to do anything.

Their faces, stained with blood and tears, their voices broken and pained, scream to me. Making me drown in fear, sinking beyond the sea of death in this wasteland.

They're all… gone… I'll never… see them again.

It's all my fault…

I shouldn't… have returned…

…

So… So then…

"I have to get out of here! I gotta reset this world again!"

I don't want more innocent blood on my hands! Even if I was out of time and options in the other world, I can't let this stand. I have to do something for my world! I can't let them disappear so easily!

I have to stand my ground, to protect our world. Until I find an answer… Until you find an answer, Yuuko.

Letting out a roar, I try to struggle against the current, I try to reach out to them. Time and again, time and again, and the more I try, the more scattered pieces of my lives I see.

Losing my squadmates.

Following a dead plan.

Killing the wrong guy.

Breaking the fuck down.

Getting the shards back up.

Letting the venom flow in.

Watching my base get blown out.

I'm teared apart. Devoured by Soldiers and Tanks. Erased by a G-Bomb. Someone shoots me in the head. All at once. And all the while, the corpses of my squadmates piled up and up. Until the last one showed up, the 00 Unit.

Something prevented me from getting closer to them, as if I were restrained to a pillar. Or as if I was the pillar itself. Struggling again, as the evening call anchored me to the wasteland, a lunar fragrance surrounding me as the skies turned violet and the soil crimson, something… or someone came into my sight again.

"Sumika-san is dead. Your fight is already over." Again standing above everything, Kasumi's specter remained with the cold, almost sick scowl at me.

"Not yet… This won't be the end."

I don't care how impossible it seems… I can't just give up now, after all we've gone through. No matter how long it takes, there has to be a different solution!

The specter smiled and clicked its fingers. I then found myself standing in front of it, with all colors turning bright all of a sudden, my ears ringing as if I had taken a deep dive into the sea.

"Then, what will you do to mend your mistakes?"

"I… I'm not a sure, I don't know why this happened. But I have to… No, I will save my world from whatever this is!"

"So, you choose to forget about your squadmates?"

"T-There's nothing I can-"

"Do you not love them, then? Liar."

"It's impossible. Even if I fix this world… The squad, the Instructor, the Valkyries…"

"I see, you're giving up. Coward."

"Shut up! You're… You're not Kasumi! She didn't die!" Then, the specter smiled once more.

"But you left me all alone. You abandoned me."

"That's… not true, I had no choice but to return."

"You still ran away. After you failed to protect everyone, too."

"I didn't… That was not a victory for me. But I could do nothing about it, and now… It's too late for regrets. But that doesn't mean… I'll let this shit go on. Yes, I screwed up and got the Instructor killed. I ran away and ruined my world once before. I caused Sumika to become unstable and ruined the mission. That costed the Valkyries' lives, with the explosion of the XG and the defense of the base. I couldn't save anyone on the Kashgar Raid. But this time… I don't know what is going on, but I'll put an end to it! There has to be a way to fix this mess, regardless of whether I'm still a Conductor or not."

"Then, struggle and prove you're not lying."

In the blink of an eye, I found myself inside a cockpit. Where is this? Looking around, I'm back at the wasteland. The deformed monsters surround and approach me, what remained of my squadmates was by my TSF's feet. Fight, you say? If that's all it takes… then I'll gladly take this role once more!

Raising a blade towards the towering monstrosities of steel, flesh and rock, I boosted at them. It wasn't until I did that I realized an unearthly light was shining all around the wasteland, now made out of my squadmates faces. Again smirking with madness, fused with the rest of the carnage, the specters cackled at me. And, under the vigilance of the specter that resembled Kasumi, I began to fight.

…

"Haa… Haa… Sigh…" Blinking a few times, I gulp and sit down on my bed.

I'm completely drenched in cold sweat, shivering and crying. Clawing at my chest as if my heart was about to explode, I gasp for air. As I slowly look around, I see it's still dark outside. 5:26 AM?

I can't possibly go back to sleep. I don't want to. I don't want to see that again.

Getting out of bed, I end up looking at the trophy we won with Mikoto. The sound of the electric discharge comes back.

For a split second I thought my hands were tainted with blood, but turning the lights on I could see that it was just a shadow. Gazing outside the window I'm met with ruins. How many times did we talk right here, Sumika? We never thought things could get so out of control back then. How many times did you come to wake me up, Meiya? Heh, you were literally one door away from me. Just at arms reach.

Tears again slowly flow down my face. I grab a tissue to clean them, I can't break down. I can't turn their memories into poison, no matter how much it hurts me. Yeah, I couldn't save them. But I am just one, there is… no point in lamenting that. This is my cross to bear, but I can't… I won't let the bad erase the good.

We did what we had to, even if I can't see that as a victory. It was better than letting Alt. V happen. If I could pull the trigger then… I should be able to brave through this shitstorm. I have to fight back.

I took a shower, and after that I ate a light breakfast.

The more I stay here, the more I feel like I'll go insane. I need to get over there now and start fixing this yesterday.

Ok, deep breaths. Let's think this through, focus on what you can do, man. I need both Yuuko-sensei's help, the one here to get back to the BETA world and the one there to fix whatever is going on here.

The first one might think I'm mad, and she might be right considering my current emotional state. She also might not be able to help me. I remember she had received some papers with vital info to complete the little machine she used to send me back. This time we don't have those, so if she didn't figure things out in these two years there's nothing I could do, short of killing myself and hoping to loop back once more.

The second one probably won't care about my plea if I don't give her something good in return. She might not even be willing to talk to me now that she has completed Alternative IV, so I have to take something that can help her.

I inhale sharply and hit the table hard. I'm going back there, Conductor or not. Because… if stuff is coming here, then stuff should be able to go there too. So I should be able to teleport myself to that world. Sensei better have an explanation ready for me, because if it turns out this is her fault…

Then, what? She did say people would forget about me. I can't just walk up to her and demand her help for a wrong she doesn't remember to have committed.

I should do some research online about weapons, science and stuff, maybe something will pique her interest. Otherwise I'll just have to convince her of my piloting skills and hope she's willing to accept my services as a form of payment, so to speak.

I'll try to go meet with this world's Sensei when school opens again. In the mean time I think I'll go jogging, I need to clear my head.

If I don't make it to the other world I might as well join the military to do something about the impending doom that will befall Japan. Right now, until whatever day it is that I can leave this place, I'll train the skills I need while polishing my weaknesses. I might go to a shooting range to improve my sniping after I do my research for useful intel.

---

August 30th. 3 PM.

(Cyber Cafe.)

---

In the end Sensei agreed to meet with me on a later day. It seems she has a lot on her plate, so forcing her to hear me out right on the spot would have been a bad call. As much as I'd like to do things fast, haste makes waste.

Not like any kind of positive thinking will stop the nightmares I have at night.

I've been reading some books on engineering and space discoveries but I frankly don't think this will help, since they have better technology on the other world. I wonder what can I… Huh?

As I was looking through an online encyclopedia about weapons and military tech, I found an article with a name that caught my attention. F-22A Raptor.

You're telling me we have TSFs here now?! When and how did this happen?! Wait, what? A jet fighter?

It has the same unfair stealth capabilities of the other Raptor, that's for sure. I wonder if there are any other TSFs that are actually jets here.

And as it turns out most of them are, in fact, fighter jets here. Will any of this be of use? I mean, I can try to dig up intel on how stealth works from here and some enthusiast forums…

Let's check the weaponry too. Maybe I could check the jets of nations that got wiped out before they could make the TSFs version on the other side? Now, let's see what else I can find here. May God bless the internet, this is without a doubt the most important invention in human history. After Sensei's teleporter, of course.

…

… Sigh.

Printing all of this was truly madness. If I hadn't shown the money beforehand I think the owner would have kicked me out of the place. Carrying this many papers is kinda unpractical, I should have brought a bigger bag.

As I was getting closer to my house I spotted a car parked on the door. Who could have come to visit? Did something… happen to my parents while I was…

I start running towards home, and as I get closer I could tell the car was an expensive one. Who could have come in this thing?

Entering the house, an unexpected guest was waiting for me sitting by the table.

"Good afternoon, Shirogane-sama" Standing up, she gives me a bow.

"Maya-san? What are you doing here? Where are my parents?!"

"Hm? I asked them to wait in a hotel until I finished my business with you. Is something the matter? You look pale."

Siiigh… They're alright, they're fine. Calming down a bit, I leave the stack of papers on the table as I sit down.

"So Maya-san, what do you need from me?" With Meiya being dead I cannot fathom what she might want from me.

"I've come under orders of Raiden-sama to deliver a certain item to you."

"A certain item?"

"Surely you already know… of Meiya-sama's death, do you?" I nod while grimacing. "I cannot express the feelings of Raiden-sama through words. He felt truly remorseful after the whole scandal, for allowing some tradition to endanger his granddaughter's life. It also filled him with sorrow seeing Meiya-sama's day to day life since then. However, after your talk the other day, Meiya-sama recovered her smile. She was most positively joyful. Raiden-sama thought that she could finally make up for all the time you two had spent away from each other. To have her die shortly after this, the shock he received has made his health take a turn for the worse."

So Meiya was happy during her last days? It's not much of a consolation, but at least… if she was smiling to the very end…

"That is why he ordered me to give you this. He believes that instead of staying in a wall in an office, it would be more fitting for it to be in your possession. And I think so too, myself." She takes a big wooden box from under the table and gives it to me.

This is pretty heavy. What is this even? I open it and find inside of the box a long blue… Wait, is this…

"Maya-san, this is… the Minaru Kamui, isn't it?"

"Yes. Surely you understand the meaning behind this, Shirogane-sama? Meiya-sama would have most assuredly wished you to hold onto it, being the only man she loved."

You can't do this to me. Not now of all times. Don't go telling me that she loved me, don't go giving me this, like when she gave me the handguard in the other world. It's my fault she's dead… I don't deserve this.

"Is this what he truly wants? To give something so precious to a mere commoner?"

"You may be of common birth, but the bond you shared with Meiya-sama was one of the most precious things she had in her life. Raiden-sama simply wishes to honor her feelings, and to give you something to remember her. In this way she will always stand by your side." She was keeping her cool, but it's clear that talking about Meiya is hard as hell for her.

Having her by my side… I inhale deeply, gripping the sword and remembering its past owner.

"… I accept this gift. I'll treasure it all my life, I swear."

"Thanks, Shirogane-sama. Well then, I'll shall be taking my leave. Please do stay safe." With her business here finished, she stands up and gives me a bow.

As she went to the door ready to leave, an idea pops up in my mind.

"Maya-san wait, I have a favor to ask of you."

"A favor? I don't know if I can do much for you."

"Just wait a minute please." I walk up the stairs and rush into my room, opening the first drawer of my desk. Where the ring that Meiya left me was.

As I came back into the living room to a puzzled Maya-san, I showed her the ring as her eyes widened.

"I don't know if this ring has any power over you anymore, but I'd like to ask you to train me in the art of the sword Maya-san."

"Where and how did you acquire this ring?!"

"Meiya gave it to me after she left the school. I didn't want to use it unless a serious situation presented itself."

"Why didn't you use this during the incident in the school?"

"I didn't have it on me, and Meiya was already doing a lot for the city. I saw the broadcast where she announced all the donations the Mitsurugi Group was going to do, I'm sure that was more of an order from her than a decision taken by all members of the Group."

"I see. In that case… please excuse me for a moment, I'll contact Raiden-sama to see if he'd allow it." She goes to the door to make a call.

Whether I stay or go to the other world I will have to fight. I need to improve on every single thing I can. Last time, I tried to carry the squad but I didn't improve myself until I joined the Valkyries. Well, that's not gonna happen twice. I'll train myself to death if it improves my chances of surviving just a little more. And it helps to not think about all the stuff that happened. Maybe if I exhaust myself I won't have nightmares.

"Shirogane-sama, Raiden-sama has allowed me to train you. Would you tell me what it is you wish me to teach you?"

"The Mugen Kidou." She's shocked. Can't blame her. Imagine a peasant telling an exalted paladin he wants to learn how to use advanced light magic out of the blue.

"Shirogane-sama, do forgive my rudeness, but there's no way an amateur could learn such a thing."

"Then you could test me, to see how much you can teach me about it. At the very least I want to improve my skill with a blade, and I can't think of a better teacher than you."

"Improve? You have experience using a sword?" CRAP! I spoke without thinking, what do I… I know!

"Tsukuyomi-san taught me a little bit of swordplay while she lived here with me." Thanks brain, you just saved us.

"Oh, so that's what it was. Allow me to tell you that I'm not as kind as my cousin was, do you wish for me to teach you?" She said 'was', didn't she? Well, I knew Tsukuyomi-san was there during the explosion but hearing it is…

"Yes, please. Do not hold back on me."

"Alright, I'll leave you my number so that you can contact me when you decide on a schedule. Do not worry, Raiden-sama will arrange things to have me available when you wish to train." She adjusts her glasses as she writes her number on a paper and gives it to me.

"Thanks, Maya-san. I truly appreciate this." I try to bow but she stops me.

"There is no need for your gratitude. I'm simply following orders. Well then Shirogane-sama, I'll be awaiting your call. Until then." She bows and leaves.

I was totally not expecting this to happen, but I'm glad I had the guts to ask her to train me. If I get better with the sword I can pass those skills to the TSFs when I get back, or to CQC if I have to stay here.

The sword that was on the table, the Minaru Kamui. What am I gonna do with this? Well, I should take it to my room. Huh? There's a paper inside the box, what's this?

'Permission to hold weaponry'. Signed by the Prime Minister. This is like the paper Meiya had when she first came here. So I'm authorized to take the katana with me anywhere? Heh, that is hilarious. Raiden-san must be just as extreme as Meiya. I guess the apple never falls far from the tree.

Alright, let's take this to my room with all the papers and start sorting things out. I should go buy a big travel bag to take all the stuff to the other side.

The meeting with Sensei couldn't come any faster, once I get to talk to her I should give her time for some of the things I think will happen to actually occur. That will also give me time to learn under Maya-san all I can.

---

September 3rd. 0 6:31 PM.

(Sky Temple Restaurant.)

---

"And that's the whole story. I won't blame you if you think I'm mad. But it's the truth. You're the only one who I can ask for help."

"Even if you say that, you do know how crazy what you just told me sounds, right?" Yuuko-sensei's brows were arched as she had a finger on her forehead, she's obviously having a hard time believing what I just told her.

"I understand that better than anyone. That's why I just asked you to hear me out today. You don't have to believe me just yet". She furrows her brows, trying to understand what I just told her.

"When you suddenly called me here I thought you wanted someone to talk to about all these disasters. Then you suddenly started talking about the theory I haven't shown anybody, about a parallel world, about how all this causal information will leak here and send this world to ruin." She stops to drink and clears her throat. "You shouldn't know anything about that. Nobody should, since I haven't talked about it with anyone. And after you dropped this bomb on me, you say I don't have to believe you?" It feels as if she's accusing me of something.

"I never said you don't have to believe it. Just that I understand that I have no proof to make you believe me. I want you to, but I know that would be asking too much of you as of now. That's why we are going to wait." I try to speak softly to reassure her I'm not lying and to calm the ripples in my knees. The last thing I want is to upset her or lose my cool.

"Wait? For what, exactly?"

"Did you see the news today, Sensei? About the conflicts in Europe? And the rebellions in China?"

"What has that to do with this?"

"I think that those incidents are being caused by the causality leak. If I'm right, this will cause the death of millions. Starting on Kashgar, continuing to the Middle East, destroying Europe and affecting Russia and the Far East. There's also going to be an accident in Canada. Half of it is going to become a literal hell."

"You do realize you sound like a doomsayer right now, Shirogane?"

"If I'm just delusional you just have to ignore me. Nothing of what I just said would happen. But if something like this happens…"

"You want me to help you? With what exactly? I'm just a physics teacher, you know." And a genius.

"Did you bring a cat to this world to test your theory, by any chance?"

It's weird to see Yuuko-sensei with a shocked expression for more than a few seconds. This must have really surprised her.

"You're not saying that you want to use that device, right?"

"The little microwave looking thing? Yeah, I want to use it."

"It's not a microwave! This is a terribly advanced miniature of my project!" I think she also got mad when I called it a microwave the first time I saw the thing.

"Sorry, but, would you let me use it?"

"And how do you know that it will work?"

"Because we already used it once to send me back. We snuck into the U's nuclear reactor room and used it to power the thing."

"We did what?! Oho, now that's something interesting." She's smirking from ear to ear. She will always be a mischievous devil.

"But I don't think we'll be as lucky to have the thing prepared for us now. So that's why I said we should wait too. Until all the pieces get in formation."

"For someone who is trying to save two worlds from destruction you're awfully calm. Who would have thought you could be so cold, Shirogane."

"I learned in the worst way possible how my emotions can get in the way of my goals. And right now, I need to get back there. People will get hurt, even if I can't see or hear them. I'm willing to wait until you can trust my words." I say as calmly as possible, while looking at her in the eye. I won't falter this time, I cannot falter.

"You've become quite the fine man, Shirogane. Alright, I suppose I can consider it. If you are telling the truth, then I will help you in any way I can. After all, you would be the only one who could fix this crisis. But let me ask you something first."

"What is it?"

"What did you use the Causal Balance theory for in that other world? You've only told me about my parallel processing theory, but nothing on the other one. So, what kind of experiments did the other me do?"

"The what now?" I have no idea what she means by that. A second theory? Was Sensei working on another theory at the time?

"You don't know about it? That's weird. I started to work on it before you all finished school, too."

I try to remember how things went when I returned to my world for the first time. It wasn't the end of the year yet. Sensei had just finished the processing theory that allowed us to complete the 00 Unit. And when I came back everything went to hell.

After collecting my thoughts, I tell Sensei what I remembered.

"So I never started to work on it in the other worlds? Huh, so that means I'm the first to do it? Hehehe, aren't I a genius?!" She starts laughing as she takes a sip from her cup. Seems really happy for some reason.

"Sensei, what's this theory about?"

"There was a flaw in my first theory. About how information was handled by the brain. I thought that the human brain was a single, self-contained system that could only access information from other parallel worlds in the form of dreams and what we call the sixth sense."

"Oh yeah, I remember you mentioning that. Something about fortune tellers being able to receive the information from the possible futures, right?"

"Yes, exactly. However I had thought that only a machine that had the same processing power of the human brain could actually receive information reliably. One day I was just reviewing my theory when I realized something. All the human brains can become adept at receiving this information, just that it manifests in different ways."

"What does that mean, exactly?"

"The more you do something, the better you get at it. The more you think about something, the better you get at predicting what could happen the next time you do it. And sometimes, people can predict things that have yet to happen. It's not weird for a programmer to develop a fix for a system just before there's a massive problem in a company, or for a prosecutor to pursue a specific subject during a trial. We call that intuition, hunches. But in reality that's just another case of someone tapping into the information that can leak from time to time between all the worlds."

"Okay, I think I get what you're saying. But what does that have to do with the balance you named the theory after?" I'm actually not sure if I got all that right in my head, but I don't see how it could be something so important that could create a whole new theory.

"You see Shirogane, I think this theory can explain you recovering your memories despite you no longer being a conductor."

"What?! For real?!"

"Shh! Don't raise your voice!"

"S-Sorry, I just… no, please continue."

"Okay, so I realized anyone could access the leaked information so long as they were somehow connected to it. The stronger the connection, the more accurate the hunch becomes. These things we call gut feelings are in direct opposition to a logical way of thinking. There's usually no solid proof to back up a hunch, other than emotional arguments. Even if they are right, and even when they're born out of suspicion or doubt, hunches usually are hard to prove before they happen. So, what's the common denominator here, Shirogane?"

"Huh? The common? You mean the link between how a hunch is developed and how the leak happens? How should I know that?" She sighs, shakes her head, and taps her forehead with two fingers.

"And here I thought you'd get it after I dumbed down the explanation. Basically, what I'm trying to say is the stronger your feelings towards something are, the more chances you have to access the leaking. This, however, proves a problem to my theory since I thought that only a machine could do it, due to how unstable human's emotions can be. The brain is easily influenced by our emotions, so this would cause the reception of information to be unstable if the person in question was in a rough emotional state."

She takes a pause to drink some more water.

"But then, I figured something out. Marimo was always thinking negatively when she was dating someone, even when she was trying her best to make the relationship work. And there's people out there that, no matter what life throws at them, are always trying to smile and not let the sadness bring them down. That's when it hit me, different people can access different leakings. Those who are more affected by negative emotions will receive the information from the futures in which they are unhappy, and those who are affected by positive emotions would instead receive it from the futures in which they're happy."

"So basically, everything is in the way you think? If you focus on the bad things you'll attract them?"

"Yes. That's why I think stalkers or people that commit passional crimes are actually really susceptible to causal leaks, and they're always receiving information from the futures in which they end up alone. Those voices they hear, the never ending stream of negative thoughts. I believe that's nothing more than a very strong flow of information being thrown at them due to their strong emotions and focus on them."

She takes a pause and closes her eyes.

"That's why I think that the fact that you kept playing that game triggered a leak in you. You didn't want to stop fighting, you wanted to keep piloting those things you said you used, and through the game you could keep doing it, and the more you played the more those repressed memories resurfaced. Perhaps the fact that you kept talking to everyone from your class also affected you. Wanting to be with them again, just having fun and living in peace. If what happened to all of you there was as hard as you made it sound, then I'm not surprised those feelings resonated with your old memories."

"But I've been fine until now! The dreams weren't that clear, it wasn't until I saw the BETA that I clearly remembered."

"Did you had any vivid dreams while awake?"

I recall that time during the final, where I remembered my last mission with Hayase. That was totally a vivid dream, I even heard her voice clearly. Also when Mikoto got defeated and the word killed appeared on the screen I started to have flashes of my memories too. That had never happened until now.

"Your face tells me you have. That's enough for me. Your feelings made your brain focus on a specific train of thought, and since you were a conductor in the past I assume it's even easier for you to access the leaking. All it took was a trigger strong enough to bring forth a similar emotion to what you felt on the other world. After that, the link was formed and the information started to leak into you, making your memories return. And if we assume you're right, then once your memories of that other world fully returned to you through the leak there's the possibility that other information was leaked too. However that information shouldn't be 'active', to say something."

"But wait a second! Everything came back clearly to me when I saw the BETA in the game, until then it was all just blurry. How did the creators even do that? They weren't similar, they were exactly the same! I had never met them before, so how did they knew what the BETA looked like? Was it just a coincidence?"

"And that's the flaw of my theory." Folding her arms real tight, she frowns.

"What?"

"I thought that only the conductor could link to specific futures and link itself to the information. And that only through it could normal people receive information from the leaks. But as I told you before everyone can do it, the conductor only strengthens the process. The fact that you had been sent back here possibly caused some information to come with you. If the developers were constantly brainstorming for a new setting for their game, and the information of the BETA was lingering in this world, it's not so hard to think that they could access it in their dreams or as sudden inspiration. How were they? You did meet them, right?"

"Yeah, they were really passionate about it. We spent at least half an hour talking after we got out of the simulator. However they didn't knew everything. When I told them about the hives they were really surprised."

"See? They had a very strong feeling to make a new game, they probably thought of aliens and after spending enough time building up that desire they were able to connect to a part of the data. It would be impossible for regular people to access such a big amount of information by themselves, but a sliver of it? That's certainly possible, especially if they were obsessed with the idea."

Maybe that's why they changed Valgern-On's gameplay so much too. With all the new updates it's almost like a TSF simulator for the XM3. They got bits of that data and applied it to the game.

"This would also prove you're no longer a conductor, because if you were the source of the leak not only you would have to have met them to affect them, but the effects would have happened much, much earlier."

"What do you mean?"

"Take Marimo's death as an example. You said a while ago that she died because of the causality of her death coming over here, but if you were what caused the leak she would have either died shortly after you returned, meaning after October 22nd of 2001, or shortly after you recovered your memories."

"Sensei, she died literally hours after I regained them. That's proof enough."

"Yes, but when was her death decided?"

"Huh? Decided?" What is she talking about?

"You know that Marimo had broken up with the murderer, right? Well, the man in question had posted online about how he wanted to get revenge on his ex. His first post was on July 23th, the last one was on the night of August 4th. So, the leak had brought Marimo's death and solidified it during those dates."

"B-But… What about all the others? Everybody else also-"

"Shirogane, you're either a conductor since you arrive or you're not. You can't become a conductor without some serious output of energy strong enough to bend the laws of physics, so unless you jumped into an exploding nuclear reactor and lived to tell the tale you're not a conductor right now."

"Then, why is this happening?" She does have an answer to that, right? She better not be speaking in hypotheticals now. I need that answer.

"I have an idea, but I'd like to test some stuff before I can say it for sure. There's also the possibility that you're nuts." She smiles, poking one her cheeks with a finger.

"Okay, I won't ask you about it now. But what about the balance? You said the theory was called Causal Balance, right?"

"Yes. As I was saying before, the more we think and feel strongly about a certain topic, the more chances we have of triggering a leak. There's no guarantee that it actually happens, but the important part is that the stronger the feeling, the more the brain will focus on it. That's why depression, love and greed are what they are. Once you become obsessed with something it takes a great effort to make you stop thinking about it. To break the link to the data leak. However this state of mind is a dangerous one, since you can only focus on one type of future and the risk of being blinded by your emotions is really big. At that point you'll be constantly receiving information but you wouldn't be able to focus on reality. You'll become detached from the present and would live constantly affected by your visions, hunches or intuition. Which is why people that begin to grow paranoid have a high risk of becoming completely insane."

She takes a break to drink a bit before continuing.

"So I searched for a way to make it possible to balance the emotions, to have a way to choose which data is leaked to us. If my parallel processing theory was indeed correct our brains should have that ability. And they do, in fact. Shirogane, what do you think of meditation?"

"Huh? What's this about?" Her question catched me off guard. "I… think therapy and meditation are good for those times when reality hits you like a truck. But depending on how it's done…" Remembering the time when they gave me too much stimulants and hypnotic therapy and I went berserk, looking down and biting my lips. That was definitely not a nice way to balance my feelings.

"You're right. Every person has its own way to calm down. Music, jogging, painting, cooking. The idea that I was pursuing was that, after you access the leak, you immediately started to try to calm down, to reach a serene state of mind, to stop it once you accessed the data you need. Of course, if we could become conscious of this we would become gods. However, this feat is not impossible to achieve if it's a computer the one doing it, since it's easier to… regulate? Tune? Control?" Sensei makes a troubled face as she struggles to find the correct word to express herself. "Whatever, the point is that if you could be aware of your feelings but also managed to keep them in check without suppressing them you could theoretically be able to draw information from all the futures, and you could choose which information holds more worth to you, even if we would do it unconsciously. With a computer is easier since you can use certain programs and algorithms to replicate the effects meditation has on the human brain by just pushing a button and get the thing running."

"That's the balance you were talking about? A balanced system that could pull information from all futures, pinpointing which one is the better of all of them?"

"No, it isn't just that. It could also track methods and ideas from a less favorable future that would improve the currently better future. Since the brain has the ability to process multiple things at the same time it should theoretically be able to recognize patterns between multiple futures instead of being locked to choosing just one option. I also figured a way to regulate what information you leak to the other worlds, so long as the stability is not broken. You could then have a system that finds the best possible solution to a given problem from all the possible options in all the parallel worlds, and then it shares it to those worlds. Or at least that's what I think. I'm nowhere near to test this thing out."

"Wait so, did you complete the theory?"

"Yes. I talked to a lot of psychiatrists, to people that meditated to cure a certain trauma and to doctors that treated them and other emotionally unstable patients, as well as some scientists that were researching the nervous system. There's still much we don't know about the brain, so I'm surprised that I didn't take into account the effect our emotions have on our thoughts when developing my first theory. Even if a machine with the same capacity as a human could be created, it would be useless if it couldn't control which information it receives and shares through the leaks. A machine, not matter how powerful, thinks differently from us. But even if we made it think like us, without the extra boost that emotion gives to our brain it may not be enough make it truly like a human. So, to create such a machine…" Her voice trails off, she looks away losing her smile, brows and eyes narrowing.

"You would have to put a human inside of it?"

She, literally, froze up. To surprise her a second time in the same conversation, I'm on a roll today. She must have kept that info close to herself, if she's this surprised. I mean, I just did explain to her that I knew what the theory was about, maybe she didn't think we'll go through with it.

"Did… Did it work?" She asks, with clear expectation.

"Yes. I don't know the specifics, but the… digitalization of the brain, was it? It worked. The subject had to be tuned before it showed emotions once more, but after that it became the same as a human."

A smirk spreads in Sensei's face like wildfire as she chuckles, a hand on her chin as she nods a few times.

"I see. I am a genius, after all. Well, let's leave it at that for today. Shirogane, just in case, let me remind you that you're no longer a conductor, so stop blaming yourself for this. I'll start doing some preparations, just in case. I'll call you if any of your predictions become true. Also it seems I'll do you good to read some of the stuff the doctors told me during my investigation, I'll swing by your house later to give you some papers so be sure to answer the door."

"Okay, do you have a plan on how to send me back?"

"You told me awhile ago. We're going to use the reactor." She has got to be kidding.

"But how do you know it's going to be working? I remember you saying that we were lucky it was active the first time."

"Yes, and that's because I know when it's going to be active. The engineering classes should be doing some hands on studying on how reactors work, so we'll just use that." She says it so nonchalantly, we're talking about sneaking into the U and using a nuclear reactor here.

"You're going to get sent to jail, you know?"

"Not if we use the opportunity to our advantage." She says with her usual devilish smile.

"Huh? What do you mean?"

"No spoilers! You get ready for the time when we have to send you back. You said you took my theory with you once, right? So, if there's anything you want to take to the other world, go and get it now. If anything happens I'll call you to inform you of my plan."

"Alright. Thanks Sensei, for hearing me out so earnestly."

"Oh, please. There's no way I'd sit idly by when I can do something to revert this mess. If you're telling the truth, then you have the power to mend this disaster. I'm only doing my part to save Marimo, my students and my city. That's all."

"Yeah, I know. One last thing, could you prepare your theories for me to take them there?"

"The theories? Why?"

"Well, I might end up needing the first one to prove to the other you that I'm telling the truth about coming from another world. And the second sounds like it could help me to finally be free of the random leaks, if I find a way to become a stable being again."

"I see. Okay, I'll see what I can do. But I'll give them to you moments before I start the device, and if it doesn't work I'll have them back."

"Of course, sounds good to me."

"Well then, later. Don't beat yourself up too much, okay?" I give her a nod and with a smile she gets up and leaves. I slowly finish my order.

I guess Sensei will always be like that. She'll never cease to amaze me. To use the reactor again, what is she even thinking?

Thank God this went well, I don't know what I would have done if she refused to help me.

During the last days I finished writing my memories of the other world, to remember clearly all that happened. Thanks to that I could prepare a short version of what happened to me for Sensei.

Today, the day she agreed to meet with me, was also they day everything started going to hell in this world.

A rebellion in China filled the news. A terrorist group threatened with blowing up Kashgar as a sign to the government. I don't really know a thing about the politics of China, but the fact that Kashgar was the place where they'd start was a bad omen for me.

The next thing that was on the news was that some extremists from the Middle East attacked the frontiers of Europe, and there were attacks in many cities in Turkey. I recalled that after Kashgar, the BETA moved towards Europe instead of going east.

But the worst part was the announcement of a new type of nuclear reactor developed in a joint project by the US and Canada. I am sure this is going to be the equivalent of the nuking of the second hive in Athabasca.

When I saw the news I felt my blood turn to ice. Luckily Sensei agreed to help me, even if she may not believe me yet. I always end up depending on her, no matter what world I'm in.

I now know that the leak is definitely happening, and at a fast pace. Whether my memories triggered it or not was not important anymore, what matters now is that I have to go to the only place where I can fix this.

Here, I'm just a college student. And even if I joined the army and my skills with a TSF somehow transferred to a fighter jet, I doubt I'd be able to change much here.

That's why I'm going back to the BETA world, where I already know how much I can help, how valuable I can be. I can still fight and I can take stuff with me to use as bargaining tools too.

Alright! Let's go make my preparations!

After paying, I went shopping. I got another Santa Rabbit to take with me, to not forget the burdens I carry, to not falter when I eventually stumble.

I also went looking for some boots and military clothes to use there and I found some nice stuff on an enthusiast shop. The guy immediately noticed I had some military knowledge by the questions I made and my posture, so he recommended me his best goods.

They were really expensive, but this will make me look like an actual soldier when I get there since my old Hakuryo uniform will surely make them suspicious of me, and I also don't fit in it anymore. According to Sensei, after I left that world everyone should have forgotten about me, so it's back to square one. I doubt my service as a pilot will be enough to convince Sensei to help me this time.

Thinking on that, I went again to the library and an internet cafe to gather more information I thought could be useful. Engineering books, the latest breakthroughs in many scientific fields or info on the current state of the military weapons we have.

What else could I bring there? Food? Medicine?

"But I want it! Please Mom!"

A child's shout catches my attention. He was trying to get his mother to buy him a Play Stallion 2. The mother wanted to get him a Game Guy Advance.

Man, I remember when I was like that and my parents outright refused to buy me any videogames. If it weren't for Uncle Koetsu gifting me old consoles I wouldn't have known the wonder that is gaming. I had to save up on my own to get a Dreamcost so many years later, too. But, boy, was it worth it to play Valgern-On in my house. Ah, those were the days…

… Wait a sec. What if I brought a home console to the other side? I mean, they were blown away by the Game Guy and it wasn't even the Color version. I could even get Valgern-On Oratory Tango and say that it's a TFS simulator program. Then I could show it to Sensei, to make the XM3 even better then how it was last time I was there! I'M A GENIUS! This will definitely catch her interest.

I mean, I already have it on the Dreamcost even if it's the original version, but the second game truly is very similar to our TSF simulators.

How would I like to get my hands on it. Alright, let's see how much it is. I still have some leftover from the tournament's prize money.

---

September 17th. 8 PM.

(Takeru's House.)

---

The phone rang loudly. I wobbled down the stairs to pick up the receiver.

"Hello?"

"Hello, Shirogane! How's everything?" A cheerful voice sounded on the other side.

"Sensei? What happened?"

"You're not watching the news?"

"The news?" I turn the TV on and switch to a news channel. "So, what's up with the news?"

"They should start talking about it any minute now, don't be so impatient."

Talking? Did something happened related to the leak? They're just showing the usual stuff.

"And now, let's talk about the terrorist attack in China. The starting location was in the city of Kashgar, where multiple buildings were attacked by an independent terrorist group."

A map is displayed, where they show all the places that were attacked. The attack was on Kashgar. Apparently, a terrorist group that opposes the Chinese government used toxic bombs on at least half the city, while also sending guerrillas to destroy important buildings and roads. So, it has begun.

"Shirogane, looks like you weren't delusional after all."

"Heh, it would have been better if I were. So, what now?"

"I'll have you help me in the practices of an engineering class." Huh? She wants my help for a class? "A professor I know asked me to help him with his class, I was going to refuse obviously. But then you came to me with all these revelations, so I thought I'd use that favor to our advantage."

"And how am I helping?"

"You'll be my assistant. He wants to show his students something that isn't the usual operations, to prepare them in case something goes wrong. So we're going to use the reactor to power my machine and send you back to the other world. I'm sure everybody will be really thrilled with this exercise!"

"So I'll go for support, but actually that's an excuse for me to be there without raising suspicion."

"Exactly. We just need an excuse to get you in there. We'll do this on October 1st at 4 PM, be ready by then." And she hangs up.

Yes! Finally, the most important thing has fallen into place! With this I'll be able to go back and fix this causal leaking.

Though I wonder how will the other Yuuko-sensei react to me. I mean, it may be more of a bother to her now that she doesn't need me to tune the 00 Unit. I just have to hope she agrees. And anyways, our agreement was that each of us had to benefit from the collaboration. This is definitely not what I'd call a satisfactory result, so I have a right to ask her what went wrong last time.

Enough moping around, let's prepare everything I need! I don't want to end up forgetting something just because I didn't take my time to prepare properly.

This time I'll fix everything, no more accidents, no more sacrifices.

For my sake.

For our sake.

---

September 30th. 5 PM.

(Dojo.)

---

"Hiya!" I dodge to the left, rising my blade upwards.

"Sei!" Maya-san parred my strike, quickly pressuring me with more agile slashes.

I put force into my feet as I stand deflecting her attacks, then take one swift step forward when an opening presented itself.

She still blocks it, but now I'm the one pressuring through multiple attacks.

Then, she takes a step back and in one fluid motion delivers a rising slash to my hand, knocking my wooden sword away.

I'm still not good enough. Not like I was going to become a master in less than a month. I sigh, raising my hands in defeat.

"Will this be all for today, Shirogane-sama?"

"Yes, Maya-sensei!" She sighs as she adjust her glasses.

"Shirogane-sama, I've told you many times that you do not need to address me in that way. I'm following your orders here."

"You still deserve my respect and gratitude. That's all I can do to show how much this means for me."

Maya-san agreed to train with me four days a week from 10 AM to around 6 PM. We have our breaks in between but most of the time we spent it clashing our blades.

"You said that from tomorrow on you'll take a rest, did you not? Whenever you wish to continue your training all you have to do is call me. I'll arrange my schedule as soon as I'm able."

"Thanks." I told her that since I don't know if I'll be gone tomorrow.

"That said, I didn't expect you to be so adept with a sword. Mana must have taught you well, and you must have kept practicing by yourself."

"Please don't praise me so much, I'm still not good enough."

"Nonsense! You lack experience with Iaido but your form with Kendo isn't bad at all. You've improved your stance and your slashes now follow a nice pattern. While you haven't yet mastered it, you're certainly a capable Mugen Kidou user now Shirogane-sama. You are a quick learner, that's for sure."

I can't really find the words to thank her. Thanks to this training and the papers Sensei gave me I managed to stop being so depressed. I still have nightmares everyday, but there's nothing I could do about that. I also managed to get a bit better with a gun, since I rarely practiced that.

"Thanks for all you've done for me, Maya-sensei! I'll keep honing my technique by myself in the meanwhile." Maya-san looks troubled to hear me still call her sensei, but she closes her eyes and returns to her usual expression.

"I accept your thanks, Shirogane-sama. May your training be fruitful. Well then, I'll tidy up the dojo. You can leave now."

"Thanks, Maya-sensei. See you later." I give her a bow that she returns before going to pick up the sword she sent flying towards a wall.

I take my leave from the dojo she had reserved for our training sessions and headed straight home. I haven't really talked much with my parents lately, since I told them I was going to take a break from college they've kept their distance. I also don't know what will happen to this body if I go to the other world. Will it go alongside me? Or will it remain here?

Taking a shower as soon as I got back, afterwards I just relaxed while checking the news. After dinner I went straight to bed.

…

After I woke up, took a shower, and had breakfast, I went back to my room to make sure I wasn't forgetting anything.

The Stallion 2, the Game Guy, all the Game Guy cartridges, Valgern-On 2, CryRing Saga, Steel Gear Viper Eater, the engineering books, the medicine books, the stack of research info, the boots, the uniform, the Santa Rabbit, some food for when I wake up there. That's all, right? I rechecked everything in my bag before closing it. Alright, all done!

As I put away some books the trophy and the Minaru Kamui came into view. That was the last time we could all hang around together, right?

I grab the little box with the medal and the special GR card and stuff into the travel bag. I want to take something unique to this world with me, in case I can never return to it. To remember all that happened here, the good and the bad.

Now, whatever should I do with the sword? If I take it with me it might cause trouble since it also was Meiya's sword in the other world. But I also don't want to leave it here, this is my… No, our sword now. I ended up attaching Sumika's ribbon to its handle since I thought I would never use it and to have those two together at my side whenever I took the blade with me.

Whatever happens, happens! I'm taking it with me, I just have to hide it and be careful with it!

I should be on my way, can't afford to be late. After grabbing my bag, I rush towards the door without speaking with my parents. I don't know if I'll disappear or if my body will remain, but I won't risk myself to say something unnecessary.

"Takeru? You're going out already?" Mom catches me just as I'm about to leave.

"Yeah, see you later Mom."

"And where are you going with that bag?"

"I'm just… going to meet with someone."

"You're going to do something dangerous, aren't you?" How could she tell? Her face is torn between worry and anger.

"It's not anything dangerous, really."

"You're not deceiving your mother, Takeru. You've been such a mess since the earthquake. What is it you're trying to do?"

"I'm just trying to help someone, that's all there is to it really."

"Sigh… I suppose I won't be able to change your mind. Just be careful and come back home safe, yes?"

"Yes. I'll… be back." If I'm back it's because I failed.

"Takeru." Mom comes closer and hugs me. "I don't know what it is you're going to do, but please cheer up. Don't force yourself to do things out of a false sense of responsibility. Nothing of what happened was your fault. Whatever path you choose to walk from now on, know that me and your father will always support you."

"I'm not so sure if Dad agrees with you."

"Your father is merely worried about you, he just doesn't know how to express it. We were overjoyed to see you do so well in college that when all of this happened we didn't knew what to tell you. You never really gave us much trouble, outside of your pranks. It's the first time we see you depressed about something, I think he… is frustrated about never talking to you about more serious things when he had the time."

"It's not like I don't know how much you cared for me, just…" It feels like it's been so long since I've talked with both of you. And at the same time my memories of these years with both of you helping me study and prepare my entrance exams, all you did so that I could just focus on my studies, all of that is still fresh in me.

"Just be careful, and be back before it gets dark. Next year you can continue your studies or start another path, the world isn't over Takeru."

"Yes, I'll be going now."

I tightened the hug a bit before breaking it, going out towards the street. A swirl of clouds was on the sky, the days are getting less warm already. As if in synchrony with my heart, that was also slowly freezing over.

I might never see my parents ever again. Those two idiots were always so annoying, we never talked much to begin with. And yet, I always knew they were there ready to scold me and try to set me in the right path.

Dad was a serious pain when I was little, he was constantly saying how important studying was. Mom never let me play any videogames before I finished my homework and was super strict with what shows I watched on TV. All of this is going to disappear. I take one last look at my house, I can't help but see the extra room that connected to the mansion Meiya had built when she moved here.

Mom, Dad, thanks for everything. I'll make sure to make a world that's unaffected by this crisis.

Even if I'm just chasing a gentle lie, I want to believe that someday we'll be able to live together in peace. Perhaps someday I'll be able to cry remembering you, perhaps then I'll truly know how much you meant for me. But until I get rid of this cold shadow in my heart, all I can do is keep struggling to find the world where we are not forced to choose between death and war.

Goodbye, my home. May I return to you someday.

It took me less time than usual to make it to college today, I made my way to the room Sensei had told me to go.

"Oh, Shirogane. You're early? What a surprise!" Yuuko-sensei greets me as I entered the room.

"Hello, Sensei. Is everything ready?"

"Yes, let me start explaining what we are going to do."

The plan was to 'teach' the students what to do in case the reactor went haywire. For that reason Sensei was going to safely push the reactor's energy output to power a device, while the other teacher was going to explain what should be done in such a situation and what the readings meant, when they should know to do what and a lot of other technicalities.

The thing is, we are just taking advantage of this to power the little microwave to full power without doing anything illegal. This way we can get all the power we need to send me to the other world, I just hope my link to it is still strong enough. Otherwise…

No! No dark thoughts! I'm making it there, and I'm getting Sensei to help me fix whatever went wrong when I came to this world.

I'm just going to stand there, push some buttons, pull some levers and open some images in a PC. Just an assistant, that's what I was supposed to be.

"Sensei, did you bring the theories?"

"Yes, right here. Put them wherever you want, but if this little experiment doesn't work-"

"I'll give them back, I know."

"So long as we are clear on that. Now, there's something I wanted to tell you before we start."

"What is it?"

"My hypothesis of why this is happening. You see Shirogane, from what you've told me this world was affected by the other worlds many times, right?"

"Yes, I came here many times until I could get the theory."

"I wasn't referring just to that, though. Even if you were unaware of it you, as a conductor, were constantly sending information from this world to that one, whether it was a memory or a habit. And this world probably tried to compensate for the loss of its Shirogane and all the data it had lost. And let's not forget about all the possible loops you had to take. Who knows how many times the exchange was forced to happen, with the you in that world forcing data here over there."

"But shouldn't that have fixed itself once I stopped being a conductor?" That's what she said would happen when I came back after the Instructor's death.

"Yes, it did. That's why you lived the last two years in peace. But those effects always have a ripple. In this case, I believe our worlds are now too close, and this makes it easy for the information to slip between the worlds, so to say."

"So you're saying that all this would still have happened even if I didn't recover my memories?" Then, is it even something that can be fixed?

"I'd say that it's thanks to your memories that we got so lucky, actually." She scratches her head, closing one of her eyes.

"What do you mean?"

"You were a conductor in the past, so it is possible that you've developed an affinity for sensing causal information. So, since there was a receptor in this world with a strong connection to certain data, it took priority over the rest of the data that was being brought over. Since your repressed memories were exerting pressure to become clear once again thanks to the similar feelings you have, they arrived first so to speak. But since assimilating such kind of information is not an easy thing to do for the brain, even less when they're traumatic memories, it took a long time for them to completely flow into you. Your memories were like a safety net that was stopping most of the other heavy information, like all the deaths and what not."

"Is that why everything is going to hell since I recovered my memories?"

"I assume so." If she's so sure about this then I have not much reason to doubt her.

"But why would my memories be more important? Wouldn't the deaths of millions be way more heavy?"

"I think that's because you've… transformed into a different kind of anomaly."

"W-What do you mean?" Anomaly? You better not be trying to scare me.

"Let's see… I'll call it Causality Nucleus. If the conductor is the one that makes information flow into others, then the nucleus is the one that pulls said information towards him."

"Sensei, I thought the conductor made the data flow through him. Doesn't the conductor pull the information towards him from the other worlds?" She's really confusing me right now.

"Yes, you're right. But you said it yourself, the conductor brings information. To himself, to the world or to those around him. The conductor is the pipeline that allows the exchange of data between worlds at a much higher rate than normal. The nucleus instead pulls information towards him, it doesn't connect to other worlds and it doesn't affect others. The nucleus is basically a causality magnet, if there is a connection between two worlds the nucleus will either draw whatever information it has a connection with to himself or be drawn itself towards the leak. This is why your memories sort of delayed the effects of the leak, since they had priority in the transfer. Obviously, other data was leaked along your memories like the BETAs that appeared on that game or Marimo's death."

"Okay, so it's like my memories occupied a big part of the highway to this world until they reached me. And when that part freed up, a lot of data finished leaking into this world?" I hope I got that right.

"Correcto! This is why everything started happening so fast after you got your memory back. You did say that something similar happened when you returned for the first time, right?"

"Yes, Sumika's and Marimo-chan's deaths were almost immediate after interacting with me."

"So there you have it. Who knows why you turned into this. Maybe it's what happens to all physical manifestations of a causality conductor after they cease to be one?" She then furrows her brows and stares pensively at nowhere in particular.

"You said the nucleus could be drawn to the leak. What did you mean?"

"Oh? It means that, like a magnet to a metal, if there's a strong connection to it the nucleus will gravitate naturally towards the leak. To give you an example, you. Shirogane you could have lead a different life, you could have developed different feelings, and yet you resonated with the repressed memories within you. You naturally turned into someone who could remember them, someone who could have an emotional state similar to the one you had when you made those memories. That way you could fully assimilate them, otherwise the memories would just have been weird, intelligible dreams to you."

"So when I started having the vivid nightmares, I had become someone who could assimilate the memories?"

"Basically. But since you didn't have any trauma similar to what you described to me in your life here, your feelings were overloaded and that's why you felt so guilty when you got them back, I think." So that's why I was such a mess during the first days, despite being rather fine in the other world before coming back.

"Okay. One last question, when I get to the other world, will I be pulling information towards me?"

"Yes, of course. If you end up in a world in which the source of you becoming a conductor still exists, you'll naturally become a conductor once again. Then you'll be both at the same time, the one who brings and the one who receives."

"What about data about me that was there from before?"

"From before? Hmm, I guess that would be pulled towards you too. Why do you ask?"

"Because… the Takeru Shirogane of that world is dead. Could the data of his death be pulled towards me and get me killed?"

"Hmm, I think not. When someone crosses to another plane everything about the previous version of that someone is treated as if it were a different entity altogether. Now, since you're similar beings existing on the same plane you may share some memories or traumas unconsciously now that you're a nucleus, don't be shocked if you're suddenly scared of cats or you can't eat something out of nowhere."

"Wait, sudden traumas?" Why does that sound familiar?

"Yes, inexplicable traumas or fears. If both of you were alive there would be no sharing since you'd be treated as different people or you would end up overwriting his existence I think, but if the other you is dead then some of his heavier data might flow into you."

"What if that has already happened to me in the past?" I need to know if my hunch is correct on this one.

"What are you saying? The conductor cannot link itself to other versions of himself. It can replace them I guess, but since it can never receive data from the world it's currently in, there's no way for you to gain any kind of memory from other Shiroganes that existed in that same world, unless you managed to merge yourself with an alive parallel version of you. And you definitely cannot have received the data from a parallel version of yourself, you could only receive the memories of parallel worlds you yourself have lived through."

"But it happened. During my first loop, I had a breakdown when the BETA attacked for the first time even though I had no reason to fear them so much, to the point of fainting. Later, in another loop, I learned that the other me was brutally murdered by the BETA. At the time, I didn't make the connection but I definitely 'inherited' the fear of the BETA the other me had."

"But then… that would mean that you already were a nucleus by then. Or were you always one?" She starts looking at me with the burning look she has when she gets fired up about her research.

"Uuh, Sensei?"

"Is that why you became a conductor? Is that why this phenomenon was able to occur? Were you pulled towards that world due to some natural affinity to causal effects when Kagami tried to 'look' for you as the rift in space-time was teared open? And that could explain you retaining your memories since, unlike a conductor, a nucleus has a strong hold on its own causal information, as weak as its pull might be. It cannot be leaked so easily. Yes, then the resulting trauma from dying repeatedly repressed certain memories, but over time you grew resilient to it and started to carry over your information with you every time you returned, then eventually you had gained enough 'pull' to hold onto it that you could retain your physical state and part of your memory. And now that you've grown mentally, you can access a larger amount of data unconsciously. Yes, then by extension once your link to that world got weaker you were almost instantly brought back to your original world through the sharing of information, regardless of your will to stay there. Then that makes-"

Sensei got lost on her own world, speaking so fast that I couldn't understand a thing she was saying.

"Sensei? Did you figure anything out?"

"You… may have been born as a Causality Nucleus, just that there never was a leak strong enough to change you drastically until you were sent to the other world." Sensei says after returning to reality.

"How do you know I was never affected by a leak?"

"You never had dreams about events that happened in the future or about a different you before you were taken to the other world, right?"

"Well, no." Not that I remember ever having a dream about the future during my life here before all of this. I could have passed my tests without studying or defeat Mikoto in Valgern-On if I had such dreams.

"Then that's it. Don't worry, this changes nothing in our plan. It only makes it more possible for you to link yourself to that world. And it would also mean that you don't have to worry about receiving the death data while you're there."

"If you say so. How are all the preparations by the way?"

"Fine. We still need to go and set up everything, you got any other questions?"

"No, I'm good. Let's go start the preparations."

We went to the reactor room and started preparing everything. This time there were definitely more cables around the microwave.

After we connected a PC to a device and we confirmed that the readings were showing fine, we started to focus on the place where I was going to stand.

We set a small area aside, in a place blocked by some large machines. This way nobody could see me while I was transferring.

The other teacher came to greet us while we were finishing setting up everything, and lent us a hand in organizing all the cables. I let Sensei speak to him while I unassumingly played my role.

Soon, in less than half an hour, I'll be back there. I'm starting to get nervous, I feel my hands are all sweaty.

"Shirogane, here." Yuuko-sensei hands me a chocolate. "Eat it, it'll do you good."

"Thanks. So, how do you think is the set up?"

"Perfect. We should get a lot of power from this baby, so after I give you the signal go to your position and focus on the image of that world."

"Okay, I've got this."

"Don't worry too much, okay?" She smiles as she gives me a pat on the shoulder.

"Yes, thanks."

As I finished eating the chocolate, the class entered the room. These are guys that are just about to graduate. I wonder if I'll ever be able to do that.

Does becoming commissioned count? Because if it does, I 'graduated' faster than anyone here ever could. Take that one, college.

All right, it's the hour of truth. Whatever happens, happens. I make it back and get another chance to fix this, or I fail and carry this cross for the rest of my life.

After both teachers finished their explanation, as per Sensei's instruction, I start the microwave. First showing the images on the PC, which then are shown on another monitor closer to the class, the minutes pass.

Everything is similar to how it happened last time. The reactor is building up energy, the readings on the screen are rising steadily.

Soon. In just a few minutes…

"Shirogane, it's time."

"… Alright."

"Hey, Shirogane. Can I ask you something before you go?"

"What is it?" She has a serious expression on her face. I wonder what she's gonna ask.

"You've never told me what is your final objective for going back."

"I guess I haven't. I think… I want to regain my peaceful life. Not just for me, but for as many people I can. For both worlds. I know I might not be able to save everybody, and that going back will yet again bring chaos to the worlds. But I have to try to fix this world without ruining what I achieved in the other one."

"So, basically, you want to reverse the effects of causality in this world, while not affecting the other? If that's all you want, you could simply ask the other me to stabilize you once you're there. If you do that, this world will revert to before all the information got into it. But to stabilize you she'll have to sever your link to this world, so you'll be stuck there forever."

"For real?! We can do that?"

"Yes, but if you wanted to come back here without putting this world at risk you would have to sever your connection to all the parallel branches of that world. Meaning, erasing whatever made you a causality conductor in the first place from them."

That means… killing Sumika. But without her, humanity has no chance whatsoever against the BETA.

"But how could I do that? I would have to jump through every single-"

"That's what my second theory is for. I never thought the research I did because I was bored would become something so important."

"Oh right, you did say something about that. About controlling what info we leak to other worlds."

"Exactly. At the very least, the machine you called the 00 Unit should be capable of such a feat, and in the worst case you can still stabilize yourself to stop all the sharing of information. Though, that would mean you would have to stay there forever, and you would probably not be able to do any more loops."

"I see. Thanks Sensei, I'll do my best to put a definitive stop to this."

"That's the spirit! Never forget how you're feeling right now, Shirogane. It is crucial for the transfer to succeed, and for what will come after it."

"Yeah, I won't let this chance go to waste."

"No, I wasn't solely speaking of your goals just now."

"Then, what did you mean?"

"I said it before, didn't I? The transfer might take some time to finish now that there isn't a pipeline uniting both worlds, right?" Ah, that's right. She moves her bangs out of her eyes, looking at the microwave. "Even if I polished my device, it isn't magical. The transfer of your data will take time, so chances are you will not appear immediately. And that is why you must hold your wishes tightly on your heart." She looks back, sizing me up for a second. "That determination you showed just now is the key to completing the transfer successfully. Otherwise, your data might get scattered."

"So… I'd disappear if that happens?"

"… Yes, that is a possibility. This world would get reset again and your scattered memories would once more try to return to you, and this time we might not be so lucky to get two years of grace. Your desires are not only what will carry you forward when everything collapses on top of you, but what effectively makes you who you currently are. There is much I don't understand about how the Nucleus works, but you can bet this world won't like to have its Shirogane gone yet again and will surely try to hold you in. So if you don't manage to form a link, as weak as it might be, the Nucleus' pull won't be able to initiate the transfer."

"So I gotta remember why I do this, to keep my oath ever present in my heart so that the causality can take me away, right?" Briefly nodding, she smiles.

"Indeed, so long as you can rekindle those feelings you had for those who lived in that other world I believe the transfer will be a success. Otherwise, you risk being stuck in a living hell if you ever lose your memories, whichever world you stay in. I assume you're ready?"

"Yes, don't worry Sensei. I've got this." Again smiling, she nods and goes to the other professor's side to talk about the class he was giving. After a few moments, she gives me the signal. I get my bag and move to the place we had arranged.

I stand in the circle we had prepared, hidden behind all the tall machines and servers and what not. Closing my eyes, licking my lips, leaning my head back, and inhaling slowly from my nose, I began to remember all I could about that other world, about those who I held dear there, about all the hardships we faced side by side.

My first loop, failing to run ten clicks, getting bitten by a snake, the HSST incident, the old lady we saved, the Christmas party, the confessions. The following years.… And Iceberg.

The time I had my memories, the better CCSE, the coup, the Shogun, my different bonds with the squad, the Valkyries, the Instructor's death, Sumika, and our battle against the BETA.

All that they meant for me, all they've taught me, is what allows me to still be standing right now. I'll make sure to honor all of it.

No more unnecessary deaths or sacrifices, this time I'll cut the link through and through. No more leaks. No more loops. No more pointless deaths.

And I'll stay there for as long as I can! If I have to stay there forever to protect this world I will!

I had that resolve in my past loops, I'll wipe the BETA from the face of the Earth if that's what it takes to regain my- no, our peace!

This time no harm will come to any of you, here or there! I won't allow it! You all gave me so much of your lives, of your efforts, of your hopes… Now it's my time to do the same for you all, as the last survivor of our squad! This is the only thing I can do to truly carry on, to cut all my lingering regrets and honor all you've taught me, to put an end to what we started and forge the best possible future I can be part of. Not seeking only power, not leaving everything to others, not hesitating when it's time to bloody my own hands, to be a beacon for my allies just as Sensei, Marimo-chan and Meiya always were for me… I don't know what I can do or how I'll do it, but I'll sure as hell struggle with all my might to make a positive change and stop all this shit!

A light starts shining around me, I remember this feeling. It's working!

"This time, for sure, I'm saving all of you. No matter what happens to me, no matter what price I gotta pay… I'm gonna give all of your futures a smile!"

The light shines brighter than before, I feel a sensation that I haven't felt in a long while. A jolt of electricity shocks me, freezing me in place as all my senses are overloaded.

As if I were gazing at the sun, tasting the spiciest curry one could eat, hearing the loudest explosion on loop, and were buried under the coldest dry ice in the world.

No longer being able to tell whether I'm standing, sitting, or floating, unable to talk or move, I simply drift as the assault continues, all the while repeating my oath, remembering my times in the other world.

And as everything around me is warped by the light, I can't tell what's up or down anymore. At some point, the light recedes and it feels as if I were gazing at the sky right before dawn, but littered with odd shapes in different colors. Some abstract and others with clear geometrical shapes, the mixture continues to swirl in my view.

… Feeling as if I were being stretched, one of the smaller shapes seems to 'open' and begins to shine like the light of the experiment seems to do. While the others remain feeling distant in their floaty drifting, the shining one seems… edging closer, or at least trying to.

As soon as I thought about reaching out to it, as if I were tied to a car as it speeds up, I felt as if I was shot right towards that small shape, going into the swirling light that enveloped me again, as it did whenever I teleported myself.

And yet… Twisted patches of dark appear in my vision, as if someone had thrown ink on a glass full of water. Two of those odd, black stains swirl around as if they were galaxies, surrounded by… abstract lines and circles of different colors in pairs. One gets too close to the black stains and gets absorbed, the other shoots away into the distance when that happens. In between the black stains, a small whirlpool of those remnants forms, and it feels like it's getting closer.

The whirlpool gets bigger and bigger, almost covering my whole 'vision'. The two black stains slowly disappear, all the little dots of colors begin to again shoot away from within them. Like foam of a wave that hits the shore, then is pulled back into the sea. The colors do this around the whirlpool time and again, as what little sensation I retain of my body loses weight and becomes numb, as I begin to feel faint, as everything slowly begins to fade away.

As everything pulled back into the center of the whirlpool, the black stains reappeared again and also got sucked into the thing. The mess of colors became more and more bigger… or am I getting closer to it?

I feel a strong pain where I think my ears should be, my whole vision turns into a monochrome as the shapes and swirls continue to move and mix. The patterns become a rhythm, repeating over and over. Looking at them, as everything simply solidifies into a gray abstract thing, I began to slowly lose my senses.

As the waves rock in, filling the shore with the reddening foam…

As the blazes sprung out, grilling the odd branches of some shapes that remind me of cherry blossoms and their petals swirl in the air, ashes scattering about…

As the whirlpool seems to grow angrier, showering a rain of dark ink all around…

And again… And again…

… Until my consciousness slowly faded away, bathed by the contracting colors and shapes, by the exploding mess of the black ink, by the rush of the whirlpool's shaking.

---

…

Ugh… My head hurts… Where am I? Hmm… I can feel my hands and feet. I'm lying on something soft… I move my hands around, it feels cushy… Like a bed…

I open my eyes, once I adjust to the low light in the room I recognize a familiar ceiling. I'm in my room? I sit on the bed, and see that it's indeed my room. The trophy is still there on a shelf, too. Did… Did I fail?

As I try to get up, feeling my shoulders being super stiff, I notice that the travel bag I had with me was at the feet of the bed. I open it and everything I had put in there was where I left it. Even Sensei's theories. Which means…

I take a long, deep breath…

"I MADE IT BACK, BABY!" I shout as I jump out of the bed. "I did it! Now I can get started on fixing the leaks, once and for all!"

Let's see… It's dark outside. I still have the lab coat Sensei made me wear during the class. Looks like the transfer went well enough. Flickering the light on, I grab the rice balls I had prepared, sat on the bed, and ate them.

Now that my stomach is filled, let's review the plan. I go up to the base, and hopefully if Sensei is still here I can bait her with the improved theories.

If she isn't and I end up detained, I can say that I came under classified orders to deliver some really important documents, under the assumption that she was stationed there.

I wonder if anyone will react to hearing my name? I mean, even if everybody forgot about me, there may have been some records left. Sensei may just have deleted them, though.

Whatever. This was a risky gamble from the start, so at the least if I can prove my skill piloting a TSF and get accepted into the army again I can look for Sensei later. After all, I still don't know how much 'time' the transfer took.… Imagine if I appeared ten years or so later. Hopefully that isn't the case.

I change to the military clothes I had bought, grabbed the travel bag, took one last glance at the trophy, and went down the stairs.

Resisting the urge to look around, to take anything else with me, or to even gaze at my parents' room, I rush to the door.

Now that I think about it, I never stayed for long inside my house when I arrive at this world. What would happen if I never got out of it? Would I eventually go back to my world; or would the house revert to its ruined state before my eyes?

"Sadly, science will never know the answer to these questions."

I grab the doorknob, close my eyes as I sigh, feel a shiver on my head as the temptation to look back appears on me. I do so, taking one last glance at the kitchen, at the stairs, remembering those last two years and my time with the guys when we could fool around…

"… See you later." I smile, turning back to the door. Tightly grabbing the knob, I turn it around. Closing my eyes, I open the door. Feeling the breeze, I step outside.

…

The sight that receives me is the same as the one I remembered. Even the Gekishin that's collapsed in Sumika's house.

The sky starts to clear up, dawn is upon us. I never got to see the sunrise in this world from here. It looks so pretty… And also cold. I had forgotten this world was far colder due to the mess the war made. I guess the environmental damage won't be fixed in only a few years, huh.

"All right, enough screwing around! Let's get this show on the road!" I made a beeline towards Yokohama Base, rubbing my arms due to the cold. Dammit, this world is way colder than I remembered… Should have brought a sweater.

Though, I guess it means it's either winter or close to it. I guess I'll find out what day is today soon enough anyways. That being said… What do I do if Sensei isn't in the base anymore? With Alt. IV finished, maybe for many years already, she might have been transferred somewhere else. If I recall correctly, the 207th Training School was disbanded too. And considering what we did during Ouka to the American teams…

What do I do if I get sent to the detention barracks and they take my stuff? I mean… A complete stranger comes up to the base with knowledge about a secret plan, some secret documents only a few individuals should know about, and he just so happens to be a good pilot. They may end up thinking I'm a spy.

Okay, so… What do I do? I stop in my tracks, feeling a tense grip on my stomach. Think, what can I do?

Okay, how about I hide some stuff until they believe me? I could negotiate to speak with Sensei, and maybe I could bluff and 'prove' to them I was in the UN before with the knowledge I still have. I was a member of the Valkyries, so it's not like I'm lying. Alright, this is going to be a dangerous long shot, but I gotta roll that dice. That being said, I can't hide the theories here. I know the civilian area is rarely used for tests, but in the off chance that they get destroyed during one of those runs I'm toast. Where could I… Oh! I know where!

I make my way to that tree atop the hill. Moving very slowly, to make sure nobody else is here, I approach the place. The base looks as it always did. Good to see it got repaired well. Now, I know Kei used to come here every now and then, so other people also might be coming here from time to time. Let's go down the other way, no one should have a reason to go to the other side of the hill. Let's count… The fifth tree to the right after the big tree at the top… Yeah, it's far away enough. I had the theories wrapped by Sensei in a bag and placed in a small leather cover, so I can bury them without worries. After digging a bit, satisfied with the hole, I place the theories in after taking out the first pages of each of them. Though I will have to be careful in how I hand them over, I can keep this as my last ace in the hole. Assuming they don't just drug the information out of me, that is. Well, no getting depressed!

After cleaning my hands with the tissues I brought from my world along the rice balls, I go down the hill and reach the railway again. Walking along the road with the sakura trees as the base looms in the horizon, can't help but to slow down to take in the view, to deeply breathe in the air, to see for myself this actually isn't just a dream.

"I know! Let's go pay my respects to the Instructor and everyone else!" That is the best way to start this new journey.

Now, the tree with the memento should be… right about… here? Where is it? I look around, taking some steps forward, but the memento is nowhere to be found.

Did they remove it? I mean, if the base changed its CO and XO they wouldn't know about its meaning. Damn, now I can't even greet my squadmates. What a nice way to start the journey.

"Sigh… Whatever. Let's get on with this."

Alright, I can see the base from here. There it is, the radar, the giant antenna. Now that I came from home I can say that it definitely looks ridiculous atop the school. Seriously, they should have made the base a bit less like Hakuryo, you know. How did Sensei manage to convince people to build it this way?

Let's announce myself, the sooner I get this done the better. Here's hoping I don't end up in the detention barracks again, or drugged by the doctors.

As I got closer to the entrance of the base I could see that there were two MP standing guard. Wait a second… that's the leader of the volunteer crew! Didn't he die during the BETA attack?!

The ruins are the same, Marimo's memento is gone, the MP are alive… Could this mean…

I could feel my heartbeat on the base of my neck as the MP approached me, both smiling.

"Hey! What are you doing over there?"

"Been out for a walk? What a weird kid. There's nothing but rubble out there."

The same words, the same people. Did I… go back to that 22nd?

"… Wait, what's up with his clothes?" The leader says, leaning a bit closer to his comrade.

"You're right… Haven't seen this kind in our base." They stare at me suspiciously as the grip on their machineguns tightens. I better introduce myself before they point them at me.

"Excuse me. My name is Takeru Shirogane, I've come to deliver a certain object to Professor Kouzuki." I said as I slowly raised my hands behind my head.

"… What was that? You've got some business with the Professor?" The leader asked, suspicious of me.

… He didn't say that he doesn't know who I'm talking about. The tension in his face, brows and cheeks resembles the one I saw last loop when I made a ruckus to enter the base. He is on guard, not trying to poke for intel. His posture also seems… on edge, readying for a counter. So Sensei should be here in this base… Now, all that's left is seeing what year this is.

"Yes. I'm under strict orders to not divulge any kind of information to anyone, except the Professor. She shouldn't be expecting my visit, and she probably doesn't know who I am. But please inform her that… I have with me valuable information regarding her research." If my hunch is right and today is October 22nd, I should try to do this without raising any alarms. I have no idea why I'm back to the start point, but if I am… that means…

I gulp, inhaling through my nose. Heartbeats drumming on my neck as their faces return to my mind, making my knees tremble a bit. If

I'm not wrong then… everyone is alive.

"Which army are you with? Who sent you? Show us your ID, and we might believe you!" He shouts, they point their guns at me. Damn, last time as soon as I spoke about Sensei they called for her.

But this means she is here, and that he wasn't fishing for intel. If Sensei wasn't here, they would have asked me why I came to ask about someone that wasn't here. Also, they don't look like they're trying to deceive me. Those narrowed eyes and tight posture are legit aggressive, defensive. Sigh… Sensei is here, at least. One worry less.

"… That information is classified. However, I can tell you that I'm a Cadet. To avoid being traced and stop certain eyes from noticing I didn't bring my ID, I also traveled on land on civilian clothing. I changed back into this uniform just a few hours ago. I have no proof to make you believe me, without first speaking with the Professor."

They exchange some glances, whispering while covering their mouths with a hand. Looking my way again, without releasing me from the barrels' aim, the leader takes a step closer after they reached their conclusion.

"Alright, I'll go call the Professor. You stay quiet, one wrong move-"

"Don't worry, I've no intention of resisting. Please tell the Professor that I have come to help her fix the zero."

"Fix the zero? Is that what you want me to tell her?"

"Fix, tune, debug. I was told to use one of those words. I wasn't told what that meant, and that only the Professor would understand." Hopefully they buy my excuse. And it also works to see if my hunch is right.

"Alright, I'll go now. You stay quiet."

The leader goes to the guard post by the entrance and grabs the phone. I sigh, blinking a few times as I stare at the base. Is everyone… alive in there?

"Excuse me, could I ask you something?" I address the other guard, that was still pointing his gun at me.

"Quiet! We are still suspicious of you!"

"I just wanted to know what day it is, I've been walking so much I lost track of time."

"What a weird guy. Today is October 22nd, that all?" I nod, and a tense silence comes back to the air.

So I ended up coming back to this date, huh. If my hunch is right, I couldn't possibly describe how happy I am, but that leaves a question open. Why? Did Sensei use too much power during the transfer? No, we needed to use almost all of it just to start the transfer, no way in hell we had enough power to send me back in time two years. Her device should have been improved in those two years I stayed in my world, not to mention the fixes of her new theory, but would that be enough? Maybe, were my feelings what brought me here? My regret of not saving them, of wanting to do more? Whatever, this is good. Now, I have some cards I can use to make Yuuko-sensei agree to help me. And everyone is alive. This is a godsend.

"Shirogane." And he's here. Please tell me I'm not going to the prison. "The Professor has agreed to meet with you. We will have to search you for any possible weapons you may have, please do not resist."

"I won't. Oh, but you can't inspect this bag. Only the Professor is allowed to view its contents."

"Only the Professor, you say?" He throws a dubious look at me, eyes beginning to narrow.

"I guess you can inspect it, but no opening it. Unless you want the Professor to kill us both."

"Kill us?!"

"That's what I was told she would do to me if I let what's inside the bag to be seen by anyone. I don't even know what's in there." Learning to lie with a straight face is definitely the best thing I've learned from you, Sensei.

"Roger. We will inspect it with utmost care. Now, stay quiet."

They searched me for weapons, but they obviously didn't find anything. They passed some tube around the bag, moved it around slowly and put their ears close to it. Then they decided it was safe to let me inside the base.

Taking in the view of a base that was still in good shape, biting my lips to not smile, I followed their lead as a few curious gazes fell on me as we walked. Going by the turns we're taking, I guessed right as to where they were taking me. Back at the medical bay. Again with the tests, huh?

They stand by the door, making me enter first. As I do and they follow, a green haired woman with frog hairclips dressed in the usual duty suit of the UN with the medical armband on one arm looked at me, she was talking through the comms. Taking a second to finish her call while covering her mouth with a hand and lowering her tone so that I couldn't hear, she gave me salute I returned as she smiled once the call was over.

"Hello, please relax. Once we finish doing some simple tests, you'll be able to meet with the Professor." I nodded, following her outstretched hand towards a gurney.

…

Luckily for me, this time the tests were just some simple check-ups for real. They must have wanted to have a simple idea of my physical state. And, finally, I was taken to the first briefing room. The place was surrounded by MP, all armed to the teeth, all giving me a death stare. Of course they wouldn't let me talk with Sensei without security being near.

Lt. Pyatkh greets me with a bow that I return, then opens the door for me and gestures as if to invite me to go inside. As I enter, she closes the door behind me.

The room looking as it always did, like an old classroom from high school with the white paint on the wall and the wooden desks for the 'soldiers'. And there she was, her cold gaze, the lab coat. Sitting by the desk at the blackboard, resting an elbow onto it and her chin onto that hand. A piercing, unwavering glare meets my gaze as she signaled me to stop in my tracks a few meters from her.

She gazed at me, top to bottom, as if sizing me up. Simply holding my gaze in silence, two lone fingers massaged her chin. When she had enough, she straightened up, crossing her arms without letting go of my gaze.

"… Hello, I don't think we've met? You said you were Takeru Shirogane, right?"

"Yes, that is my name. It's nice to see you… again, Sensei." She raises her eyebrows in confusion. So she doesn't recognize me. Did she forget about me after I left? Or, is this truly the 22nd of October of 2001?

"Sensei? I do not remember having any students. And what do you mean by 'again'?" She was scanning my face for any possible reaction, brows lowering as did her tone. Heh, you're still the same.

"Is this place safe to talk about confidential matters?"

"Safe enough for you to give me a summary of what you have come here to do. I'll decide whether you're useful or not based on that." Yep, that dismissive tone can only be done by the one and only Yuuko-sensei. Her bored and uncaring face is the same too. So… I really am back in time, or is this the 22nd of another year? Let's see how this goes.

"Fair enough. I'm here to hand you a certain piece of intel related to Alternative IV." Her eyes twitched after hearing me. Again grasping her chin, she gazed at me for a second with a neutral expression.

"… How and where did you learn of the project?" She said in a slow, deep tone while narrowing her eyes.

These things are the biggest of all top secret matters, but her reaction isn't the one of someone in the defensive. I know that gaze, that hungry glare that resembles an avalanche, the one she did during last loop when I first arrived here. I did travel back in time. So now I gotta get her interested in my services, otherwise it's off to the detention barracks again. Or worse.

"Someone important told me a bit about it." That someone being you, Sensei. "I've come with valuable information regarding your research, and other useful tidbits of data, that will make Alternative IV come to fruition."

"Could you tell me who sent you first?"

"I think I can't say that here. It's a delicate matter. But it's someone you can trust." Because you yourself sent me here this time.

"That's awfully vague, isn't it. Alright, where did you come from? Can you tell me to which army you're affiliated?"

"I was sent here by a… Japanese organization. And currently I'm not affiliated to any army." Technically not a lie, the Hakuryo U is a Japanese organization.

"So you lied about being a Cadet. And you're from a Japanese… Did the Shogunate sent you?" She narrows her eyes at me, sending a chill down my spine.

"No." Why would she think that? Well, the Shogunate is one of the most important Japanese organizations in this world.

"Then who? If you don't tell me that I'm not sure I could trust you."

"Hmm… It's not like you'll believe me." I don't know what to say here, I'm sure this isn't the place to say I'm from another world.

"Then how about I call the MP, get you arrested, and we torture the information out of you?" She says with her playful tone and a smirk, poking her cheek with a finger. Problem is, I know she is not kidding.

"What are you going to do? Reduce me to a brain and put me in a tube?" I rebuked in a cocky tone, returning the smirk.

Her expression changed instantly. Now she had a poker face, staring into me intensely while grasping her chin.

"Perhaps I don't really want to know. Maybe getting rid of you would be better. You know too much to be just a simple errand boy."

"If that's what you want to do, fine by me." Folding my arms, I smile her way. "Good luck fitting billions of semi-conductors in the palm of your hand before next Christmas." She frowned, but immediately after her face turned bitter again as her lips twisted inwards and her eyes drove bloody murder into me, barely restrained rage in one of those coiled hands. So she is having problems with her theory. That's proof enough for me.

"… Before Christmas? What does that mean?" And she took the bait. Nice.

"I believe a certain fleet is being prepared as we speak, right?" Sensei remains silent, but I can tell she knows what I'm talking about. "It seems that you only have until next Christmas to produce results before the next phase gets started."

"Is that a threat?"

"A warning, from a friend. Whether you believe me or not, is up to you."

"And who might that friend be? Is there no way you can tell me? Surely you don't expect me to simply let you in on my research without a good reason."

"Can I write it in a paper or something?"

"You're so secretive about it, huh. Fine, here." She hands me a paper and a pen.

'You sent me here, from the year 2003, to prevent Alternative V to be enacted', I write that in the paper. It's not entirely true but it's the push I need to get Sensei to call me to her office, where I can safely tell her everything.

Her eyes twitched as she read it. Taking my chance, I look for one of the papers from the research that I did in my world about scientific discoveries to deal the finishing blow. A groan reached my ears, her shoulders growing a bit smaller and leaning back into the chair, another narrowed gaze met my own as I fiddled with my bag, but Sensei ended up raising a brow when she saw me taking out a lone paper.

"What would that be, Shirogane?"

"Proof."

She takes the small paper from my hands slowly without breaking eye contact, seeing her being so doubtful hurts a bit to be honest. I picked a page from an article that talked about Japan's role on the space race, and she begins to read it. With some images and details about the latest projects, it also mentioned the Prime Minister's speech during some launch of a satellite. Obviously, no mention of the Shogun or the BETA.

"I have more of those articles, if you want to see them."

"This is… from the world in two years?" She was apalled after reading the lone page. Trying too hard to keep her cool, but a slight quiver in the hand that grasped the paper gave her away.

"In one of many… parallel possibilities, it happens." Squinting her eyes when our gazes met, she seems to have understood the message.

Closing her eyes for a sec, taking a deep breath, she then reads the page I gave her again. A serious, emotion lacking face when she again looked at me, she stands up and begins to walk to the door, the paper I gave her still in her hand.

"I suppose we should continue this conversation in another place. Shirogane, I'll have you take some more tests. Once you're done with them, I'll send someone to take you to my personal office. You can keep your bag with you, if you so like. Is that alright?"

"Yes, that's fine."

"I see. Then let's go."

She briskly leaded the way out, gave some orders to 2nd Lt. Pyatkh, and went her way. And now, time for the rest of the tests. Hopefully this doesn't take forever. But I managed to pick her interest, and with this I'll surely get to stay here.

Step one: Complete!

Unexpected Aid

1st Arc: Gemini Road

Chapter 6: Unexpected Aid

---

October 22nd, 2001. Around 1 PM.

(Yokohama Base. Yuuko's Office.)

[Yuuko]

---

This cannot be real. If I hadn't developed my theory I'd have assumed that. However, I cannot deny the facts that lay before me.

All his tests' results were normal. He's not a cyborg, but he has an extraordinary physique even if he is full of scars. He must be around eighteen years old, going by his looks. There's no way such a young boy would know what he knows, even less someone who should be dead.

Takeru Shirogane. One of the many victims the BETA claimed when they attacked Yokohama. He should be dead, yet he's here in this base taking some tests. If what he wrote on that paper wasn't a lie, then he traveled through time from two years in the future. But that may be a lie, since he lied about being a Cadet.

However, how do I explain this paper? A report about a satellite that was sent to Mars by the Japanese government. There's no mention of the BETA whatsoever, so this isn't from this world, unless Alternative V wiped all the BETA from the Earth, the Moon and now were trying to do it on Mars. In just two years? Impossible. The images on the report also suggest that this isn't a military report either. One of many parallel possibilities, he said.

Shirogane, who on earth are you? Are you an ally or a foe?

This is way too convenient. Just when I'm being pressured to get results a mysterious boy appears saying he's going to help me.

The deal for the XG fell down, I'm stuck in my research and Japan and the UN are starting to second guess each other. Things couldn't be worse.

Then, as if it were the most normal thing in the world, this Shirogane walks up to base and declares that he has vital information to aid me in my research. Awfully convenient. He also knows about Alternative IV and V, things only a few should know. He said he was here to 'fix the zero'.

That was a nice way to say much in a vague way. He knows about the 00 Unit, about the brain, and about my problem in my research. If he is indeed a time traveler then it would make sense for him to know that, I suppose.

But the point is, is he really? Is he truly here to help me? Or is he trying to sabotage me from within?

The fax starts printing something. The results from his brain tests are here. Nothing weird with his brainwaves, all patterns are normal. There's no drug residue in his blood, and his cognitive abilities seem normal.

If he is indeed a time traveler, why did I choose to send him, a mere child, instead of a capable soldier? Why did I tell him to lie about his name; or is he truly Takeru Shirogane? No, how on Earth did he time travel in the first place? That is too ridiculous to be used as a lie, no sane spy would try to do that. However, maybe he's here to assassinate me and only needed some… privacy to also kill himself after the deed was done.

I check the gun in my drawer, it's loaded. If he thinks he can kill me now that we're alone, he's going to be surprised.

But if he is here to help… I can only imagine what kind of things he could have brought from the future. My completed research, data on the BETA, a new weapon's diagrams. I'll have to be careful to not be deceived, though.

I contact Yashiro, to make sure she is prepared.

"Yashiro, is everything ready?"

"Yes."

"If you notice a lie or anything suspicious, notify me immediately."

"Understood." Now, let's bring this Shirogane here.

"2nd Lt. Pyatkh, as soon as he gets out of the last test bring him directly to my office."

"Understood, Ma'am."

"How was him? Did he do anything out of the ordinary?"

"No, he's been very obedient. However, he moves around the base as if he already knew where he is going."

"Alright, thanks. I'll be waiting."

So he doesn't need a guide, huh. Was he told about the layout before coming here; or did another me tell him?

The following minutes I reread both the tests' results and the page he handed me to see if I could find anything that I might have missed, but there was nothing.

As I was absorbed rereading the paper of the satellite while spinning on my chair, there was a knock on the door.

"Come in." I unlock it and he comes in.

He seems to be rather annoyed. With the inner part of his brows almost coming together, ruffling his hair and letting out a long sigh he comes closer, I signal him to stop and he stands there looking at me.

"So how did the tests go, Shirogane?" I smile, which seems to make him even more annoyed, going by that frown.

"Six hours! That's two more hours than last time! What do you need so much blood for?!" He is really loud, annoyingly so. He did say 'last time'.

"So last time I didn't make you take the tests?"

"Sure you did, but they only took three syringes of blood. Today not only they took seven, but they started making all kinds of tests on me and the places where they took the blood. Also, the brainwave test is a new one."

"Huh, really? Well, that's that. Now that we're here, can you tell me the truth? Who are you?"

"I'm Takeru Shirogane. I come from a parallel world. As I said in the paper I come from the year 2003 in my original world."

"Your original world? You didn't come from the future of this world?" Already found a lie, huh. But now he says he comes from another world… Another lie, perhaps?

"Yes, but that's before I went back. See, I was sent here from my world due to some cause and when I got here you allowed me to stay as long as I helped you. After a certain mission, my link with this world grew weaker and I vanished. This was on the next New Year."

"Then you don't really have much information for me. I don't care at all about what you did in your 'original' world, assuming you're not lying." I told him bluntly and coldly, hoping to get a reaction out of him. He's a child after all, his emotions must be so hard to control.

But he did something I didn't expect him to do. He smiled at me and laughed.

"That's so you, Sensei. But I do have a lot of info that's worth gold for you."

"Really? Then, by all means, go and say it. Don't be shy!"

"I can't." He crosses his arms and returns my stare.

"Why? You think this place isn't safe?"

"No, you once told me that I shouldn't tell you of events that happen in the distant future, because we don't know what ripple effects that would have on history."

That does seem like something I would say, if someone was trying to dump on me a lot of sensitive information about future events.

"Then, I'll ask you some questions and you answer what you think is safe." He nods, now then. "Do I complete the 00 Unit in time?"

"Yes."

"Does it work as intended?"

"Yes, but actually no." Is he making fun of me?

"Explain."

"It works as it should, with the XG-70 and everything, but it has one fatal flaw." He knows about the XG, too? Just who are you? Why did I trust in a child so much?

"This fatal flaw… Can you tell me what it is? Can it be fixed?"

"I don't know if it can be fixed, but I brought some intel that may help you with that. And, when the time comes, I'll tell you about it." Another secret, huh?

"Alright. Then, why did you came back in time?"

"I don't know." He says with not a hint of hesitation. Is he a good liar or is this the truth?

"What do you mean, you don't know?"

"Remember I said my link with this world grew weaker after a certain mission? Well, after that I returned to my world. But…" His faces changes to one of anguish as he looks down, tightly wringing his hands. "Everything went wrong. Something that shouldn't have happened, happened. So, I ended up coming to the past but I was aiming to go back to the same point in time I had left in this world, to make you keep your end of the bargain."

"We had a deal or something?"

"I help you complete and protect the 00 Unit, you helped me go back to my world safely. That was the deal. The safely part was not fulfilled, so I came to request Customer Support." His speech mannerisms are really weird. Customer Support?

"What do you think I am? I'm a genius, you know! There's no way I would have made a mistake on such an important matter. And anyways, return to your world? You've been saying that you came and went from your world to this, can you explain me how? What are you supposed to be?"

"A Causality Conductor."

…

… W-What did he just say? Did I heard him right?

He said it so casually, as if it were a given. A living proof of my theory, that I've been looking for so long, just thrown out there as if I was asking him about today's weather.

"You… Are you serious? You're a causality conductor?"

"Yeah, for real." He then started explaining with his dumbed down terminology, and some odd words mixed in his speech, what the conductor was, how it worked, and the effects it has on the world.

He's serious, this is no rehearsed speech and he isn't hesitating at all. No one but me should know this information. Did my research get leaked?! No, that's… just not possible. But then, he truly is one?

"So you were trapped in multiple loops where you first came here, died and returned to square one, until one day you managed to keep your memories for some reason and used them to aid me in my research?"

"I think? I don't really understand it very well myself, to be honest. But wait, there's more!" He declares with glee, raising one finger. What else could there be?

"More? What else are you? A bio-engineered super soldier or something?"

"No, I'm also a Causality Nucleus."

"A what now?" Causality Nucleus? What is that even supposed to be?

"You figured it out after you finished a certain investigation. All proof leads me to believe that I am indeed one, or at least something similar to it."

"Wait a second, what is a Causality Nucleus? Is that something I told you?"

"The you in my world did. So, I don't know how much I should tell you, but it's basically a causal information magnet. Once we can trust each other, I'll give you the papers that explain it in detail. For now, just know that there's more to your research than what you can think about right now."

"… And you have that information with you? Let me guess, in exchange for it you want me to make a fail-proof method to return you to your world?"

"I already know what I have to do. I want your cooperation with it." He says while locking his eyes onto me, with a dead serious face.

"Seems like you had it rough. But first, you said I had until Christmas to produce results. Why is that?"

"Because that's when Alternative V is enacted, at least as far as I know. If we change history it won't happen, or it may happen even earlier."

"Can you tell me what you know of the Alternative Project?"

"Which one?"

"All you know."

He takes a breath and starts telling me about Alternative V, about the space fleet, the following years and the important mission. Operation Babylon, he called it. Not even I knew the name of the plan, this will be a nice way to check whether he's lying or not.

He then starts describing Alternative IV in great detail, even mentioning the fact that I have a group of soldiers as backup in case we need to make another 00 Unit. The role of the XG, how the 00 Unit isn't made of any carbon-based material to allow it to communicate with the BETA with its ESP capabilities, how it possesses great hacking and processing abilities as if they were normal. About the Rutherford field, the Particle Cannon, and about how important it is for it to have emotions. Then he briefly tells me of Alternative III, of how they tried to use espers to communicate with the BETA.

There's no doubt. He isn't insane, so he's telling the truth or he is a spy. Yashiro still hasn't contacted me.

"And that's about it, I think? Sorry if I left some details rather vague."

"No, that's alright. You've proved to me how much you know."

"I see." He relaxes on a bit. Let's give him a little push.

"But that doesn't mean I believe you yet, I'm just-"

"Giving me the benefit of the doubt, for the sake of conversation? I don't expect you to believe me when I have no proof, Sensei." He didn't let me finish. He doesn't even seem fazed that I was doubting him.

"So, do you have proof? Or, was that lone paper all you had?" I smile and speak in a mocking tone to get something out of him. But he smiles again.

"Hehehe, do I now?! Here's where things get nice, Sensei!"

He takes out of his bag a big stack of papers and places them in my desk. Here's the rest of the report on that satellite. What's this? Sedna? Another planet?! A new radioactive element discovered by the… JINR? A joint project between America and Russia?! Not the USSR, but Russia?! And what's this? OLED? What is this screen even?

"I have to admit, if this isn't a fabricated lie then…"

"That's just the research I did personally. I have these engineering books and some about medicine too." He puts five books on my table. What's this?

"New Paradigms of the Technology?"

"They have a lot of info for civilians that go to college about the latest discoveries in some fields. And there's a book about first aid and some new vaccines and medicinal inventions, too. I would have gotten some more bulky encyclopedia, but anything new isn't on the street available to common people. So I settled for this."

"Your spacecraft looks really old compared to ours." I'm not really surprised by what I'm reading. This isn't so useful.

I drop the books and go back to the stack of papers. Now let's see… What's this? Some forum discussion?… Wait, F-22A Raptor?!

"Shirogane, this says right here that you have F-22A Raptors in your world, is that true?"

"Yeah, with their overpowered stealth and everything!" He says it so nonchalantly, making a small fist.

We're talking about the Raptor here! How could a mere civilian get this intel? Maybe he's a soldier back there?… Or maybe he's an American spy. Let's see what I can glean about 'his world', the lies are bound to fall apart eventually.

"How is the war against the BETA in your world? From these reports, it looks as if it wasn't going as badly as it's here."

"There's no BETA in my world."

…

There's no BETA… He said it so earnestly. No doubt anywhere in him. It took a while for what he said to sink in.

"What do you mean? You already eradicated them?!"

"No, they never existed in the first place. I was super shocked the first time I came here and you told me about them, it seemed so surreal." He nods slowly with a hint of a smile in his face.

"Wait, so if there's no BETA in your world, what do they use the TSFs for?"

"We also don't have real TSFs there."

"Shirogane, you know lying about that is pointless? Here says that you have Raptors in your world. You yourself said that just now. Are you dumb?"

He picks some papers from the stack and hands them to me. There are many images of jets in it. Wait, is this…

"Instead of TSFs, you developed advanced fighter jets? Of course, without the BETA air superiority would be the key to warfare." It makes complete sense.

"I was surprised when I learned our jets shared names and characteristics with some TSF from here." Still making small nods, he continues to smile for some reason.

"You said just now that you didn't have 'real TSFs' over there. What did that mean?" All of this is truly surprising, the information he brought about the stealth technology of his world is truly something else.

Anti-radar paint? Who would have thought about it? I would have guessed it had to be something in its hardware or an active jamming signal, but paint? Also, using only infrared signals for communication to avoid detection? That's truly interesting. Blinding oneself to blind the enemy, what an interesting idea.

A spy would never come to me with so much juicy intel. He must be then telling the truth. Unless… all of this is forged.

He's taking a box out of his bag now. What is that thing? Play… Stallion? Is that how it's pronounced, perhaps?

"Whatever is that supposed to be, Shirogane?"

"This, Sensei, is what allowed you to complete your theory." He has a giant grin plastered on his face as he gives little pats to the box in question.

"What?! That weird black thing?"

"Yes, one program in this thing gave my world's you the idea."

"How so? That doesn't look like a normal computer, it can't be too powerful given its size."

"Do we have televisions in the base?"

"Yes, but I don't have one here." Televisions, and not monitors? "Can you tell me what that thing does? Why is it called Play Stallion 2? Where's number one?"

"This thing is a game console. We play games with it."

"Are you serious? This hardware is… for recreation? How expensive is it?"

"It's not as expensive as it was a few years ago. It's rather affordable, not as much as this one though." He takes a small brick-like object from the bag. Game Guy, it says.

"This looks like a Pleiades. This is also a game console thing?"

"Yeah, it's the old version of the Game Guy. Now we have a Color version and an Advanced version with a bigger screen and colors instead of just black and white. Here, push the power button." He hands me the brick, I take a moment to examine it. Since it doesn't look dangerous, I slightly tap the power button.

The screen lights up as a sound plays. This looks sharper than anything I've seen before. What the… Are those TSFs? They're shooting lasers?!

"Shirogane, you have laser weapons in your world?!"

"Of course we don't! That's just a sci-fi game, Valgern-On. It's like a TSF simulator. Here, push the start button, you play with the A and B buttons while moving with the D-Pad."

A small TSF moves in the screen, shooting at other TSFs. Why did they make a simulator for Anti-TSF combat? W-What is this thing? Why are they shooting so many bullets at me, and why am I the only one fighting them? This moves too fast, how am I even-

BOOM!

[SHIELDS DEPLETED - PLAYER 1 KILLED]

"Ah, you died. You're not very good at this." He's mocking me, isn't he?

"I can't believe America would make a game out of this kind of thing." Really, those Americans are the same even in other parallel worlds.

"Um, Sensei? This was made in Japan."

"What?!"

"Look at the back of it, it says 'Made In Japan', right?" He's right. So this is a Japanese invention? "The game was also made in Japan, by the way." What kind of country is your Japan anyways? They're disguising combat simulators as games?

"But why is it made to fight against other TSFs?"

"It's the setting of the first game. If you want to fight the BETA…" He takes out a small box from the bag. "I have this version for you. Valgern-On Oratory Tango! This version is just like the TSFs simulators you should have on the base."

There was an image on the box, it read the name of the game and there were some TSFs on the cover. Wait, is that a Takemikazuchi? What a coincidence, something that doesn't exist over there is on this image. And it just so happens to be the exclusive TSF of the Royal Guard, huh.

"You said to fight the BETA… So, do they exist in your world or not?"

"As sci-fi monsters. There's a reason for that, I'll explain it in due time." More of this. I don't like all the things he's hiding from me.

"And with a monitor to connect it to, you can show me this second simulator?"

"I don't know how good the resolution of the TVs here is, but we should at least be able to get the thing running." Again, televisions and not monitors. Hmm…

"This is… just too surreal. Is the second one made in Japan too?"

"Yeah, of course. I also have two more games here, a stealth one and an army simulator one." He takes out two more boxes from the box, one with colorful knights and the other with a soldier holding a rifle.

"Why did you even bring those things here in the first place?"

"First as proof of me being someone from another world. Last time I didn't have any, so you didn't really believe me until something I told you would happen eventually happened. The second is because I was hoping to use them to aid future Cadets. On one occasion I ended up showing my Game Guy to my squadmates here, and while it was kind of a problem I think it did have its merits as a training method when I thought about it."

"Merits? For example?"

"For example, making them think about the sacrifices in war like sending someone to a certain death to allow a company to escape. Or methods to fight without being noticed, and stealth tactics as a whole." These things sound less like games and more like military software to me. And you tell me this is sold to civilians?! "And, most importantly, it can turn anyone into an exceptional surface pilot."

"Anyone? What do you mean? Why would they make such a program if they do not have TSFs?" This is making less sense every second. It's truly interesting, that's for sure.

"When I came to this world for the first time I was just a normal person. Despite that, I had the highest aptitude not only from the members of my squad but from all Cadets that had graduated here." He sticks out his chest, arms folded as he smiles. "And that's all thanks to the first version of Valgern-On, I was really good at it. Just with that, I managed to become an above average pilot even if my fighting style is very… weird."

"And you say you learned by playing this game?"

"Yes, the controls weren't exactly the same but once I got used to them I could replicate the game's moves with any TSF."

"And the second version is any better?" He smirks at me.

"It's literally like a TSF simulator. The controls are still not exactly the same, but the principles should be even better."

"So you brought this here, hoping to use this as a bargaining tool to get me to help you?"

"Yes, but that's not all." He's saying he still has more things up his sleeve? "I want you to make a new OS for our TSFs."

"A new OS? Why would I?"

"Because we will get at least a 30% boost in mobility, lessen our casualties, and you can use it to get the XG."

"This is something you did in the past here?"

He starts explaining me about what he wants me to change, about how I used a certain something from the Alternative IV project as a test while developing the OS, and the results it gave us.

"Are you sure of this? What about changing history?" I ask, sizing him up. He nods my way without losing the smile he had been wearing for a while now.

"We won't be changing history, we will just gather data for a longer period of time. We can reveal the OS to the rest of the world when the time is right. Until then, we keep it under wraps." He seems to know his stuff, but can I really trust him?

"This is nice and all, with all the information you've given me. But you still haven't told me how you're going to help me with my research. Do you have the complete theory with you or a hint about what I'm doing wrong?"

"I have shown you a lot of info to prove who I am, so I'd like to ask you to complete the OS before that."

You have some nerve, Shirogane. Bossing me around, telling me what to do. Alternative IV is more important than some new OS. You think you can demand such things when you're hiding so much from me?

"What was that? My research is more important than-"

"What if I told you I have not one, but two theories you developed?" What did he just say? He takes out two pages from his bag. Just how many things does he have there?

"These are the first pages of both of those theories. I think this will be proof enough. Make the new OS for me and let me actively help you, and I'll give you the rest."

He sure is full of himself. Just who does he think he is, talking to me like that? He better not be a spy because-

…?

"So… What do you think? Are you willing to at least give me the benefit of the doubt?"

"… Um, Sensei?"

What is this?! White matter resonance simulation? Emotional linkage?

"… Sensei? Sensei! Earth to Yuuko-sensei!"

These refutations to my current approach… these diagrams… it's just the beginning but, surely, this is what I've been trying to reach! No, the second page goes beyond what I thought was possible.

"… Shirogane, I suppose you don't plan on handing over the rest of the theories, do you?"

"No, I'd like you to agree to the deal I proposed you." He replies, folding his arms again and giving me a serious gaze back.

As much as I'd like to get my hands on them right now, I shouldn't strain my relationship with him from the start. Yashiro hasn't sent anything, so he's telling the truth or at least he's not a threat to me. And anyways, I can get my hands on the papers once he's busy. He can't keep that bag by his side all day long.

"Alright. You have a deal. But I expect you to honor your part of it. If you are lying about this, I swear to you that no death will be worse than the fate I'll put you through."

"I wouldn't dream of it." He shrugs as he closes his bag and sits on a sofa after I signal to it. I sit too and, after letting a sigh out, I gather my thoughts on what should be done next.

"… Let's get this business started then. I can make you a 1st Lieutenant at most, and assign you under my direct command as part of the Alternative IV Research Team. Is that alright with you?"

"What?! No, can we just go with the usual route?" Did I surprise him with my proposition?

"The usual route? What did I have you do in the other worlds?"

"You made me part of the 207th Cadet Squad, to disguise me from prying eyes."

"That's nice, if I say so myself. So you want to be a Cadet, despite already having experience piloting a TSF?" I wonder why… Maybe you have an ulterior motive?

"I believe Squad 207 to be of importance to our future, if they become commissioned then our firepower will greatly improve. That's without taking into account using the Stallion to train them before the CCSE, or applying the concepts of Valgern-On onto the TSF's OS."

"… I see. However, you do know they're a complicated team, right? Their circumstances…"

"I know them well. And even then I think that's where I can help you the most now. Otherwise, I'd have to stay locked up in the lower floors all the time."

"Personally, I don't think that's a bad idea. With all the knowledge you say you have I wouldn't want anyone laying their eyes on you." I smile at him while chuckling, he just scratches his head.

But I can see what he means. Squad 207B is a very capable team, if they pass the CCSE and are trained well they might become good reinforcements for the Valkyries. If only they could get commissioned, that is. Yashiro hasn't contacted me so I suppose he isn't lying here either.

"I also would like to ask you to clean my records throughly." He adds some seconds later, leaning forward.

"Why is that? Are you doubting me?"

"All the times I've come here the Shogunate realized that something was wrong with me, since you couldn't modify their databases. It never became much of a problem but… better safe than sorry, right?"

"I see. Yes, you're right. I shouldn't underestimate the Shogunate. All right, we have a deal. I'll add you to Squad 207, I'll also give you a security pass with almost the same rank as me, but restricted access to secret documents. Is that alright with you?"

"Yes, it's what we usually did."

"Let's get started with all the paperwork then. I have a lot of questions to ask you later, and I want to see this Stallion thing running."

---

Same day. Around 8 PM.

(Barracks. Takeru's room.)

[Takeru]

---

And here should be fine, doubt anyone would go looking behind this in my closet. With this nobody will find the Minaru Kamui I brought.

I guess with this I finished ordering my room. I left most of the things I brought with Sensei so there's not much to order anyways.

I put my UN uniforms in the closet, and put my box with the medal and the GR card on the desk's drawer. Sensei asked me to keep the Stallion and the Game Guy until she arranged a room for their testing, so I'm keeping them under the bed.

I forgot about the Santa Rabbit. I should have gone to give it to Sumika after I left the office. Oh well, I'll go tomorrow.

… Man, it feels like home. I sit on the bed as I look at my room, a grin spreads through my face. I'm really lucky to have come back to the start, this way I can make sure things end up differently this time. I'm saving both worlds, hell yeah!

But Sensei seemed weird. She looked as… She looked like the day she broke down drowning herself in alcohol. I wonder if things are not going so good. Maybe I never noticed since I was so full of myself, maybe my change in attitude allowed me to see a bit of her true feelings?

Well, she said that tomorrow Marimo-chan will come pick me up before roll call to take me to the gym to make the oath. We did do all the paperwork today and she asked me about my experiences, the XM3 and my abilities with a TSF. Then we tested the Stallion and she was super shocked with it. Luckily, the resolution was good enough to appreciate the graphics. I think she was more surprised with CryRing Saga than Valgern-On. But after playing all games on the Stallion and the Game Guy for awhile, she agreed that they hold some merit for training Cadets.

I requested her to make more of these if it were possible, but in the meantime I have to hold onto both consoles. It would be pointless to try to train my squad with just one of each.

All right, what do I do now? I already ate with Sensei while she was testing the Stallion.

Maybe going for a run in the field? Yeah, it'll hammer home the feeling of being back, running there again. I also need to think on whether I want to hold back or go with everything from the start. Last time I held back, but I didn't improve much. Let's try being serious this time, and if they ask me I'll tell them that I can aid them reach my level. That way I'll be both a teacher and a rival to them.

Sensei made up a story about me being some leftover Cadet from a special unit from abroad, that was sent here in a hurry after an accident. She blocked most of my information behind an S5 security lock, which means only her, the CO and just a few others can see it.

Should I go jogging with the uniform or with my clothes? Sensei told me it was alright to remain with these clothes since she would inform people that I was her 'special protegee'.

Oh, whatever! If someone asks I'll just introduce myself and deal with it! It's not the end of the world.

Walking through these halls again makes me feel really nostalgic. The last time I was here, everything was in such bad shape. Don't worry Yokohama Base! This time no BETA will harm you!

Reaching the usual door, I go into the track field. Alright, how much do I run? Ten minutes? Fifteen? Let's go for fifteen at a moderate pace. But before that, stretching.

After that, I start jogging lightly. Man, remember when I couldn't run even two klicks? I even fell down when I did a full gear march for the first time. I surely didn't expect all that followed.

Who would I be right now if I hadn't come to this world? Would I have turned into a jerk like my Dad? I mean, I was already kind of dick back in school. I thought that coming here was a curse, at first. But maybe this was a blessing, in a way. I have to take things more seriously this time and be sure to help Sensei for real, instead of just complaining about everything.

All right! Let's speed up a bit! I'll sing along the opening of that anime I was watching during summer break, it's just perfect for jogging sessions.

"Going! Going! Towards the Light! Yo, Going! Going! Believing in it! Let's turn those hidden feelings into a source of strength! Do it!" Yep, even if it's at night this feels like going back to the old kindergarten or Pee Park. Shirogane is back baby! "Going! Going! To the future! Yo, Going! Going! To-"

"Excuse me!" Someone shouts, startling me and making me trip with myself.

I end up kissing the ground. Look Earth, you're a wonderful planet and I don't know what I would do without you, but I don't think this kind of relationship would work between us.

That hurt, dammit. Who thought that calling out to me so loudly would be a good idea?!

"I'm sorry, are you alright? I did not meant to startle you so." That voice…

I shivered for a sec on the ground. I gulped as I slowly rose up, taking a brief glance towards the voice's owner.

Meiya.

Of course, her independent training. I always forget about it. Thank God I'm lying on the floor, if I saw her without warning I might have teared up. After dusting my clothes, sighing heavily and taking a deep breath, I stand up.

"I'm alright, you just surprised me shouting out of the blue." Yep, she's Meiya. The hair, face and voice. Well, duh, of course she is here at this point in time. Sigh… Hold that giddy feeling in your neck. Don't lose your cool.

"I see. Forgive for me surprising you. Now, may I ask who you are and what are you doing here?" Her voice changed to a cold, severe tone as she gave me a side glance.

Right, an unknown face in unknown clothes is running in the track field when she came to train, of course she would be suspicious of me. I give a salute before speaking up.

"I'm Takeru Shirogane. I was assigned to this base today, and I was jogging a bit before going to bed. Who would you be?" She stands upright and returns the salute.

"I'm Cadet Meiya Mitsurugi of the 207th Cadet Squad. You said you were assigned here today? You seem to be around my age, what is your rank?"

"I'm also a Cadet, though I wasn't informed about which surface pilot training squad I'll be joining." That's a lie, Sensei told me to keep our arrangement a secret and act around the Instructor as if I didn't knew to which squad I was assigned to.

"Is that so? That means you'll join our squad, since there aren't other Cadet squads training to become pilots here right now as far as I know. Forgive me for interrupting you, Shirogane. Do you have some militar experience?"

"Why do you ask?" Why this question out of nowhere? Of all the possible questions…

"You seem to have good stamina, and your posture is… well, it doesn't look like you're a greenhorn." Oh, so that's what that was.

"Yes, I do have some experience. I was trained before coming here, but I didn't get to take a CCSE yet." Otherwise I can't explain why I'm still a Cadet.

"Oh? I thought you would have already done one, at least."

"Huh? Why would you said that?"

"Your posture, your physique. Also, you were running quite fast when I approached you. Truth be told, I was slightly surprised when I first saw your silhouette in the distance. I mistaked you for one of my squadmates at first, but then you started to run even faster."

She was surprised by my light jogging? I wasn't even trying to get speed, I was just warming up.

"By the way, may I ask you what were you saying while you were running? It seemed as if you were mixing English and Japanese…"

She gives me a side glance as she waits for my answer.

"Oh, that's… a song the guys at my old squad sang to hype themselves up."

"Hype?" Oh shit, not this again!

"It means to motivate oneself to the edge. We sang that whenever training got difficult."

"I see, so it was to raise morale. A song to unite a squad, that's a very nice idea. They must be very good people."

"Yes, they… were…"

"Did I… say something I shouldn't have?" Always so considerate, Meiya.

"No, just… Don't worry about it."

"If you say so. Shirogane, would you like to jog along with me? I was about to do some independent training."

"Sure, but I already warmed up so I'll keep jogging seriously."

"Seriously? You mean… you'll keep running as fast as when I called out to you? You will not be able to keep it up for long." She folds her arms and looks at me like my Mom when I used to tell her I didn't do my homework. What's up with her?

"I can keep that speed without problems." It was just my usual jogging speed, it's not like I'm seriously running either. I might be in good shape but I'm no marathoner.

"Oho? Don't know if you're boasting, but I'd like to see that. By the way, before we start, may I ask why is your uniform different?"

"This is just a generic uniform I was given until I got here. I haven't changed into the UN's one yet."

"A generic one? This looks to be made out of good materials, however. Even the boots are nicer than any I've seen. Ah, forgive me! I wasn't trying to pry."

"Don't worry, it's not like I didn't expect to be asked questions about it. Well, shall we start?"

She nods with a small smile and we started jogging.

Or at least I did, because Meiya is just… kinda jogging really slow. She looks surprised, but is smiling for some reason. Her smile slowly faded as I kept going and going. I slow down at a turn when I got close to her.

"What's up? You look troubled."

"It's just… You were not jesting regarding your stamina. Are you certain you will not be inconvenienced tomorrow?"

"No? Why would I?"

"Our training is truly harsh, I'll have you know. If you don't properly manage your energy you won't be able to complete even the morning run."

"What are you doing? Thirty klicks on full gear?" Now that would be a nice challenge!

"Of course not, we're doing fifteen. One half without gear and the other with half gear. And after that some combat training. However, were you to exhaust all your stamina right now, tomorrow you shall assuredly have difficulties to complete the training."

"Thanks for the warning, but I'm used to being drilled to the ground. Besides, fifteen klicks without full gear is nothing." After my training with Maya-san this will be child's play. I also started jogging more seriously during the mornings, so no problems with my stamina!

I speed up again, leaving Meiya behind. At some point, however, she started running to try to catch up to me. Wasn't she the one who said we should conserve our stamina?

"Why are you running so hard?"

"No reason!" She's lying. Is her pride telling her to not lose to me?

She couldn't keep it up for longer than a lap before she had to slow down. Sweating badly, looks like she has trouble regaining her breath. She went an exhausted herself, always doing extreme things. Haha, glad to see you're still you.

… Glad to see can begin again, Meiya. And don't worry, this time… I'll do my share.

"Who was the one who said we should conserve our stamina again?" I stopped jogging and approached her. She's bending forward holding her knees, to think the day I got so far ahead from this Meiya would come.

"I… I wanted to see… wheeze… how much I could run at that speed. You must have had a very strict training, Shirogane." Yes, Maya-san was truly strict with me. She is the best teacher ever, sorry Tsukuyomi-san.

"I had a very good Instructor, that's all. But are you alright, Meiya?" She looks at me with her mouth slightly open. Oh, right. "Sorry, I have a bad habit of calling people by their names."

"You're aware of it and haven't fixed it? Well, anyways…" She returns herself upright, running a hand over her hair and closing her eyes for a second. "Sigh… Shirogane, I'm glad you'll be joining our squad. With such a capable member we're sure to improve much during our training. Don't think you'll have the advantage just because of your superior stamina." She smirks while laughing.

Oh girl, just wait until I show you what I learned from Maya-sensei! I am looking forward to sparring with her now that I know a bit of the Mugen Kidou. Here's hoping we can both improve much in this way.

"I'll try my best not to fall behind. By the way, could you tell me a little bit about the squad? Things I should look out for, questions I shouldn't ask, things like that." Let's try to break the ice nicely this time around.

"Hmm, yes. You should always try to be serious around our Squad Leader, she's very hardworking so if she sees you not taking the training seriously you'll be made to hear a lecture from her." Yes, that's our Chizuru alright. "Then, I suggest you don't pry too much into our personal business. We are very… reserved about that." Yes, the whole 'non-interference' policy. "And lastly, don't ever be late for roll call. Our Instructor is truly fearsome whenever she becomes upset. You also should always pay attention during lectures, unless you want to spend the whole afternoon doing squats."

"I see, thanks for the tips Meiya." She sighs as she looks at me with a troubled expression, putting her hands on her waist.

"Shirogane you should also try to correct that habit of yours. I personally do not mind much, but others might not be so lenient with you."

"Alright, got it. I'll try to be more conscious of it. But manners are not my thing, so chances are I'll end up doing it anyways." Especially because you all will act like you did in my past loops, and you can't expect me to just forget about our relationships just like that.

"So long as you try I think you'll be fine. But it is truly surprising, are you not tired after running at such speed?"

"Not really, this was like my daily morning routine before coming here." Surprise floods her face. Is it really that weird?

"Running in such manner was your morning exercise?"

"Yeah, pretty much. Though of course, I didn't always have the luck to run in an open, even field." While running on the street is not bad, I sometimes went to a park to run. The difference between having to climb stairs and dodge roots is gigantic.

"You didn't run in a field? Where did you run then?" I don't think I can say 'park' and not make her suspicious.

"We got some obstacles in the way, to make us jump, sidestep and do other movements while we ran." Kinda like what we did in PE, I think?

"I see, that must have been hard. But the results are amazing, you truly have more stamina than us. I can't wait to see how you perform tomorrow."

"Same here. Well, I'll be going back to my room."

"Then, let's go together. I don't think I can keep jogging like this." She wipes the sweat off her face. Will she be alright tomorrow? "Where is your room, Shirogane?"

"It's the second room to the right after you arrive to the barracks."

"So it's to the other side of our rooms."

"For real?"

"Yes, our rooms are all down the left corridor. Maybe it's because you're male?" Right, everybody else is female. So it's obvious why they put me away from them.

"So all the other members are women?" Not like I didn't already knew it, but not asking would be kinda suspicious, I guess.

"Yes, it is weird to see a male recruit in this day and age at this point in the year."

"Huh, neat."

"Um, may I ask why do you employ such odds words? What is 'neat' supposed to mean?" She folds her arms, giving me one of her firm gazes.

"Oh, it's just the slang of where I was before coming here. Neat is, like, something cool or nice."

"… I see." Going by those lowered brows, I think she didn't get it. I forgot how cute she looks when she's lost. "Oh, right. Do you know your way around the base?" Nice to see you're still considerate to a fault, too.

"Yes, I already got the tour. Tomorrow morning I think I'll have to take the oath before joining you guys."

"Then that will make things easier. We eat at the third PX, the one that's on the right wing of the Base. We'll take you there after our morning routine, in case you don't know where it is."

"Don't worry, I probably can manage."

We did some small talk about my exercises and how were the people of the squad. She didn't give me any names, but I could recognize who she was talking about. It seems everything is the same as before. Now, starting tomorrow, I'll do my best to drive all of you to your top potential. This time I won't let all of you die!

So let's take a shower and go to sleep early, since I have to take the oath again. I've done that so many times that I remember it perfectly. Let's hope I can start our relationships with the right foot.

---

Same Day. 10:11 PM.

(Floor B26. Engineers' Office.)

[Yuuko]

---

"These are the details on the Anti-Radar Paint I informed you about, along with the data on the specs and functions the new radar and engine should have. Here's the schematics for the other projects we've discussed." I hand the folders to the Lead Engineer, whose current expression resembles Yashiro's when I ask her to fix the compilers, eyes wide and sorta wavering at the amount of work suddenly placed on the timeline. "That is all. I want all of this built, tested and working as soon as possible."

"Yes, Professor. But might I ask when did you develop these plans? Had you notified us beforehand-" I raise a hand to stop him.

"It matters not. You could say I had a… sudden revelation. I do apologize if this is too much work for you." Trying to sound cheery, but with a hint of annoyance, I took a glance sideways to the man, who seems to have understood the message.

"We will pour all of our might into these projects. We'll make results appear as fast as we can." He tries to give me a salute, but I stop him. He then goes into the main engineering room of the floor.

Now that's taken care of let's return to the office. I want to reread those two pages Shirogane gave me, just in case I missed anything.

We spent two hours doing all the paperwork. He knew all the questions I threw at him, and he already knew where to sign and what he was signing.

After that, I asked him to tell me all he could about his condition and what he went through in the past. He remembers many different events from his 'first' time in this world, even when he knows that it would be impossible that some things happened at the same time. He says that what happened after the operations of Alternative V is still kinda blurry to him, but he knows he kept fighting after his squad got wiped out and that he fought in a new team with American and French troops.

Then we tried these 'game consoles' things, and I'm convinced that they must have been some sort of military software to scout possible recruits. Why else would they make such a war simulator? Permanent death of your soldiers, limited funds and weaponry, complex and diverse missions, and a story about how political influence and old grudges breaks a nation from the inside, it's hard to believe anyone thinks of this as a game.

Well, Shirogane looks like he's kinda mad so maybe all people over there are also insane.

However, the most impressive of all was the TSF simulator. Similar to the ones we have here, but even better. It had more TSFs, weapons, and missions than ours, and four different modes to execute them, Shirogane called them 'difficulty settings'. The maneuvers of the TSFs on the screen were unbelievable, to think we could do the same in reality is just too good to be true. But if we succeeded, then like Shirogane said the new OS would become a very important tool for me. He said that the BETA appearing in the 'game' were caused by what went wrong in his world, and that he'll give me the full explanation once I can fully trust him.

Also, Yashiro didn't contact me during our talks and she reported he didn't lie nor had ill intentions in him.

I don't like how he is in control right now, but all he said seemed to be true. He also seems to have a good head on his shoulders, so I suppose treating him like an equal is not such a big compromise. Even if all of this is nothing but lies, the ideas he gave me will definitely yield good results. Of course, if he isn't lying and has two completed theories I've developed in the future of his world, then I'll be able to reverse this situation. I should start thinking on which unit I'll base the testings of the stealth tech and the OS, maybe I should ask him what he recommends.

However, it's surprising he's so chipper. He said he was happy to be back, to have another shot at this. Does he know what he's getting into? If he is a conductor then I suppose he should, but to be so openly joyful? What happened during that critical mission he spoke of? Did his team infiltrate Sadogashima and all the rest died?

Well, regardless of what happened in that future, I have a task to fulfill now. Developing this new OS shouldn't pose too much trouble, but I still should ask him to be the test pilot. I doubt Marimo or Isumi could pull the moves from that game, even if they were serious. It will be a nice test to see if his piloting skills are as good as he claims. It should also be a nice test for what I have developed so far, and a way to kill time and stop focusing so much on how stuck I am now. And when he goes to train with the cadets tomorrow, I'll 'borrow' the theories for a bit, just to quell my curiosity. It's not like I can't deal with both the OS and the research at the same time.

As I enter my office I see a pair of bunny ears waiting inside.

"Yashiro? What is it? You already sent your report. Did something else happen?" I can't tell what goes on her head most of the time, but if she came personally to see me it must be something serious.

"Sumika-san reacted to this boy. She seems to remember him but… All I could feel was an overflowing amount of sadness." Yashiro looked dejected, it's strange for her to show any kind of emotions.

"So she reacted to him, huh. Did you tell her who he was or did you show her images of him?" She hands me a paper, let's see what the readings say.

"I told her about who he was and how he looked. She went into shock immediately. What should I do?" She is fearful, this is news to me too.

We never got any reading as strong as this from the test subject, going by this paper she just handed me. Shirogane, you just got more interesting. Guess that part about fixing the zero wasn't a lie. Now I really want to know what's in that bag you brought.

"Nothing. I believe he is our ally. Do be careful around him, if you sense anything dangerous notify me as soon as you're able, without him noticing."

"Understood." She then turns around and tries to leave.

"Wait Yashiro. I need your help with something." The bunny ears move as she faces me again.

"What do you need?"

"Some programming and debugging." Her bunny ears dropped as did her eyelids, it looked as if she were bracing for another long night going by how her hands tightly grasped her dress for but a second. "But first, try this out. It'll be easier than explaining all of this in detail."

I hand her one of the joystick things and power up the device, she sits down on a sofa in front of the TV I ordered to be delivered.

I spent the next half an hour holding my laughter as Yashiro made impressed, terrified and sad faces as her cute yelps echoed in my office. She was even worse than me at this Valgern-On game. But it seems she understood what I'm asking of her.

To use my research for improving TSFs, Shirogane this better yield the results you promised or you'll pay for trying to fool me. I should double check his cover, let's wipe the profiles and reports of this world's Shirogane. I may need to use an important favor for this, but it will be worthy if he is indeed on my side.

And it will work as a final test to make sure he isn't a spy.

Beginning of his Strife

Chapter 7: Beginning of His Strife

---

(Sadogashima.)

[Takeru]

---

The sun was starting to retreat, the afterglow beginning to appear on the winter skies. As the shadows of our machines fell onto the bloodied soil, as we continued to tear them down, the mobs of BETA kept coming, one after the other.

"Lupine 3, did you finish resupplying? I can't deal with all the Grapplers myself!" I ask Mikoto as I do a forward dash, follow it with a boost jump, and slash one in half as I slid past its pincers.

"Almost done!" She was hurrying with it, but we couldn't lose any second right now.

Tama shoots a canister shell, crippling four of them and dealing with the smaller strains as well. It looks like Ayamine and Class Rep finished dealing with the Tanks that swarmed us from the left.

I do a double boost jump and deplete all my remaining 36mm ammo on the Grapplers standing nearby. Drawing out my sword before they can regain their footing, I slice the closer ones in half. Doing a short hop to return to my element, firing the last 120mm round I had to stop a straggler Grappler that got too close after I landed, I mow down the last two that were near me as Tama snipes the rest safely from a distance.

As I took a second to rest and clean the sweat on my forehead, a message appears on my sight. A mission update?

"Lupine 1 to all units! Another herd is coming this way, ETA three minutes. Finish resupplying ASAP! We still have to hold out for half an hour, according to HQ!" I inform the squad of the situation with the intel I received through my data link. This is harsher than I thought it would be, just how many BETA are here?!

"Lupine 3, all done! Squad Leader, it's your turn." Mikoto's Gekishin jumps away from the crate, taking its position near a cliff.

Damn, my hands are all sweaty. We've been fighting for over two hours already, and the mission has been going on for around four since the initial bombardment started. HQ said the objective is to draw out most of the BETA to make sure the latter Hive infiltration can be performed without any losses after they drop the G-Bombs. I quickly change my swords and recharge my guns. This is the last supply crate we have, we gotta make it last until the end of the mission!

"One to all, I'm all done! Who's next for resupplying?"

"Lupine 4 here, I'm on the way." Ayamine's Gekishin is jumping towards the crate.

"Two, take your position by Three's side. The BETA will arrive soon enough." I said, connecting to Class Rep's mech.

"Yes, on the way." She sounds extremely tense, not allowing her face to display any emotion despite the noticeable delay in between words.

We all knew this was a suicide mission, but living through it is giving us all an unexpected shock. We all thought we could die if it were for our mission, to save someone's life down the line. But in this situation all I can feel is an overwhelming sense of despair, as if everything was crumbling apart.

No, it's more… deep than despair. How was the word? Futile? Pointless? No matter how many of them we kill, more pop up like in those wack-a-mole games I played when I was little. But our friendlies keep dying and we're getting almost no support. All the newbies on the squad died already, as if this wasn't hard enough on us.

HQ said this would be a different world by night, that today will mark the start of our counter-offensive against the BETA. Yet, I can't see how we could win in such a situation.

The radar beeps, approximately three hundred Destroyers were coming our way, behind them at the least five hundred Grapplers and Tanks. This is the last stand, if we make it out of here then we survived this mission.

"One to all units! Enemy has been sighted, prepare to engage! Guys, one last push before going home. Let's give them hell!" I shout to motivate them, we can't lose now. We won't lose now!

"Roger!" All girls shout in unison. C'mon Lupine Squad, let's survive!

We spread before the Destroyers arrive, boost jumping over them. Tama and Class Rep fire the canister shells on top of them while the rest of us boost jump in position.

I land and start shooting again from the sidelines. Shooting at the first Destroyer's legs, we manage to slow them down enough for the ones behind to crash into them, and, like in a car crash on a highway, the herd rams into itself as we rain fire on them.

Uranium shells pierce through the BETA, painting the wasteland in their blood. Some stray ones survived the onslaught.

"Kill the stray ones before the rest of the herd arrives! Charge!"

"Four to Leader, what formation should be use?"

"Four, you're with me on the vanguard, Two and Three remain behind us to cover us, Five same as before. We stay between this cliffs, to reduce the enemy's range. The Grapplers won't be able to surround us so easily this way. Be careful with the Tanks at all times!"

"Understood!" All of them say in unison as the wrinkles also spawn in their faces.

The BETA become visible on the horizon. They advance forward without hesitation, trampling all over their fellows' corpses. It almost feels as if they were not alive.

On my mark, me and Ayamine dashed towards the BETA. I boost jump, and sick my guns on them from the air, land on the dying corpse of a Grappler and jump off it towards another one. Switching to my sword I slash downwards, ripping the head-like thing from its body. Upon landing, I quickly switch to my guns and open fire as I pull back, dismembering who knows how many Tanks in a few seconds.

As we pull back, hell rains on the BETA. The others start firing on the herd, shaving their numbers. But the bastards don't stop coming at us.

"Four, on me!"

"Roger!"

We charge again, I circle around some Grapplers and slash at them. I forward dash and slice two more, then I open fire against the Tanks that were coming towards me.

Then, a scream reaches my ears. A Grappler damaged Ayamine's thrusters as it jumped into it. Her Gekishin, now grounded, is being surrounded by Tanks.

"Two, cover Four!"

"Don't! I'm already out of ammo, this is the end for me." Ayamine retorts not a second later.

"Shut up! I'm the squad leader, don't give me this bullshit!" I dash towards her, slashing and kicking all the BETA in front of me. Get out of the way, damn you! I'm not letting anyone else die!

Then, Ayamine's Gekishin starts dashing deeper into the herd as more and more Tanks jump onto it.

"Ayamine, retreat this instant! What do you think you're doing?!"

"The only thing… a dying soldier can do."

And as she said those words, a bright flash followed by a loud explosion filled the battlefield. She used her S-11, right in the middle of the herd.

DAMN IT! Ayamine, why didn't you… Why do you still refuse to retreat?! You didn't have to die today, we were right here besides you! You idiot!

Releasing my frustration upon the few that remained near me, soon enough there's no BETA standing in sight.

Haa… Haa… Goddammit, Ayamine… You didn't have to do that… I was right there…

Then, a beep on my radar catches my attention. Another herd is coming our way?! These readings…

"One to all units! Another herd is approaching, I read at least two Fort Class in it."

"What?! Fort Class?!" Mikoto sounded terrified. We can't deal with many of those tall bastards while fighting the rest.

Soon enough, the rumbling made itself apparent on the floor and just a few seconds later their outstretched shadows fell upon us as they rushed in like mindless beasts. Two Destroyers that were ahead of the rest came towards me, I jump backwards to avoid them.

"Squad, move to the side and shoot their legs!"

"Roger!"

I keep dashing away while crippling all BETA that get close with what little ammo I have left. The rest cover me and manage to hold out near the cliffs we were stationed at. Damn, we really should have more ammo. I don't think they don't make enough of it, it's more like there's more BETA than all the ammo in the world could take care of.

What should I… What orders would get us out of here alive? What can I do for my squad?!

More Destroyers got close, we had to sick all remaining canister shells on them. It still wasn't enough to stop them all.

"Everyone listen up, I'll charge ahead while you give me some cover. I'll leave my guns here, make each shot count!"

"Shirogane, that's reckless! You can't fight those numbers with only one sword!" Class Rep, I thought that orders were absolute for you?

"We don't have enough ammo as it is, we need to hold out until HQ gives the signal to retreat! It's an order from the Squad Leader, so you can't refute it! Over and Out!" I charge towards the aliens despite the squad's shouts asking me to stop.

I slash at a Grappler after dodging its claw. Forward dash, boost jump to the right and I spin as I swing my sword, tearing apart all the Tanks that were trying to get on top of me. Sorry BETAs, but there's only one person that's allowed to do that.

I sidestep to get better footing and slash at a Destroyer that tried to charge me despite its damaged legs preventing it from gaining any speed. My radar shows two Grapplers behind me, I do a boost backflip and drive my sword through the head of one of them from above. Then I slash at the other's legs before it can turn around.

I start to pull back, slashing at the BETA that get on the way. The synchronized shots from the squad tear down the stray ones that I didn't get and finish the beetles that still were alive. The Forts are getting closer, this is the turning point in the fight.

"One to all units! Give me a report!"

"Two here, we have each around 300 36mm ammo left. Me and Three gave our rifles that still had 120mm to Five. She only has four shells left of it." This is bad. Very bad, if there's more than two Forts we won't be able to hold out.

"Three here, I got a reading on the Forts!"

Let's see… One, two, four? Wait… Holy shit, there's eight of them.

"Squad, we stick together from now on! Cover each other's blind spots from Tanks while staying clear of the Forts." I bark my order, but I hear no answer. Can't blame them. Our survival odds look as bleak as they could ever get.

The BETA rush at us, we deal with the Grapplers and Tanks somewhat without suffering much damage. But then the Forts appeared, all of them at the same time. I can barely dodge their stingers in the Gekishin while being in between these cliffs, I can't even get close to attack them.

Left with no choice, I move forward to distract them while the rest deals with the middle strains. We have to pull back to the end of the cliffs to make a bottleneck and stop the Forts dead in their tracks. If we tumble them down here, then we can retreat so long as we kill all the Tanks and Grapplers.

Relaying my orders, we take our positions and I boost forward as a few Grapplers are sniped to give me space to dodge a coming sting.

Hopping and being mindful of the space between me and the tall monsters, I dance around the stingers while slashing at a few Tanks, slicing and kicking, tearing and bashing, continuing to perform carnage's dance right besides the Forts.

Then, while I was busy dodging a stinger, a Grappler got past me, rushing through the corpses of the Tanks. Coming at it from its blind spot, it toppled Mikoto's Gekishin before I could warn her of the danger as I was busy with the dodging. We all could only see as the Grappler began to tear the machine down with its claws in a matter of seconds, hitting the engine and making it explode.

Huh?

Mikoto… Mikoto is… The explosion dies down and nothing is left of the Gekishin or the aliens that were close to it. Nothing is left…

"God… GODDAMMIT!" I dodge a stinger, slashing it apart.

Landing on top of a Tank in my rage, crushing its head with the heels of the Gekishin, I take out a dagger and begin to retaliate, but the numbers are too much to deal with. I have to keep taking more and more steps back now that we lost Mikoto's covering fire.

"Anyone, help! The Tanks… My Gekishin won't accept any command I input! I can't even trigger the S-11!" Tama's Gekishin was on the ground surrounded by Tanks, they were tearing it apart. When did they get so close?!

"Leader, I'll help her! We have to retreat, there's nothing else we can do here!"

"Class Rep, wait! Don't jump! They'll-" And before I could finish, the stinger of a Fort flew towards Class Rep's TSF.

She barely managed to dodge it, but it teared part of its front off, splashing acid onto it. And since the cockpit had been teared apart, the acid… fell right onto Class Rep.

"T-Takeru-san! Somebody! Help! I can't move!" Tama's scream on my left ear.

"Aaaugh! It burns! It buuuurns! Uuugaaahh! Make it stop! Hyaaauugghh!" Class Rep's on my right.

I slash at the Grapplers that are around me and get below the closest Fort. I jump as I prepare my slash, tearing its stinger and part of its lower body.

I grab Class Rep's machinegun and shoot at the Tanks that were surrounding Tama, I couldn't kill them all. Shit! Out of ammo!

"Shi-Shirogane… Augh! Please, kill me! I can't… Hyaagh… Please, let this end. Kill… me… Uuugraaaghhh!" Class Rep, what are you-

"Aaahh! They're tearing my cockpit apart! No, I don't wanna be eaten! No! NOOOO!" Tama! I have… I have to do something! I have-

A Grappler crashes onto me, I manage to block its pincers with my blade but my Gekishin got sent flying towards the cliff.

And for the next few seconds, all I could hear were the sound of the Tanks devouring Tama and the shrieks of Class Rep as the Fort's acid took her life.

… This has got to be a joke.

Is everyone really dead?

There's no allied signals on my radar. My hands start shaking, my eyes can't stop crying. Everyone…

BETA, you sons of an eldritch bitch. Screw the mission, screw my duty, screw everything! There's another sword near me, who is it from? Matters not.

How dare you kill them! How dare you monsters, I'm gonna… I'm gonna…

"KILL EVERY SINGLE ONE OF YOU!"

I charge with one sword in each hand towards the BETA. I should be hearing the sounds of their bodies being torn apart, but all I can hear are the last words of my friends. Tama was devoured, Class Rep probably melted from inside, and Ayamine and Mikoto got blown up. What kind of mission is this? What did they sacrifice themselves for?

"That's the nature of the military." The words of the CO of Yokohama Base return to me.

Fuck the UN, the Royal Guards, all of this world. I reject this reality! I reject all of it! I won't accept an ending like this!

"Give me back my world!" I rush towards the sea of true red, splashing gore into the skies.

…

How long have I been fighting? How many have I killed? I'm in the middle of the wasteland surrounded by BETA corpses and TSF remains. There's still some BETA around chasing some soldiers that got scattered.

If there's still BETA around, I have to kill them. That's… all I can do. My eyes feel heavy, I can't… fall here… I must…

…

…?

I open my eyes and find myself in my room. It's really cold for some reason.

After blinking a few times I realize I was having another nightmare as usual. I'm again drenched in sweat, and I'm shivering all over.

That was when I first came to this world, our first real operation under Alternative V. Operation Iceberg, the offensive of Sadogashima.

So even after coming back I'm still being haunted by these. Dammit… I rub my eyes strongly as I exhale, leaving my mouth open. After a short while, I managed to stop the tears and calm my breath, even though I'm still shivering like a bird caught under the rain.

I get up and wash my face on the sink, I need to get ready before the Instructor comes to pick me up. I can't meet her being this messed up. After all, everyone is alive here. Yes, no depressing myself. That won't happen again.

I showered, got changed and waited for awhile. I noticed that my body feels different as I stretched a bit. When I looked in the mirror I saw that I was a bit… younger? It's like I returned to my body of two years ago. However, I still have some scars from the terrorist attack on the school. How does this even work?

I did got up earlier than expected, should I eat something? I still got some rice balls from the other side…

Just as I finished eating, there's a knock on my door.

"Cadet Shirogane, open the door!" I stand up and go to answer. Marimo-chan is in her formal UN dress, arms folded waiting for me.

"Good morning, Instructor!" I salute her as I opened the door. She return the gesture before speaking.

"Good morning, Cadet. Allow me to introduce myself, I'm Sergeant Marimo Jinguuji. I'm going to be your Instructor during your stay here, but I suppose you already knew that." She starts looking at me, sizing me up. Something in her eyes is… sharper than before. Though, that may seem like that to me because I came from my home world this time. "I gotta say, it's surprising to have a male recruit now of all times but even more to be recommended by the Professor herself. I can see that she wasn't lying when she said you came from a very strict unit." Right, she came up with that to explain my knowledge and aptitude. "Regardless, I'll have you know we expect great things from you! Now, are you ready to take your vow? Or would you prefer to have some breakfast before?" As kindhearted as always, Marimo-chan.

"Do not worry, I already ate a light breakfast. I'm ready to take the vow."

"You already ate? But the PX doesn't open until a few minutes."

"I had some light food prepared yesterday, to not waste time."

"… I see. Then let us be on our way."

She takes me to the gym, where the usual ceremony happened again. How many times did I do this already?

"… I swear never to shy away from danger, to risk my life in accomplishing my duty, and to fulfill my responsibility to humanity!"

"We of Yokohama Base bid you welcome, and congratulate you."

I then salute the officers, who return the gesture. Then, they give me the run down on which squad I was joining, confirming what I signed yesterday with Sensei. Marimo-chan comes up to me once that is done and places my Cadet badge on my uniform, giving me a handshake.

Alright, that was done faster than before. I'm already with the squad on the 23rd instead of the 25th. That's two more days, it might not seem like much but every second counts here. I follow the Instructor out of the gym after the ceremony is over and done, we return inside the base.

"Shirogane, do you know your way around the base?"

"Yes, Instructor. Professor Kouzuki already showed me around."

"I see. Breakfast time is almost over, so go back to your room and change into your fatigues. Wait for me to pick you up, I'll introduce you to your squad just before the morning exercises."

I do as I was told. Now's the time when things start for real, I'm not holding back this time so I should try to be less of a bother than usual. I'll stop calling Chizuru Class Rep for one, and when Mikoto comes back I'll treat her normally. I should be careful in how I give them advice, though. Don't want them to take it the wrong way and think I'm a jerk.

Get ready Squad 207, because Shirogane is gonna rock you like a hu-… I mean, like a tornado! Phew… Dodged that copyright strike, close one.

There's a knock on my door. The Instructor is here, this time in fatigues. We make our way to the courtyard, walking into the ground floor where a lot of sun came pouring in, a chilly wind entering through the windows. I had forgotten this world was a tad bit colder than my home world.

"Shirogane, today you'll be running on the track field and then doing some combat with your squad. Then, after lunch, you have lectures. I was told by the Professor that there was no need to adapt the curriculum for you, but will you be alright?" Marimo-chan, you're always such a good teacher. Even if you're more scary here than back home, except for that one time she got drunk on the hot springs.

"Yes, I'll be fine. I also had a very rigorous training in my last unit."

"I see. Then let me tell you about your squad." Then she goes about how they're all women, how they're supposed to be a very good team, to not underestimate them, yada yada yada.

"I'll take your advice to heart, Instructor."

"Good answer. We're here, wait by the door until I call for you." She opens the door, goes into the field, and blows her whistle. "SQUAD! ASSEMBLE!"

I can hear the girls approaching. I clench my hands, that were already sweaty. Deep breaths, feel the air coming in and then slowly let it out. Fresh start, no one dies here. I inhale slowly again, trying to calm myself down, only to flinch and feel a void in my chest as a voice reached my ears.

"Salute! Squad 207 is ready for today's training!" Chizuru's voice.

She sounds so alive, so strong. Nothing like… back then. That's not happening again, hell no. And she's not detonating her S-11 either. No one will!

I sigh, stopping to clench my jaw, grit my teeth, and lick over my lips. Leaning on the wall for a sec, I take in a deep breath, listening in the conversation.

"Good. Today I have an announcement to make." Marimo-chan speaks in a super serious tone. I think I heard the girls gasping, what could be going on in their heads now? "Today a new recruit will be joining your squad."

"Eh?! A new recruit? At this time of the year?!" Chizuru sounds just like me when Meiya came to school for the first time.

Man, what an ordeal that day was. To think she'd call all those chefs just for lunch, I can't help but grin remembering those crazy noisy days.

"Yes, and that's not the only surprising thing here. Shirogane! Come over here!" I go towards them walking not too fast, so that I could see their faces.

Tama's eyes opened wide as she tilted her head, Chizuru raised both brows as her mouth remained half open, and Kei… is being Kei, just silently gazing at me with a hand on her chin, unassumingly returning my gaze. Meiya is the only one who isn't surprised, obviously.

For a second, I felt my heart shrink. They're here, right there. Alive and well, breathing and unharmed. I slowly released my breath through my nose, almost unable to meet their gazes.

I gulp, stopping right behind the Instructor, giving them all a good look. And finally, I managed to smile. Because they're right there, and this is no dream.

"He's a special recruit, recommended by Professor Kouzuki herself. He was trained on a special squad, but due to an accident he couldn't finish his training. The Professor scouted him herself, so his skills are supposed to be top notch." She gives me a nod to introduce myself.

"I'm Cadet Takeru Shirogane, it's a pleasure to be here!" Standing in attention, I give them a salute.

"Likewise. I'm the Leader of this squad, Chizuru Sakaki." Chizuru salutes me with a serious look, as expected. I return a nod with a slight smile.

"I'm Miki Tamase. It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance, Shirogane-san." I forgot they speak so formally here. Gonna have to change that, at least for you Tama.

"Kei Ayamine." Kei, dear, could you at least look at me when you speak? I know you don't mince many words but-

"Ayamine! You're being rude to Shirogane. Why don't you do a proper introduction?" Already fighting?! Chizuru don't do it, the Instructor is right-

"I did." Kei! Stop that, Marimo-chan will-

"No, you didn't." Chizuru narrows her brows, Meiya sighs and shakes her head.

"I said my name, should be enough." Kei shrugs, Tama's lips quiver as she switches gazes from her to Chizuru.

"That's not the point. What impression of our squad are you even trying to give him?"

"So noisy from the get go today, huh."

"What was that?!"

"All right, that's enough you two!" Marimo-chan yells at them, making them look to the ground. "What am I gonna do with you today? Perhaps I should make you run double the distance? Hmm, how would you like that?"

"I apologize for my behavior, Instructor." Chizuru bows deeply, Kei soon follows.

"Sorry, Instructor. It won't happen again."

"Oh, really? I've lost count of how many times you've said that. Shirogane, if you see these two fighting, call for me immediately."

"Yes, Ma'am." Marimo-chan's glare is scarier this time around, what did you guys do to anger her this much?

"Mitsurugi, you're the last one."

"I'm Meiya Mitsurugi. It'll be a pleasure to train alongside you, Shirogane." I give her a nod, which she answers with a confident smile.

"Now that we got the introductions out of the way, go stretching so that we can start with the exercises."

She gives the orders, taking some distance from us, and we go to stretch.

"Shirogane, can I ask you some questions?" Chizuru comes to my side as I lean down, trying to reach for my boots.

"Sure, ask away." She also does the same and steals a glance at me while we remain in position.

"How much training did you have in your previous squad?"

"You could say they drilled me to the ground, but due to some… problems I couldn't take the CCSE with my squad." I return myself upwards after counting to ten.

"I see." Chizuru also straightens herself, tapping her glasses as she looks at me. "And from then on, you trained by yourself I suppose."

"I had some people helping me in my daily routines. But it obviously wasn't the same as formal training." It was even worse. Maya-sensei truly did not hold back on me. She slashed me in half more times than I could keep count of.

"Is that so? Allow me to be blunt, can we expect much from you? Will your skills be a good addition to the squad?"

"That depends on how much difference there's between us. But I'm not planning to be dead weight. You can expect me to do my best at all times, Sakaki." She smiles upon hearing my answer, and my heart suffered some lag there for a sec.

"That's good. It's nice to know we have another serious person on the team. By the way, the squad has another member. Her name is Mikoto Yoroi, but she injured herself and won't be training with us for awhile."

"Oh, was it serious?" I know it's not, but gotta play my part here.

"No, but it'll take some time for her to join us again. A week perhaps."

"I see. How is she? As a person, I mean."

"She's… quirky." Look at those arching brows. We both kept stretching, with Chizuru pondering for a second what to say. "Yoroi's survival skills are top notch, and her medical knowledge is also very good. She does tend to… have a short attention span, however." No changes there. Mikoto is still Mikoto.

"Shirogane-san, might I ask what is your strong point?" Tama gets closer as she joins in the warm up. Though, I have to make her stop calling me that. It's making me sad.

"I'm kind of an all rounder type. I can do pretty much anything with the same ease. I do prefer close combat, though."

"I see, that's really impressive. If you can do many things, you must be very skilled." You're making me blush internally, Tama. Your sincere praises are really endearing.

"Or he just sucks at everything." I can't help but smile upon hearing Kei's teasing, seeing her smirk grow as she throws a side glance at me. I'm so glad to be back, to once more be able to hear them alive and well.

"Ayamine, you're being rude towards Shirogane again. Why don't you apologize?" Oh God, here we go again.

"About what?"

"You just insulted him."

"Did I?"

"I didn't feel particularly insulted, I think she was just teasing me. It's alright, really." I try to calm things down, but… Here thar be dragons.

"No, Shirogane. Ayamine is always doing what she pleases without any consideration towards the team." Maybe I should do something before they start again.

"Um, Sakaki? If you fight again and the Instructor hears you…" I left the sentence hanging in the air on purpose, trying to copy the tone Sensei uses when she speaks seriously with me. Chizuru closes her eyes, then shoots a glare towards Kei.

"You're right, I shouldn't be doing this." She then looks away and continues to stretch.

Kei simply looks away and takes some distance from us. Tama doesn't know what to say, she seems really nervous as she takes glances towards both of them.

"That was good, Shirogane. You stopped them before they even began." Meiya gives me a small smile as she came over to us.

"I don't think I'd say that. They were already at each other's throats."

"No, you stopped them before they raised their voices. You even interjected before warning them about the Instructor. I always find it difficult to stop them before."

"That's just because Ayamine is always in her own world. I never know what she'll say to me, and I end up losing my temper." Chizuru says, sounding like a deflated balloon and sighing what little air she had in her away.

"Um, I don't… think it's so bad. Her words mean Ayamine-san is expecting something from you Shirogane-san."

"Expecting something?"

"You did say you prefer close combat, so she might be interested in that. I, too, am quite curious of your skill in CQC." Meiya tells me with a smile. Right, these two also prefer CQC.

"Well, I don't resent her or anything. I just hope we can get along." The girls smile upon my answer.

Alright, let's hope you can keep up with me. From this point forward… I'll forge and temper you into the best Valkyries I can. I won't twiddle my thumbs here.

"Alright, Squad! Take your positions on the track field!" Marimo-chan barks the order, and we all take one line of the track field.

I do some short hops, moving my shoulders up and down. I let the air enter into me as I gaze at the clouds, remembering that last walk towards the U's Reactor. Everything starts from this point forward. My first objective, to unite the girls to pass the CCSE and make them better than they were last loop. Let's take the first step towards that flag.

"You'll be doing ten klicks today, then you'll do five with half gear." Marimo-chan informs us as she stands to a side near the starting line. "Now, ready… set… GO!" She blows her whistle and the training starts.

Or so I'd say if I could take this seriously. I just started jogging lightly to warm up, but I'm still going along the rest just fine. They seem to be putting some effort in their stride, so they're not taking this lightly like me.

Chizuru is on the lead, followed closely by Ayamine. Then me and Meiya are around the same place, with Tama a bit behind us. They started sweating a bit after the first lap, so no doubt they're doing this seriously. The gap… is larger than I thought. I know stamina isn't that much of a concern when riding TSFs, hell, Tama's CQC wasn't nothing to laugh at when she was in a cockpit and she held out during the Kashgar Raid really well despite not being able to run as much as the rest. But, if I want them to take me seriously despite my relaxed way of being, I have to push forward and be a beacon for them.

"What's the matter, Shirogane? Is that all you have today?" Meiya taunts me, being a bit ahead of me.

"Says the one who couldn't even finish her training yesterday." Oh, that hit a nerve. She narrowed her brows for a second, but then she returned a grin towards me.

"Oho, I wonder about that. All I can see is that I've been in front of you for two laps already."

"Heh, okay. I'll start taking this seriously if you want me to, Meiya."

"You're still referring to me in that way?"

"That way? Oh, sorry."

"How did you manage to keep that habit during your training? Surely you're not going to try to call the Instructor by her name as well, do you?"

"I might." I don't know if I see shock, fear, awe or all of them in her face.

Well, enough screwing around. We're at almost half the first part, so let's start to take this seriously. If I want to be a lighthouse for them, I need to do my best. I already know how holding back went after all. And hitting the ground hard with my heels, I speed up.

I learned that placing your heels first while you run allows you to conserve stamina and give you a little boost forward when you do it. It took a while to get used to consciously take each step with the back of my feet, but now that I can I know how much of a difference it makes. I start properly running, and pass both Kei and Chizuru in a flash.

One lap, two laps, three laps. I finished the remaining five klicks, while everybody still has two laps left to take. I wipe the little sweat that had formed as I moved away from the track. I see Marimo-chan plucking her lips at me while she has her arms crossed, tapping one with a finger. Once I got closer, she took her usual pose and rose her chin while furrowing her brows.

"Shirogane! I don't know why you chose to show off like that, but if you can't finish the exercise-"

"I'm used to this. This training is too light for me." I think someone almost tripped after hearing me.

"Oh? It's too light? Then, what would you like to do?"

"Can I do a full gear march?"

"Full gear? Fine, take the backpack and the rifle with you too. Let's see how you handle those five klicks."

"Um, I was thinking of running until everyone else finished. These short distances are no problem for-" She raises an eyebrow. Oh. My. God. What have I done?!

"SHIROGANE! Don't you get cocky on me! You think that just because you're 'special' you can be so arrogant?! Huh?!" It's just like when she got drunk! Help! "What's the matter, boy? Cat got your tongue or something?! Speak up!"

"Um, Instructor… P-Professor Kouzuki ordered me to not hold back in the training. To give you an accurate idea of my current skills." Sorry, Sensei. But I feel like she'll kill me if I don't use your name here.

"The Professor did? Gosh, what am I gonna do with her?! Fine, do your thing. But if you cannot keep running until everyone finishes, I'll have you do a hundred squats after the afternoon lectures. Now, go already!" She waves a hand towards where the gear is, slicing the air in half with much violence. What has got her this angry? Sensei, what did you do this time?

I get in gear and return to the track. But this is still fine, I don't feel tired or anything. I did went jogging for, like, almost two hours during the last month. Eventually, everyone got in half gear and started running along. They all seemed to be putting some more effort in their stride compared to what little I remember of our past trainings. In time, Tama was the last one to finish. How many klicks did I end up running?

"Alright, that's enough! Take off your gear, I'll bring some weapons for the following exercise. You can refresh yourself with the nearby water taps."

Boy, that was nice. Not as nice as running with some chill wind in a park, but still not as bad as I expected. I really improved my stamina from last time.

"Shirogane-san, that was amazing! What kind of training did you used to do?" Tama's eyes reflect the sunshine at me, impressed with my performance.

"Something like this? Minus the full gear, I used to run for almost two hours every morning."

"Every morning? You didn't get a day to rest?" Chizuru looks dumbfounded as she raises one brow.

"Yes, I did. But I still went to run, it didn't feel right to start the day without jogging."

"By the way, you and Mitsurugi-san were talking before you started sprinting, what did she ask you?" Tama was right behind us so she must have seen our little exchange.

"She taunted me, to see if I could do better. I don't know whether I met her expectations or not."

"You fool, there was no need to go as far as to confront the Instructor! If you cannot complete the following exercise, it's your own fault." Meiya sounds somewhat disappointed. "But even so, you surpassed all my expectations. To keep running at such speed until all of us finished, your stamina is on a different level than ours."

"Shirogane, you're not tired right? Think you can do the combat exercise?"

"Don't worry, Sakaki. I'm still full of energy. So, are we doing hand-to-hand combat or sword practice?"

"Both." Meiya answers as she interlocks her fingers and raises both hands upwards. "We usually do short fights against each other, two fights in hand-to-hand and two fights with either knives or swords." This is definitely different from before, why is Marimo-chan giving you this training?

"Shirogane, you said close combat is your strong point. What weapon do you prefer?"

"The sword, with the knives as a close second. I'm not bad at hand-to-hand combat but it's definitely not my strong point."

"Oho? Iiiiinteresting." Kei remarks from afar. I know what you're thinking girl, you wanna send me to another planet with an STA, don't you?

"So the sword is your favorite. Just like me, I hope we get to spar today." Meiya's eyes have little purple flares coming out of them.

Last time I totally dominated her due to the difference in stamina, I wonder how things will go now that I learned the Mugen Kidou.

"Squad! Here are the weapons." Marimo-chan returns with a box, laying it nearby. "I'll announce the pairings, Tamase and Sakaki on HTH, Ayamine and Mitsurugi with weapons of your choice. Shirogane, you're out for the first round."

What the hell?! I mean, we are an uneven number right now. Oh, well. I take my distance as the others prepare to spar. This will be a nice chance to see how good they are as of now, though.

"Shirogane, might I have a word with you?" Marimo-chan gets closer and speaks in a calm tone, but one of her hands is coiled real tight. Off to the detention barracks, perhaps? "You… Are you not tired?"

"Huh? No, I'm holding up fine."

"I see. So, I suppose you're used to a harsher training regime. Could you tell me what to expect from you? I tried asking the Professor just now, but she didn't exactly reveal much." I see, so that's why she's pissed.

I tell her what I said to my squad, with a bit more detail on my skills, while keeping an eye on the bouts of the girls.

"… And, while I'm confident in my current level, I wouldn't call myself a decent sniper yet."

"So you got trained in all types of combat? I know that pilots are supposed to adapt to any position on the field, but… I'm afraid your skills have suffered from being trained as a generalist. While your stamina is definitely better, I don't know if it'll be enough to compensate the gap in skill that dedicated training brings out."

"Then I'll just have to pick a style and perfect it along the way, I guess."

"That's true. Well, it seems they're finishing their duels. Let's see…" The girls return from their battles, awaiting the next set of orders. "Sakaki and Shirogane with weapons of your choice, Tamase and Ayamine in HTH."

"Shirogane, would you mind if we used combat knives?" She asks as I got closer to the crate.

"No, that's fine by me."

We both grab a wooden knife and go further into the courtyard, feeling the wind briskly ruffling around us. Chizuru takes a standard stance, while I put my left leg forward while grabbing he handle and pointing the blade behind me with my right hand. We stay in position, just sizing the other for some time.

Chizuru takes a step forward, swinging her knife to my right. Shifting my weight backwards, I dodge to my left with ease. I parry her next strike and throw a punch at her with my left. She takes a step back just in time to dodge it.

I start pressuring her with a flow of strikes. First a downward strike, then I try to hit her left side. Changing the place where I attack to force her to move faster, she can't counter me. Her footwork is very nice, she's keeping her defense against me very nicely even if she can only parry or try to keep some distance.

Those brows still and firm, her gaze has a certain determination behind it. She's planning something. As I rush at her with a frontal strike, she quickly moves aside and in a single motion tries to strike at my hands. Nice plan, if I say so myself. Sadly for you Chizuru, my reflexes are on whole 'nother level.

As if I were trying to fit on a tight train, I coil to my right barely dodging her attack. She was going for a serious attack, and now that she's lost her balance I have a clear hit waiting for me. I put some weight into my swing as I hit her back, sending her to give a nice smooch to the ground.

"Whew, looks like this is my win." I give her a hand as she stands up.

"That was truly amazing. Shirogane, I expect you to share the secrets of how you reached this level of dexterity." She shakes my hand before we went towards the group.

Everyone else seemed to have been watching us, they seemed impressed.

"Shirogane-san, that was awesome! Especially that fast dodge at the end!"

"Thanks, but that was really luck on my side."

"Good job flooring the Leader." Kei, why must you? She's even smirking at Chizuru.

"Alright! Next pairings will be Tamase and Mitsurugi with weapons and Ayamine with Shirogane in HTH."

We go back into the field. No words were said, Kei looked as inexpressive as she usually did. Only that since I've been with her for who knows how long I can tell the small signs she makes. Her eyes are slightly veering left, she now knows I'm right handed so she's probably thinking of going for my left side. However, by her stance, she'll do a feint and try to land a hit on me before she goes for a throw.

I go at her with a right punch, she takes a step back and dodges it. I continue to throw some punches, and she keeps dodging. If there's one thing I never managed to do, is to best Kei in this type of combat.

She sends a kick, I dodge to my right and block a punch she threw at me. And here it comes, she grabs my arm and tries to make a lock, but I throw myself onto her and grab her other arm before she can throw me.

Then I put my left leg forward and tense up my back with my heels firmly in place. Now you can't throw me, but neither can I throw you. We struggle to make the other lose balance, we move our legs to try to trip each other off but neither gives an inch.

She's doing this will all her might, her eyes are oozing a fiery intensity upon me. Wait, eyes? Ohoho, so I had that card left…

I slightly pull myself backwards, Kei thinks I'm trying to throw her and starts resisting my pull by getting closer to keep me quiet. And then, I throw a headbutt at her. After hitting her face clearly her grip on me loosens, and I seize my chance to grab her shoulder and waist. I throw her to the floor and restrain her. She starts kicking about, trying to break free.

"This is my win, too. Hey Ayamine, stop struggling! The match is-"

"Never."

"Don't be so stubborn, you're already-"

"Never!" Her thrashing intensifies.

"Fine, if you want to play that game." I bend her arm a bit more behind her back, and start exerting more force upon her shoulder with my palm.

"Ugh! Never…"

"The match is over! Shirogane, you win. Ayamine, you need to know when to give up." Marimo-chan admonishes us from afar. I let Kei go but she remains on the floor, unmoving.

"Ayamine, you okay?"

"Fine."

"Then, why don't you get up?"

"My problem."

"Fine, suit yourself. Nice fight, by the way. It's the first time I have to restrain someone to win at close combat." Man, I just beat Kei for the first time ever. I mean, she is still inexperienced compared to her full potential but a win's a win.

"AYAMINE! Get your ass here this instant, unless you wanna do squats until dinner!" Marimo-chan is really strict this time around. It's like she has an aura around her, as if she were on a leash. The Mad Dog is out for some reason.

Kei slowly gets up and comes over the group. She looks absolutely livid even if she has her usual poker face, going by how her mouth is nothing but a small, tense line and how she's looking straight at the ground.

"Next pairings are Ayamine with Sakaki, and Mitsurugi with Shirogane with weapons." So it's up against Meiya now.

"Shirogane, what say you of using swords? Do you feel in proper form for a spar?" She folds her arms, giving me a small smile.

Look at you, taunting me. You may have gave me multiple bumps in the head and slashed me in half during my first loop, but last time I totally dominated you, and today I'm gonna do with you whatever I want!

That… came out wrong, dammit. But now that I had intensive training with Maya-sensei, you'll be the one being slashed in half!

"Fine by me, just hope you don't regret it."

"It's one thing to be confident, but another entirely to be arrogant. Shirogane, I am hoping to show you the difference between them in our bout."

"Sorry, but I can't lose in a sword fight. My Sensei would kill me if I lost." Not even kidding right now, Maya-sensei taught me under the motto that using the Mugen Kidou was to become invincible. I think she went too far, but I'll let the results speak for themselves.

"You must be proud of your teacher to say so. But the same goes for me, the sword is my specialty. You already dispatched two of us without breaking a sweat, and apparently the sword is your strength. I can only shiver in anticipation of our duel, but I'm not going to fall to you!"

She takes her stance. It's not the Mugen Kidou, it's a more generic one simply holding the sword forward with both hands. Going easy on her I think I could still beat her due to my stamina, but I want to be serious against her. She's the only other Mugen Kidou user I can fight with, so I need to know how good I'm with it now. In this world of war, Tsukuyomi-san must have taught you a more deadly technique than what I learned in my world, so let's see how I hold up. If you don't want to use the Mugen Kidou, I'll force you to use it!

I take the stance Maya-sensei taught me with a slightly arched back, sword in both hands pointing downwards just above my shoulders, knees just a bit behind the end my feet. I'm ready to pounce at her any second. She seems to recognize my pose as her wide eyes gaze upon me. Her eyes stop wavering and turn fierce, I can only wonder what she thinks of this.

She starts the fight with a fast opening from my right, I parry easily and follow with a downwards slash towards her face. She blocks just in time, I step left and try to strike her stomach but she manages to block me again.

I speed up and go for relentless attacks. Maya-sensei taught me that Iaido and Kendo can be further combined by treating every slash like both a first attack that must be dealt swiftly and a follow up to another movement. This forms a fast flow of attacks that can throw most opponents off balance. The key point is the step back one must take after some time, to recover balance and occasionally throw off the enemy. She called it the 'Unending Waterfall' style, that differed from Mana's style in that this one was much more aggressive, as opposed to keep a more slow pace to attack separating the Iaido and Kendo 'phases' to call them something.

So, instead of only using Iaido's fast approach when unsheathing the blade and then proceeding to use Kendo, you do both things at the same time from the start. It's really complicated, but once I learned the correct stance and pace it came naturally to keep the flow of attacks going, especially once I got used to taking that crucial step back.

Meiya can't counter me, I can tell she's also being serious as she tries to force an opening but my attacks keep her from getting too close. I bend my knees and go for an upwards slash aimed at her left shoulder, she moves to the right and tries to strike me but I manage to parry. While our swords were still clashing, I take a step back. This makes Meiya fall forward, since she was putting force into her sword. I aim at her hands but missed by a hair, she ducked away nimbly before falling over.

I keep up the pressure. She could only barely stand up again as I was once more attacking. I take my chance and quickly move to a side to strike a blind spot, but she dodges and tries to imitate me.

She's now fighting with everything she has, but she's not fast enough. Maya-sensei told me that it wasn't necessary to put much force into my swing, since the blade will deal lethal damage when aimed at a blind spot, but I start to push harder with each swing I take at her. This catches Meiya off guard, since she was used to the strength I was displaying moments ago. I force her to go completely into a defensive stance as I keep my fast strikes coming at her. A little dash to the left, I slash downwards towards her leg. Blocked, I quickly bring my sword up and go for a frontal slash putting more force into it. Our swords get locked in a struggle. Meiya is doing all she can to avoid being overpowered, she stands stiff while locking her eyes onto me.

I take a step back and return to my initial stance as I breath a sigh. Meiya does the same, sweat pouring all over her.

"To think… you'd be this good. I haven't been pushed to my limits by no one other than my teacher."

"What's up with that defeatist tone? You wanna give up on me?" Ohoho, how nice you look when you're angry, my dear Meiya.

"Never! Surrendering is not an option, I yield to no one!" She lashes out, this time taking her Mugen Kidou stance.

I slightly alter my stance preparing for what is to come, Meiya's true strength lies in her quickness to draw her blade. It was obvious I would win against her in a Kendo style fight, but when it comes to Iaido I don't think I'll ever get as fast as her. Sure, now I can do it all the time with my current style, but even then I'm not as fast as Meiya got during the last loop. She's not there yet, but I shouldn't underestimate her. I don't want more bumps on my head, and I rather not get slashed in half again.

"You look as if you could predict my every move, Shirogane."

"You're just too straightforward, Meiya. It's too easy to bait and take advantage of your style."

"Mmgh! Don't get cocky just because I haven't landed a hit yet! I'm going to take you seriously from now on!"

"Weren't you fighting seriously until now? Then, why are you sweating like a fountain?"

Learning to be calm in the face of teasing is a skill you need to learn, Meiya. This is coming from someone who couldn't help to react at the first poke he received. However, it looks like she has totally lost it.

"Shirogane! Prepare yourself!" And, as an imaginary red bandanna wrapped itself around Meiya's forehead, she charged at me.

Barely parrying her strike, she moves to my left and tries to outspeed me. You should know that my Jolly nature will always allow me to outspeed you, Adamant samurai. I keep parrying her attacks despite their speed, and over time I start putting more strength into each parry. Eventually the roles shifted as I started to push her again with many consecutive attacks.

Towards her shoulder, then I shift to strike at her stomach. I take a step back and attack her right shoulder again but it's only a feint to attack her left side. She almost falls for it, barely moving out of the way. Her footing got unstable, I dash after Meiya catching her by surprise. I lower my sword and slash upwards aiming at her hands, sending her sword flying just like Maya-sensei did to me every time that I lost my balance.

Meiya laid on the ground after the impact made her fall backwards. She looked up at me as her eyes widened, unblinking and focused.

"Nice duel, Meiya." I offer a hand for her to stand up, but she just keeps looking at me as if in a daze. "… Meiya? Are you hurt?"

"Eh?"

"You alright? You've been sitting on the ground for awhile, totally silent. Did I harm you?" I didn't go overboard, right? If I ended up hurting her our relationship may take an awful turn.

"No, I'm fine. It's just…" She slowly stands up by herself, not meeting my eye. "No one has ever bested me so soundly, not even my teacher. This is the first time I… thought I was facing someone I couldn't defeat."

"I see. But it's not like I had it easy, you made me get serious halfway."

"That's not true. You were holding back, weren't you?" Back up straight, she gives me a gaze right in the eye, her face completely sobered up. "Your attacks became stronger and faster at the end, and you didn't try to hit my stomach or face, instead you went for my sword. I can't even muster any semblance of anger after being so throughly defeated." Her shoulders drop as does her gaze and brows, her lips' edges twisting inwards.

"Everyone faces this kind of defeat sometimes, you know? Don't be so down, Meiya. There was a time when I got my head handed to me by someone much better in a similar way." That was you, and you were just beating the shit out of me to raise your 'warrior spirit' or something. "Just use today's defeat as a motivator to drive you to new heights. People can accomplish great things when they have a driving purpose, after all."

"You were defeated in this manner? I can't even begin to imagine what savage opponent you must have faced." A certain blue haired samurai girl with an apparently unending list of philosophical quotes in her head. "But you're right, so long as people have an purpose that motivates them, they can achieve any objective they set for themselves. Wise words indeed, it seems you're skilled outside of the battlefield as well." She regains a small smile, nodding slowly as she again folds her arms.

"Don't praise me too much or I'll grow arrogant."

"There's no need to be humble. I can already see what makes you special, Shirogane. I only ask of you to not hold back on me when we get to spar. Besting you is now another objective I have set for myself."

"Sure thing Meiya, if you want me to beat you to a pulp I'm happy to oblige." I say in a cocky tone, smirking. Teasing her is too much fun.

"Ugh, next time will be different! And, you still insist on calling me by my name."

"If it bothers you I'll try to stop." Last thing I want is to burn my bridges with any of you.

"I do not mind, it is merely surprising to see such a skilled cadet being so relaxed. Didn't your Instructors do something about it?"

"Old habits die hard, I guess."

"Haha, that is true. That's why they're habits in the first place. However…" Her tone changes to one of worry.

"What is it?"

"Those two are still going at it. I hope nothing happens this time." I follow Meiya's worried gaze to the other pair.

Chizuru and Kei were still fighting, keeping each other at a safe distance while trying to hit the other with kicks. They're being much more fierce than in my past loops.

"Are they always like that?"

"Sadly, yes. It isn't odd for one to end up in the medical bay with serious scratches or a bruise. I think that you defeating them has done nothing but invigorate the flames in their hearts. Both are very dedicated to the trainings, so they don't take losing very well."

That isn't unlike them, but it still seems odd. Well, I did steamroll everyone this time. They surely didn't like being shown up by the newbie.

They kept fighting for three more minutes, until Marimo-chan interrupted them. My last fight was against Tama in HTH, I tried going easy on her but even that was too much. Seeing her get real down, I decided to give her some pointers based on my experiences when we got together in my first loops. Maybe she'll be able to at least begin to put up a fight against Chizuru and Kei without taking this so hard.

Now it's time for lunch, and I can expect a lot of questions coming from them. Chizuru is gazing at me sharply, who knows what questions she has for me. And Meiya too, she hasn't let me out of her sight since our duel.

Well, let's make the most out of this. Let's try to get them to speak a little less formally with me, too. The battle to make us into a real squad starts right now!

---

Same day. A few minutes later.

(Mana's room.)

[Mana]

---

Sitting in the small desk in the officer quarters I've been sleeping in this year during my stay on this base, I review the reports from the mechanics working on our Takemikazuchis.

Today's maintenance shouldn't take much time. There was nothing of importance to report yesterday, even though some people around the base were a bit too suspicious. Something happened yesterday, and many people were rather alarmed by it.

However, so long as it doesn't concern Meiya-sama's wellbeing it is no problem of mine. The UN's affairs are of no interest to me. I open the drawer and grab what was inside. I reread the papers of Meiya-sama's activities, to arrange our afternoon vigilance.

As I was close to finishing, two knocks on my door in an odd rhythm sounded. It's their signal.

"Enter." Upon hearing my command, my three subordinates entered my personal room.

"Mana-sama, we have an urgent report for you!"

"What is it, Kamiyo? Were we contacted by HQ?" All three of them look most positively alarmed, what has happened?

"No, Ma'am. It's about Meiya-sama, a new recruit has been added to her squad this morning."

"What did you say?! I have heard nothing of this!"

"Neither did we, Mana-sama. We were surprised as well during our morning vigilance."

"Who's this new recruit?" Tomoe steps up and bows before speaking.

"We don't know his name, but he seems to be a young boy. Perhaps nineteen at most, he's both agile and strong. His stamina was truly impressing, and he held his ground against his squadmates during the morning fights, defeating them without much problems." She proceeds to give me a summary of what they saw in detail.

I forgot they don't have authorization to access the UN's databases, so they wouldn't know his name. However, a male recruit? On this day and age, at this point in the year? On this base, placed on the 207th Squad no less? Could this be what caused yesterday's fuss?

"That's not all, however." Ebisu added as Tomoe finishes, but her expression grew tense as her gaze lost itself into the floor.

"What is it? What else did you see?"

"He… He defeated Meiya-sama in a duel with swords, with rather ease if I might add. It looked as if he were holding back the entire fight."

"What?! But that's…" I frown, making them tense up. I close my eyes and run a hand over my hair, slowly breathing in.

I trained Meiya-sama personally since I was assigned as her retainer. Her skills with the sword can still improve much, but she's by no means an easy adversary. Who is this person? There's no way a cadet could be so skilled, more so than Meiya-sama.

"And… Um… There's one more thing we…" Kamiyo's voice trails off, she's also very stiff.

"Now, what is it?"

"We heard he was someone special, that he got scouted by the Vice Commander herself."

"So that's how it is. I suppose he's a star cadet from a foreign unit that got recruited for the frontlines."

It's not surprising, there are quite a few foreigners in this base. More than I would like. But for the UN to have made such a move without warning… Who is this man? What business does he have here to be placed on Meiya-sama's squad so suddenly?

"Mana-sama, the man in question… is Japanese." She continues, arms tightly clasped onto her sides.

"Japanese? Could he be the son of one of those bastards that ran away when China fell?" A nikkei bastard, whose blood and soul got tainted by foreign culture. We can't call them Japanese, they believe in completely different values than us. "I suppose they should be having lunch now. Let's go see this new recruit for ourselves."

"Should we ready ourselves to take action?"

"No, that would only put Meiya-sama in a difficult position. We will just watch, until we can confirm whether he is a threat or not. I'll check his personal information later." The UN should know better, this is a most strange turn of events.

Is this man an infiltrator? Is the UN working with him? To be placed on the 207th Squad so suddenly and without warning despite who its members are, who is this man supposed to be?

We make our way to the third PX, where Meiya-sama's squad takes its meals. As always at this hour it is bustling with sounds of chatter and cluttering of trays. I stand barely outside, watching from the door towards the usual table. Light pouring into the large room, I easily locate the azure shape of Meiya-sama's hair. She seems unhurt, eating without a hint of apprehension. That's a relief, now where is he seated? Is that…

W-What is this? Are my eyes playing tricks on me?!

I rub my eyes and take a moment of pause before looking again, but the sight does not change. The chestnut colored hair, that well defined physique, that face. Someone who's better with a blade than Meiya-sama, despite being so young. Why is he here? No, was he still alive? I thought for sure he was dead.

No, being a shinobi, if he was thought to be dead it would only make his missions easier on him. But then, why is he here? Perhaps I'm overstepping my boundaries right now. No, how do I know it is him? He should be dead, after all.

"Mana-sama? What should we-" I cut Tomoe's question without looking away from the boy.

"You will keep watching over Meiya-sama as you have been doing so far. Report everything he does to me, take any measures you need to take in order to ensure you don't miss a movement he makes. However, do not approach him unless it's absolutely necessary."

"Yes, Mana-sama!" All three of them answer in unison.

"I'll go check the databases and try to ask around with the higher ups. That's all."

They salute me and take their positions watching over Meiya-sama.

I go towards the computers on the library. The place is usually deserted at this hour, only the attendant was here. Rows of shelves full of books, the scent of lingering dust, and pale gray desks with the computers were all one could see. The basic chair wasn't exactly comfortable, however it shall suffice.

Taking a moment to bring the machine out of hibernation, I quickly input my rank and ID, in the screen the message of permission to search appears. I only have S2 level of clearance here and my permission to see documents is limited to what surrounds Meiya-sama's activities, but it should be enough. Now, Cadet Squad 207…

Six members, huh? Last update was yesterday night. So he was the cause of yesterday's fuss. Now, let's see what name are you registered as.

Heh, I knew it. There's no way I would forget you. However, a spy might be borrowing his identity. Now, let's see what your report says, Shirogane.

A sound notifying an error played in the small speakers, a gray box with a large message filled the CRT screen.

[ACCESS DENIED - S5 LEVEL OF CLEARANCE REQUIRED]

"Ahaha… Ahahaha… So it is you!" I hold my mouth shut, crossing a leg over the other as I lean forward.

Nobody else could get this kind of security lock while passing to be a mere Cadet! This would only raise suspicions, especially since you were put in Meiya-sama's squad. That fox wouldn't make such an obvious miss, not with us watching over her. The UN wouldn't put a spy near the members of the 207th Squad with this level of security knowing who would inquire about the matter.

"… So you were alive, after all."

I relax onto the seat despite its square shape not being entirely pleasant, pondering what this means for a moment, running a hand over my hair as I stare at the message on the screen. I cannot help but to smile at this turn of events.

Why were you sent here? Someone of your skill, passing as a cadet… Perhaps it's because of your skillset that you are required here. Did you deceive the UN? No, no one could deceive that fox of a Vice Commander. Then, was there some sort of accord made with her? I should ask around to see what I can glean, any kind of reaction will be enough to give me an idea of your standing in this place. The last thing I want is to obstruct your mission in any way.

"Regardless of the circumstances that brought you here, it is a blessing to know you're still alive." I would have liked our meeting to be in a proper place with the honors you deserve as a member of the Royal Guard, but just knowing you're safe and sound is enough for me. I should not tell the others of your origins, they might slip up when around you.

However, if she sent you of all people, despite we all assuming you were dead… then something unexpected might have happened. I should contact HQ for an update, just in case.

The Remnants He Left Behind

Chapter 8: The Remnants He Left Behind

---

October 23rd. 7:03 PM.

(Hallway near the PX.)

[Takeru]

---

During lunch today the girls asked me about how I got so strong. Meiya was particularly insistent on knowing from where I learned my skills with a sword. Kei looked annoyed to no end, but still said she wanted a rematch. Tama was just in awe at my physical prowess, and Chizuru gave me another talk about teamwork before asking me about tips on how to train and what kind of self training I did. On another note, I'm amazed I managed to keep myself in check even if I can't wipe this silly grin from my face. This time… This time I won't let any of you die.

The lecture wasn't so bad, I'm surprised I remembered all of it. I could answer quickly, and most importantly correctly, all the questions Marimo-chan threw at me. Which were a lot more than I remembered during my previous loops.

It's too early to say, but I think something is different this time. Maybe the girls just annoyed Marimo-chan and that's all there is to it, but I think I'll just ask Sensei some questions today about the things that happened a while ago and about the state of the world right now. I don't really know much about it, but I'm sure I'll notice a change if there is one.

"Shirogane? Hey, Shirogane!" Chizuru was calling out to me.

"Sorry, I was lost in thought. What were you saying?"

"Don't go spacing out like that, you almost went into a different hallway. The PX is this way."

I was so focused I didn't notice. We just got out of the lecture and we were going to have dinner. We waited for our turn and eventually made our way to our usual table. Meiya, Tama and Chizuru sat in front of me, while Kei sat to my right.

"Well, what did you think of your first day here, Shirogane?" Chizuru opens the talks.

"It was fine, I guess. How to say it? The Instructor was more fierce than what I expected."

"… Ahaha, she truly has a strong presence." Her laughter was as forced as mine in front of Dad when I failed many tests in a row.

Though, I was referring to the fact that she's getting too angry at things she usually didn't. And you guys… seem to think that's the norm here, going by that answer and those exhausted faces you're all making. Huh, a difference to the list.

"You also went and bragged in front of her. You did end up proving your point, but I fear that she might have developed a grudge towards you." Meiya gives me a worried look. Is Marimo-chan so vengeful in this loop?

"You're so dead. It was good knowing you." Kei gives me a pat in the shoulder while nodding solemnly, but with a grin on her face.

"What?! What is she gonna do to me?"

"Ayamine, don't scare him like that." Chizuru scolds her, but in a low tone as if to not provoke a fight.

"It's the truth." Kei smirks at me. I think I might have gotten on Marimo-chan's bad side without meaning to.

"Well, too late for regrets now. Whatever happens, happens." Can't really do much about how I act.

I picked at my food, while the others talked about today's lectures. It seems they're having trouble keeping up with the materials this time.

"Anyways, we're almost at the end of October." Chizuru takes a serious tone as she rests her chopsticks onto the table, and the girls look at her in attention. "There's less than a month before the next CCSE. Shirogane, after today's displays I'm sure you can manage just fine. But I'll ask you anyway, do you feel ready to take the test?"

"Of course, more than ready to ace it." An instant and confident reply. This kind of thing doesn't scare me anymore. Nothing could go and ruin the CCSE.

"What about the rest of you?" Tapping her glasses, she looks at 'em.

Kei and Tama give a small, but determined nod. Meiya just smirks while folding her arms.

"A pointless question, huh? Well, thanks to Shirogane we have been reminded of how much we can still improve ourselves. With your help I'm sure we'll be ready to take on anything the test may throw at us. Once Yoroi comes back, we'll catch her up in no time to make sure everyone is on the same level. We'll clear it this time, without fail!"

We all give a nod, Chizuru seems more passionate about leading this time. Another little change to the list.

"By the way… there's just one more question I want to ask you." Her eyes dripping resolve shift into ones with a taint of nervousness as she spoke, a hand went to one of her ponytails.

"What's up?" She closes her eyes, as if she were looking for the right words to say. Where did all her assertiveness from a moment ago went to?

"You don't have to answer if you don't want to, but I'd like to know what prevented you from taking the CCSE with your previous squad. I know it may be a personal matter, so don't feel pressured to answer."

She says that, but all of them are staring intently at me. What reason could have the new recruit, who beat them all with ease, to not have taken the CCSE? I guess I'll just give them more half truths.

"Our training was going fine, everything looked most positive. But I… screwed up, big time."

"You screwed up?" She taps her glasses, arching one brow. "What happened? Did you fail some test? Or did you got into a fight with someone?"

"… I got someone killed." Multiple people, multiple times.

"What?" Her voice turned to just a whisper. All their eyes lost some shades of color as the words sank in.

I take a deep breath, the memories start wringing within me. I choose my words before continuing to speak.

"It was my fears and ineptitude that caused things to end up like that. Had I been more brave I would have acted before stuff got out of control." I look down at my plate, unable to hold their gazes.

I would have killed the Superior before Meiya had to sacrifice herself for me. No, I would have protected my Shiranui better during the defense of the base, and I would have been able to fight in Kashgar instead of just being a spectator. Or I could have got my shit together in Sadogashima, which wouldn't have made Sumika overload, which then would have given me enough time to properly master the XG to do more than just spam missiles and tell Sumika to activate the field.

… I know it's pointless to regret this kind of things, but it doesn't change the fact that it makes me feel like shit. And that's why… after what happened to my world… that I have to make sure that reality doesn't come to pass a second time. It's the least I can do, after fucking up things so badly so many times.

"Shirogane, I…" Taking a sec to caress her air intake-like hills, she spoke slowly. "… don't know what it is that happened but, I do not believe it was your fault. Accidents happen all the time in this environment, and you were just a Cadet at the time."

Meiya trying to cheer me up when I'm getting depressed about her death must be a new level of universal middle fingering. But I promised myself I wouldn't doubt. Not when they're still alive. Taking a sec to inhale, I look up and continue.

"The thing is, my squad was… dissolved. And since I wasn't allowed to get into a TSF I couldn't continue my training alone." Last thing I need is them assuming I was conscripted before.

"And then the Professor reached out to you, to bring you here?" Chizuru asks as she brings a finger to her lips in a pensive gesture.

"Pretty much. So I won't hold it against you if you cannot trust me." Must be pretty hard on them to be training so hard just to be surpassed by a random guy that fell from the sky. I can't expect them to treat me nicely from the get go.

"Don't say that Shirogane-san! You showed us today how much better we can get. Surely you've reached such level of aptitude because… you've been training yourself for this chance, right?" Despite how she almost stuttered and couldn't hold my gaze much, Tama gave me a smile.

"Exactly. While I apologize to have brought unpleasant memories back to you, I assure you that wasn't my intention." She again tapped her glasses, giving me a small bow. Man, they really are super formal over here. "However, Tamase is right. You proved yourself more capable than us, that strength will surely be of great benefit not only to the squad, but for our nation. As a fellow Japanese soldier, I can only praise your dedication to keep honing yourself after such an incident." Determination stared out from Chizuru's gaze, she also acknowledged me as part of the squad.

I scratch my head, I'm not used to being praised so much and being with them like this again is giving my heart a twister of conflicting emotions.

"No, really. It wasn't anything so noble what drove me forward." Just the feeble hope of fixing all the mess I myself made.

"Shirogane, regardless of your motives, your skills speak for themselves." Meiya said, arms folded as usual. "You bested all of us today, and while I don't plan to keep losing to you, I surely am looking forward to our sparring sessions. I believe you should be more proud of your strength, especially after what you had to go through." Always setting me back to the right path with your thoughtful words. Whatever would I do without you, Meiya.

"I just try to stay with my feet on the ground. I know I'm good, but there's someone out there who is better than me, so I can't relax." Not when I know what awaits in the future.

"So serious." Kei rolled her eyes, resting her chin on a hand that had its elbow resting on the table.

"Ayamine, if you're just going to throw one liners then-" Chizuru couldn't finish her sentence, Kei started rapidly talking again.

"That's not bad. But don't push yourself too much, Special-kun." She looked right into my eyes, her brows betraying her poker face and lowering their inner side. "Not when you gave us a new objective to surpass. You just may be the edge we need to pass the CCSE, so don't go depressing yourself. Or I'll beat some sense into you."

The table fell silent. It's really rare for Kei to express herself in this way, even when we dated she didn't speak up like this frequently. While she still had her usual poker face, it was obvious that she was both amazed and perhaps a slight bit bothered by my abilities going by the unblinking intensity of her stare and how quickly she said her words.

"Thanks Ayamine. I'll try not to bring you all down."

"It's the other way around, Special-kun. You gotta bring us up. So NO holding back during training." Her eyes look almost scary, she's very motivated to beat me apparently. I give her a nod while smiling, she looks away as if bored.

"Ahem, as Ayamine said, we could use your help in our training efforts. We'll be counting on you Shirogane." Chizuru says while giving me a smile.

"Yes, let's do our best together Shirogane-san." Tama also smiles at me.

I'm doing the same thing I did after the tournament. I shouldn't let my feelings bring me down so easily, even when it's hard to look at them and not feel guilty. I take a second to clear my mind, and then I return their smiles.

"Yeah, let's do our best. I'll do what I can to help you in your training, as long as it's something I can help with don't hesitate to ask me then."

The rest of dinner was spent on them comparing how much time they lasted against me, and who finished second in the morning jog. It seems I made a good enough first impression, that's one problem less to worry about.

I'm back. I'm truly back, and this time things will go different. They do seem a bit changed to how I remember them, but that just may be because of the years I spent on my world.

Once dinner was over, we all split up. Meiya was going to do some independent training again, Chizuru went to the library, while Kei and Tama decided to play with some beanbags. I told them I had some stuff to sort out and went to the barracks.

Walking on the hallways, I couldn't help but to grin. Feeling as if I had a gust of wind on my back, I breathed in as I picked up speed. Sigh… This went well, after all.

"Cadet Shirogane, wait!" I heard the Instructor calling out to me, so I stopped and looked back.

"Oh, what is it Marimo-chan?" I smiled, since I am in a good mood. And yet, her face twists itself in a second, revealing such an evil scowl.

"… Shirogane, what did you call me just now?"

"Sorry! I have a bad habit of calling people by their first names."

"Okay, but why did you add a -chan to it? Are you making fun of me?!"

No, it's because you're really cute. The way you used to teach us, and how funny your faces were whenever something unexpected happened. Of course, that's nowhere to be found in the you in front of me right now.

"It's just a bad habit I have. I'll try to not do it again, Ma'am." I stand upright, giving her a bow.

"You better not say that again. Now, the Professor is calling for you. You are to go meet with her right now, to the 'habitual place' it seems. Repeat your orders!"

"I'll go meet with the Professor right away!"

"Perfect. That is all." We salute each other and I go my way to the office.

Midway to it, once I was in the elevator, I remembered I left the santa rabbit in my room. I'll bring it tomorrow for sure, I don't wanna risk getting yelled at by Marimo-chan again.

I knock the door as I reached the office, Yuuko-sensei's voice beckons me to enter after she unlocks it. I wonder why she does this, all the other times she had the thing always unlocked.

"Good evening Sensei, what can I do for you?"

"Hey Shirogane, there's something I wanted to show you. Here, look at these papers." She left some pages on top of her desk as she went to the coffee machine.

I go look at the things, there's information about me in them. I suppose this is about this world's me. Lived in a lot of places, no info on his studies or work, no medical records. His death was two years ago, but other than that there's no data on it. Sensei must have erased all the data she could, and is probably asking my opinion on the matter. Does this mean she'll try to make me a different entry in the system? Could she even do-

Click

A sound I recognize very well. A gun is being pointed at me from behind.

"So, 'Shirogane', are you willing to talk now? Or would you be willing to exchange the 'theories' for your life?"

---

[Yuuko]

---

He doesn't move. He must have heard me clearly, is he playing dumb? No, I mustn't let my guard down yet, not until Yashiro confirms or denies my suspicions, even if some of the Valkyries are standing on guard nearby. As dangerous as this is, I can't let other people hear of what he supposedly knows, not even if I could disguise it as a lie…. And he still isn't moving one bit.

"If you give me the silent treatment I'll kill you. It doesn't have to be this way, you know? So, what's it gonna be?" I press my gun to his head.

"What is the meaning of this, Sensei?" All his joyfulness has vanished from his voice, now nothing more than a dry whisper.

"Oh please, stop with the Sensei. We can have a mature talk about this. I'm sure that after all you had to do to get here, you can't just let it end so easily, right?" He takes a deep breath, yet remains unmoving giving me no signs. "What's your answer, 'Shirogane'? Are you willing to talk?"

I press my gun again and he moves his head slightly to a side, making eye contact with me. His cold, sharpened eyes bore into me, and I respond in kind with my own stare. He doesn't flinch and remains standing there.

"So, care to tell me what's going on here, Sensei?" I don't like your tone, you should be scared now.

Someone doesn't know his place here. He tries to turn around, but I push the gun to his cheek.

"Face towards the desk! I am more than willing to kill you if you do not comply."

"Huh, neat. Be my guest, kill me. I'll just loop back, probably." He sounds composed. Did he expect me to aim for his life? Yashiro still hasn't sent anything over the fax.

"Do you have a death wish? Talk back to me one more time, and I'll grant it in the most nightmarish way possible, I assure you."

"Do it."

"… Huh?"

"C'mon, shoot. Go ahead and kill the only person that can help you complete the 00 Unit." The nerve… He hasn't lost his composure, as if he didn't care, then he faces forward again. Maybe he thinks I'll kill him and spare him the questioning? Damn dog of the Shogunate.

"Really? Are you sure? Won't your employer get mad at you?" He's facing towards the desk now, but remains perfectly quiet, his breathing is regular. He should react somehow to this, he isn't a cyborg.

"I don't know what you're talking about."

"Huh, really? Tell me, what do you think about those papers on the table?"

"I suppose they're about this world's me."

"Not about you?"

"No, I told you I came from another world." As much as I would like to believe that… You don't have the theories, and your records speak against that claim.

"You're lying. Bad boy, Shirogane."

"It's not a lie."

"You almost got me to believe you, feeding my pride like that. Telling me something I wanted to hear, hitting me while I'm weak. Well, let's get down to business. Shirogane, who asked you to make the new OS?"

"No one." An instant reply. Nothing from Yashiro's end yet. Is he telling the truth then? Let's press him some more.

"So you wanted that for yourself?"

"You could say that."

"What for? Money? Fame?"

"To help save lives."

"Please stop lying. I'm willing to let you stay here if you tell me the truth."

"What are you talking about?" This time, a hint of annoyance lured in his question.

"Oh, come on now. I already know you're a spy. Drop the pretending already."

"I'm not a spy!" He looks at me again, this time in his eyes were narrowed and his upper face full of wrinkles. You're really getting on my nerves now, boy. I press the gun against his face again.

"Shirogane, who's in charge right now?" He then does something I did not expect. He turned around slowly and faced me, staring at me and the gun's barrel with a solid and sharp stare.

"I don't care about that. I don't know what got into you, but I'm no spy and I'm not your enemy."

"… Really now? Then please answer the question, why did you want the new OS? Who sent you here?"

"I already told you."

Yashiro hasn't sent anything. He stares at me intently, I see no shadow of doubt in him. Is he saying he's truly a Causality Conductor? No, that…

I gulp, not letting go of his gaze. He's enduring the silence quite well. Yet… He claims to have told me the truth.

"Fine, next question. Why did you want to join Squad 207?" If he is a member of the Royal Guard, it would explain why he was so nice to Mitsurugi yesterday and today.

"You already know. I told you-"

"Can you stop with the bullshit, please? I said I'm willing to let you stay if you tell me everything. You must have a reason to be here, and I think we both can profit from the other's help. So Shirogane, unless you want me to leash out against your boss, start speaking. Why are you here?" React, flinch, show me something. You damn dog of the Shogunate, you almost made me delete all your data, had I done that I would have never realized your trap.

No one that lived for sixteen years could have so few pages on their personal profile, you literally had just one page worth of information. Only after digging in the public databases I found more data about you, more precise data about your death to be exact. Then after some hacking and prodding about, I found out you're a member of the Royal Guard. The only question that remains is, why did you come here, 1st Lt. Takeru Shirogane?

If he's here to monitor Mitsurugi, I can let him stay. If these bits of data are from the Shogunate asking for my help in their developments, I can let him stay. So long as he also bows to me and is willing to obey my orders. I can always use more pawns, and the things he brought with him were amazing to say the least.

There is, however, a problem. If he's here to harm me or my research, then I can't keep him alive. So, I have to make sure you aren't an enemy. He didn't have the theories on him after all. That talk about him being from another world was probably false. Maybe it was made up with the leftover data back in the Imperial Research Institute where I was before earning my place here.

… As if something like that could actually happen. The conductor is nothing but a pipeline. I got carried away when in front of a potential ally. My eyelids almost closing, I return his stare. His lips shake slightly.

"I'm not lying. It's the truth!" He sounds really pissed off as he scowls at me.

"Stop wasting our time. For the last time, if you talk now I'll let you stay, under a different deal of course. Who sent you and why?" Was a direct order of the Shogun or from another Regent House? Are you here to keep tabs on me or to kill me? Perhaps to use me to make all these things you brought with you, and later take them to the Empire to claim them as Imperial inventions.

"I already told you. I'm not a spy, Sensei. I came here from another world. Why won't you believe me?"

We stand there, gazing at each other. I would like to believe it, all of it. But the theories weren't in his room. On the off chance that he is an incredibly skilled liar, that can convince himself of his own lies to fool Yashiro, and indeed a Royal Guard my life could be in danger.

You are everything I wanted and more, you gave me solutions to all my problems.

The nationalistic pricks badmouth me? I'll give them a national stealth system.

The UN pressures me? I'll complete the 00 Unit, and give them these training consoles to use in all their bases.

America doesn't want to hand over the XG? I'll show off the new OS, and make them beg for it.

Isn't it odd? That you had all the solutions to my problems? You are too good to be true, Shirogane. When I saw how empty your report was I couldn't believe it. Why would a civilian have so little intel available?

The Royal Guard stationed here came asking about you quite persistently today. That's really suspicious considering that they don't really care about either foreigners or the affairs of the UN. I said you were a foreigner on purpose to have an excuse for the Royal Guard regarding your locked profile here, saying some of your data from abroad was classified. But they asked quite a lot of questions regarding your situation 'here' and not what made you 'special', if it weren't for that I wouldn't have thought to look in their databases about you. 1st Lieutenant Shirogane, KIA in the Invasion of Hiiragi two years ago. An officer of the Guard, despite being so young… Who are you? Why are you here?

So the main question here is, are you a Royal Guard; or a spy passing as him?

There is one thing that is true. You lied too much to me. And you continue to refuse to speak. Did you think I truly am so stupid, you damn saboteur?

"… Let me be frank with you, Shirogane. I went and inspected your room."

"Huh?! Why would… The theories." He said as she narrowed his eyes at me.

"Exactly. You don't have them." I smirk his way, then I return his sharp gaze with my own. "I know that talk about being from another world was all a lie. So, you have one last chance. This is my last offer. Tell me who sent you here and why, and I might consider cooperating with you. Tell me to which organization you answer, where you got these Stallion 2 and Game Guy machines, if the data of the stealth tech is real or not, and I'll forgive your lies until now. So, what will it be? Will you talk, spy?"

There are some Alt. IV supporters back in America, the same ones who pushed for the Shiranui Second to be a reality. If you come from them, but are afraid of revealing your trails, I can help you. If you come from a tech company trying to send me support without the CIA noticing, I can help you. But if you refuse to talk, after all I've said to you, it means you're nothing but a Hidenbug. And I won't allow you to blue screen me.

"I told you… I'm not a spy. I'm truly a conductor." Brows tensing downwards, lips plucked, he returned my gaze squarely.

"Huh, really now? Then, where are the theories?" He tensed up, shivering a bit for a second.

"I… can't give them to you right now."

"Huh… And why would that be? You said we only have until Christmas to produce results, if my memory isn't wrong."

"Because if I hand them over now, you might rush things and make the same mistakes again. And I also want to be more involved this time." Sigh… More lies, perhaps? Yashiro… hasn't sent anything yet. There is a problem, however.

This is too convenient. I am in dire need of help, and in you come with so much aid. Someone who served the Royal Guard, with software that has data of their prized Takemikazuchi. Someone who should be dead, bringing stealth technology of the USA's best craft, the Raptor.

This is too good to be true. But, if he is indeed a time traveler… then I suppose he must have dealt with this in one of those 'loops' he said he took in this world.

"… So, can you explain to me what's up with those papers?" I give him a side glance, staring into his eyes.

"They're from this world's me." Not a second of delay in the answer, huh.

"You do know that you have no proof other than some forged papers, right?"

"I… I mean… I know it's hard to believe but… I'm not a spy. I really come from another world. You of all people should know I'm telling the truth." His words clear, he locks his gaze with mine as he stands without as much tension as he should have.

"Let's say I buy that, for now. If that is the case, I want you to hand over the theories, right now."

"I refuse. If I do, you're gonna rush things and-"

BANG!

Bringing my gun right besides his ear, I shot. A hole burned into the blue flag of the UN in the wall, Shirogane held his ear in pain as he supported himself on the desk.

"If you really have them, you'll hand over the theories right this instant. If you're a spy, you'll talk about your mission here right away. Of course, unless you're a saboteur sent to mess with me." I gave you plenty of chances to speak, I'm putting myself in unnecessary risk here.

Slowly calming his breath, rubbing his ear, he rises from the desk.

"… L-Listen, I can't give you the theories. If you don't fix the flaw in the 00 Unit, the BETA will-"

BANG!

Again, I shot right besides his ear. Again, he yells in pain. Again, I frown at his refusal to speak.

"This is your last chance, speak now or-"

In a split second, he moves quickly and knocks the gun out of my hand. I stumble back, going towards my blackboard, looking for something to defend myself with. But when I turn around, he hadn't moved an inch, he remained quietly looking at me. With tears coming out of his eyes.

"What the fuck is wrong with you, Sensei?!"

"Still calling me Sensei, huh? You really are an-" I stop suddenly as he hit my desk quite hard, sending piles of papers to the floor.

"We don't have the time for this shit, goddammit! I'm not a spy for fuck's sake! I can't hand you the theories, and I can't tell you why because the ripple might screw us over!" His eyes squinted, gritting his teeth, he glared at me. He isn't lying, I don't need Yashiro to know that.

"… Are you telling me you're truly a Conductor?"

"I've been telling you that since the start! You should know that better than anyone else!"

"And where is your proof? If you're not a spy, why do you not want to give me the theories? Humanity's survival is at stake here!" I lash out, not understanding what 'reason' he might have for withholding that intel from me.

Insinuating that I would make a mistake, as if I didn't knew what was at stake… I grit my teeth, feeling anger well up as it hasn't in a long time. If you truly are a conductor, if I shared such intel with you… Are you insinuating I'm not worth your trust?! After all I've done… After all these years… I'll make a mistake? I'll fail? I complete the 00 Unit and… and still fail?! I refuse to believe that is true!

He frowns and hits the desk again, but as he opened his mouth his eyes went down. Closing it tightly, he took a deep breath. Then, he again looked at me, the tension and wrinkles gone from his face.

"Sigh… Look, I know you're in a tight spot, I know what Alt. V means for humanity, but you can't have the theories yet. Not until you can trust in my words, and you also shouldn't kill me because I'll just loop back in time and this timeline might be screwed to failure."

"… And, again, why should I trust in you? How do I know you're not deceiving me?"

He frowns yet again, his hands wringing in anger. However, then he looked down. His shoulders easing up as his breathing returned to normal, he took some seconds to retort.

"… Do you want to know?"

"Huh? So, you're going to talk now, spy?" I smile at him, raising my chin as I spoke to goad him into reacting again, but then his expression changes, shadows make their way to his squinting eyes while he rubs his forehead.

"I guess… I can show you a bit of it if it'll make you believe me, but I'll only show you that and nothing more. Otherwise, the ripple could really screw us up."

"You insist you're a Conductor, then?"

"That's what I am, whether you believe me or not." He shrugs, then sighs as he shakes his head slowly.

A sound startles me, the fax is printing something. It's from Yashiro, so she finally has an answer. Without losing sight of him, I move towards the fax.

A single line was on the paper: 'He's telling the truth'.

… What?

… Huh?

Then… that intel was truly about this world's version of him? He truly is… a living proof of my theory? An ally?

So… I wasn't wrong? My theory was indeed correct? And, he isn't lying? All he brought was indeed true? He's… on my side?

I stared at the paper, mouth half open. Leaning my head back to look up, I bit my lower lip to stop the grin that was forming on me.

An ally… and my completed theories… It wasn't a lie?

But then… then I'll truly make a mistake? My theories are… flawed? After all these years… after being so close… What… But… How…

…

Why?

What does this even… How could I…

"So Sensei," His voice brings me down back to Earth. "Do you really want to see? It's not going to be nice." I turn back to him, he hasn't moved an inch.

"… I suppose." I leave the paper atop the fax, I ruffle my hair while staring at him as I take one very good deep breath. "What exactly are you going to show me to prove that you're not a spy?" He sighs as he folds his arms.

"My memories. With Kasumi's help, I'll show you bits of some important stuff. I don't know what got into you, but I suppose it has to do with you wanting the theories right now. So I'll show you why I don't want to give them to you at the time. I hope that with this you can regain your usual composure."

"So you're saying that… I'll truly make a mistake?"

"Not if you hear me out." He raises his hands slowly, like Yoroi does. "If you listen, you can avoid that outcome. We can't start fighting each other, Sensei. So please don't try to pick up your gun, I'm not your enemy." He seems totally calm, and he even knows of Yashiro's ESPer capabilities.

But I got him to talk about the theories. Let me see if you truly aren't lying. And anyways, there is no justification for withholding that intel from me. If you truly knew a parallel version of myself… you should know I am more than capable of dealing with a mere OS and the theories, even if… there is a flaw in them.

"So you say you have a reason to not give me the theories? Even if we could activate Alt. IV way before the deadline? You do realize that humanity is on the brink of extinction, right? And anyways, where are the theories?" He did say he vanished before a certain mission. Maybe he didn't get to fight much, and after going back to his original BETA-less world he thinks we have time to screw around here.

"Yes, I do have a good reason. But we can't rush it, we need all the firepower we can get if we ever hope to truly end this war." He folds his arms, looking down. "And I do have the theories, but you really should wait a while. We can't screw this up or everything will go to hell again. I'm not willing to repeat that suicide, thank you very much." Huh? He, for just a second, really flared up in disgust. He closes his eyes and exhales through his nose, calming down.

"What do you mean? Do you have a plan to deal with the BETA?" If he indeed does… Why is he keeping quiet?… Does he not trust me? Why?

"It's not much of a plan. It's just a more efficient way of fighting them. I think I did told you that I didn't plan on coming back to this point in time, right?" I nod. Let's hear him out, for the sake of conversation. "So, honestly, I was kinda nervous during our talk. I decided on the spot what to do, to avoid another failure. That's when a simple idea came up. And to make it a reality, we need the XM3 earlier, or at least better. I will give you the theories earlier than before, so we should be clear on that front. Don't worry, I'm on your side." He says, again rising his hands like Yoroi does.

"… So, why can't you give me the theories? I can work on both things without much trouble. I can ask Yashiro to handle the OS, I suppose you already know about her skills, correct?" He nods.

"I do. But that's not why. I want to make sure you're on my side, Sensei."

"… What are you implying?" I couldn't help but frown.

"I won't be your pawn this time. I have my own set of goals right now, I think I told you last time everything went wrong on my end, right? Well, I want to make sure you are willing to help me once everything is said and done." What does that even mean? Why would I not repay him for his services?… What happened between you and that parallel me? "I also want to be more involved and help out with stuff. And I guess I need a good explanation for your actions right now."

"… So you want power? I can give you that without much issues, if you prove yourself useful." He narrows his eyes ever so slightly. "However, what's that about not being my pawn? Are you saying you won't obey my orders?" He raises both of his hands, waving them slowly from side to side.

"I will. But I also want to do more stuff than just follow you around, even if most of the time I'll have to do just that." He seems sincere, and doesn't show a hint of hostility despite what I did.

"So… Can you tell me what your goals are? Because it seems like they're in the way of humanity's victory to me right now. And if we are to work together, I need to know you are on my side." If he's putting his own salvation above the greater good, I'll just lock him up and force him to cooperate. We do have potent drugs on the base, after all.

"Hmm… I'm fighting to someday be able to live how I want to live after we deal with the BETA." So he is putting himself above the planet's fate. But he said after we deal with the BETA. What is he thinking about, behind that relaxed face?

"How do you mean? You want to get rich or to scale the ranks? Do you just want to run back to your world as fast as possible?" I smirk at him, waving a hand up.

He crosses his arms and purses his lips a bit. His eyes became sharp as mine do in the reflection of a monitor whenever my tests crash, and frankly I thought for a second that he was going to pounce at me, however he takes a breath through his nose and calms down.

"I won't run away. And if I have to climb the military's ladder I will. But that's not my goal. You might think I'm crazy, but I want to live in peace. And I want to give a taste of that peace to as many people as I can."

"… So you desire to end the war and bring about an era of peace?" That's silly. Only a kid would believe in that.

"I would like to have a sliver of it, if it's possible. I know that sometimes that happiness is not allowed to exist, but precisely because of that I want to regain it and share it. We probably will always have small conflicts and we will have to make many sacrifices along the way, but I want to end any and all large scale wars on this world. No point in saving humanity from the BETA if we can't later save humanity from itself."

"… Saving humanity from itself, huh?" So he's thinking on the aftermath already. Did we get sabotaged by another army in his previous experience?

"That's my end goal. I want to restore peace to my world, and see if I can leave this one alive after seeing with my own eyes that all our sacrifices weren't in vain. And for that, I need to be sure we are on the same team." He takes some steps towards me, looking straight into my eyes.

I see no kid in him. Only the fire of someone who went through hell, only to have to come back to it. I must contain myself and not smile, because I am so happy to confirm he really is my ally. Even if his goal sounds terrible impossible to achieve, and even if this does confirm my theories are in need of a revision.

"So, are you willing to listen now; or are you going to blow my head off when I turn around?"

"… I guess I can give you the benefit of the doubt for now. Well then, I'll call Yashiro." I send a fax to her, I suppose she won't take long. "Now, can you tell me what are you going to show me?" The activation of the 00 Unit? The launch of the XG? What will it be?

"The reasons why I don't want to hand over the theories to you right now and why I want to be more involved in everything." He must like this, having me at the edge of my seat. "Can you tell me why you pointed a gun at me? And why you thought I was a spy?"

"I showed you the papers already. I got suspicious, is all. You're too good to be true, you brought me much more support than I've received in these last few months."

"You're telling me that all I brought made you suspicious?"

"Yes, you knew too much about the Alternative Projects, and carried never before seen tech with you. Maybe you're from the CIA…" I try to probe, just in case. But he frowns as he crosses his arms.

"I'm not an American, and I'm not a spy. I know you need to be on your guard, but I'm not your enemy. I'd like it if you never ever pointed a gun at me again."

He doesn't seem to be lying, Yashiro also said he was telling the truth. Can I… believe it? Is he really here to help me? Well, no need to be impatient. Yashiro should… Oh, there she is. Entering slowly, she comes up to us looking as expressionless as always.

"Yashiro, this is Takeru Shirogane. I believe I explained what he wants of you." She nods slowly.

"Yes, leave it to me."

"Hello, Kasumi. You don't have to force yourself much if you can't, it's just a few moments I want to show Sensei." She gave him a good look, taking a single step back. "Let's get along from now on, yes?" He approached her so calmly and offered a handshake quite earnestly, showing no hesitation at all. She took his hand after a second, he shook it softly with a smile.

So he doesn't fear Yashiro for being an ESPer? She seems to be interested in him, considering how she's staring right now. She also hasn't reacted badly, so I suppose he truly isn't our enemy.

"Well, let's get this done. Yashiro, it's all yours." She comes by my side, still holding Shirogane's hand, and then grabs my own. I recall her saying that physical contact made it easier to send images to other people.

"Both of you, please close your eyes. Shirogane-san, please focus on what you want to show her. Professor, you just remain calm." Easy enough.

"Kasumi, you don't have to be so formal with me. Takeru is fine." He seems to not like it when people address him so formally, but if he's friendly to Yashiro I won't object. Maybe if they become friends I'll rely on him to help her as well.

"… Very well. Then, please close your eyes."

Closing my eyes, the darkness envelops me. Then a faint light appears, distant, like a small star in the evening sky. In a sudden flash, I see shapes taking form, sounds slowly becoming clear. A tingly feeling spreads in the back of my head for some moments.

Then, in a sudden burst of colors, I begin to see the inside of a cockpit, orders and shouts blooming on my ears. Once everything came into focus, I couldn't help but to hold my breath at what I was seeing.

Yokohama Base was being overrun by BETA, that were on the Reactor. Someone got killed in the control panel just now. Shirogane seems to want to attack the BETA but someone, that I believe is Hayase, stops him from doing so.

BETA in the control panel… all over the Reactor… if this is true then, what about the rest of…

This can't be… The base couldn't… How did… I can't form words for a moment.

"… For how long were we fighting during this incident?" I manage to ask.

"One night." Shirogane's voice echoes nearby. One night? A single night did this to my base?! "This is a cause of the flaw I told you about. Of course, that's not all that went wrong last time." His voice bitter, I could feel the needle aimed at me.

Everything gets distorted into a different image slowly taking shape. Now what? A wrecked TSF? Why is he looking at the ground in this way? Hmm… He failed a mission, perhaps? What does this… Wait, is that Marimo's voice?

I could hear parts of something Marimo was telling him. Sounding encouraging, almost motherly, she tried to get him back up. Nothing like how she's being these days. Sigh… If he made her so proud, then I suppose he must have done something right. Perhaps, is this the aftermath of that incident?

But then, he turned around.

And I saw everything going red. And Yashiro let go of my hand.

But I saw it clearly.

An eyeball rolling on the ground.

A bunch of teeth splattered on the soil.

Flesh bombarded and teared apart.

And a BETA. A Soldier-Class had… eaten Marimo.

… Huh? What the hell was that?

Marimo was… eaten? In my base? Under my watch? You're telling me… You're telling me… No, why would… Ugh… This is… This is impossible! How could this happen in my base?! I would never let this happen! Feeling myself about to shout, I bite my lips as I open my eyes, looking at him while grinding my teeth onto one another.

"What was that about, Shirogane? Was that… real?"

"Yes, it is. That was your fault, Sensei." His bitterness was now obvious, he remained with his eyes closed.

Yashiro had taken many steps away from us, she was looking down. Her lips slightly shaking, she hugged her sides.

"What does that mean?" That makes no sense. Why would I risk Marimo's life like that? She's… Marimo is… "This better not be a joke, Shirogane." He, however, doesn't change his expression nor does he look away once he opens his eyes.

"You released the BETA upon the base. Because you said we needed to be more serious about the war."

"I… released the BETA? What are you talking about?"

"You have some… I dunno, research thing in the underground, right?"

"… So, you're saying that did happen?" He nods, his brows narrowing.

"Yes, it did. Do you want to see more?"

"… Yashiro, can you?" She flinches as I asked it, but she quickly grabs our hands again, eyes closed and still hanging her head.

After I close my eyes and feel that same intrusive, piercing, tingly feeling on my head, another flash of light appears in my view, and then I see our training grounds during the afternoon. Littered with explosions and screams.

Lasers burn the sky, Grapplers and Destroyers run rampant through the training grounds killing many soldiers in a matter of seconds, the operators ordering them to hold their ground despite the fact that such orders are clear suicide.

I did this, you say? Why? I released the BETA? This is… This can't be! I would never risk my crew's lives so easily!

"… Why would I do such a thing, Shirogane?" And how does this relate to the theories?

"You told me you wanted to show us the reality of the frontlines." Clearly disgusted, he spoke slowly. "That the base was too relaxed despite what was at stake. And that those who died were worthless anyways. It did bring the result you wanted and you were right, I guess. I still don't agree to it.".

I see. If it got me the result I wanted, then I'm not surprised I did that. Yes, I would do anything to get… Anything… Even… if Marimo had to die for it.

I can't help but claw at my palms. Is this how it is? I have to sacrifice everything to get what I want? I can't even keep my only friend alive? Is… this what must be done? If it is, then I would… do it. I would, no, I have to. Otherwise… everything else would have been for nothing. Inhaling sharply through my nose, I ask my doubt away.

"But what does this has to do with the theories? I suppose we did gain something other than a new attitude from this. Why did I do this?"

"It allowed you to… tune the 00 Unit." His voice cracked. "I'd like to avoid this, if possible. We can't expect different results if we do the same things again, right?"

"Well… But how does this-"

"Now, now. Don't get impatient. There's a few more things left. Are you still fine, Kasumi?"

"… Yes."

"I see…" So he does worry about Yashiro, huh. "Then, let's see…" He groans, the images in my vision fade, I'm back to seeing a distant star.

After a moment where Shirogane keeps groaning to himself, the light again becomes stronger, a vortex twists the visage. Another flash of colors, I see…

An image of me in a weird outfit drinking alcohol appears.

What is this?! That's not me! I would never… What did she say? It's over? No, that… Alternative IV is cancelled? 'I wasn't cut to be the Holy Mother', huh. If I used that symbolism… then…

"That's from my first loop. When I was only a Cadet and couldn't help you complete Alt. IV. That's what happened when you failed."

"I see… What happened afterwards?"

"We were told Alt. IV was scrapped, the 207th Training School was disbanded, Marimo-chan was transferred to another base. A lot changed in this base, but me and my squad remained here and weren't sent to the frontlines." His tone relaxes and slows down as the drunken me vanishes from my sight. I sigh in relief, feeling my hands shaking despite my attempts to calm them down.

"So… How does this relates to the theories?" I open my eyes and look at him, who also returned my gaze this time.

"Well, this should show you I truly do come from another world."

"… Or that you have some messed up fantasies about me."

"Guh…" Hm? Why did he… What an odd reaction. Huh… I didn't expect to hit the mark with a joke, of all things. "Well, anyways, I know how hard this is on your shoulders. And in case you're still doubting my resolve towards our goal of saving humanity, I can show you a bit of what came with Alt. V."

"Hmm… I suppose." Not many have seen what an actual G-Bomb explosion looks like. Let's see if he's truly not a liar. "Yashiro, are you still able to do it?" She nods, truly slowly, as she again grabs our hands, looking pale this time.

"Now, I don't remember much from it, so things may look a bit… distorted." His voice shivered as if he had received a jolt. What happened to him in that parallel world? "You're still fine, right Kasumi?"

"… Yes."

"For real?" She nods, he curves his lips for a moment before closing his eyes.

I close my eyes as well, yet another distant star, yet another flash of colors. A wasteland appears before me, again from inside a cockpit, as a thousand screams bloom on my ears. Ugh… It hurts just to listen. I can feel my eyes squinting as if I wasn't wearing protective googles while on our manufacturing aisle.

What is this madness? The radar on the cockpit shows an impossible amount of BETA nearby. There are many channels open, people asking for help and others being devoured. Softly biting my lips, I slow down my breathing as the madness continues. Then, the vision halts as he looks back. A black fire engulfs BETA and TSFs alike. A G-Bomb, a real one.… No, not just one. The sight was enough to make me retch.

"… What is this?"

"Operation Iceberg, the prelude to Alt. V. I don't really remember much from that, but let me tell you that the world was screwed."

"How so? What happened? A war over natural resources?" If all of Europe became inhabitable…

"I don't know for sure, but I think all of Eurasia ended up underwater. Of course, the Empire also ended up submerged, I think."

"What? All of… Underwater?!"

I do know how dangerous the G-Bombs are, I saw the readings of Ground Zero and made some equations to determine the long lasting damage they could cause after been stationed here all these months, but all of Eurasia… This is far more dangerous than I thought.

"I can't exactly recall all of Iceberg, but as you can see… it was a massacre. We were used as meat shields to facilitate the massive bombing of the hives."

"Is that so? And what else do you recall?"

"Well, that the day after that, Operation Babylon was executed, dropping more G-Bombs than what I showed you onto all hives in the world. As I said before, I don't really remember that very well, but that mess caused everything to go to hell, real fast."

"… I can see what you mean." Such recklessness… It is no wonder such collateral damage was inflicted to the planet.

"… Do you want to see now why I want us to take our time and not rush things?"

"Of course!"

After another flash of light, I see the inside of a cockpit. He's between some cliffs, Destroyers rushing by his side. What could this… Hm? The TSFs near him are… those of the Valkyries. No other UN force has Shiranuis in the Empire, after all. Is this the Sadogashima mission of that 'last time' of his?

Then, suddenly, the XG comes into view as it charges its cannon. Lasers try to take it down, but the Rutherford Field deflects them, and then it fires. The loud explosion shakes his view, and almost all the BETA in the radar vanished in the light. The beam toppled the monument of the Hive… It worked?! The XG is destroying the Sadogashima Hive! It takes a second shot perfectly. Look at that beam, all my efforts… are not in vain.

Is this the mission where Shirogane's squad dies? What's the problem with this? What about that mistake he spoke of before? If the XG destroys the Hive, then there should be no-

The XG suddenly crashes. And then, from a different location, I see it as it explodes.

Just like that, gone in a matter of seconds in a giant black orb.

Then, the light fades and I return to my office. Yashiro was petting Shirogane, who was rubbing his forehead as he groaned while supporting himself onto my desk. She was also looking pale, her breathing rugged as if she had been running delivering reports.

"Is that good enough for you, Sen-"

"What happened?! What caused it to fall?! Tell me!" I grab him by the collar and start shaking him, he puts his hands over mine softly, trying to stop me.

"I can't tell you yet. But you should be able to fix the flaw now that you will know about it. My plan will get us better results than all what you saw."

"Really? How are you so sure your plan will work?" He looks right back at me, tensing his brows.

"I can show you something else, but only one more. And no more questions, we can't risk a ripple to ruin our efforts."

"I know that! But to see it fall so easily…" Of course I don't know what exactly happened and why the me of that world let the XG explode, but it's still frustrating. "Then do it already. Show me whatever it is now." He closes his eyes as Yashiro grabs our hands again.

After the flash of light, I see myself presenting another XG to Shirogane. So we did get both XGs that time. I suppose he was… telling me the truth since the start. Then, I see all the people lying in the hallways of Yokohama Base, some dying, some gravely hurt, as he and the members of the 207th Squad aid Kyozuka-san deliver food to the wounded.

… My base got destroyed. When did this happen? Is this when I released the BETA? No, this has to be the aftermath of what he first showed me. When the BETA got to the Reactor.

Was there… nothing I could do? If so then, what is this flaw in the 00 Unit? What could… cause such a thing?

A flash of light after, I see Shirogane and Yashiro boarding the second XG. So we did manage to modify its cockpit, huh. Where are they going, though?

Yet again, the scenery changes. The monitors in front of him display images of an overload. Wait, what happened? Why is he showing me so little about this mission?!

Shirogane is crying, his eyes are full of tears. The radar was empty, his squad got wiped out. He was forced to overload the Particle Cannon before escaping, it seems. But what was his mission? Where?

"Shirogane, why are you not showing me as many details this time?"

"… The important part comes now." He said, his tone lacking any emotions.

Is that the 00 Unit there? So I did complete it. Left in a pod, the 00 Unit was also in the control cockpit along those two. Why is it not moving? What happened? And what's that thing in her hands?

"Sumika-san is dead. Your fight is already over." Yashiro said to him then. The sight seemed to vanish for a moment, she must not have taken that well. He then hugged the 00 Unit and broke down in a never ending stream of tears, screaming a name.

Sumika… The name of the brain. The 00 Unit… broke down? His fight is over? Shirogane didn't have to keep fighting? What happened to his world then? No, wait, this means that…

… We lost everything? All the Valkyries, both XGs, the 00 Unit… And then everything went wrong on his end. But, how did things turn out?

Again I'm back to the office. He lets out a long sigh as he goes to sit in the sofa, covering his face as he futilely tries to stop his tears. Yashiro seems exhausted too as she gasps for air, shaking all over, probably because of what she heard just now.

"See? That's what's gonna happen if we rush things again." He says as he holds his face, hunched over. "You don't want… both XGs exploding and the 00 Unit breaking down, do you?"

Of course I don't. I didn't sacrifice so much to have it end like that. But I'm lacking context. I suppose that mission went well, with how much we sacrificed then, and that he's here due to… whatever happened in his home. Now I know he truly came from another world and that he fought to the bitter end for us, but, can I trust in him? Will he keep his resolve? I don't know exactly what happened, but if he's faced with certain death or a cruel choice, what will he-

"I can show you… that I will be on your side, even if it means marching to hell. So that you don't go pointing guns at me again." He's looking at me, again standing up and coming closer.

"What do you mean?"

"Do you want to see? Do you want definitive proof that I'm your ally?" After holding his gaze for some seconds I nod. Yashiro again holds our hands, this time with some hesitation. "Don't worry, Kasumi. I won't show you nothing bad this time." He forces a smile, she nods, after a while.

After closing my eyes once more, my vision again is assaulted by light. I slowly start discerning patterns on the walls, some shelves and an old desk.

"Because I want you to live, Sensei." What? Where is this? It's… my old lab back at Sendai? What is Shirogane doing here?

"That's the most stupid reason you could have to give me this. You do know how valuable this is, right?" I'm holding some sort of passport, giving him a bored look. What is this?

"I think you should go in the shuttle, humanity needs your genius to survive." Shuttle? Is this about Alternative V? The me in the image looks down as she sighs, shoulders dropping slowly, defeat imprinted in her eyes.

"Shirogane, it's over. I couldn't find the solution to-"

"To Alternative IV. You can still look for another solution." He says so confidently, with much more energy than he has now.

"Another? What do you mean?"

"The BETA might one day reach the new planet, and since we know there's hostile life out there the possibility of another alien race attacking us is very real. Your fight is not over yet!" Shirogane said with a conviction strong enough to move mountains. Why did he believe in me so much?

"Are you sure you're not just being selfish?"

"Of course I am being selfish. Because I want you to live, above anyone else. I know you'll eventually find a solution, and when you do I can only imagine what kind of crazy stuff you'll do to get the Earth back." I see his wide smile in a reflection of a glass. He has such blind faith in me, but why? No, how did this happen? Why is he giving that passport?

He did react when I threw a jab at him before. Did he… No, even if he saw me in such a way, why would he give me his seat? What could I have done for him to receive this gesture?

… Why would he care? I lost in that world… What could he stand to gain from this?

"What about me, though? Have you stopped to think how I felt?" I ask, leaning my cheek onto a palm.

"You always took care of me since I arrived in this world. C an you let me take care of you, just this once?" Shirogane… Why did you… give me your seat? Why did he care so much?

Wasn't he disappointed, disgusted to see me breaking down in alcohol? If I failed… Why take my side? If I was in Sendai, it means the UN made me collaborate with Alt. V after I lost my project. They wouldn't let me simply walk away, and they wouldn't let me die either. Knowing how they do things… I don't doubt I would have shouldered the burden instead of acting tough, risking any retaliation towards Yashiro, Marimo, or my sisters. But then… He still supported my ideas after that?

"Hehe, seems like the little kid became a man. And this is not the first time you 'take care' of me." The me in my vision smirks as she gets up, getting closer to him.

What does that mean? Why is he blushing like that? He broke eye contact and seems to be scratching his head.

"You were just… stressed that day. It doesn't count."

"Huh, well, it's not like I can just reject this when you put so much faith in me. And considering all the 'invitations' to Hawaii I've received…"

"Hawaii? What's up with it?"

"Don't worry about it, you just spared me from that. Shirogane?"

"Yes?"

"I swear to you now, I'll find a way to eradicate the BETA even if it takes me my whole life to do so. So don't you go dying out there until I come back."

He gave me his place in the shuttle, so that I could keep doing my research safely? Then, that's why he had to take part in that operation? He could have ran to safety, and yet… He chose to let me live. He gave me a pass, so that I had my freedom to say no to the UN's demands?

… When he could have saved himself, he went as far as come to Sendai just to give this to me?

"I suppose I can't, now that you've ordered me not to, ahaha."

"Haha, you truly are an idiot." The me in his vision got even closer, filling his sight. I smiled, regaining some semblance of light in my eyes. "… An interesting idiot."

My vision abruptly returns to my office. What was that? Why was he… so confident in me? To give me his place in the Migrant Fleet, to go look for my old lab…

If that happened after Alt. IV was canned, he would have had to look for me on his own, despite having no contacts whatsoever in this world. He would have to gain the authorization to meet with me again, despite the fact that I was surely put on lockdown until I collaborated with Alt. V. Maybe Mitsurugi, Yoroi, or some of my supporters helped him somehow? But, even so, he still put me above his own safety. To give me one last chance.

"Was that… enough for you, Professor?" Yashiro looked exhausted. Sending images is very taxing on her, I can't imagine how hard it must be to link memories to others.

There's also the matter of what she had to see. Considering what happened to Marimo and the breakdown of the 00 Unit, I should have her rest for tonight.

Shirogane's eyes squinted as tightly as mine did all these past days when I stayed up until dawn as I couldn't find a solution, he was again rubbing his head. I know that face, I don't want him suffering from a migraine, so let's fix them up.

"Yes, that will be enough. Let's take you both to the medical bay."

After doing some check ups, both of them got better after taking a protein shake and eating something sweet. We made our way back to the office without speaking, while I gathered my thoughts of all I just saw.

He and Yashiro each sit in a sofa as I returned to my chair behind my desk.

"Shirogane I'm going to ask you some questions, can you answer them?"

"Yeah, sure." His voice is but a sliver of his normal tone. He must not be used to the toll of an ESPer.

"You won't hesitate if you have to take a cruel choice?"

"No."

"Even if that means that you won't be able to save everyone?"

"… I know that the perfect timeline doesn't exist. I'm here to try and save them, but I also know how hard that actually is. I won't doubt when the time comes for me to bloody my own hands, Sensei." I like the shine in his eyes, how he could speak without stuttering under my gaze.

"Then, why did you want to join Squad 207? If you wanted to help me, you could have accepted my offer to join the Alt. IV team."

"I already told you. We need all the firepower we can get, and I want to help them be as strong as they can be for the future."

"Even if you'll end up going back to your world?" Why bother about what's left here if you'll end up leaving anyways? I can see why you would like to help after all you've gone through, but this isn't your world.

"I may not be able to ever go back." His gaze drops to the floor, again shadows cover his face.

"What? Why?"

"Because… Due to my status as a Causality Nucleus, and thanks to all the loops I've taken, my world isn't free from the causal effects. So, my world's you told me that… I might have to sever my connection to my original world and stabilize myself here, becoming part of this world forever. That's one of the ways to reach my goal. So, I might end up here for the rest of my life." Hunched over, he lets his arms rest on his legs as he sighs.

Huh… The more I hear, the more I want those theories. But I can't strain my relationship with him any further. He must be offended I did this to him and is merely minding his temper to not ruin our partnership. I also can't risk the BETA swarming the base now. We don't have the XG and, like he said, I rather it not explode on its first mission.

Plus… I look up, a hand on my chin. If he managed to have a parallel me trust in him to the point of letting him pilot an XG, I suppose he did become an invaluable asset to her. It's in my best interests to keep him safe and sound then. For the good of Alt. IV, of course.

"Alright. I get it, so that's what you want me to help you with." He nods twice as he crosses his arms. "Well then, do you know what's up with the records of the other you in this world?"

"No, you never told me anything about him. You only told me he was dead, but I don't know anything about his life."

I see. So that's why he didn't knew he was a Royal Guard and why the Shogunate came after him in the other worlds. If he was merely a normal boy or a desperate child trying to change the future, I may have realized he wasn't a spy. Being so calm and bringing so much help almost played against him.

"Why did the XG crash at Sadogashima? Can you at least tell me something about that?" I need to know, what is this fatal flaw? And, how can I fix it? Do I need something from overseas? A specific type of G-Element?

"I'll tell you just a bit, to quench your curiosity. You got everything done, but you missed something in the 00 Unit and that caused the BETA to outsmart us. I also made Sumika unstable by remembering something, and that almost ruined our mission." He closes his eyes, clawing at his forearms, grimacing again.

"… What? The BETA… outsmarted us? What do you mean?" He strokes his chin as he leans back in the sofa.

"They started to use our tactics, that's how they almost destroyed the base." What the… But how did that happen?

Even with the tried and tested hypothesis of the nineteen days delay where they develop countermeasures to our tactics that was proved through Alt. III, there is no way the BETA could have adapted our methodologies to use them against us in a mere two months. We can't even communicate with…

A flaw in the 00 Unit. The BETA using our tactics right after I complete it… Two-way communication, perhaps?

"… And what about making Sumika unstable?"

"She got jealous of a memory and ended up overheating. That's why… we had to explode the first XG." He sighs, again hunching over.

So we couldn't use the second XG to defend the base, huh? Model D shouldn't be complete yet, if my intel isn't wrong. Considering what we know of the subject's mental state, I do see it happening. It also means he managed to make the 00 Unit human enough to have it feel jealousy despite the trauma the subject went through.

And, if all our efforts were ruined by this flaw in my theory, then that caused the base to be overrun. Maybe that last mission… He said suicide before. Considering how that extremist faction has been lobbying as of late…

"So, that's why you wanted me to take my time? To not rush things and deal with these problems throughly?"

"I thought that if I gave you the theories right away, you'd rush things like before to get results out faster. And someone didn't want to listen today." I ignore his sarcastic remark as I lean back into my seat. Because he's right. I would have tried to get results out as soon as possible.

"I see. We'll keep our deal then. I won't rush things this time, I'll reevaluate my whole theory throughly before activating the 00 Unit.

And don't worry, we'll make Sadogashima go right this time." He nods, finally smiling again.

"Okay. Can I ask you some questions now?" He leans forward, entwining his fingers together.

"That's fair, I guess. What is it?"

"Why did you do it?" His gaze bore into me. His brows furrowed, as if multiple EM waves fused and were melting everything within his eyes.

"Let me start by explaining why I chose to threaten you. I was overjoyed after hearing the morning reports from my engineering teams, all the data you brought is definitely going to yield spectacular results. So I thought I'd deal with your records as you asked me."

"Does that mean you weren't planning on stealing the theories?"

"No, I still wanted to take a look at them." He groans, crossing his arms. "Not only I would have reached my so desired answer, but I also would confirm you were on my side. You don't know how reassuring it is to know you're my ally. Right now I don't really have many on my side."

"What do you mean? Aren't you a super important person here?" He seems puzzled at my words. What does he think I am? He should know how things went in that other world… Or maybe I left him in the dark since he wasn't of much help?

"I am important, yes, but I've lost much support due to those stupid politicians. The UN and the Empire's relations are really tense right now, and me being originally an Imperial researcher puts me in the eye of many detractors." I fold my arms and sigh, my tongue lashing within as I remember all those insufferable meetings. "Imperial people say that I sold myself to America, that I betrayed Japan. Some in the UN say I might go maverick and give my research's results to the Empire. Everything took a turn for the worse after the last joint operation on the Korean peninsula. Didn't I tell you this last time?" Maybe I didn't trust him that much before? Or was he focused solely on completing Alt. IV?

"Huh? I don't remember anything about an operation there. Or about you being in problems because of politics."

"You don't? Maybe it turned out differently last time?"

"Can you tell me about this?"

"Do I have to? It has little to do with the matter at hand." He groans a bit.

"Yes, please do." Sigh…

"That mission was supposed to be a distraction upon the 20th Hive, part of a culling operation to help the forces in the Sakhalin front. But the Japanese soldiers got overconfident and insisted on continuing to attack the Hive. The American troops, that were the lifeline in the operation with their covering fire, retreated after the mission was declared finished. The Royal Guard's and the IJA's pilots ended up alone surrounded by BETA, after both the UN and American armies retreated, despite being warned to pull back."

"This sounds like the perfect nightmare. Why didn't they retreat?"

"The commander of the Imperial Forces was a young man from one of the Regent Houses. He inspired the troops with a speech about how they could change the course of the war that day. Of course he was wrong, they didn't have enough supplies. All of them died, and the nationalistic faction in the Empire used this accident to 'prove' that the UN and USA don't care about Japan. Since then, many members of the Parliament and the Regent Houses have started to voice their opposition about the way in which the UN and US treat the Empire, some VIPs included in that group. Thanks to this, many bilateral projects have been halted. The deal for the XG, the production of the Shiranui Second, the delivery of spare parts for many TSFs. That also got in the way of my negotiations for support. The few allies I still have can do nothing either because they're in a difficult political position or because they can be branded as 'traitors to the Empire'. Is that enough for you?" He nods as he looks to the ceiling.

"This is totally different from what happened last time, I never heard this kind of thing from you before."

"I see. Back to the point then. When I read your report and saw that there was so little information, I couldn't help to doubt you. You were too good to be true, you ticked all the boxes. You gave me an answer to all of my problems, you gave me proof of my theory being right, you offered your services to me. Really, you're a godsend to me right now. You suddenly appear before me and solve everything, just like that. Then I saw your records, and I started doubting you."

"You mean you thought I was a spy because of that?"

"Yes, I was sure you were trying to take advantage of me using my problems as bait to later sabotage me from within. Of course, I don't believe that anymore after seeing those… incidents."

"So, that means you'll let me help you from now on? No gunshots involved?" Again his eyes narrow and stare right at me.

"Depends. What do you mean by that? If it's just following my orders, that's what I was planning for you from the start."

"No, I mean, that you let me voice my opinion and share my plans and ideas with you. I know last time I didn't really help with anything, but this time I do want to try to make a difference. I don't want you to just pretend we are equals, I want you to see me as one, if you deem me worthy."

"So you want me to give you authorization to do 'stuff' if it's profitable for Alt. IV somehow?"

"Yes. Of course, some things, like the consoles, might not be exactly related to Alt. IV, but I want you to hear me out when I come to you for aid or with a serious idea." That's not something you should ask, I welcome all the help you can give, so long as it works in my favor. If two other versions of myself trusted in you, I suppose it is in my best interests to have you close.

"Yes, so long as we have the time and resources for whatever it is you want to do. So long as you work with me, humanity's survival will always be your first priority. Understood?"

"Of course. Next, can I trust you to not go doing things behind my back if they involve me or my squad?"

"Didn't you say before that you're willing to bloody your own hands?" His gaze turns stern, and I see him clenching his fists.

"I want none of that bullshit, Sensei. I know results come first, but I want you to at least inform me of your plans. If you back-stab me, I won't cooperate with you anymore. Especially after this little incident."

I hold his gaze but he doesn't flinch. He leans back moving his face slightly to one side, and continues talking more calmly than before.

"Once you finish the XM3 and I can tell you everything, I want no secrets between us. I won't hesitate to do what's necessary to fulfill my mission, but if I can't trust you, I won't follow your orders. Even if humanity's salvation comes first, I have my own goals as well."

He thinks he can demand such things from me? Why should I report what I do to him? Even if he knows much… He smiles a bit as he rests his chin on his palm.

"Give and take, right? If I see you're not taking me into account, I'll take that as a sign that our partnership came to an end. I'll say it once more, I am not your pawn. I am your partner in this."

He then remains silent, waiting for my answer. I leave the silence hanging, to see if he'll back down, but he doesn't say a thing.

"I guess I can make you my bodyguard officially, and if you prove useful I can treat you like my right hand. But that goes both ways, if you do something against Alt. IV I'll do everything in my power to end your life. Was I clear?" He gazes at me with half closed eyes and then shakes his head.

"You seem to forget that I can loop back in time, Sensei."

"Believe me, I can make you go through a fate worse than death." I'm sure not even he knows of-

"You mean erasing my existence, perhaps?"

"… How much do you know of that?"

He then tells me that, due to the conductor's influence, erasing someone means that people will slowly forget who said person was, losing all their memories of them starting with the 'lighter' and more recent memories. Of course, if he was involved with the 00 Unit I may have mentioned it to him. Since he had to take care of the subject, I must have told him of how this 'Sumika Kagami' was erased as a collateral effect of the G-Bombs. I suppose I truly did trust in him much, to have told him this much.

… However, why is he grimacing? What caused his voice to drop down so suddenly? Could he… have experienced it first hand? Did I… erase him in one of his prior experiences? Is that why he has been so reluctant to trust in me? If so, then…

"… I suppose everything has been clarified now." I nod his way, he leaves the grim expression behind. "Both of us need the other, so I guess I can give you that reassurance. I won't hide things from you, so long as they concern you or your squadmates. Or the Alt. Program. And I also won't harm you, as long as we're on the same team. Is that good enough for you?"

"Yes, that'll do." He nods, losing the tension on his shoulders. "Ok, last thing. I want you to let me handle the 00 Unit after it's started."

"What do you mean?" His gaze doesn't waver, but the fire within did. What did I do when we activated the 00 Unit that caused this in him?

"I want you to let me tune it. That was my role after I gave you the theories last time, and it's something I want to do my way this time. I'm sure I can do it, now that we have the second theory and I already experienced it."

"… You do know you're talking about humanity's hope, right?"

"Yes. But I still want to do it my way. Now that I'm a more powerful Nucleus I might have an easier time, but anyways, I want you to promise me that." If it will put him at ease, I guess I can wait and see where this goes.

Not like I have a choice, going by her reactions to his name yesterday. And, after seeing those memories, I suppose he did a fine job before. Then, that means he should fare better this time, perhaps he even has a clue on how to hasten the process.

"Alright. I'll let you take care of the 00 Unit. So, are you on my side, Shirogane?" He gives me a side glance, narrowing his brows for a moment.

"Of course. You need me to protect and tune the 00 Unit, I need you to fix the problems of my world and get power to reach my peace. Our interests are in alignment again, even if I still don't agree with some of your methods." He folds his arms, sighing. "But you're the only one who'll believe me, the only one I can talk to freely about these things. I came here for you Sensei, I need your help. I'm willing to let this little incident go if you can finally believe my words and you promise to aid me." Looking into his eyes, I see no hesitation.

"Fair enough. I promise you I'll do everything I can to prevent whatever it is that will happen. I won't ask for the theories, and I'll take my time to fix the flaw of the 00 Unit. I assure you of that."

"Glad to hear that, Sensei. You can let me take care of the 00 Unit, I'll get it to be like a human in no time." Good to see he's all motivated for that. But now that he reminded me…

"By the by Shirogane, during one of those memories… you mentioned something about 'taking care' of another me. What was that about?" His brows furrows as he tilted his head slightly.

"Taking care of you? What does that-… Ah." His face gets all red as he breaks eye contact. Yashiro flinched, to make her react to it…

… So the joke was truly spot on? With him, a kid? He didn't even sound as he is now on that memory.

"Shirogane, why are you blushing?"

"I just… remembered something embarrassing."

"Oh, and you wouldn't mind to share what that something is?"

"Please no, you were just… stressed and drunk. I was just worried that if I left you alone you'd do something crazy." He avoids my gaze, so he doesn't want to tell me? Fine, let's not press the subject.… But he did seem honest right now. Worried about me, huh.

"Alright, let's leave it at that then. You should go to your room, if anyone asks what were you doing, tell them you were aiding me in a special mission. I'll contact someone to deal with your records, it's going to be a tough call. But don't worry, I'll get it done. Bring the consoles here tomorrow, I'll start working on making more of those. That shall be all for now."

"Fine by me. By the way, the contact you mentioned… wouldn't happen to be Sakon Yoroi-san, right?"

"You know about him too?" He's not the only one I'll call but he is someone very important. Why would I have allowed him to meet you? If you're as important to the 00 Unit as it sounds, I see no reason to let him get close to you.

"Yeah. Isn't he on the Ministry of Information? You sure it's safe to let him in this kinda thing?" I know why would you say that but don't worry, my relation with him isn't so bad for you to doubt him.

"I'll tell him you're listed as 'dead' here despite you being fine, since you were enlisted in the UN as a Cadet after you left the Empire, since I got that bit prepared and done already, and then I'll ask him to help me with the fixes here. I'll give him a hint about the stealth intel you brought in exchange, that should turn the Empire's heads towards us. They will surely ask for it, and I'll use that to regain my influence in the local scene and to cover your back." I'm sure they won't be able to contain themselves, I'll recover my support before the end of the year with these new toys. Not even the Shogun could refuse these gifts.

"Alright, just be careful. I think you already know, but he can reach the Shogun. If you give-"

"The Shogun?! How do you know that?!" Did he meet her before or did I mention it to him? No, if he was solely focused on the project, why does he know of Yoroi's reach in the Shogunate? Why did I let him in on that intel?… Just what the hell happened in those other worlds?

"I'll tell you another time, but be careful with what you tell him." He says as he ruffles his hair, letting some air out softly. "I know you can deal with him just fine, but better safe than sorry."

Now I want to know how you met him and how much you know of the Shogun. You're one big, thick bag of surprises Shirogane. Though, if word gets out that a 'dead' Royal Guard is working for me…

"You're right, especially with how some people in the Shogunate see me now. Hehe, I'm glad to have you on my side." And again, he scratches his head as he looks away.

"If that's all, I'll be going." He slowly gets up, rubbing his knees.

"Shirogane, one last thing."

"What it is?"

"Nothing will happen to this base in this world. You just focus on helping Squad 207 as much as you can for now. Leave the rest to me. Alright?"

"Yeah, I get it. I don't think I can help you much outside of that as of now, anyways." He shrugs, going towards the door. "Good night you two. Oh, and thanks for the help Kasumi. Sorry to have shown you that. I'll make it up to you soon, okay?" He smiles at her, she tilts her head. Shirogane chuckles as he waves at us, and then leaves.

I stand up and make myself some coffee and some cocoa for Yashiro. I sigh and process all that he told me just now. I look at the little shape of the bunny in the room as I pass her the mug.

"So Yashiro, he didn't lie about anything?" She shakes her head slowly.

"No, he believes everything he said is the truth, and he was on edge the whole time."

"Was that bit about tuning the 00 Unit true as well?"

"Yes. It seemed like his heart was in pain when he remembered that."

I see… Sipping some coffee, I look up as I sit on my chair, spinning a bit. If it made him resent me, I better let him handle it. I want no more things between us now that I know he's on my side. So, if he can deal with the 00 Unit, then I'll leave it to him. Of course, if he fails, I'll probably resort to the same method my other me used.

"And… he truly is on our side?"

"Yes. He does hold you in high regards, despite some conflict in his heart. He also…"

"What is it?" It's odd to see her stop so suddenly. She looks down, bringing her mug close, drinking a bit, then slowly letting it rest on her lap, her eyes exploring the unending rim of the cup.

"… He seems to be fond of me."

"Is that so? Do you dislike his emotions?"

"… I don't know. He seems… kind. I don't understand. He isn't afraid or suspicious of me…"

"But you think we can rely on him?" She closes her eyes, taking her time to answer. When she opens her eyes, she merely gives a nod before drinking some more. "Well… If you say so." I drink slowly, closing my eyes. "Do you still feel fine after what you saw? You can rest for the night, if you're not in top form."

"… I'm fine." Furrowing her brows just a tiny bit, she nods.

I sigh, shrugging. So Yashiro thinks he's our ally. That's way more than what many have gotten in their first evaluation. Finishing my cup, I rest it on my desk as I began to spin with some more force, eyes glued to the ceiling.

Huh… Is this real? A causality conductor that brought me my theories from another world, someone who holds me in high regards and is fond of Yashiro despite her being an ESPer and a foreigner, someone who came with such much knowledge… to help me. It feels surreal.

Regardless, I'm glad my suspicions were wrong. With all he showed me, with whatever plan he has, I'm sure I'll bring Alt. IV to life, and now I have a guardian that will do all he can to achieve that, and even more than that if he decides to remain here and try to make this world more 'peaceful'.

However, there's still the matter of this world's Shirogane. He was a Royal Guard, so I'll have to deal with it carefully. 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi wasted no time in poking her nose into the matter. And he did say that the Shogunate always realized something was wrong with him, and thought it serious enough to warn me about Yoroi.

I have no time to lose, I do need to regain his trust. And I rather not have the Guard come after him now that I know he's on my side.

---

The Next Day. Near 9 AM.

(Mana's room.)

[Mana]

---

I sigh as I sort the reports from the trio about the squad's activities yesterday, placing them in my drawer.

I stand up and raise my hands, hearing my shoulders crack. I open my PDA but no mails came to my inbox, so I suppose it is time to wait.

I didn't get many answers when I inquired about his standing here. They said he was a leftover Cadet from a foreign unit, that was scouted after an accident prevented him from taking the CCSE after he couldn't do it with his previous squad. The XO refused to divulge more information and the Instructor didn't knew much more than that as well.

They're hiding you well. But I suppose that's obvious. You returned to your room quite late last night, I can only wonder what kind of mission you're doing here. I called HQ for any updates but there was nothing, and I received no intel whatsoever as of now.

Should I mention him in my reports? No, I should only talk about him personally with Her Highness.

There's two knocks on my door in an odd rhythm.

"Enter." Tomoe enters the room and gives me a bow.

"Mana-sama, I have a report for you."

"Let's hear it."

"The suspect is again training with the squad. They shared breakfast and he seemed to be fitting in fine. He was also calling Meiya-sama by her name." He did? Well, he never cared much for formalities.

"Does she seem bothered by him?"

"No, she hasn't corrected him and doesn't seem to mind. According to Ebisu, he's currently running faster than all the members of his squad at the moment."

Of course he is, this wouldn't be a problem for him. So he calls Meiya-sama by her name and they're getting along, huh? Maybe that is your mission, perhaps? I'm glad to have you watching over her. Though I cannot show my emotions to them, they cannot know of you.

"Surprising, isn't it? Keep me updated on his movements. We have received no new intel from HQ, so there's no change in our plans."

"Yes, Mana-sama!" She salutes and then leaves.

He obviously hasn't received a special TSF, I think he isn't in contact with HQ. So he should have been ordered to work for the XO in exchange for her to allow him to protect Meiya-sama. I can't say that I'm not curious and I wouldn't like to have a talk with you, but right now I cannot allow my feelings to get in the way. Even if Maya would be overjoyed to learn you're still alive. But then, I guess she would know about this, since she's Her Highness' retainer and your teacher.

Maybe I could go and watch your training myself. I'm curious to see how much of your technique you still have. There's so many questions left unanswered. Perhaps I could approach you when no one is watching?

As I reached for the door's handle my communicator starts beeping. A call from HQ-01? I bring the speaker to my mouth, pressing the button.

"This is Tsukuyomi."

"Mana, it's Maya. What happened that you requested a mission update yesterday? HQ went into panic thinking that something had happened to Meiya-sama!" Maya's tone rarely is this fast or loud, showing signs of anger. It's so rare to see you out of your ice cage.

"Are you certain this line is safe from recordings?"

"Do you think I would make such a mistake? Your doubt is insulting." Pointless worrying, as always.

"I happened to meet a fellow here in the base. Since I didn't receive word of his arrival, I thought I would ask for directions on how to approach him."

"A fellow? Are you speaking of a member of the Royal Guard? No one has been sent to Yokohama after your group. Are you certain you're not mistaken?"

"Shadows cannot be traced so easily."

"Shadows? What do you mean? Can you tell me clearly who it is that you met?" Her voice lashed quietly by the end. I thought she would know, being his teacher.

"It's just as you heard me, the shadow has come to watch over the night." I believe you'll understand. I would like to avoid using his name.

"The shadow… Look Mana, enough with the riddles. Who's been sent to watch over Meiya-sama? Are you certain you're not mistaking this person for someone else? This is a very serious matter."

"Your star pupil came two days ago and joined Meiya-sama's squad, I've been preparing a report but since I didn't knew how to address him I still haven't sent it."

"If you're talking about Onimura, he's still in my unit. So, you got confused. Didn't you check the person's records until now?" I groan, tightening a fist. Of course I did, who do you think I am?

"Maya, it is not like you to be so oblivious of such important matters." Now she's the one groaning. Serves you right. "I'll say it clearly then, 1st Lt. Shirogane has joined Meiya-sama's squad." I heard a loud gasp. Did she truly not know?

"What… did you… Mana, I don't know what came over you, but lying in such manner can and will be considered an act of treason." A quiet tone, yet a predator lurked behind her words. She didn't knew of this.

"It is no lie. It's him, no doubt about it."

"That can't be! He died two years ago defending the Hiiragi district from the BETA!"

"That's what I thought, too. But his face, physique, hair, all is the same. He bested Meiya-sama in a duel, so I suppose his skill with a blade hasn't waned over the years."

"This is… This is impossible. He should be dead. Are you absolutely certain it's him?"

"Yes, I was going to see the day's training to ascertain whether or not it's him. But he even has a very high security lock on his personal data, despite how suspicious that would be for a Cadet. A spy wouldn't make such a careless move, and I doubt anyone could access his profile of the Guard. Considering his role, I wouldn't doubt it is easier for him to move around as a dead man." I had to wait a few moments until Maya replied.

"… Refrain from sending your report for a few days. I'll go there personally, with the delivery of your spare parts. I'll see whether this man is truly him."

"If he is indeed him, what do you plan to do? We cannot interfere with his mission, whatever it is."

"I'll retreat, and ask Yuuhi-sama for further instructions. She may have trusted you'll knew what to do, but I can't blame you for doubting. Of course, if he isn't who we think, we may have to take extreme measures to deal with this new recruit."

"Understood. I'll lay low for awhile, continuing to observe him. You'll arrive in a few days, I suppose?"

"I'll make arrangements to arrive in two days. The faster we resolve this, the better. How has Meiya-sama been until now?"

"Fine. However, the training they're giving her is much harder than what I expected. I can't say that I'm not grateful for it." As much as Meiya-sama might want to fight, it pains me to no end to see her train in this place. She should be a member of the Royal Guard, not a dog of America.

"I see. I'll report that to Her Highness. Stay safe, Mana."

"Same to you, Maya."

Ace Recruit

Chapter 9: Ace Recruit

---

October 26th. 0 7:15 AM.

(Track field.)

[Takeru]

---

I finish stretching just before the Instructor calls for us. These days I've been keeping my pace to not overwhelm the girls and they seem to be progressing just fine. Luckily, we're all getting along. Save for, you know, Chizuru and Kei.

Sensei already started the plans to make more consoles to train them, so that won't take much more time hopefully. For now, I'll keep up my guard around her, just in case she gets all paranoid again. That being said, I have a bad feeling about what she told me the other day. Did she not tell me all that stuff last loop because it had nothing to do with me? I think there may be something else to it. While this would explain why she aimed her gun at me last loop, something feels off now.

Marimo-chan blows her whistle and we get in line in front of her, ready to receive our training.

"Squad, today we'll be doing a more intense training. You'll do five klicks normally, and then you'll do fifteen on full gear with backpack and rifle."

"Huh?! We've never ran so much until now, Instructor." Chizuru voices her worry, but is met with a smile.

"There's a first time for everything. Now, get on the track already!" A loud bark sent us to the field.

The girls walk with heavy steps to their lines, their faces tense as mine in front of a history test back in school. I now know that adding distances like this can be very taxing when you're regulating your stamina. I read online about a marathon in London in which they moved the finishing line a bit so that it passed over a gate and through an open space, so that the people could cheer the runners when they were near the end. That little change made the ones that were on the vanguard collapse just before reaching the goal.

This can be a similar situation. The girls have not ran more than fifteen klicks total, and never more than seven in full gear. They may just faint in the middle of it. I suppose I gotta have faith in them and keep my eyes peeled just in case, especially for Tama.

The whistle is blown and we start the training. As usual I start lightly, but everyone else seems to be reserving their stamina as well. They're going slower than usual, barely putting speed into their pace. The first five klicks passed without much problems. Now, the real deal starts. We all get in the full gear, backpack and rifle included, and return to the field.

I manage to keep a steady rhythm, but the girls start falling behind after running eight klicks total. As I slow down a bit on a curve, I see how Tama falls on her face just behind the start line.

"TAMASE! Get up and keep running unless you want all the team to have to run more laps!" Marimo-chan's shout makes all of us shiver. Seeing her from here, she's frowning for real. What the hell is wrong with her?

Tama gets up in a hurry and continues to run, but it's clear she's exerting herself. The rest are more or less alright, but I already have a two laps lead on them.

I end up finishing while the girls still have five klicks left to run. They look exhausted, I don't think they'll be able to do today's battles.

"Well done, Shirogane!" Marimo-chan comes closer, smiling from ear to ear. "That was a very nice show of endurance. You may rest until the rest finish."

"Instructor, may I ask what brought this sudden change? Usually, it's recommended to slowly increase the distances and the weight one carries."

"Yes, but you adapted just fine. They were trained under this program for a longer time, so they shouldn't have problems with it. They already failed one CCSE so they don't have any excuse to not perform on par with this kind of training." She says without a hint of hesitation, and then she returns her attention to the runners.

Something is definitely wrong this time around. All of them are just barely jogging now, they can't even finish the distance running. I mean, the same happened to me the first time around but this is just overkill, and that's coming from me.

"Alright. With Tamase now all of you have finished. I'll bring the weapons, you may go refresh yourselves." She doesn't spare a gaze towards them or a compliment. She just… drones on with the training.

They're completely beat. I don't think this is a good idea. They're just being overwhelmed at this point.

"Shirogane-san… What did you eat in your other unit?" Tama's question catches me off guard. What's this about food?

"What did I eat? Normal stuff, I guess?"

"Fool… It was a rhetorical question." Meiya looks like she just got out of the sea. "I simply cannot believe that you could keep up with today's course. We already knew you had good stamina, but this is just…" She simply stares at me as if I were a weird fish in an aquarium.

"Special-kun, way to go." Kei says with her usual deadpan face.

"Squad! Here's the weaponry, the first pairings will be as follows: Shirogane and Mitsurugi with weapons, Tamase and Sakaki on HTH." Marimo-chan shining for her absence, the Instructor took some distance to watch the trainings.

"So Meiya, what do you want to use today?" She's standing by the box, simply staring at the weapons. "Meiya?"

"Could we use knives today? I'm not feeling in proper form for a duel with swords." Weird. Well, last loop she did challenge me to a knife fight when we first fought. Yeah, she's tired today. That's gotta be it.

"Sure thing, knives it is."

We take our position in the field and I start the attack, but Meiya can barely dodge my strikes. Her eyes are unfocused, her breathing is irregular.

"Meiya, are you okay? You look-"

"I am fine. Shirogane, there's no need for you to hold back. Come at me with all you've got!" She charges at me, but…

I move aside and trip her, she falls to the ground and I kick her knife away while pointing mine to her neck.

"You sure you're okay? I've never seen you do such a mistake when attacking." Shame is painted in her face as she avoids my eyes.

"… This was your plan all along, wasn't it?" Huh? What's this now? "You baited me into attacking, knowing I'm tired. Mmgh, to be so easily defeated again."

"You got that wrong, it wasn't a plan or anything. You just rushed blindly at me."

"So you're saying it's my fault?" Why are you pouting?! Can't you take some criticism?

"Yes, you acted rashly. Haste makes waste, after all. You're too straightforward, Meiya."

"Grr… I can't even find the words to rebuke you. You are most certainly right, however. Completely defeated again." She gets up, breathing a heavy sigh. She looks most positively depressed.

"Don't get so down, today you were exhausted after the training."

"You did it as well, and you're as nimble as usual." A taint spread on her otherwise clear eyes, and that poisoned gaze drove into me through Meiya's stare. I don't like it when she's sad, even less after that last talk we had back home.

"You'll get to this level eventually, so long as you keep training. Your efforts will never betray you, Meiya." I return her a supporting gaze, just like she used to do with me when I completely failed at everything the first time around. She recovers a faint smile and nods at me.

The rest of the fights went more or less the same. The girls were totally spent by the end of the training, to the point that they just threw themselves to the ground.

I ended up stashing the weapons myself while I let them go to the PX first. I wonder what was Marimo-chan thinking today, maybe she wanted to show the girls our difference in a clear way? Who knows? Let's go eat, we still have the lectures today. I close the place where we keep the practice gear and then go back into the base. Luckily, today is mackerel day. That's gonna hit the spot after all this-

"Wait right there, Cadet!"

As I was making my way to the PX, a voice I recognize well calls out to me. As I turned around a woman in a red dress with turquoise hair and a pair of glasses met my gaze. I froze up for a sec when I recognized the eyes that returned my gaze.

Eyes piercing like those of a hawk, a poker face undaunted and at the same time menacing. The light coming into the hallway fell on her features, and despite not having those two hairbuns she always had, her hair still looks as pristine and shiny as a well polished medal. Those eyes of her came right at me, stopping nowhere else. Focused as an arrow shot by Tama, slowly she approached me until we were just a few feet away from each other.

Maya-san is here, right before me. But why? I never saw her in this world. Another difference to the list, now what do I do? The Royal Guards don't really like me, and now Meiya is nowhere around to stop her. If it comes to violence… Can I attack her? No, I don't think I could bring myself to do that even if she isn't my Maya-sensei. Then, what do I do?

"Good afternoon to you, Cadet." She greets me formally, it's very different from the rather cold but still friendly Maya-san I know.

"Good afternoon. Who might you be?" Very slightly, one of her brows twitched and she then adjusts her glasses. I'm in danger, aren't I?

"Allow me to introduce myself. I'm 1st Lt. Maya Tsukuyomi, may I take a bit of your time? There's some questions I'd like to ask you."

"Alright. What did you need from me?" Reacting aggressively will only put me in a worse position. I gotta keep my cool.

"Well then, you are part of the 207th Cadet Squad, are you not?"

"Yes, that's right."

"When did you join this squad? I thought there were only women in it."

"On the 23rd of this month, Ma'am."

"I see. Could you tell me from where you joined?" Her gaze narrows, readying its blade. Not like I didn't expect this, but for it to happen so earlier it's a surprise for sure.

"That's confidential. My personal information can only be accessed by the UN, if you wish to know please refer to my Instructor." She narrows her brows now, her face unwavering. I can never tell what she is thinking.

"Of course. Then allow me to change the question, were you ever trained by the Royal Guards?"

"Huh? Of course not." What kind of question is that? Why is she asking me that? I never even got to pilot a real Takemikazuchi!

"Oho, an instant answer. Then, were you instructed by the MDF?"

"My personal information is confidential, 1st Lieutenant. Please refer to my Instructor for such details." She's scouting for my origins, she's testing me. She must know I'm a 'walking corpse', but she's slowly trimming the list of the places I could have come from.

"I see. Can I ask you one last question?" Here comes that one, I'm sure.

"Of course, Ma'am."

"Why is a dead man walking here?" I F-ing called it.

"A dead man? Is that some sort of riddle?"

"I'll ask once more, why is a dead man walking?" She takes a step forward not losing eye contact with me, tapping her glasses and slightly frowning. What should I answer? I gulp, trying to think of something.

… I mean, I can just say the truth anyways.

"I dunno, because he has someone to protect?" Not a lie. Don't think she'll buy it.

"Someone to protect?" Her gaze relaxes a bit as she stares into my eyes. She has that same piercing gaze as my Maya-sensei, shame I will probably never see her again.

"Yes, I'm here to protect someone, something that's very dear for me." I hold her gaze, that diamond-hard gaze she always had.

She's… just there, staring at me. Like at the start of all of our bouts. I can't read her at all.

"Could you tell me what this 'something' is, Cadet?"

"That's personal, so no."

"Huh… Why would you not wish to divulge that, I wonder?" She narrows her eyes at me, her voice slow and just a tiny bit pissed off like when I didn't get her lessons.

"Think whatever you want, I won't speak of my personal matters. Though, if you're suspecting me of something, let me say that I have nothing against the Royal Guard or anything. I'm here to help."

"Oh, truly?" And again, she remained quietly holding my gaze. Just… looking at me, as calmly as usual.

…

So… She's not going to attack me?

"Is that all you wanted to ask? I kinda need to go get my lunch, they're going to run out of mackerel and natto rolls if I don't hurry." Let's get the F out of here before this gets worse or the other Tsukuyomi arrives.

"… Yes, sorry to keep you for so long Cadet. Thanks for your time." I turn around to go towards the PX, Maya-san follows closely behind me.

Is she planning to attack me from behind? No, a samurai wouldn't do that. But I am a hazard in their eyes. What's the deal with her?

As we reach the split in the hallway, I felt a light tap on my shoulder before I went my way.

"It's good to see you again, Takeru." Maya-san said in a barely audible whisper, making me twitch as the words sank in after a second of shock.

What the… Did I hear that wrong?

Maya-san goes her way without looking back. I definitely heard her say my name as she patted my shoulder. What is the meaning of this? Is she… the Maya-san from my world? No, she called me Shirogane-sama instead of Takeru. Then what the hell was that? Did this world's me have some sort of relationship to the Royal Guards? No, Sumika spoke of him as if he were a normal guy last loop.

"What the hell does this mean?" I'll go ask Sensei tonight, can't ignore this kind of thing.

But… Something that's different than in the other world… And it's not the only thing that's different. Hmm… But, why would things be different? Could it be that she's just testing me?

… I have no idea what to think.

Thankfully, I managed to arrive in time to the PX. There was no more mackerel but I'm not dying for not eating it during lunch. I did get my rolls, though.

"Shirogane, what kept you for so long?" Chizuru asks me as I sit.

"A female Royal Guard stopped me on the way to ask me some questions."

"Eh?! A Royal Guard, you say?" Meiya immediately jolted up, shock on both eyes and voice.

"Hmm? What's with that reaction, Meiya?"

"Eh? Ah, no, nothing. I was just surprised, that's all." She looks preoccupied, I bet she thinks it was her Tsukuyomi the one who stopped me. "Anyways, are you alright? You were not threatened, I assume?"

"No, she asked me who I was and why I was in the squad. No idea what was her deal, she seemed to already know my name so I don't know why she bothered to come ask me in person." I mean, I thought they were suspicious of me but… This is faster than before. And different.

"That's a relief."

"Why? Are the Royal Guards hostile to us or something?" Let's pretend I don't know why she talked to me.

"Eh? Not really, but…"

"It's because we are UN soldiers." Chizuru says with a shade of disgust in her voice. "Despite being Japanese, we are been trained under the UN's flag instead of our nation's. It's obvious why they would be suspicious of us."

I don't get it. What the hell is wrong in this loop? Why are the Empire and the UN at odds with each other? I can understand them being paranoid about Americans, but the UN too? Another difference to the list, I guess.

"Um, Shirogane-san, what did you think of today's running exercise?" Tama looks at me from my left, raising her voice from her usual tone. Right, her Dad is the Undersecretary of the UN. She must feel bad when someone talks badly about the organization.

"It was a bit overkill for my taste."

"Overkill?" Meiya makes a complicated face as she tries to understand what I said.

"To go really overboard with something."

"Then, why don't you just say overboard?" Meiya, one does not think so much about words, you just talk how you feel is right.

"It fits more situations, I guess." She groans, still not understanding.

"Special-kun is right. Today's training was too hard." Kei nods in agreement, so does Chizuru.

"I'll have to agree. None of us could have finished this kind of training while running like it's intended to be done." She sighs while adjusting her glasses. "Maybe the Instructor was trying to show us the gap between ours and Shirogane's stamina?"

"I agree." Caressing the top of her air-intake shaped hair, she nodded. "We already knew he had more endurance than us, but today showed me that the difference was more grand than I had thought. I couldn't even last two minutes during our sparring today." You sound so bothered by that, Meiya.

"Special-kun, any tips for the squad?"

"Hmm… There's not much we can do about your stamina. You'll just have to slowly get used to run more. But maybe you could try imitating my running style."

"Style? How do you mean?" Tama was not the only one who didn't understand.

"What I do is take each step with my heels, with some force behind it. This makes my body move forward instinctively, with each step I take I gain more momentum and thanks to that I spend less energy in my stride."

"So that was your secret! Such an ingenious idea indeed, I'll try to perform it during my training tonight." Don't praise me too much Meiya, I just read about it online.

"Special-kun, you smartypants."

"An interesting approach indeed. Guys, why don't we all go jogging at night? It'll be easier for Shirogane to teach us this way." Chizuru suggest as she finishes eating.

"There's nothing to teach here, you just gotta get used to use your heels first."

"No, it's still a different way of running. And you also know how to keep your pace steady while doing it. Are you busy with another mission from the Professor today?"

"No, I don't have anything for today as far as I know." But I wanted to talk with Yuuko-sensei about some stuff today. I suppose I can leave it for tomorrow.

"Then it's decided! I'll be counting on you, Shirogane."

"No problem, Chizuru." I smiled at her while giving a thumbs up, but she first opened her eyes wide only to then furrow those large brows of her. Oh crap…

"Shirogane, I already told you to not call me by my name."

"Sorry, I'll try to keep it to a minimum."

"Just because Mitsurugi let's you do it doesn't mean the rest of us will."

"I don't mind you calling me Tama, though. It's kinda cute!" Thank you Tama, you're always such a sweetheart.

These days I ended up calling them all by their names. Tama didn't mind, but Chizuru made a ruckus about it and Kei almost choked me to death.

Today's lecture was brutal as well. The Instructor rushed through the modules we were supposed to be seeing and went straight to combat scenarios. I could keep up since I've seen them all who knows how many times, but the rest got some answers wrong and suffered the wrath of Marimo-chan.

In the past a Soldier-Class ended up devouring you, but I feel that in this loop you'll be the one eating them, Marimo-chan. Wait, are BETAs edible? Like, can we make hamburgers and stuff out of them? What do we even do with all the BETA remains after all the battles?

…

I might not want to find out.

After a rather fast dinner, we made our way to the track field and I showed the girls how I ran. Under the clear and star-filled sky and the company of a chill wind they started to try to imitate me, but…

"Meiya, you're putting too much force into your steps. You don't have to kick the ground so hard! Tama, you look like you're skipping."

Chizuru and Kei are doing rather fine, they still can't run while doing it all the time but they got their pace figured out. The other two, however…

"Shirogane, how do you not lose your balance while running like this?! It is most troubling to not fall forward and to keep a steady pace. I find myself running faster than I want to, but if I slow down I cannot do as you showed me." Always going overboard. You really need to find your middle ground.

"It's not like this is the best running method, it's just what I find more comfortable. You can try to find your own style, Meiya."

"No, I would like to dominate this method. If this is how you became so nimble then I cannot back down. Even if it's not compatible with me, I must overcome this hurdle. Something so simple cannot bring me down!" More purple flares appear on her eyes. It's rare to see her so determined to do something, especially something so simple as this.

"S-Shirogane-san… My feet hurt."

"Sorry about that, Tama. Maybe you should stop for today, you all did run a lot this morning."

"Uuh… I'm the only one who can't do it."

"Hey, all of us have some bad points. What is your strong point?"

"My strong point? I guess it's shooting. Sniping is what I do best, but I'm really not that good." BS, you're awesome. You took down an HSST and protected me in Kashgar until the end, even when you probably where out of ballistic ammo.

"Then you should work on your reflexes and nimbleness more than your stamina. Maybe doing yoga would help?"

"Yoga? What's that?"

"You don't know? That thing you do where you move slow, use this giant ball to arch your back, and there's these poses that help you meditate or whatever." Maya-sensei explained it to me, to hone my mind to bring the full extent of my skill when I used the Mugen Kidou. But I can't really say I understood all of it. I still remember the exercises, though.

"I never heard of anything like that. Um… Is that something you… learned abroad?" Tapping her fingers together, she dodged my gaze.

"Yeah, kinda. Here, let me show you a simple pose." I take the low lunge pose and slowly transition to high lunge, to warrior I, and finally warrior II. Then I return to low lunge slowly. And then I do the tree for a while.

"Amazing! You have very good balance, Shirogane-san!"

"These were just the most basic ones. I only know some others that are more advanced, I'm not an expert or anything. Hopefully, this will be more useful to you than pushing you to run harder."

"Yes, I'll try my best. Should I move from one pose to the other like you did?"

"No, try to stay for awhile in each of them. I did it fast to show you how it's done, the real deal is to do it slowly to gain more balance." Then when you start moving fast, you'll get so much more precise it's scary. I still remember how happy I was the first time I landed a hit on Sensei. Then I got cocky and she beat me soundly in a few seconds. My stomach hurts remembering those blows and how she slashed me in half that day.

Tama starts to do the low lunge, her lips twisting as she groaned as cutely as she always did when trying something new. She looks at me, brows arched and looking for approval.

"Awawa… I-Is this right?"

"Extend your leg a bit more, you don't have to bend your knee." I smile, giving her a thumbs up.

"O-Okay!" She's doing it perfectly outside of that. She really should be a bit more proud about herself.

"Hmm? Shirogane, what is Tamase doing?" Tapping her glasses, she slows down to a stop near me.

"Can't you tell? Training."

"Huh… But what is she doing?" Chizuru I know your eyesight is bad, but this is just stupid.

"She's doing Yoga. I think that improving her nimbleness and reflexes is better than making her run."

"Yoga? Is that something you learned abroad?" Chizuru narrowed her eyes at me, crossing her arms. I give her a short explanation. In the middle of it Meiya and Ayamine came to watch as Tama had made it to Warrior I.

"Shirogane, are those… movements really helpful?" She sounded doubtful as she watched Tama.

"I know they don't look like it, but they are really good for your fitness."

"Should we try them out too?"

"I guess? If you want to." The other three reluctantly took a spot and tried to do the same movements.

It's completely different from what they have been taught, to make fast and precise movements. To be told to move slowly and do these weird poses must be a shock to them. At least they're trying out new stuff.

"Takeru-san." An unexpected voice calls out to me.

"Kasumi? What are you doing here?"

"The Professor is calling for you. Let's go." She comes towards me, grabbing my arm.

"Hey, don't pull me!" I'm in the middle of something here!

"Yashiro? What business do you have with Shirogane?" Meiya comes up to me as I'm struggling with Kasumi.

"She's here to tell me that the Prof-"

"None of your business." Kasumi?! When did you learn to talk back like that?!

"Shirogane, what's the meaning of this?" She raises one of her brows and folds her arms.

"As I was saying, the Professor is-"

"That has nothing to do with you, Cadet. Return to your training. Takeru-san is coming with me." Let me finish my sentences! What's wrong with you this time? What the hell is wrong with this world?!

"Oho, I suppose you have your reasons. But Shirogane is training with us, so unless you explain to us why you-"

"You don't have to know why. Takeru-san, let us go already." Stop! Pulling! Meiya looks really mad at her.

I can feel the bloodlust in the air. Seriously Kasumi, what the hell?! Don't move your bunny ears like that to look cute, you just dropped an F-ing G-Bomb on me!

"Kasumi, let me at least tell them why I'm leaving. I promised to help them today, you know."

"But… She's going to be upset if you take too long."

"If you let me explain we won't have to keep repeating this all the times you come to pick me up."

"They should just mind their own business." I didn't knew you could pout like that. You're much more talkative this time around too.

"Well, guys. Professor Kouzuki is calling for me. Kasumi is tasked to look for me whenever that happens. Sorry to bail out on you like this." I bow slightly.

"At this time? Well, I guess… it can't be helped." Meiya said, folding her arms and looking away from Kasumi.

"Don't apologize Shirogane-san! You already showed us a lot of new things today!" Thanks for clearing the air Tama. Always such a sweetheart.

"Tamase is right. We can continue to train on our own, and it's already late. This yoga thing wasn't so helpful. Squad, let's leave it for tonight." Chizuru's order is met with nods in answer.

"Well, I'll be going. Good night, guys."

"Night, Shirogane." Chizuru gives me her goodbyes, as Kei yawns and Tama waves at me.

"Night, Meiya. Sorry about Kasumi."

"Yes, see you tomorrow. Good night." Meiya answered in a low tone, looking away.

She looked kinda down. Is it because of the training? I don't think that little fight with Kasumi could have put her in such a bad mood, she's not the type to get hung up on stuff like that. Those eyes of her looked really bothered though, maybe she's angry at me for not keeping my word?

We went back into the base and made our way to the lower floors, I shivered as I got used to the heat within the base.

"Hey Kasumi, did Sumika like the santa rabbit?"

"Yes, I sensed a great amount of happiness from her when I showed her the rabbit."

Kasumi told me that it's not like she can directly talk with her, it's more like she sees images and colors and uses that to interpret her emotions. Only sometimes she can actually hear her voice with enough clarity to have a conversation.

"That's good. So, what does Yuuko-sensei have in store for me today?"

"I don't know. She told me you would like it much."

"What are we doing? Eating matsutake?"

"Matsu… What is that?" She tilts her head while looking straight at me as her bunny ears move a bit.

"A delicacy of my world. Ah, just thinking about it makes my mouth water." I remember that when I got into college I went to Sky Temple with the whole gang and we all ate their famous matsutake.

That's one of the few things I miss from that world. I would kill to have that food here! Imagine what the girls here would do if I showed them some ice cream, or chocolate, hamburgers, pizza, ramen, alfajores, parfaits, BBQs, spicy tofu, roasted king crabs or…

"Takeru-san… please stop…" Kasumi's face was red and she was almost drooling.

"Why are you making that face?!" This is a PG story! Don't go doing suggestive things Kasumi!

"I wondered why you went silent and tried to see what were you thinking… All those foods, the memories of its taste… I'm hungry now." She looks at me with a slightly angry face as she moves her bunny ears.

"Same. Remembering that was probably not a good idea."

"Uuh… Were they that tasty?"

"Of course they were! Even some simple fried eggs and 'tates would destroy all the synthetic menu we have here!" Now I want some fried food, dammit! Stop thinking about eating already! Ah, what wouldn't I do for some fried chicken with rice…

We eventually reached the elevator and arrived at Sensei's office, and after she unlocks the door we enter. She was sitting by her desk, looking up towards us with the usual bored expression.

"Oh, Shirogane. Took you long enough."

"Good evening, Sensei. What's on the menu today?" Maybe she really does have matsutake here?

"Today we start the testings of the OS you asked me to make."

"FOR REAL?!" This is way earlier than I expected!

"Don't raise your voice so much! I think I have a solid foundation for the new OS, but I still need actual data to properly configure it. I know you told me the Gekishin wasn't the best model to base the tests on, but I can't get anything else without getting unwanted attention." She ruffles her hair and sighs.

I did ask her to use at least an F-15 for the test, but apparently since there's more spare parts that need refurbishing for the Gekishin it's easier to get them, and thanks to their simpler design they are easier to modify for our tests.

"Alright. Then I guess it's back to the simulators for now."

"No, you're riding a TSF. Weren't you listening the last time we spoke?"

"Wait… We can get away with that?! Won't people get suspicious?" Pretty sure some people will ask why a Cadet is authorized to pilot before passing the CCSE.

"I'm testing some new modifications to the equipment we have, as far as High Command is concerned. I'm the one on the command post so don't worry about being spied. Let me tell you that the engineers modified the Jump Unit's engines, thrusters and radar a bit and we're using a prototype of the Anti-Radar paint we made with the intel you brought us. You'll have to use only infrared communication, except for the data link that will monitor the TSF's performance. You will have to do some movement tests and some simple fights against other Gekishins in slave mode. That's the gist of it. You ready?"

"Sure, let's get cracking!" Back to the field baby! Time to show off the skill of the champion!

I make my way to the changing room and grab a suit that was left in the locker that is, apparently, going to be mine for the coming tests Sensei might need. Heh, guess I'm back in black once more. It's almost an irony, like this was foreshadowing since the first time I came here that I would end up being an experienced pilot from the get go, as if the universe knew I would end up looping back time and again. I do wonder if other suits feel different to use.

Man, it feels like forever since I've been in a cockpit. The last time was… in the tournament. Man, now that I think about it, I stormed through the Campaign Mode with just a Kaiser. Had I used a Takemikazuchi how would things have turned out? Imagine if I cleared the whole thing in a single sitting…

Wait… That's right, I was using a purple Takemikazuchi in the game for some time. Why did I… Regret, perhaps? Yeah… After all, the purple Takemikazuchi was the last TSF I saw back then. Sigh… No getting depressed, you idiot. Come on… Get in the suit, Takeru.

After I put the suit on, I made my way to the hangar following Kasumi. There's not a soul in it.

"So, where is my TSF?"

"Over here." Kasumi goes to the far end of the hangar, me following behind.

A black Gekishin with the UN logo, with more pointy shoulder pads and chest. Its armor looks different, that's for sure. The thrusters… look kinda weird. Well, I guess I'm in your care, buddy.

"Okay, I'll be getting in. Wish me good luck, Kasumi."

"… Good luck." In her usual monotone, as expected.

I wave at her as I get on the railway and open the cockpit. Hesitating for a sec, she waves back before I enter the TSF.

I bolt myself to the seat and start the engine. It lights up as usual, once the data link starts up I'm connected to its visor, the view of the hangar reaching my eyes alongside the rest of the details of the machine.

"Shirogane, are you ready?" Sensei's face appears in my sight.

"Checking the connections right now. All green."

"I'll open the hangar. Treat this as a test run for a new model, and be careful. You'll operate under the callsign Shadow 1."

"Roger." Man, it's been so long. This feeling of peace… This is where I belong. Let's go for a walk, Gekishin!

My Gekishin is released from its hold, and the rotary gears do their work and position it along the railway towards the launch pad. Once I reached ground level, I started heating up the Jump Units. When the temperature was right and I got the okay from the crew, I move the lever and take off. This is faster than what I remembered, I was practically glued to the seat as I boosted. The Gekishin wasn't this fast before.

A shower of stars greets me as I fly off, distant fireflies above illuminating the deserted training grounds. I go towards the marked spot on my radar. Let's see what's in store for me.

"Shadow 1, your objective is to reach the northern end of the ruins." Sensei's voice reached me over the common channel. "There's many sensors spread throughout the ruins, if you're detected several turrets will open fire. Get to the objective while receiving as little damage as possible, you have five minutes. Start!"

Just five minutes? In a Gekishin? Heh, I like a challenge like this!

If it's to avoid detection then…

Slowly moving the control lever while preparing a boost jump, I lower my altitude gradually. The Gekishin is still heavier than most TSFs, but if you use the weight properly it becomes a plus!

Just like I do with my running, I move the Gekishin in a way that its heels make contact with the ground when it lands. Then I adjust the thrusters to boost as I fall forward, which ends up generating more momentum!

I don't fall over like one normally would with such a heavy TSF, and I use less fuel this way. I'm generating less heat too, since I'm not using the thrusters as much. And by hovering as Mikoto did with his Xao-Myun due to the impulse of the jump I make less noise as well, so any sonar sensors will also take longer to detect me. Limiting my stay in the ground to be only when I land to again jump, I'll manage just fine.

Collapsed buildings everywhere, the streets left broken amidst the darkness, I turn on the map and the infrared to see well. But the decayed landscape means I have plenty of places to rebound off for my acrobatics!

I made it halfway through the ruins when the first turrets open fire on me. Dashing to the right, I make it behind a building. Only this time more turrets start firing at me.

Boost jump to the right. Forward dash, boost jumps in zigzag, cancel and a dash out of harm's way. Let's check for damage… just some scratches in the legs and shoulders. I can do this!

I return to my pace, and I'm met with more turrets ahead. I boost jump over the bridge, do a crouch cancel and dash to my left to avoid must turrets. If I could attack them this would be too easy.

I still have two minutes and I'm close to the finishing point. The real fight starts now, knowing Sensei.

I drop the careful pace and go for consecutive boost jumps. A bullet rain is upon me.

Ooh, now this is nice! It's like a fire downpour! A zig, and a zag, and I'm outta here~! I fly through some fallen buildings.

Man, it's like a burning chase! Boost Jump, a cancel, a sidestep, and away I go~! Jumping over houses while doing a barrel roll.

To the left, to the right, a cancel and a backflip! Behind a building you can't hit me~! Using only the left thruster to spin and do an air dodge, I continue onwards.

I like speed and I like dodging, but I never thought I'd be dodge-tanking like this in a motherfricking GEKISHIN, of all things. And with just a prototype of the XM3, no less. There is some delay in the inputs I try to do, and when I try to do some of my complicated dodges it just won't register the commands, but it's as it was during the testing last loop. Combos are still a long ways away, but the cancels seem to work most of the time despite the lack of data.

I feel like I'm back on my turf. Get ready parallel world, because I'm gonna break you like a chocolate bar. I made it to the designated point with one minute left.

"Shadow 1, I arrived at the target."

"CP, roger that. Shadow 1 remain in place. We will send a supply crate with some training weapons. Two Gekishin in slave mode will be deployed as well. When we give the signal, you are to engage them within the ruins. The turrets will not be disabled. That is all."

Wow, totally not overkill. Fighting two on one, huh. This brings back that fight with the Elef, shame I don't have those machineguns…

Wait a sec… Can I equip some guns to my waist? Can I? I never really tried before… Well, I don't have mount pylons on my chest or on the waist, so I don't think a Gekishin can do it. We should have more pylons on our TSFs.

The supply crate arrives, it has two swords and three rifles. Hmm? What's that? An attachable mount pylon? We had those? Ohohohohoho!

I get the two swords in my hands, and attached the pylons to the side of my waist. Or is it the chest? Whatever, they fit so no problem! With the rifles linked through infrared, I can shoot both of them from a key instead of having to do it manually for each. And the last rifle goes in the pylon in the back.

"Shadow 1, report your equipment load."

"I equipped all the weapons provided." Sensei's eyes turn into fried eggs. Stop thinking about food, brain!

"All of them?! You won't even be able to take off with all the added weight! How did you even get all of them on you?"

"Using the pylons in my waist to get the guns in place, last rifle in the back and swords on my hands."

"You're crazy. The pylons are to be used on the shoulders or the legs! And you just use one if you carry two weapons already!"

"Don't worry, might as well test whether this is possible or not while I'm at it. Should I start the exercise?" Sensei sighs while rubbing her temple.

"Yes, start the exercise."

Let's go! Forward dash ahead!

I already have them in my radar, despite them being so far away. Alright champion, let's show off!

I start boost jumping in zigzag again, while doing some air dodges every once in a while to avoid the turrets' fire. With this pace I'm not making much heat, and I can get closer to them safely. Now that I know how many turrets there are here I know when to boost and when I should just run and dash on the ground.

I'm close to them, but they haven't detected me yet. Weird, let's go for a hit and run. I wonder if I can pull my stunts with the Takemikazuchi in the game here as well.

Walking slowly, I approach their position. Checking the map to see which streets are the better option to run after the attack, I wait until the Gekishins put some distance between each other. I suddenly go into a full dash upon one of them, opening fire with the machineguns and with my swords at the ready. It tries to counter with some fire but I jump and do a cancel immediately after, it gets stuck while trying to aim up. Heh, just like the Frei did that time. Two strong blows to the cockpit with the swords and down you go. You couldn't dodge thanks to the damage my machineguns inflicted upon your legs.

Easier than I expected, but I can do it. I can bring my hyper offensive style to TSF piloting, and with the balance I learned through the Mugen Kidou I'm stronger than ever!

I retreat into the ruins to avoid the turrets. I couldn't dodge them while I was charging at the Gekishin so I took some damage. Nothing to worry about.

The other one is trying to get close to here, but it doesn't seem to know my precise location. I slowly move on foot, getting closer to its position while trying to make as little noise as possible. I don't even need to get closer to attack you, let's see if my skill with the TR carries over here too.

I take my sniping position close to the fallen tunnel, you're almost on my range. Just get a bit closer to the left…

…

It took awhile until it came into my range, damn AI. I aim carefully, this time I don't have to wait ten seconds to shoot. Can I get a core-shot from here? Cockpit or jump units? Well, let's see how this goes.

It's just a little dot on my view, it's probably a bad idea to shoot from here. But I wanna try this out. This is just a practice after all. One, two and…

I shoot, I hit its arm. Damn, just when I went to shoot it moved a bit. Now I'll never know if I was going to hit it or not.

It takes cover behind some buildings, starting to get closer. You don't know where I am, so get ready to get sniped. Now, I'll aim carefully and-

Beep!

Huh?

BAM!

A 120mm missed me by a hair, an explosion of paint showered into a building right behind me.

What the hell?! Another Gekishin?! But I took the other down! I'm sure I-

The radar reveals nine enemy signals in total now. Sensei, you devil, this was your idea from the start, wasn't it? Since this one was close by, it detected the heat signature from my shot.

"Well, no point in hiding anymore. Blitzkrieg time, baby!"

I get up and look around, the Gekishin was hiding right behind a building some odd meters away. Heh, don't think you can stay away from me!

I rush at the enemy, guns blazing to seal its escape routes. It begins to shoot at me, but I don't even need to cancel to dodge. Jumping onto the buildings and doing Kulbits, all the while shooting at the TSFs feet, I shave the distance between us. Heh, you can't hit me with those amateur moves! Reaching a park, I dash at it. Zig, zag, cancel, and dash. Slashing at its hands upwards, it lost its way to attack me. In a follow up, I do a downwards slash aimed to its cockpit. Down it goes, take that!

The rest of them are moving towards me, looks like I won't get to hide anymore. What to do? Do I hide anyway? Do I rush 'em?

I drop the rifle and charge at them, some bunch of AIs can't beat me. My radar beeps, some are approaching me. Two of them fly into the open space of the park, coming at me with swords. These must be the Storm Vanguards.

I wonder if I can perform it with a TSF? Picturing it in my head, then trying to move the controls in the right way, I try to make my Mugen stance with the Gekishin and boost dash towards the enemy.

I attack the one on my left, but its just a feint to jump over it while sicking my waist guns from above after a cancel. You lost a leg, I land while timing a boost and charge at it from behind. One hit from both swords to the engine and down it goes! Backflipping out of the other's range as it starts shooting at me, canceling the jump to avoid the rest of the incoming fire. This one's moves aren't half bad, however!

I parry its first slash, but my follow-up gets blocked. Triggering my machineguns, it flies away and opens fire on me as well. You're gonna make me get my A game out, huh. Repositioning myself, I place my sword above our shoulder and rush at the AI, that also comes to meet my aggro.

I crouch dash and squeeze myself under its slash, making it tumble forward which activates the shock protection. Quickly canceling my past move, and lagging for a single second, I dash towards it before it can turn and counter. I do an upwards slash, hitting its hand. Being disabled, it drops its sword.

"Hehehe, eat some bullets!"

I press the trigger and fire my guns at point blank towards its cockpit. Another Gekishin kissed the ground! This one had better data, but still, it's just an AI.

I dash backwards as hell rains upon me, fleeing into the ruined streets once more. If I got hit by all that paint I would probably have to wait hours to get out of my cockpit. That's without counting all the turrets that are also gunning at me right now. It's kinda unfair that the turrets only aim at me.

Well, I'm starting to get low on fuel and I'm hungry from that talk before. Let's finish this thing. I close my eyes, feeling a shiver on my back as those turquoise eyes return to my sight, and then I chant within myself.

Like a petal that dances upon the winds, your attacks must be.

Graceful, precise, but deadly as well.

Unpredictable as the changing form of a cloud…

With the serenity of a leaf moving along a river…

And the violence of the rapids as they charge downstream…

Swiftly. Firmly. Fiercely. Calmly.

Let your strikes flow upon your enemy, like an unending waterfall!

Remembering the words of Maya-sensei, I advance upon my enemies within the crumbling training grounds, under these starry skies.

They are keeping their distance. Boost jumping won't cut it. So, I'll better save my fuel and prepare to dodge. Counting to ten, I leave the cover of a tall building and approach a street where the TSFs seemed to be taking cover in. Soon after that, they begin shooting at me.

Zig, zag, zig, cancel, dash behind a building, triple boost jump over it. More attacks over me, another jump but it's a feint, cancel it and do a barrel roll, boost dash in midair. I land nearby two of them. Barely no damage sustained.

Their guns roar as I approach them, right dash, crouch cancel and forward dash while holding my blade above my shoulder. I swing my blade, breaking concrete as I did and managing to hit one's left side. I take a step back and boost dash through the collapsing building, finishing it before it could retaliate. As I dashed into the street after the slash finished, another one was ready to blow me up at point blank, but I had already planned to take a step back so I wasted not a second in doing so, effectively avoiding the paint.

In real life I can't run immediately after taking the step back to regain my tempo, but TSF don't have that limitation! Immediately boosting forward, I raise my sword again. I hack at it, sending its rifle flying away, I crouch dash and do a rising slash to prevent the Gekishin from taking out its daggers. As it tries to backboost to escape, I throw my sword back as I chase after it. My slash paints a crescent moon towards its cockpit, knocking it out.

I sigh, wiping some sweat off my face. I move my neck and hear it crack, but soon my alarm starts beeping again.

The others are already upon me, I have no more ammo, and I'm surrounded by turrets. And it's really dark here to make matters worse. Eh, I'm sure this two won't mind if I take their guns. Hoho, this one has 120mm! Eat this!

I send my heat upon the recklessly charging Gekishins as I do a backwards jump, one of them rushing towards me and was too close for comfort, it got hit right in the face. Now that you can't see, I'll just shoot you down! Two more shoots and down it goes.

It was in midair, so it crashed kinda badly after it got turned off. I only hope that doesn't get me in trouble.

Well, let's scatter. The other four are shooting at me more than I can dodge safely, and I'm not confident enough to take them head on here, with all these turrets around.

I move into the urban part of the city and hide between the streets and tall buildings. Honestly, for being AIs they're pretty good. I know they're based on data from actual pilots, but still…

We could probably leave the rear to these things, shooting ballistic shells and providing tactical support while in control of an operator in case of emergency. That is not a bad idea.

One spotted me while I was lost in thought and opened fire from my right, I try to retreat but another appears to my left. The other two are behind me, and thanks to their fire the turrets activated. Did these AI do a lock on me?!

Nice one, science! I retreat ahead, towards the only open road I can take, paint rains behind me. This is not good, I'm going to get shot down. They're right behind me, chasing me while boost dashing.

Well, whatever. Let's see how fast these new thrusters can be! I do a full boost jump, and move towards a building. Slightly lower my speed, use the weight to impulse myself forward, bend those damn knees, and boost!

I fly off the building towards another ahead, and like I did in the final I use my right thrusters to spin myself, and then the left one to change my orientation, now I'm gonna crash backwards against the building. I move the levers to put the legs in position and move the torso slightly up, and now give me all the accel you have Gekishin!

I crash into the building and rebound off it towards my chasers! Hehehe, so I can still do Albrights just fine!

I draw out my swords and activate one thruster. I rush through their line, spinning around myself, letting the kinetic force do the damage while I slash.

Two of them down, one lost a hand, the other got away. I'm low on fuel, and here that means shields out too.

The one that's still in one piece shoots at me, I try to jump but it hit my leg. Damn! They sick their guns upon me, I try to retaliate with mine. I land hard on the ground, now without a leg to support me.

"Dammit, all or nothing!" I release all of my ammo at them, the alarm tells me they're doing the same.

BAM!

I ended up getting hit on the engine. By a turret. Damn it. Well, for being my first time in two years I did pretty nicely, if I say so myself. Man, this rocks! I forgot how much I truly enjoyed riding a TSF.

"Shadow 1. Exercise finished. Good work, return to the hangar."

"Shadow 1, roger that." Let's go back, I hope I can get something to eat because I'm famished right now.

---

(Command Post.)

[Yuuko]

---

"So, what do you think?" I look back, her crimson eyes were sharpened at the screen. Her brows low and her arms tightly folded, Isumi sighed and shook her head.

"I can't believe a greenhorn took down so many of the Valkyries. Even if they were riding Gekishins and he used whatever prototype OS you're testing along those new parts, his skill is simply outstanding." Isumi is not someone who gives praise lightly. Seems like you made a nice impression, Shirogane. "However, I have to ask something. Why did you tell him he was fighting against AI enemies?"

"Just because. If I told him he was fighting against soldiers he may have panicked, right?"

"Yes, that's understandable. So is this Shirogane going to join the Valkyries?"

"Not yet, he's in Squad 207 as of now." She slightly lowers her chin towards her neck, taking a step forward.

"May I inquire why? He already knows how to pilot, and with such skill! Wouldn't it be better for him to train under us? I have never seen someone do those movements."

"I have my reasons to have him there." She nods, taking a step back and looking at the screens again. "I just wanted to see how far he could go. But this is just too interesting. He defeated Hayase in CQC, took down Munakata with that Albright, and defeated all the members of the 207A team. If it weren't for Kazama's precise shot disabling his leg, he would have taken all of them out."

"The stealth protocol helped him as well. When he was running away, his signal got lost a few times. They couldn't use neither the tracking or auto-lock, so they wasted many shots, and with his eccentric evasive maneuvers they could just barely keep him in their sights." Wow, you're not done with the praise? How odd. "Is this new technology something that we will use in the future?"

"Yes, the basics have given me better results than what I expected, and that's without looking at the compiled data. Hopefully, I'll be able to get the approval of the high brass to implement this with your Shiranuis as well. There's also a little surprise or two in stock for you all. Do look forward to my next assignment, that will be all for tonight.

Go greet your squad, and take them to eat something. Kyouzuka-san should be done with the food I asked her to make."

"Yes, XO! However, what should I tell them about their opponent?"

"Hmm… Tell them they fought against my new bodyguard. If anyone presses the matter, send them to me." I smirk, she chuckles.

She salutes me and leaves towards the hangar. Shirogane is already out of his machine, Pyatkh is bringing him here. You did splendid today, more than what I expected of you.

As I wait, I replay certain parts of his fight in the screens. I cannot believe he moves in such a way. The strain it puts on the joints is severe, but one cannot deny the effectiveness of his style. To take so many of the Valkyries down… I was just testing him, to poke fun at how 'awesome' he said he was when we tested that Valgern-On thing. I certainly didn't expect you to drive them into a corner in such a way, even with the OS and the new modifications.

He gets here, and he doesn't try to salute me. I'm so thankful there's someone who understands that I don't want to waste time with the formalities.

"So, what do you think? Did the stealth work as intended?" Smiling and folding his arms, he comes up to me.

"No, it was even better. The base's radar lost track of you a few times, and the Gekishins couldn't keep a lock onto you." He was right about how much our pilots rely on the auto-lock, remove it and they start missing most of their shots. Add your crazy movements and they could just barely see you, it's like they were fighting a mirage.

"Can't believe you created this with just the notes I brought. The engineers here must be damn good."

"You bet they are! And your notes had enough intel for me to figure out the math, after that it was just testing until getting the numbers right. Now that I know that it works, I can develop a system for all the other TSFs, and a protocol for stealth tactics. Your moves today were most impressive as well, the new OS will turn out quite nicely."

"Glad things are going well. Though those AI Gekishins weren't half bad, they moved quite well and even tried to lock me down." So he didn't notice.

That was another reason to cut your comms, to let you fight with all you had. Otherwise, you would have heard the panicked screams of the Valkyries as you tore them apart. Seeing those proud surface pilots struck by fear was a wonderful sight, indeed.

"You surpassed all my expectations today, well done Shirogane. How did it feel to pilot again?"

"It was awesome ! I was surprised by how fast the Gekishin felt, it was still quite stiff but it moved much faster than what I can remember." Your honest reactions are really fun to see. This means I made a good enough work for you to be comfortable with it.

"That's probably due to the modifications we did to its engine and thrusters. Those jet diagrams you brought gave me an idea to make a new Jump Unit I couldn't really get out of my head, so I was testing that today too."

"So that's what that was. Well, I could do all the things I used to do in Valgern-On today, so I'm now sure that I'm back at full capability!" That reminds me…

"Shirogane, can you explain to me what were you trying to do with those pylons? It was really risky, you could have crashed yourself into the ground." I honestly have no idea what were you thinking. It produced good results, yes, but it was completely stupid.

"I was just trying to make the Gekishin fight like the Takemikazuchi."

"Huh? What has that to do with the pylons?"

"Everything! I can't attack with swords in both hands and shoot the machineguns at the same time if I need to keep stuff in the pylons on the back."

"Again, what has that to do with the pylons you put in the waist? As far as I know, the Type-00 can't do that either."

"What do you mean? It has the machineguns built into its waist, so you can use swords in each hand while you shoot the guns, even if you have stuff in the back too. That's what I was trying to do." Machineguns in its waist?

"Shirogane, here. Take a look at the Takemikazuchi." I show him some images of the Type-00 and its variants, and he grabs his chin as he gets lost in thought.

"So… you're telling me the Takemikazuchi doesn't have machineguns?"

"It never had. Where did you get the idea?"

"Valgern-On. I used to pilot a Takemikazuchi in the game, and there it has this machineguns in its waist. I seem to have gotten the real one with the game one mixed up. I'll show it to you later."

"Still, as reckless as it was, it delivered good results. I don't think others could easily do it, but I should gather more data about your style. You did take on an entire group by yourself and almost came out on top."

"Where will we gather data? In the sims or in a real TSF?"

"We'll use the sims from now on. I wanted to get one good look at your skills, and today was more than enough. Get changed and come to my office, let's eat something before you go to bed. I have some questions regarding some moves you pulled on the field."

"Alright. I'll be there in awhile. I do have some things to tell you that felt kinda wrong during the test." He smiles and nods. Then, after waving my way, he went out the room following Yashiro again.

---

October 27th. 0 8:30 AM.

(Track field.)

[Takeru]

---

I finish stretching, waiting for Marimo-chan to use the whistle. The rest are still stretching, preparing for the morning run.

But man, I feel awesome today! Piloting is the best thing ever! Imagine what I will be able to do with the new XM3 and those new Jump Units! I'll become one with the winds!

"You look most certainly joyful today, Shirogane. Did something good happen last night?" Meiya addresses me rather coldly, with a grave tone and a side glance. But I can't hide my happiness!

"Yes, it did! It was truly awesome. Shame I can't tell you guys about the mission, but it was honestly a mind numbing experience. I could practically feel the wind in my veins!"

"… Oh, is that so."

"What's up with that answer? You look down today, Meiya."

"Nothing's wrong. It's none of my business what you do with Yashiro."

"I said nothing about Kasumi, though." She makes an 'Oh Shit!' face before folding her arms and looking away. So she was angry at Kasumi yesterday…

"I assumed you would be doing this task with her. Am I wrong?"

"Yeah, I always do my missions alone."

"Eh? You always… You do them all alone?" She now looks like a goldfish.

"I mean, Sensei always asks me to do random stuff for her. I have no idea what she'll come up with next." I'm still in shock that the stealth protocol that I used yesterday was born from the forum posts I brought.

When Sensei showed me the data it was truly amazing, I was almost invisible to the other TSFs. And when I wasn't boosting the base's radars couldn't lock onto my position or IFF.

"Sensei? Who are you talking about?"

"Oh, right. I refer to Professor Kouzuki in that way, since she's always teaching me stuff from all the missions she gives me."

"She's… teaching you?" She tilts her head, raising a brow. "Well, you were scouted by her personally. So, I assume yesterday's task was a success?"

"Oh, hell yes! I wrecked all the obstacles, axed all them benchmarks, and had a blast during it!"

"Axed?" I think Meiya's mental state could be described by a number: 404.

"Uuh… It means I passed it with flying colors."

"Oh, I see. Your choice of words is most odd at times, are they supposed to be some sort of secret code?"

"No, it's just the slang I used before coming here."

"Right, you were living abroad." Meiya then remains silently staring at me for a sec. "Oh, that reminds me. Shirogane… Can I ask you a personal question?" She stood stiff, got all serious now. What is she gonna ask me?

"Sure, ask away." And very timidly, which is weird for this Meiya, she spoke.

"Are… Are you Japanese?"

"… Are you seriously asking me that?"

"Yes."

"Well, actually, I was born on the Moon."

"WHAT?!"

"But my Dad comes from Sedna, so…"

"Sedna? What's that?"

"The planet that's behind Pluto." Or not, some people online said it was not a planet.

"What?! Another planet? But how do you even…"

"And my Mom is a unicorn."

"Shirogane… were you… making fun of me?" She closes her eyes, fists shaking.

"Nooo, of course not. I would never do something like that to you, Meiya-kun."

"Grr… You were making fun of me! I was asking you a serious question, and this is your answer?" You asked a stupid question, I gave you a stupid answer.

"Can't you tell that I'm Japanese from looking at my face? Or by my name?"

"I was referring to… whether you were born in Japan, or if you were a Nikkei."

"I was born in Japan, yes. But what does it matter? Nikkeis are also Japanese."

"Huh? Of course they're not! They weren't raised here, they know nothing of our culture."

"You're being overzealous. If their parents raised them with the same values they would still be the same in their hearts."

"I don't know about that." What's wrong with this world? I never saw this kind of discrimination in my past loops. And coming from Meiya, of all people.

"Alright, let me give you an example. Let's say you were raised away from your family, Meiya." I know you will understand with this approach.

"Eh? Away from my family?"

"Yes, but let's say you also had a good teacher that passed onto you the customs and knowledge of your ancestors. Like how to make a certain food, or a traditional dance. Would you still be part of your family? Are the values you were taught since being a child so weak that they're broken by distance?"

She closes her eyes, folds her arms, and starts groaning. She's taking her time to answer, for sure. Then, a whistle reaches my ears.

"SQUAD! ASSEMBLE!" Marimo-chan is calling for us.

"Let's go, the Instructor is calling."

"Ah, wait! I still haven't-"

I made my way with the rest of the group. Meiya jogs behind me to catch up. We all salute as we await today's training.

"Squad, today you'll go to the firing range instead of running." Huh?! The rest also seem as shocked as me. "The guns are already there, I'll announce the teams." Teams? Didn't we used to go firing individually? "Sakaki and Tamase against Mitsurugi, Ayamine and Shirogane." Against?! We're fighting each other?!

She dismisses us, saying she'll be there in a minute. As we made our way to the range and put on the gear, I asked the girls my doubts.

"So, she said against… Exactly what are we doing today?"

"You never did firing competitions in your past training unit?" Chizuru raises both brows, slightly taken aback for some reason.

"No? We just went and shot at targets individually."

"Well, this is more or less the same, but we instead get valued as teams." Tapping her glasses, she points to the left end of the practice range. "There's also an exercise in which some targets will pop up and we have to shoot them down, but the targets get farther away with every time they appear."

"This is more complicated than I expected."

"Are you not confident in your shooting skill, Shirogane-san?" Tama asked with a rather shocked tone.

"I'm not bad, but I never had this kind of training." First Chizuru, now Tama. I did say I was better at CQC, no idea why they're so surprised.

"Time to beat Special-kun."

"You're right, Shirogane-san this time we'll come out on top!" Tama got motivated by Kei's words, and now even Chizuru has a determined expression on her face, and Meiya is… looking at the ground?

"Is the dirt talking to you or something?"

"Eh? Ah, no, I was just lost in thought." She again looks away, her voice barely audible. Maybe I shouldn't have mentioned her family. Let's get her mind off it.

"So, how good is your shooting?"

"Not bad, I suppose. Nothing like Tamase's or Sakaki's."

"Mine is also average." Kei admits while holding her chin.

"How are your shooting skills, Shirogane? Can we count on you to give us another surprise?" She must think I'm bad at shooting, going by her tone and that small smile.

"Heh, if you want a surprise, I got you fam."

"Fam?" I should stop doing this, but her confused face is too cute.

"It's a way to say… like, dude, friend or something like that."

"Special-kun you're too weird." I don't want you telling me that, dear Kei.

"Well, let's do our best." I raise a fist as I go get my gun.

We grab our rifles and take our positions. Marimo-chan comes just as we finished getting ready, and after giving us a once over to make sure we were ready she folds her arms and takes her binoculars out.

"Alright squad, first we'll start from regular shooting and we'll work our way up to sniping as you already know." Another difference to the list, we always had these trainings separated before. "We'll go from the targets that are at the 200M mark until the ones on the 1500M mark, switching to sniping rifles midway." Ouch, that's a long distance. How far can I shot precisely now? Last time 850M was my limit.

"Eh?! But… we were just practicing with the farthest targets at 850M as the last distance some days ago!" Meiya raises her head from her position, Kei also seems to be bothered by this since she also looked up.

"It was decided that we could give you a harsher training, since this is the second time you take this course." Marimo-chan is nowhere to be found, though. "Everyone, in position!"

Meiya and Chizuru exchange a worried glance, Kei just sighs very heavily, while Tama gulps with her eyes closed before going back into position. This is par for the course by now, but it's still weird. I go prone and aim at the target, awaiting the order.

"FIRE!"

Not a second after the Instructor's shout, the loud sound of shells being shot echoes about. I grab my binoculars and check my target, dead center.

"Reload and aim at the next!"

We kept shooting through the next three distances. Meiya and Ayamine missed at the 600M one when we had to switch to the sniping rifle.

"Mitsurugi and Ayamine, out! Reload and aim at the next target!"

We now aim at the 850M target. There's a bit of wind, so let's aim slightly to the left… I take a breath just before Marimo-chan gives the order. After the shots are taken I look through my binoculars, dead center. Hell yeah! All that training at the shooting range and my practice with the TR are bearing fruit! All that training I did with Tama in my first loops is finally finished, now that I'm able to get the bullseye of this distance.

"Sakaki, out! Aim at the next target!"

Now, the next one is at the 1100M mark. Looking at the small circle in the distance, I couldn't help but feel my heartbeat and the small sweat running down my face. This is… like when I was under the cliff. Freaking missiles got in the way, but now there's no such thing happening. Unless a meteor rain of chickens falls on the base right now or something.

Remember the feeling, remember Tama's advice, locking at the core, slightly to the left because of the wind, aiming a bit lower due to the distance, holding it steady…

"Fire!" I pull the trigger.

I take my time before looking at the target, gulping hard as I finally did. Not dead center, but it's in the innermost circle! Yeah, baby!

"Reload and aim at the final target!"

"EH?! Shirogane… You hit the target?!" Chizuru couldn't believe it. She sounds just as she did back home when I told her I could cook.

Well, to be fair, I am trying my best right now. I think this is as good as I'll ever get, unlike Tama who can take down a falling shuttle at cruiser speed. And I wouldn't have gotten to this level if not for her tutoring.

I go prone again, but I took a glance towards Tama. Her hands are shaking, brows arched. The small delay as she got in position, the way she's licking her lips… It feels as if she had seen a basilisk. She's holding her breath real tight, so… Her anxiety issues are back at it again, huh.

Sigh… Nothing I can do now. If she needs a hand, I'll be there. But for now, I'll just focus. Target locked, aiming… This should do it. Probably. I think. Perhaps. Maybe.

"Fire!"

Our rifles shoot for the last time. Me and Tama stay on the ground, not wanting to look ourselves through the binoculars. I slowly leave my position, getting up and clearing my forehead of sweat. Tama, however, was still petrified, looking at the ground as her thumbs didn't knew whether to hide under the other fingers or remains outside. Sigh… She failed the shot, didn't she?

"Well, well, well. Color me surprised." Marimo-chan smirks as she lowers the binoculars, chuckling a bit. "Tamase, you're out! Shirogane's team wins this round. Sakaki, Tamase! Five laps in the track field!"

"Yes, Instructor!" Chizuru goes immediately to run the laps, but Tama takes a moment before following behind her. She's looking at the ground with a her mouth barely open, her arms glued to her sides.

I look at both targets, mine is near the outer rim of the outermost circle but Tama missed entirely, she didn't even hit the outermost circle of the target. So she got nervous and screwed up, if she had been calm I'm sure she could have gotten a better shot than me. I'm sure she could have gotten the bullseye of that one no problem, if she were calm.

A small sound of clapping snaps me out of the target right before I feel a strong pat on the shoulder.

"Shirogane, what was that about not being confident in your sniping? You're better than Tamase! And she's a pretty good sniper, I'm sure you know." Marimo-chan showers me with praise while smirking.

"No, this is as good as I'll get. I don't think I could improve much more."

"You say that as if your level was bad. What's left for Mitsurugi and Ayamine who couldn't even hit the 600M target?" Both girls look to the ground, shame and frustration pouring from their eyes.

"They just need more training. And maybe they should improve their habits?"

"Habits? What do you mean?"

I tell her what I noticed during last loop about their firing habits, under the guise that my old Instructor told me about it and I used that to get to my current level.

"I see. That's a fine piece of advice. I'll take it into consideration for your training." She nods with a smile, thank God she agreed to this. "Mitsurugi, Ayamine, you both heard him so try to put his advice to use. Maybe then you'll be able to hit stuff with your guns outside of close range." Ouch. Marimo-chan is full of venom this time around. What the hell is making her this upset?

She walks away, going to oversee the other two's laps. Chizuru was managing just fine but, as expected, Tama was not into it. That only got her another shout from the Instructor, who ordered her to 'properly run' instead of lazing about. Her eyes squinted as she nodded, unable to pronounce a reply. Tama… It's a matter of time. When the CCSE comes, she'll see her sniping is gonna save us from the gun batteries and I'm sure that'll be a great boost for her confidence. Until then, let's support her however I can.

"That was… splendid Shirogane." Meiya looks as dejected as me after failing a test. After such scolding, I would be too. "You can do anything, it seems."

"I just trained a lot. You all can get to my level with time." Her eyes veer away, she places her hands on her waist as she also looks to the track field.

"You can snipe, your CQC is also very good, you have ample knowledge of tactics, and you're always calm and collected. Would you happen to also be proficient at mid-range as well?"

"I guess? Well, yes. I'm better at mid-range than at sniping, that's for sure."

"Better than… That is just…" Meiya falls silent, gaze on the floor.

"Special-kun, what are you bad at?"

"Manners." I can't be bothered most of the time, luckily I learned to shut up and show the proper respect when it's needed. Except when I'm hungry, tired, or both.

"I'm being serious. What are you supposed to be? A super duper soldier?" She says it with cute words, but her eyes are oozing chainsaws. And they're aiming at me, menacingly.

"I mean… Really, I just had a very harsh training. If you all had been trained like this from the start you would also be much better by now, right?"

"No, every person has limits. And things they're bad at. You don't." She holds my gaze with an accusing glare, even her voice seemed incredulous now. Which is odd, Kei never confronts someone openly with the exception of Chizuru.

"Hey, you make it sound like I'm not normal. I just trained a lot, that's it."

"Special-kun… Were you conscripted before?" Ah shit, here we go again.

"No? Why would I be here if I had experience in the field?"

"Hmm, really? Then, where did you learn to handle a gun like that?"

"I mean… My skill comes from training, there's no secret to it." Kei stares at me, unblinking and without looking away..

"So you come from a place where this kind of training is normal, huh?" Slowly bringing a hand to her chin, one of her eyes seemed to squint. What is she trying to say? What's wrong with all of you today?

"Ayamine, stop." Meiya folds her arms, letting a huge sigh out. "Looking for excuses will only drag us down. Regardless of where he learned, Shirogane is doing his best in the trainings. Let us use his knowledge to hone ourselves, even if we can't get to his level at the moment."

"… Fine." Kei shrugs, then comes closer to me. "Special-kun, drop the secret right now." Before I could react, she grabs my shoulders and gets her face really close to mine. This… is really embarrassing.

"… Huh?"

"How do you get better with a gun? Is that about waiting a bit all there is to it?"

"Well…" I know she isn't doing it with those intentions… But having her so close is really uncomfortable. I look up, away from her eyes, as I scratch my head while trying to find the right words. "When you're firing at mid range, yes. For sniping, I guess you should…"

I give them some pointers based on what I read online, what I was told at the firing range I went to, and my limited experience through the loops. I'd like to tell them what Tama taught me, but it's better if she herself is the one who teaches them since that'll do wonders for her self-esteem.

Kei seemed to ponder my suggestions, still looking doubtful towards me. Meiya seemed to be willing to give this a try, though she still looked bothered to no end.

During the following exercise I had no trouble hitting the targets, compared to doing this in a TSF it's much easier. I ended up being the winner again, hitting most targets. Marimo-chan made all the girls run five laps, on the grounds that I 'carried' them on the trainings today.

It's almost like the roles completely reversed. When I first arrived I was the one dragging the team down, but now the rest are seen as the slackers. They all look shaken, especially Tama. Kei and Chizuru were sending some strong blazes at me when they got near where I was waiting. What's their problem?

"Shirogane, you're already finished for the morning drills. You can go to the PX."

"I'd like to go with my squad, Instructor. I'll wait until they finish."

"Hmm, aren't you a team player? Regardless, the Professor was right. You truly are a star model."

"Huh? The Professor?" What did Sensei do this time?

"She mentioned to me how she thought you were a cut above the rest of the common soldiers, and recommended me to use you to drive the squad to their limits."

I see, so Sensei tried to help me by giving us a harder training and forcing the girls to improve. I can't say that I don't agree, but this is still overkill. It's like trying to kill a cockroach with a shotgun, this is too much for them to handle.

"Still, the sudden change was a bit too much in my opinion. But they'll get used to it eventually."

"I sure hope, I have prepared a harsher training regime for November."

"A harder one?!" The girls turned their heads towards us as they heard me raising my voice. Marimo-chan looked at me, smiling in a way that seemed to amplify the wind's coldness.

"Exactly. Starting next Monday, I'll give you all the best training course I've ever crafted. Maybe I'll get to see you taking the trainings seriously from now on."

I don't like her smile, this is bad. They're struggling with this training, I don't wanna know what will happen when they take this new one.

They finished their laps and we made our way to the PX, but not a single word was said. All of them were silent, and I didn't feel like forcing a conversation. The afternoon classes were about assembling a rifle, and I'll say they were rather annoyed when I finished it so fast.

After that we got a lecture on both guerrilla tactics and infiltrations, and how to fight a TSF on foot. I never had to use either of these lessons on the field, but my experience is limited to Sadogashima and Kashgar since during the coup I was spamming the 'Run Away' option like mad, and I don't really remember clearly what happened after Operation Babylon on my first loops. I still could answer swiftly the questions that Marimo-chan sent my way.

I can't say the same about the rest. They're being overwhelmed, the pace of the lectures is much faster and the 'easy' questions have been removed. They got even more assignments to do for the next class.

"That's all for today. Girls, I recommend you to study more seriously. Starting next week, you'll have an even harder training regime in preparation for the CCSE. Do be sure to make the most out of your time until then. That's all for today. Dismissed!"

We salute the Instructor, who then leaves, and as she did the girls storm out of the classroom. I tried to reach out to them as they left but they didn't stop, even if Tama did look back with conflicting waves in her eyes.

I ended up eating alone in the PX. This is just the worst. I can only hope Mikoto is able to catch up to us when she gets back. At this rate, she might not be able to get up to par.

… Maybe training with everything I had was not a good idea.

Entangled Threads

Chapter 10: Entangled Threads

---

October 28th. Some minutes before 8 AM.

(Yokohama Base. Barracks. Meiya's Room. )

[Meiya]

---

This week has been the craziest week of the year, without a shred of doubt. Since Shirogane arrived to our squad all has been turned upside down.

From our meeting on the night of the 22nd I knew he was different. He addressed me so casually, going as far as to call me by my name, he showed a particular way of speaking, but most importantly he demonstrated a phenomenal physical aptitude.

Then, during all the following days, he surpassed all the expectations I set on him. He bested me time and again, displayed far superior agility and endurance than all of us, and showed to possess an enviable knowledge of tactics and warfare, never answering a single question wrong.

He truly is special, and despite that he is not arrogant in the least and always displays such friendliness towards all of us. An impeccable example of what a soldier should be, I can see why the Vice Commander scouted you personally, Shirogane. I am glad to have met you, to have the privilege to train alongside you. And yet, your words have driven a sting into my heart.

My gaze wanders to the Minaru Kamui that lies atop a small table. Recalling his words I cannot help but to bite my lips, feel an oppression tantamount to a cold drill on my chest. Will I ever be able to fulfill the role you gave me, Your Highness?

I never pondered such things. I always thought of myself as a Kagemusha, a double of the Shogun. Someone whose only meaning of existence is to serve the Empire and its people, nothing more than a blade to strike down our enemies and a shield to protect our rulers. I always felt grateful for this, for being the one who is tasked to eventually protect the Shogun from harm. That is my purpose, what drives me forward. I always cherished her as the most important thing in my life.

Changing into my jacket, a tinge of pain on my arm. A bruise he inflicted on me as I tried to corner him reminds me of my failures. His usually shining face turned darkest when he realized that he had hurt me, he apologized much despite me having been the one at fault due to my lack of skill. Closing my eyes, I slowly do my ponytail. Yet, even within the darkness I can hear it, the reverberating sounds of his strikes, his piercing gaze square on me. My lips tense up a bit, recalling his feats on our practices and lectures, his remarks and pieces of advice.

Looking in the mirror I see my usual reflection, yet my eyes are not the same after being blinded by the sun that he is. Unconsciously, I was clawing at my palms. Will this reflection ever be so shining as his?

Since I've been secluded all my life, I lack many abilities. However, I thought that I was a good enough fighter, but he destroyed me as a relentless avalanche would to a wooden cabin. I am not yet fit to stand by her side. A blade that cannot kill is useless. I rather die than to become a disappointment to her, to make her regret spending time on my person.

All I've ever wanted to was to make you proud and be able to aid our people. Which is why I accepted your order to join the UN without qualms, for it was the chance, the new winds I always awaited.

"But… nothing has changed." I look away from the mirror as my throat shuts itself.

Everybody here treats me just like I was being treated before. It is most odd that we are also allowed to have personal rooms instead of being placed on a single shared room. You even sent Tsukuyomi to look after me, when she should be by your side.

I thought you needed me, but you just sent me to another cage. Am I so unreliable? What am I to you? Family? A useful tool? Perhaps… Am I already a disappointment? Maybe I do not want to know. Sometimes, the answers that you seek are not the answers that you would like to hear.

I sigh and shake my head. This is not what I should be thinking about. After all, there is someone who treats me differently now.

Shirogane is a such a mystery, but not only because of his exquisite skills. Surely he has realized who I am by now. But then, why is he still acting with such open friendliness towards me? Why does he not have that fear and respect in his eyes, like everyone else that approaches me has? Not that I mind though…

He did call everyone by their first names, even Yashiro. Does he just not care? Perhaps, since he lived abroad, he does not know? Surely, he must have grown suspicious after Tsukuyomi confronted him the other day. He must have noticed that I look just like the Shogun, and yet he's still all smiles whenever he speaks to me. You're such a mystery, Takeru Shirogane.

I sigh as I again look in the mirror, yet this time I manage to hold my reflection's gaze.

I'm not making enough effort, I need to improve myself even further. However, if I continue like this I'll be caged forever. The sudden change in our training since the beginning of October is not something that happened on a whim, I fear that the next CCSE might be stacked against us once again. The Instructor, while severe, wouldn't have changed our curriculum without good reason.

… I cannot deny that I'm envious, jealous of him. We're the same age and yet he's so much more skilled than me. I can't seem to find a weak point in him, either in his knowledge or in our bouts. It is not as if I haven't realized he's holding back, however…

I take one long breath from my nose, relaxing my shoulders. I need to improve much. That's why I'll swallow my pride and ask for your help. Shirogane, you're the key that will free me from this cage. You're the only one who seems to be honest towards me, the only one who can practice with me to improve my technique with a blade, the only one I can rely on.

Even if I have to get on my knees and beg I need you to train with me, both in body and mind. If I could gain just a drop of your fighting technique and knowledge about war, as well as the temperance you have when you fight, I'm sure I would be able to surpass whatever stands in my way, both in the CCSE and in the future after we get commissioned.

Otherwise, I'll never be able to fulfill the role I have to play, I'll never be able to help Her Highness. But if I don't prove myself worthy… I already am a burden on her shoulders, the least I can do is to meet the expectations she placed on me, to be her protector. Otherwise, as a cursed child, I'll spend the rest of my life in isolation.

I get out of my room and make my way to Shirogane's. He said he was in the second room to the right after the split in the hallways, if I remember right. But will he be awake? It is just a bit over 8 AM, surely he should be up by now. What if I wake him up rudely and put him on a bad mood? I should knock softly, and I'll try to not raise my voice too much.

As I approached his room and turned around the corner, I saw an unexpected figure standing guard by the door.

"Yashiro?"

She seemed to flinch slightly, apparently I startled her. Her surprised expression lasted but a second, it quickly dissolves as she returns to her usual emotion-lacking face when she greets me with a bow.

"Good morning."

"Good morning. Yashiro, what are you doing outside of Shirogane's room?"

"Waiting for him."

"Does he have another mission from the Professor?" If he does then there's not much I can do.

"No."

"Is that so? Then, why would you be waiting for him?" She squints her eyes as the long, black things on her head move a bit.

"That's none of your business." She retorts, her brows curving as if I had upset her but without changing her calm tone. Again with this?

"Yashiro, I have an important favor to ask of Shirogane. So I would like to know if-"

"Takeru-san is unavailable today."

"… Why? He does not have a special mission, surely he couldn't be busy all day long."

"I call dibs."

"Dibs?" That sounds like one of those odd words he sometimes uses. Why does Yashiro…

"I asked him first, so he comes with me."

She asked him? She arrived even earlier?! Could she have asked him yesterday? Mmmgh, I shouldn't have grown angry at the lecture. I could have asked him during dinner to help me. No, regrets will beget no beginning. I fold my arms, returning her stare.

"I can still ask him what I came for. You cannot decide for him what he'll do all day." Why am I so upset at her? I can't lose my temper so easily.

"You're being a bother. Please leave."

"What?! That is very rude, why are you being so hostile today?"

"Because you're being noisy and stubborn. Please leave."

"You're one to speak! And I am not leaving until I have spoken with him."

"He's busy today, so he'll say no. Leave him alone, please." Not changing her tone or expression, she then held my gaze in silence.

What is wrong with her?! I didn't knew Yashiro was such a rude person. Such lacking form of speech, to send me away in this manner. I know she is young, however…

"Kasumi, what is all the noise about?!" The door slowly opens, and then Shirogane gets out in the uniform he had when I first met him, only to then raise a brow as we made eye contact. "Meiya? What are you doing here?"

"Good morning, Shirogane. I came to ask a favor out of you."

"A favor?"

"Takeru-san, let's go." Yashiro starts pulling on his sleeve. I can't help but glare at her.

"Kasumi, wait a sec please. So, what did you need?"

"Ahem… Well, I was wanting to ask if you could do me the favor of training with me. I would like you to practice swordplay with me, and to teach me about your style." It's too similar to the Mugen Kidou, but I'm sure it must be a coincidence. "And if you were so kind, I also wanted you to help me with my studies."

I lower my gaze, embarrassment suddenly getting hold of me. I cough again, clearing my throat and folding my arms.

"I know I'm imposing much, asking this of you, but I am having quite some trouble since the Instructor hastened the pace of the lectures. Of course, I don't ask you to do this without a fair reward. If there is anything you ever need from me, I'll gladly repay this favor tenfold. You can ask anything you desire from me. So…" I deeply bow towards him. "Please, Shirogane. Would you be so kind as to lend me your aid?"

"I see. So that's what you wanted. Sorry, but I'm going to be busy for the following days, so I can't help you with your training."

…

"… Eh? But Yashiro said you didn't have a mission!"

"Kinda. It's a personal project. It's like independent training, in a way. And I promised to spend some time with Kasumi today. Sorry, I just don't have the time." He gives me a short bow. Of course, he's focused on improving himself even further. Despite how skilled he is, he still desires to better himself. Compared to him, I'm…

Yashiro clings to his arm, with a hint of a smile on her face. He said he 'promised' to be with her. To spend his little free time, with her?

"But… will you be busy all day? Do you not have even a short while during the late afternoon?" I can't believe I'm pleading like this, staring at him in this way, I should be ashamed of myself. But still, please… even just some minutes…

"Sorry, I'll probably be busy until the late evening."

"… I see. Forgive me for holding you, then." I coil my hands into fists, denied of the handshake of acceptance they were looking forward to. I resist the urge to bite my lips, I cannot… I must be firm, I must not shame myself further.

"Don't apologize, Meiya. I just had plans already, I'm sure you'll be able to get out of the slump you're in. Just keep on training! Well, see you later."

Don't smile at me like that. Don't give me those kind words when I've been doing my hardest since the start of the month to see no decent results whatsoever. Why do you think I asked such of you? In such a humbling way, to boot.

"… Yes, see you later." Yashiro starts pulling and he starts complaining again, he waves at me as they go into the hallways.

And as always, I'm left alone. I hug my sides as my eyes cannot release themselves from their shapes.

What kind of relationship do they have? Why does she call him by his name? Why is she going with him when he has to do this personal project? Why is he spending his free time with her?

"Sigh… This isn't like me." I shake my head, looking away from their silhouettes.

He's just another squadmate, nothing more. He's friendly to everyone, not just me. And Yashiro did seem to know of this endeavor of his, which is why she tried to make me leave. I suppose they must be on good terms… Well, it doesn't concern me. I do not wish to be a bother to anyone anymore.

"I suppose I'll keep training on my own." Alone, like always.

---

A few minutes later.

( A h allway on B4F .)

[Takeru]

---

"You didn't have to be so rude, you know?"

"She was being annoying." Don't you give me the puppy eyes!

"Why are you so mean towards her anyways?"

"She wanted to get in your way. Finishing the consoles is more important than her own training."

I mean, I get it. But I could hear you two arguing from inside my room. Just what the hell did you tell her to make her so mad? It's weird to see Meiya being that openly angry.

"So you got defensive because of that?" She nods.

"I could tell she wasn't going to back down, so I said what I thought would make her less likely to pressure you."

"You know what? You're smarter than I give you credit for." She smiles as she moves her bunny ears. I will have to apologize to Meiya later, I don't want her to think badly of Kasumi.

"She wasn't going to accept a no for an answer. She's very stubborn."

"That she is. So, are all ten prototypes ready for testing?"

"Yes, I finished the instructions you gave me yesterday regarding the plastic case and the buttons. They should feel fine now, the team already made the unified D-Pad piece you told me about and finished fixing the analog sticks with how they should move according to what you said. Both types should work like the originals now."

"Cool. Can't wait to see the fruits of our work."

Sensei left me in charge of the assembling and testing of the consoles. Apparently the plastic that is underneath the buttons doesn't exist in this world, so they had to make it from scratch. Since they designed the things burrowing concepts from the controls of the TSFs, the joysticks and buttons were super stiff and hard to move compared to the ones I brought back. They even used four separated pieces for the D-Pad instead of a single one.

These few days, I've spent the nights talking with the designers with Kasumi's help to get them an accurate idea of how things should be. Thank God I was studying an engineering career back in my world, otherwise I wouldn't have been able to help at all with this. The speed at how these guys work is truly something else, they're the best of the best. To think they're following my orders makes me feel so bad for them, but since Sensei kept her word and gave me power to do stuff it's up to me to prove her that I can help.

Frankly, I learned a lot on these nights. More than what I learned on those two years in college, I dare say. Both in electronics, assembly of machinery, design patterns and how to pinpoint flaws just by looking at the device's configuration. I think I'll keep coming here to ask questions every once in a while, especially regarding TSFs. I would like to know if it's possible to mod them even further, and to learn some tips and tricks for maintenance.

"Takeru-san, how have your nightmares been?" Kasumi's question took me out of dreamland, surprising me a bit.

"No changes for now."

"I see. Are you sure you don't want my help?" She stares at me intently. You're such a good girl, Kasumi.

"It's fine. Even if it hurts like hell, this is my cross to bear. I don't want to forget it." Sensei did say that, if I wanted, Kasumi could repress the most painful memories to let me rest well.

However… How to say it? Ever since I came back, even if I wake up crying like a bitch, squeezing the pillow like a scared kid, after I get my shit together and I remember they're right here, by my side, I can stand up again. I don't want to forget, because the pain is what reminds me that I can't screw this up.

We take the elevator, talking about the reports the team left us about their work, and eventually we arrive at the room on B17F Sensei prepared for us. It looks just like a normal meeting room, it's walls painted in that diluted brown. It has six 29" CRT TVs aligned in a row, each with a Stallion connected to it. There's also six sofas and a small table to the side. On the left side there was a lot of equipment, probably what Sensei will use to collect data during the 'training' sessions.

"Alright. What do we start with?"

"The Professor said to use the MMTS first." She says and we go to the equipment corner, getting the briefcase with the prototypes.

Mobile Multipurpose Training Simulator, the official name Sensei gave to the Game Guy. The Stallion was named the WMTS, Wired Multipurpose Training Simulator.

Getting two of them, we sit down on the sofas and take out the cartridges we were going to be testing.

"Ok, let's see if the two player connection works." We start up F-Mega on our Game Guys. The game starts flawlessly this time, no scanlines, no sound problems.

Now it's practically a perfect copy, both the consoles and the cartridge. Just in a few days they got completely done, the Alt. IV team is truly awesome. Now, let's check if the Join Cable works as it should.

… And it does!

"Hell! Yeah!"

"So Takeru-san, what do we do now that this is done?"

"We play against each other, obviously." She twitches with a shocked expression.

"We can do that?!"

"Didn't I explain to Sensei how it worked?"

"The Professor told me you said the wired connection was important, but she didn't tell me why."

"Well, let's try it out and see if we can complete a race. You ready?" She nods and we start up the two-player game.

It's been so long since I played F-Mega, I forgot how fast it was. I'm having trouble taking the curves with my Red Lightning TUE. However, compared to Kasumi…

Kasumi crashed for the third time in a row, her brows curving downwards and making a cute groan. I told her she can press B to immediately use the brakes, but she apparently forgot about it.

I recharge my fuel on the lane and speed up once more. Only one lap left for me and I'll win. We managed to keep the game running for a whole race, so that's a huge improvement over last time.

Meanwhile, Kasumi's Desert Thunder LPT drifted off course and exploded, one of her cheeks ever so slightly puffed.

I ended up winning while Kasumi could just barely finish two laps.

"Well, the connection works fine. That's good to know."

"This is too hard. I don't like it." She's pouting as bitterly as me when I lost to Mikoto. Well, F-Mega is a hardcore game.

"Ahaha, everybody has a hard time on their first try." She groans a bit. "Alright. Let's try out PoyoPoyo then."

We spent the next hours trying all the games on all five Game Guys, all worked flawlessly. Sadly, Kasumi could only enjoy our round of PoyoPoyo as I had more experience with the rest and they were too hard for her.

"Well, I guess it's time for the Stallions now. We still need to connect the new ethernet adapter, right?" She gives me nod as she goes towards the equipment that was here.

I go to the equipment corner again to check whether the wired internet connection is working. I don't know how this differs from the internet we have back in my world, but since we got our own servers and stuff we practically have no lag or anything, it's like having all the bandwidth of a provider all for yourself.

As we were setting up things, Sensei entered the room carrying a bag.

"Hey Shirogane, Yashiro. How's the testing going?"

"The MMTS are now running perfectly, we were about to test the WMTS prototypes." Kasumi reports as I finished setting up the last Stallion.

"Good work, you two. Here's some snacks for when you get hungry." She leaves the bag she brought on the table. "Shirogane, when do you want to start using these things for training your squad?"

"There's a day after Mikoto comes back in which an argument over how they failed the CCSE will happen. I'll suggest them to do some 'special' training after that."

"Alright, I'll leave that to you. Tonight we'll be doing some more testing of the OS, after you spend some time with Yashiro to see if you can trigger a change in Kagami come in your suit to the usual spot. I think it's almost ready for being actually used without bugs or drops in performance."

"Awesome. By the way Sensei, there's some questions I wanted to ask."

"Hm? What is it?"

"You see, I was thinking that maybe this isn't the world that I went to during my usual loops." Her playful expression vanishes as fast as yakisoba in front of Kei.

"How do you mean? Didn't you say that you went from your world to this one many times already? What makes you think this is a different world?"

"First, is it normal that Nikkeis are seen badly by the Japanese population?"

"Yes, there were a lot of people that ran away when the news that China, and later Korea, had fallen reached here. They and their children are seen as traitors to the Empire, because they sold their honor to the foreigners for their own selfish wishes."

"Ok, second question. Is the UN hated by the Empire?"

"I wouldn't say hate, but they definitely don't like it. The UN employs many protocols and strategies from the American Army. I mean, they're the most effective ones so it's obvious why they use them, but the Japanese don't like to use only guns, to do 'tactical retreats' and to prioritize the result of a battle over the lives of their people."

"Could you explain that in detail?" She sighs as she closes her eyes.

"This is going to take some time, still wanna hear it?"

"Yes, I think I should have at least a basic knowledge of the politics of this world, just in case I ever need it. It would be bad if I didn't knew stuff that's common sense here and someone noticed it." Just like how Tsukuyomi-san did when we talked by the hill last loop. Sensei nods, runs a hand over her hair, and looks upwards at nowhere.

"The invasion of the BETA onto Japanese soil could have been halted if the Empire had agreed to let the UN and America use their nukes on the lands that were going to be ravaged by the BETA. The people would still have died, but the bombs would have taken out a very large chunk of the BETA invaders, since the Laser Class were not yet in position to take the missiles down. However, thanks to some political tension in the American bases on Okinawa and the refusal to retreat of our armies, the Empire refused the proposal and you know how it turned out in the end. They also rejected most of the help from the UN army, when the laws of the Vancouver Pact allowed them to, after the accord with the US fell down on the pretense that they were here to take control and enslave us to their wishes. The UN forces had a tough time moving and helping us thanks to the blooming chaos that ensued after Kyoto fell, we had our hands full defending the mountains that stood between the few cities that were still safe and near our bases. The Empire kept that tough act until the Yokohama Hive was confirmed to be built, then they had no choice but to lower their heads and allow the UN to mobilize all around the nation without much bureaucratic barriers."

She takes a bottle of water from the bag and drinks a bit from it. She starts talking again slowly, something is the way she squinted her eyes made me shiver. To make this Sensei openly show her displeasure… And when talking with me, of all people.

"Actually, it was the current Shogun that requested the help of the international community when I proposed to assault the 22nd Hive with the intention to capture it. She did so against the wishes of the other Regent Houses, who wanted to perform the mission solely with the forces stationed in the Empire."

She rests the bottle on the table, folding her arms and leaning onto the wood, eyes still squinted and sparks still flying out in her words.

"America demanded many things for their help, one of them was that the Hive would fall under the UN's total control. Japan lost its chance to obtain G-Elements, lost around half of its territory to the establishing of the defense lines requested by the UN, and lost a great deal of independency in regards to how the country dealt with its problems, since it now was the frontline against the BETA on top of being the place where Alt. IV was taking place." She then frowns, and I can tell what's coming up next.

"And then, there's the mess made by the G-Bombs, right?" She nods, letting the air go as she ruffles her hair.

"Yes, and the G-Bombs. Many Imperial soldiers who were in the vanguard were caught on the explosion, and to make matters worse the American army blocked the Japanese pilots from entering the Hive. Only the UN teams were authorized to do so, as per the agreement, but the prideful Royal Guards made quite the scandal that day. Of course, the UN was also trying to stop the Americans from taking some G-Elements without authorization but that job went by without any thanks or recognition." Her frown intensifies, Kasumi hid behind my back. Sensei noticed that and sighed, chilling a bit. "To this day, while they acknowledge that without America's help Japan would be nothing more than a memory by now, there are many Japanese that feel like the Empire is being corrupted by the 'American Way'. From how much power the Prime Minister has, to how little influence the Shogun has on actual matters, to how feeble our self-defense power is, and to how America pressures the Empire to adopt its protocols and fighting methods."

"So, they know they can't survive alone but still reject the help they're given? I know that the traditions and core beliefs of the Empire are really important, but to go as far as to put themselves in danger…

This is just madness." It has nothing to do with having a resolve or honor, this is just a power struggle of the nobility that doesn't want to lose its grip on the steering wheel of Japan.

"I already told you last time, but the new project to renovate our armies was cancelled. America was helping Japan, to mend our relationships, with the development of the Shiranui Second TSF, but after how many people started spewing venom towards them after the last operation they cancelled the project. Now, Japan can only produce some spare parts for the older models and can only build the Fubuki, Shiranui and Takemikazuchi. The first two are already on the low end of their generation and the Type-00 is too expensive to mass produce, and it's kept as the special toy of the Royal Guard to make matters worse. If everything was tense before, now it's taken a turn for the worse. Japan most certainly has a hateful boner for both the UN and America, even though it owes its life to them."

"Holy moly, I didn't expect things to be… Last time there was resentment towards America, but this is on a completely different scale."

"It is what it is. Japan is too prideful to ask for help earnestly and accept its past mistakes. If the Empire collaborated with the UN and put all it's CQC knowledge on the table, adding the expertise of America's gun savants, we could make the most perfect TSF humanity has ever seen. Or at least a fighting protocol that used the world's most effective tactics in both close and long range. Sadly, all that went up in smoke after these last incidents."

"By the way, how are the Empire's relations with the rest of the world?"

"The TUF, the Philippines, and the Asian troops absorbed into the UN hate us, because Japan not only didn't send much help during the Invasion of Korea, other than a few reinforcements for the Continental Force, but it also refused to collaborate with them until the Yokohama Hive incident. There's also, you know… the grudges of the Second World War. COSEAN could be considered our only ally, thanks to the good relation we have with the remaining Southern Asian nations due to the efforts of our Task Force in aiding them with the defense of their land, as well as for providing them with some Shiranuis before the Invasion demolished our own forces. Europe and Africa don't really care, officially they follow America in regards to their international relationships since American soldiers are the ones helping with the delivery of their TSFs and supplies. Oceania and Canada are on our side only because we're the only thing preventing the BETA from moving towards them. The Soviets are a mystery, and South America is… neutral, I think? You don't want to deal with them, trust me."

"Huh? Why? Are they not helping with the war?"

"Yes, the BrArg alliance is the biggest food producer in the world, and they're the third on taking refugees after Australia and America. But the way they fight is… brutal. America is a baby compared to them." What the hell? The trigger happy America is a baby? What the hell do the South Americans even do?

"Sensei, what do they do? I mean, I never heard of them fighting at all."

"That's because nobody wants to see a Fighting Hawk or a Super Tucano being deployed. They act on their own, they don't follow rules or regulations. They're humanity's suicide squad, the ones with the highest kill rate against the BETA. The only problem is that they destroy everything along the aliens, be it allies or civilians. Not even Americans are so cruel in their methods. To them all that matters is the result, victory at any cost."

"What?! Why? What do they even-"

"You have seen the XG being deployed, right?"

"Yeah, I have. What has that to do with this?"

"They have two smaller machines similar to it that run on a nuclear engine. Those two were made as a test, with the collaboration of America in the early eighties, to test the viability of using nuclear energy as a weapon of mass destruction against the BETA for when we couldn't drop nuclear missiles on them. And while they indeed work, the collateral damage is just too big. However, the BrArg army doesn't care about that. If they get deployed, they'll use their own special TSFs to clear the Lasers and after that they'll just wipe the BETA away with a nuclear cannon blast, along with anyone who is also in the beam's way. Their interventions are one of the reasons Africa didn't get overrun when America had its hands full trying to help the Empire, Europe and the Soviets against the BETA in recent years."

"I never… We had nuclear cannons?!"

"Yes, and they're deadly. For the BETA and for us. That's why we don't use bigger shells on our guns and the usage of tactical nuclear bombs has to go through UN approval first, to try to limit the amount of nuclear radiation we generate. Anyways, I guess that's the gist of it. We basically shot ourselves in the foot this time and the world got fed up with our way of doing things."

"Yep, this definitely didn't happen last time. Our relations with the UN weren't that bad, I had to rescue some people once and they didn't show any hostility towards me for being a UN soldier. I didn't really know much about our international relations, but I'm sure that our connections with America weren't so bad."

"I see. Well, is that all you wanted to ask?"

"No, I still have one more question. Sensei, why did you assume I was a spy?" She grimaces as she breaks eye contact.

"Because I found some weird intel on your records, that's all." You're not deceiving me with that dry tone, nor scaring me with those sharp violet flares.

"I want the details, if it's possible." After a moment of silence, she sighs and strokes her hair.

"I told you I had found something odd in your records, right? You had very little information on your profile from the public database. Very few people can have so little data, but I found one bit that made me suspicious."

"What was it?"

"It said you left your school but didn't move away from the Hiiragi district, but you also weren't transferred to another school. Obviously that is a lie, it's illegal to not send your child to get formal education in the Empire since the eighties. I found that to be a very stupid way to cover info, but I decided to dig deeper. Then, I found a profile with your name and picture in the databases of the Royal Guards."

"Wait, the Royal Guards? Was I being targeted by them?"

"No, you were one of them. A 1st Lieutenant, in fact."

…

Wait, what?!

"I was a Royal Guard in this world? And a 1st Lt.? How old was I?!"

"Fourteen, maybe?"

"How the hell did I became a 1st Lt. at such a young age?!" This doesn't make any sense! That means I wasn't a civilian here. But then, how did I met Sumika in this world? How does she remember me? Was she also a Royal Guard?

"Don't ask me. There was very little info on that profile too, and it was very well hidden. It took me two hours of hacking to open it. That made me really suspicious. But, wanna hear something crazy? Apparently, this world's you died twice."

"What? How do you mean? Was he also a quantum anomaly?"

"It's probably not that. His civilian report said that he died when the BETA took control of this area. But the report of the Royal Guards states that he was killed during the Invasion of Hiiragi, one of the phases of Operation Lucifer."

"Wait a sec, Lucifer was the attack on the Yokohama hive, right? That means he got commissioned under the Royal Guards two years ago?" So, he wasn't captured by the BETA like in the other world?

"Yes. He was fighting on the vanguard along the other Imperial troops as far as the report goes." He was a pilot? At such a young age? Man, what a badass I was here.

"So the fact that 'I' was a member of the Guard, had next to no personal data, and had two different death dates despite being alive and kicking is what made you think I was a spy?" I mean, it's totally understandable. That was suspicious as hell.

"Exactly. I still don't know much about this world's you. All I know is he lived in a lot of different places until he was seven, then he apparently lived in the Hiiragi district until he was ten. There's no more data from then on. In the Guard's report it said you were recruited since an early age, but at what age and why you were recruited was not written anywhere. Any data about your family, education, medical records, military training, or anything at all is gone."

"It's like I was erased or something."

"If you had been erased there would be no records at all. I think someone was trying to hide you, that's why I assumed you were part of a special task force working in the Intelligence Division of the Royal Guard. And then… you know the rest."

"Yeah, this pretty much seals it for me, this IS a different world. You would have warned me about this last time, or at least reacted to this in some form of way, like you did here."

"I see. Do you see any other differences?"

"Kasumi talks a lot more now, Marimo-chan is angrier, our training is way more harsh, and the Royal Guards approached me earlier and seem to know me, though I already know why now."

"They… approached you?" I tell her of what happened with Maya-san, which… I had forgotten to do. "To think something like that went unnoticed. Shirogane, if you're ever threatened I authorize you to defend yourself by any means necessary."

"Roger. By the way, there's no records about Sumika in this world, right?"

"No, not a single one. Any trace of her existence has been wiped off the face of the planet as a collateral effect of the G-Bombs' explosion when the conduit between the worlds was created, I think. No one remembers her ever existing and there is no data left of her, save for a bare bones report in the public databases detailing her academic grades and who her close relatives are, all of them are dead though. So we won't know how she and this world's you met until Yashiro can properly talk with her or we turn her into the 00 Unit."

"I see. Well, I'll be extra careful when dealing with the Guard from now on."

"You do that. I'll be waiting for the report on these consoles, and be ready for the OS' tests at 8 PM. That's all. Oh, and be nice with Yashiro! She's not very good at these games." Sensei laughs while smiling, which makes Kasumi move her ears as she shots an annoyed glare at her.

"Takeru-san, CryRing Saga is ready for the test."

"Ok, let's give it a spin."

At the same time.

( A h allway near the track field .)

[Mana]

---

My position illuminated by the sunshine, I stood just besides the window in case she turned her head towards me.

Meiya-sama was training alone in the track field. Her swings were as good as always, her pose firm and resolute. Her hair sways through the air as if it were waves hitting the shore, her movements keep following the patterns I taught her as if it were but a dance, swiftly and without wasted movements like a bird soaring through the clouds. However, despite the immutable posture, her eyes were laid upon somewhere else.

Going by how she's squinting them, by the lack of a delay in her swings, it is clear that her heart is resembling the surface of a lake after being assaulted by a pebble. Considering how intense her training has become in the last month it wouldn't be odd for her to be troubled, and yet something tells me that is not the reason that is causing her gaze to waver so.

Meiya-sama, what is the source of your worry? I wish I could just go and ask you, yet I must remain still, limiting myself to watch.

Our current situation is in a stark contrast with my cousin and her pupil. Maya confirmed that the man who joined Squad 207 was no spy. His informal and dismissive tone, his contrarian way of speaking, his annoyed face, the answers he gave her, all were proof enough.

And if that wasn't enough we had the privilege to spy on his mission that night. Ebisu reported to me that he had gone to a changing room and had come out of it in a suit, and me and Maya went to her ride to observe what was happening through the cameras of the carrier ship.

Maya had always thought that she wasn't a good enough teacher for you, since she couldn't fix those eccentric moves you were always doing in and out of a TSF. However, if they evolved into your current style, it was for the best that she didn't. You always had talent, but that night's performance was simply marvelous. Your speed and dexterity resembling a diving hawk, and your accuracy was also spectacular. To think that you took ten pilots on your own and almost managed to win, you've grown quite splendidly in these years you were away. Had it been a fair fight without the turrets you would have been the clear winner, I'm sure.

If only I could have guided Meiya-sama to that level of skill. A sigh escapes my lips as I continue to watch. A stagnant air finds its way to my lungs as Meiya-sama's footing becomes irregular, her swings less graceful as she needlessly puts too much force behind them.

You told Maya you had someone to protect. If I were to guess, I think Her Highness sent you to have someone watching over Meiya-sama in case she gets commissioned, as I won't be able to stay by her side once she does. I only hope Meiya-sama accepts your aid openly when she finds out, maybe you will be able to mold her into a proper samurai. She seems to have taken an interest in you, hopefully you can continue to keep her safe when I'm called back to the Shogun's side.

My communicator beeps, another call from HQ-01. Must be my orders regarding how should I approach you.

"This is Tsukuyomi."

"Good afternoon, 1st. Lieutenant. I am hoping to have called at an appropriate time." This calm, gentle voice…

"Forgive the rude greeting, Your Highness! 1st. Lt. Tsukuyomi, at your service." I stand upright instinctively, holding my breath as I leave the window.

For Her Highness to call me herself, I can only hope I did not incur her wrath.

"At ease, Mana. Maya informed me that you were wishing for new instructions regarding… the shadow that lies in Yokohama Base. I already have been made aware of the changes that had occurred there, you are to continue your duty as you were. Keep your distance and do not intervene, unless a serious situation presents itself."

"Yes, Your Highness!"

"That is all. I am greatly thankful for your efforts, Mana. You have my sincerest gratitude."

"Your words are more than what I deserve, Your Highness."

---

At the same time.

(Tokyo. Imperial Palace. Audience Room. )

[Yuuhi]

---

Finishing the call, I leave the communicator in Maya's hands. She then bows and leaves my personal chamber. I slowly rearrange the golden crown atop my head, resting my hands on my lap afterwards.

I sigh, looking towards the balcony, towards the clear skies we are enjoying today. The sun's company enticing the golden ornaments to shimmer, the room was pleasant as it hasn't been in a long time. The pillars sending small shadows onto the magenta carpet, I simply enjoy the silence of solitude for as long as it'll last.

I am hoping to have been able to offer some measure of comfort to her. I have heard of the increasingly arduous training Meiya has been enduring. It must be hard on you Mana, to only be allowed to watch from the shadows.

I must praise Maya for going to survey the situation herself, to keep it all a secret. When she notified me you were troubled by the shadow in Yokohama I assumed the worse. However when she told me there was no danger to the mission and that Mana simply was wishing for new directions on how to approach the situation, I had to keep a sigh from escaping these lips of mine. I don't know what I would do if I lost you too, Meiya. I pray that your resolve stays strong, and I hope Mana can continue to support you regardless of the results of your training.

The door to my chamber opens, and the Chamberlain leads a tall man in a pale gray business suit into the room. He gets on his knees and puts a hand to his chest, tipping his hat with the other.

"I am honored to have been called to serve you once again, Your Highness."

"Yoroi, raise. Be at ease, no unwanted eyes nor ears are upon us here. Would you have the reports I asked of you?" He remains kneeling, and, as he raises his head from the floor, he takes out some envelopes from his coat and hands them to the Chamberlain, who then hands them to me.

"Your Highness, I'm afraid to inform you that the deal for the Shiranui Second has fallen completely. The Americans have lost all interest in the machine after the comments of the members of the Guard reached the ears of the president of the company responsible for the engine, and no amount of negotiating was enough to get them to resume the project."

"That truly is a shame." I was expecting this, but I still held onto the hope that our relations could somehow be repaired. "What else?"

"The EU's council rejected the proposal to start the joint development of the food plant you had sent them, for the same reasons as the Americans."

Even that project was rejected? I curse my powerlessness, if only I could dissuade more members of the Regent Houses to give America and the UN another chance. Sigh… This will only make Raiko-san even more adusted. How distressing.

"I see. What of the report on the internal skirmishes?"

"There's many that are unhappy with the current situation of the UN, especially regarding the Diet. There's some that are still suggesting to take control of it, while many others in the lower echelons are very much opposed to any kind of further collaboration with them if they keep on infringing on what they believe are your rightful entitlements."

"So it's the worst case scenario." I remain with my eyes closed for but a moment, to vanquish this freezing hold that was wishing to make nest in my heart. "Has Kurechika-dono revised the plan to renovate our military?"

"I'm afraid to tell you that he's at an impasse. There's no feasible way in which we can produce the amounts of Type-00 and Type-94 that we would require to modernize all of our forces, and that is only looking at the time it would take to build the units, not the funds it would require. However, he cannot request the UN for spare parts or new units without gaining the animosity of many VIPs, especially within the nobility going by my intel." And we also have missed our chance to push for the Shiranui to other countries. "Obviously, America and Europe won't do business with us, and the Soviets have their hands full with the defense of Kamchatka." And the COSEAN army is in an even worse state than ours, as far as I know.

Our tomorrow looks grim indeed. I fear a war between those who support the Diet and those who oppose it could break out at any moment now. I can only dare to pray the next delivery of those Shiranui arrives in time before our MDF suffers further casualties.

"This is most troubling indeed. I certainly appreciate your dedication, Yoroi. I hope next time we meet we can discuss a better outlook for our nation."

"Your Highness, I still have one last report to give you." One last report? Am I so restless that I forgot something?

"What would it be about?"

"I received a call from the Vice Commander of Yokohama Base, former Imperial Researcher Yuuko Kouzuki-san."

The name made me drop my smile, for if she is troubled… If this are yet more setbacks to the project…

"What did she require of you?"

If there is something I do know about her is that Kouzuki dislikes Yoroi much. So for her to be the one to call him, it must be a dire setback that she's encountered. And for him to come to me instead of Kurechika-dono or the UN's High Council… Whatever could this be about?

"She requested my services for a certain matter she did not divulge much about. However, she mentioned that if I agreed to aid her, she'll show me the blueprints of a few projects she had been working on alongside the Alternative Project. One of those is a stealth system made from the ground up with Japanese technology."

"What?! A stealth system? You speak of something similar to the one the American Army employs?"

"Yes, she said she was quite proud of her invention. She also mentioned something about refurbishing older TFSs with some new tech her engineering team designed to improve their performance until newer models become widely available."

"… Is this true? Has she truly developed such inventions?"

"This is what she herself said to me. She was very careful not to slip what she wanted in return, and asked me to keep this as an absolute secret. I fear she might be losing her faith in me, ahaha." He smiles, I couldn't help but to chuckle along for a moment.

"If she has indeed developed such technology, then… However, why would you be informing me of this, Yoroi? Is this not a personal request she asked of you?" I know he is loyal to me and that this intel is truly precious, but to inform me of it when he still hasn't confirmed it? It is not like him.

"Yes, it is a personal request." His tone then lowered, almost becoming inaudible from my position, as he also lowered his head as if to hide his lips. "However, she did reveal that she wanted me to modify the public databases. She didn't give me a name, but she wishes to alter the profile of someone in her service."

Is she trying to cover someone? It must be a very important individual for her to ask this much. However, with my current standing, if it were know that I accepted such a thing… If anyone notices this, I'll lose most of the little power I have. In no way the other leaders of the Regent Houses would let this go unpunished, for it is borderline treason.

However, I believe that there is a way for me to make ample use of this opportunity. It shall not be treason if the Empire gains a great benefit from this deal. As much as I may abhor the idea of employing a stealth system, I can use it to gain the favor of quite many people. And, if she also has a means to enhance our forces, that will only enhance our defensive capabilities against the BETA. Furthermore, these news would equal that her research is, hopefully, proceeding well. In which case, my morals aside, there is little choice left but to support her.

"I'll give you permission to alter the databases, on the condition that the unit of the Royal Guard stationed at Yokohama Base going by the callsign Blood is allowed to test this stealth system. I want them to be my eyes regarding all these developments she spoke of, and if the results are satisfactory I want the Empire to have exclusivity or priority when it comes to acquiring the licensing and producing rights to them over any other bidders. If she agrees to these terms, I shall give you the code to fulfill your part. You also do not need to tell me what this favor entails, but I would like a very detailed report on all the inventions as soon as possible. Of course, all of this is to be kept secret from any other party."

"Yes, Your Highness. I shall relay the message with utmost secrecy."

"Was there anything else regarding her that merits my attention?"

"No, that was all. Worry not Your Highness, I shall make sure Yokohama remains safe. Even if it seems like I'm losing my fans over there." He smiled again as he rose from the ground.

"I see. Thank you kindly for your support, Yoroi. Please do take care."

He bows to me and, after saying his parting words, he takes his leave escorted by the Chamberlain. And so, I am alone again in the room.

Such good timing, perhaps this is fate sending me one last ray of hope. If Kouzuki has a way to enhance our current weaponry that will do wonders for the relations between the UN and our people. It would also be a much needed breath of air until we can arrange another deal or restart the Second's development. I do not think the prototype I'm working on will be ready before the end of the year, so devising a way to empower our military is a top priority right now.

But I cannot help but to smile at this turn of events. The help had to come from Yokohama. I slowly stand up, going towards the balcony. Looking at the Capital from this colossal height, looking at all that we have managed to protect so far, I finally sigh and relax my shoulders. The incoming sunshine warms my entire being, and yet what spurs such glee in me, what unties the chains in my shoulders, what banishes the worried wringing in my hands comes from within. I look back, he is not there. Yet, I cannot help but to feel as if he were here after being given these news.

"… Could this be your hand aiding me from the afterlife, Takeru?"

A sudden gust of wind reaches the balcony, briefly caressing my face, making my fringe flutter faintly. My smile widens as I look back at our azure skies, a few fingers of mine come to thread my cheeks, others go to the crown I've been always made to wear briefly.

I can only hope the peace you gave your life to obtain can last some more. Nobody can tell what will happen if this tension keeps escalating. Hopefully the waters will calm down before either side decides to make a horrible decision and bring a storm about.

The door to my chamber is yet again opened, shattering my daydreams and reminiscence. Subduing my smile, I return inside to the many meetings that still await me for the day.

Sore Point

2 nd Arc: Distrust

Chapter 11: Sore Point

---

October 31st. 05:42 PM.

(Classroom.)

[Takeru]

---

The sun was already done with today's shift, leaving its post up there. In the same way that the sky is losing its afterglow, the classroom was filling with the quick scribbling of our notes as they muttered our faint complains, that we could not voice out.

A few pages were turned and, without waiting a second, she placed, or almost slammed, a hand on her desk.

"Next question!" Wow, Marimo-chan is not easing up today, huh?

She looks at us, to make sure we were paying attention and were on the right page, and then begins to tackle the next assignment.

"You are stranded on enemy territory, fleeing from an infiltration mission and carrying valuable data with you. Two enemy units located some two hundred meters to your ten and two respectively are stationed on a cliff, and they have a clear aim at you. You all managed to arrive to a safe location behind some trees, where they cannot snipe you."

Still holding the book, she goes to the blackboard and begins to draw in it the images found within the pages using blue chalk to mark our units. When she was done with it she leaves it on top of her desk and then picks up a diluted orange one and begins to press it as she marks the enemies' positions, sending a small piece of chalk flying about.

"However, as you were crossing open terrain, some of your comrades were left behind as the assault from the cliffs scattered you. They cannot move from their current position or the enemy units will snipe them on the spot, and they will surely be either killed or captured if you do nothing. You know that reinforcements will not be arriving for at least ten minutes to extract you from the field, however they'll have to deal with the rest of the hostiles in the area to keep you safe, and the window of time you have to board your ride is very small. You also cannot rule out the possibility that you could also run into other chaser units as you proceed from now on."

She stops drawing and we focus onto the rest of the problem on the book, she holds it up as if she were practicing for a play while eyeing us to make sure we were keeping up. I couldn't help but to arch my brows a bit when she stared at me for a sec too long.

"You're low on ammo, have no sniping rifles or smoke grenades with you, and you are only halfway to the designated escape point. However, those comrades who were left behind had part of the intel you gathered during this mission. Regardless, you cannot rush to their aid or you risk being sniped, and every second matters in the field. Therefore, you must make a decision quickly. Do you proceed to the extraction point and leave your comrades behind; or do you devise a plan to rescue them?" She then lowered the book, giving us some seconds to ponder our answer.

Looking at the map, it's obvious this is a trap. If we try to circle around the cliff, we'll end up without enough time to escape and reach the extraction point. We can't rush out or we'll get killed, and we also don't have any sniping rifles to deal with the units on the cliff. The best option is to leave an element behind while entrusting the intel to the rest, the others then go to the extraction point.

If the element doesn't make it back when the reinforcements arrive, we bail out. Those who escape will be the focus of the enemies on the cliffs, letting the element slowly approach our comrades after some moments even if they have to move further into the trees. Those who go to the extraction point can try to bait the enemy by drawing their attention on purpose too when the reinforcements arrive. It all depends on whether we can avoid the other hostiles in the area, but we don't really have a surefire way to protect those left behind from the snipers. Of course, we could just leave and prioritize the mission.

"Instructor, I have an answer." Chizuru raises her hand, Marimo-chan nods, and, after tapping her glasses, she stands up. "Our whole team could cooperate to rescue our comrades. While we cannot rush out of cover towards their location, we merely need to distract the enemies on the cliffs to allow our allies to move out towards us."

"I see." Marimo-chan crosses her arms but then her eyes squint a bit, making my stomach feel as if it was just hit by a DMP. "However, there are two units on the cliffs. One could easily snipe them as they move."

"They could take a longer trail, using the terrain as cover." She counters, again tapping her glasses.

"Then, how do you deal with the hostiles patrolling the area? What if they surround you all once you rendezvous with your comrades?"

"We can either retaliate or flee towards the escape point."

"The time frame is too tight. Your friendlies might not be able to cover you if you don't arrive in time to their vicinity. You're putting the whole mission at risk, Sakaki." She rises her chin and narrow her eyes, Chizuru seemed to compact her arms onto her sides as she returned the gaze.

"Instructor, leaving our comrades behind also presents a failure. We may lose valuable intel and, if they were captured and took in for questioning, the enemy would attain critical knowledge about our mission's goals. There is also no guarantee that we won't be sniped once we move out from our current location." Chizuru retaliates without backing down.

"Then, what do you do once your time is up, Cadet? The reinforcements won't be able to hold their ground indefinitely."

"In that case, once we confirm our comrades are out of the snipers' range we can also start moving towards the extraction point."

"So, not only you give the enemy time to surround you on your current location, you also guide them to the escape point. And the safety of your comrades is still not secured, and I'm being lenient on any of you not incurring injuries during this distraction. Anyone else got any other proposals?" Chizuru sat down, her brows fusing into one tense V.

"Yes, I do." I rose a hand, the Instructor nodded, and I stood up. I then explained my reasoning. "… And, worst case scenario, we can leave our comrades behind."

"So you're willing to abandon not two but four of your squadmates?"

"We would be buying them as much time as we possibly could. Circling through the cliff would be a waste of time for us and we cannot remain stationary or we risk being surrounded. That would also make it easier for the enemy, since they would already know of our location and they have the advantage of being familiarized with the terrain as well. While time will be against them and they will surely run into hostiles on their way, we cannot remain behind waiting."

I take a second of pause, Marimo-chan still doesn't seem convinced but doesn't ask anything. Again feeling my stomach tense up on its own, I continue.

"The biggest threat are the units on the cliffs, so if we draw their attention as we escape our comrades would have a bigger chance of making it out alive, while not compromising our arrival to the escape point. There's also the matter of the chasers, since we must have assaulted a facility many hostiles are sure to be coming for us. Also, we don't know whether reaching the extraction point will be enough. We don't know if the enemy has anti-air missiles or a way to give chase to our ride. Time is of essence, and escaping with as much time left is the priority. If the situation is too dire, or if we have too little ammo, then perhaps all of us should escape together without leaving anyone else behind. Delivering the intel we have on us is better than risking us and our reinforcements to die on the field. That is all." She holds my gaze, silently judging me.

I know this is a tricky question. There is no right answer, not with so little data. That's what this problem is trying to portray, that orders in the field are not absolute.

A single bullet hitting us from the cliffs would change the game plan completely, leaving us with no choice but to abandon those who were left behind. If those same comrades managed to avoid all pursuers or maybe ambush them, they would make it in time if we give them cover. There are many pitfalls here, and this is not really a problem that requires an answer. I remember Marimo-chan used this as a small debate in my past loops, not as a questioning. It was actually fun during my first time around, it was like a puzzle game. Only after getting commissioned the first time around I learned that 'game theory' was used in military simulations and exercises.

"May I ask why are you choosing to leave your comrades behind with such ease?" Marimo-chan asked, a hand on her chin and a brow curved slightly.

"I mean, the images on the book have barely no info on how the terrain is. That is realistic, I guess. But there is no 'right' answer, there isn't a 'correct' solution in my opinion. In which case, we gotta rush the win condition. You can't fight what you don't know, and there's a lot of unknown details in this mission while there's a heavy responsibility on our shoulders. I believe we should focus on what we can feasibly accomplish, Instructor."

And trying to save some might lead to many more dying. That's… something I know well. But, hey, maybe my logic isn't that good. Those two years back home and the guilt of what happened might have screwed up my compass.

"… That was a well formulated answer, Shirogane." She smirks for a moment. "However, your organization's standing could be put at risk if your comrades are captured. And the intel they have could be more important than the one you possess. So, any other answers?" I sat down and looked at the rest. They avoided my gaze, looking down. "I see. Well, let's debate on this matter for a moment. Turn the page, the enemy positions and possible outcomes are listed there."

The rest of the class went by as we discussed what could have happened on this mission. For some reason, Chizuru was being extra contrarian now. Eyes squinted, brows low and arched, the edge of her lips twisted and twirled when I tried to debate with her. Meiya was also rather cold, using short sentences and all.

"Well, that will be all for today. Do remember to read the following pages, we're tackling the next chapter starting tomorrow. Dismissed!"

"Salute!" We all stood up and saluted. Marimo-chan returned the gesture and left. "Sigh… These last few questions were too abstract." Tapping her glasses, she begins to put her books in her bag.

"I agree." Meiya sighed as she crossed her arms. "It is most frustrating to be left with so little data to formulate a plan. There was a very large room for error in that last question."

"I think that's the whole point." I grabbed my books and put them into my little bag. "It's supposed to show how volatile the battlefield can be."

"I think so too, Shirogane-san. Even so, you formulated a good answer very quickly." Tama smiled as usual as she put her own bag on her back.

"Yeah, 'good answer' Special-kun."

"Hey, what's with that leering?"

"Nothing." Kei turns around and walks to the door.

"Well, let us go leave our books in our quarters." In answer to Meiya's words we all left the classroom.

"But anyways, I still think this is going too fast."

"Yeah, that's right. We're already starting another chapter tomorrow." Tama sighed and scratched one of her ears softly.

"Well, you still got the best answer so you're doing good." Chizuru said as she walked in front of me, sour as lemons.

"There was no right answer. That was just what I thought was best."

"… I see."

Hey, what's wrong with them? I know they've been kinda overwhelmed since this new regime started, but I didn't do anything to upset them. I know they kinda got upset at Kasumi thanks to how cold she was when she came to pick me up, but I did apologize to them about it.

We arrived at the barracks and after leaving our stuff in our rooms, we went to the PX. Bustling with yells, chatter, and complains as always at this hour, we got in line, without saying anything. We got our food and went to our usual table. As we ate, we debated over the exercises and lectures but…

"I'm only saying it was the most effective way to deal with the mission, with what little data we had on hand."

"Huh, I see." Chizuru took a moment to drink some miso, then glanced at me with lowered eyelids. "Then, would your answer be the same if you were the one left behind?"

"Of course. If I'm a hazard to you, you should cut your losses and prioritize your own wellbeing."

I rather die myself than see any of you die or get injured because of my carelessness. It would be hard for me to leave one of you behind, sure. But if it's that or putting everyone at risk, I would… shoulder the decision myself. I already forced you all to sacrifice yourselves more than enough times. That's not happening here.

"Such a team player, asking us to leave the dead weight behind." Kei, who was sitting to my left, narrowed her eyes at me as her tone was a like branch hitting the window during a storm, catching me completely off guard in its aggressive vibe.

"Hey, I'm just giving you my opinion. And it's just a debate. No need to get upset."

"Whatever." She gulped down her miso and stood up, lifting her tray with a bit too much force. "Later." And she left the PX as quickly as if she were a blue hedgehog.

"Sheesh, what got into her?" I know Kei doesn't like abandoning people or retreating thanks to all that business with her dad, but still, I think this is too much.

"I wonder." Chizuru again averted her eyes, her brows were still tense in a V. She only looks like that when she's really upset, if my memory of our relationship isn't wrong. "Well, I'll be going too." She also stood up and left swiftly.

"Um… I want to review some stuff, so I'll be going too."

"Okay, later Tama." She did smile as she got up, and said her goodbyes to me and Meiya with a waving hand.

Sigh… I wonder why they're so upset. I know I've been doing better than them despite their best efforts, but I'm just trying to help you guys out. If only you listened to my advice instead of getting like this. You won't be able to save everyone… Sometimes shit just hits the fan, and there's nothing to be done about it. All you can do sometimes… is just take the fall in stride, and move on from then. I know it's kind of weird coming from me, the guy who keeps going back to the past, but life's a bitch sometimes and won't hesitate to sucker punch your kidney like a bastard when you least expect it. They should know that better than me, since they've lived their whole lives in this world.

"Shirogane, might I ask you something?" Meiya looked at me as she put down her chopsticks.

"Sure, what's up?"

"Would you truly forsake your comrades if you were placed in a similar situation to the mission that was described in our last question?"

"… Yes. Even if that meant that I could be the one left behind. Trying to save a few can end up causing the death of many more, but above all, you can't fight the unknown. It would be too risky to compromise the mission."

"… I see." She looked down, slowly picking some more food as her shoulders lowered a bit.

"Hey, I'm not saying we should abandon anyone without trying, it's just-"

"No, it is alright. That is your opinion and you already explained your reasoning."

"Okay… So, hey, sorry about Kasumi. I know I already said it, but she really can be too cold without meaning to sometimes."

"There is no problem. You have made yourself clear already."

It feels as if I had knocked a wall of glass. Hmm… Knowing how she is, she surely took offense with my comment about the mission.

"So, Meiya…"

"Yes?"

"I really am not saying we should abandon our squadmates without a second thought. But sometimes… things will get tough and you won't have a way to save everyone."

"… I know that well. You do not need to justify yourself to me. I can… see your point of view. There is no need to keep debating over this. Also, isn't that Yashiro?"

"Hm? Oh, you're right." I turned towards the entrance and saw Kasumi staring, moving her bunny ears really slow once we made eye contact. Sigh… Deadlines are a scary thing, indeed. "Well, I'll be going. Oh, and take a look at the graph on page 68 if you can."

"Why?" Meiya raises a brow.

"Well, I skimmed through the pages before leaving the classroom and it seemed to have a lot of useful stuff for next class. I would have liked to talk about it with the rest but, well…"

"Do not worry, we can manage on our own." She looks away, returning to her food. "You shouldn't keep Yashiro waiting, since you promised to spend time with her."

"Yeah, later." I pick up my tray and leave the table.

Why was she so upset? Sigh… I know I'm cruising through this while you all struggle, but that's no reason to give me the cold shoulder like that. Also, is it me or is Meiya cross towards Kasumi? I mean, the bunny has been real rude to her when she came to ask me for help these last few days. I know I have been ignoring Meiya and the rest for a short while thanks to the testing of the consoles and the XM3, but I've been trying to help during class. Eh, I'll just do my best to not be so obnoxious. Maybe I shouldn't be so insistent on my own answers? Yeah, I should let them form their own words instead of being so pushy.

Well, I'm sure this little thing will go away once they get some more good results in their belts. Also, Mikoto is sure to help them regain their cheer.

---

Same Day. A bit past 9 PM.

(Takeru's Room.)

---

"So, what do you think? Should we accept the deal?" Sensei asked me on the other side of the line.

"This just might be a stroke of good luck for us, Sensei. If you think it's safe, go for it. But make sure we can also record their data, I'm sure it'll be useful for the XM3."

"Alright, we'll discuss that later. That's all." And she hanged up.

So, in exchange for clearing my records and fixing my profiles, the Shogunate wants to have early access to the stealth tech and the other stuff Sensei made, as well as letting Tsukuyomi-san's squad be the testers.

This is truly convenient for us. I remember that despite all the fighting she and her squad did during the defense of our base, their Takemikazuchis were still in good condition after it. They lasted quite nicely during the Kashgar Raid, too. I don't know if that's because of the TSF itself, but their skill should be a great thing to analyze. If by looking at their control logs and combat data we can somehow figure out how they make their weapons and TSFs last so much, we would get a serious boost in our performance. The less our TSFs and swords wear out, the less supplies we need on the field. This came with such good timing, perhaps this is fate throwing me a present after all my efforts.

The consoles are more than ready, the XM3 is shaping up to be even better than last time. All the stuff I brought ended up being useful to Sensei. We're all green on that front.

On the other however…

During this week the training became even harder in all fronts. I can now call it training, but the girls are being driven to their limits. The lectures, the fighting exercises, the practice in the range field, the running, everything is overwhelming them. They're certainly getting better than how they were in my past loop, but Marimo-chan is not letting up.

Since I've been busy with the consoles and the XM3's testing I haven't had the time to help them train much, and somehow I feel like there's a wall between us now. I know they might be upset at me, going by our talks after today's lecture, but still…

When it was the other way around you guys didn't give up on me, despite your complains and teasing. So surely you won't hold it against me now, right? I won't give up on you, so you should rely on me a bit more you know. Well, tomorrow Mikoto comes back so she should help me lighten the mood between us.

"Sigh… I'll just do what I can. Let's keep practicing." I grab the Minaru Kamui and start swinging again.

I've been doing some practice with it at night when I have the time. I don't have much room to move here, but it's better than nothing and it's also a nice way to train for any time where I'm surrounded or stuck. I did promise Maya-san I'd keep improving myself, and since not even Meiya can give me a good challenge in her current form, having some mental battles with myself is the best method I have to at least not lose my edge.

Also, holding the sword with the ribbon has been a great help to keep my resolve these days, since honestly I feel like crying sometimes. I have been making a conscious effort to be nice and try to help the girls, but I'm getting shot down faster than aircraft on the range of a Laser class. I know I shouldn't expect them to be nice and intimate with me, but being treated so coldly despite my best attempts at not being a jerk hurts. A lot.

So having our sword with me helps me remember why I'm here. The oath I made, to protect them no matter the cost. So long as some of them survive this hell and can find peace and happiness, I can keep on fighting. Even if I'm apart of them forever. I rather end up alone by their choice than having to be alone because all of them are dead. I wouldn't be able to endure it, not again.

Once I was done training, I carefully stash the Minaru Kamui in the closet, wash my face on the sink, rinse my mouth, and then hit I the sack.

---

Some odd minutes before 6 AM.

---

"Ugh…" I stir under the bed, supporting me with one arm as I stood up. Rubbing my forehead, I blink as the grogginess leaves me.

I just had a dream about the time when I ran away to my world, dammit. Ugh, I thought I had these things under control… but they're getting more and more vivid.

It still hurts like hell to remember that. How Marimo-chan died, how Meiya forgot all about me in a few seconds, how Sumika forgot me and got crushed at the gym…

I breath in, clearing the mist in my eyes. I take my feet off the bed, resting my arms on my knees. I again inhale deeply with my nose, eyes closed.

… That is not gonna happen again. They're alive, t-they're still alive.

Sniff… I can prevent that. Yeah, I can do it. Wipe those tears, man. No one's dying like that.

Come on, breathe in. Exhale… Breathe in… Hic…

"C'mon, get your shit together. Hic… Stop crying, dammit."

I stand up and go to the sink, wiping my nose. A splash of cold water always helps. Hell straight, I'm wide awake now. I inhale sharply, returning my reflection's stare.

No one dies here this time. I can and will lead them to a better future, no matter what. Remember what you caused the last time you doubted, remember Sensei's words. Focus on attaining victory… and you'll attract a solution to your problems.

"… Let's get ready, last thing I want is to miss roll call."

Today, Marimo-chan told us we have lectures on how to assemble rifles. Again. Only this time it's also a competition, the two last ones have to run ten klicks. I wonder how good I am at zeroing a gun now, that is one thing I haven't practiced.

I took some minutes to get my shit together in my room before going to the PX, and when I got there the girls weren't at the table. I ate quickly and made my way to our classroom before I suffered the wrath of Marimo-chan. Luckily for me, I arrived at the door of the classroom and hear all the girls talking inside. So everyone is already here, first time I'm the last one to arrive. But I got here before the Instructor, so that's a win in my eyes.

"Yo, good morning!" I try to sound cheerful as I enter, to hide how shaken I still am from my nightmare today.

"Good morning, Shirogane-san." Tama is the only one who answers. She wasn't particularly happy as usual.

I take my seat, and not a single word was said. I can't help to feel something crawling up on my neck, licking my lips as I throw a glance at them. I bet they didn't want me hearing whatever they were talking about. Sigh… I need to find a way to get things back on track.

"Good morning, Squad." The Instructor enters while pushing the box with the rifles into the room.

"Salute!"

"Alright. You already know how this goes. I'll scatter the pieces of the rifle on your desk and put a blindfold on you, then you assemble the gun. We're doing this twice, one for a normal rifle and another for a sniping rifle. After all have finished, we'll go to the firing range. The ones that misses the most, or the ones who takes the less accurate shots, have to run ten klicks. Understood?"

"Yes, Instructor!"

The pieces get scattered, and all of us are blindfolded. After Marimo-chan's shout we all started to assemble our rifles.

Let's see… this goes here… And this is… no, this is for after I… And this thing here is the bolt… Now, I put you there. And now this goes… You get in place, and I just gotta…

"Instructor, I'm done." I say without removing the blindfold.

"What? But… Let me see… Hmm, yes… Nice work, Shirogane. I'll bring the next one."

I lift the cloth a bit, the girls weren't even close to finishing theirs. Oh well, can't start to pull my punches now. The sniping rifle is scattered this time, blindfold back on place. Let's do this.

This one is the… Then this goes… The handle goes with this… and here's the scope… Put this here, some pressure over here and…

"I'm done." This is child's play to me by now.

"Already? Let me check… Another fine job. Now, wait until everybody else finishes." I take off the blindfold and hand it to Marimo-chan.

The girls had just started with the sniping rifle. Meiya just finished the first one, she looked at me as I was staring at her and immediately avoided my gaze, looking bothered. What did I even do? Is she that envious of me?

We made our way to the firing range after everybody finished, without sharing a single word yet again. We get three shots with each rifle, with the first one towards the 300M target, and towards the 1100M with the sniper one.

Aight, let's see if I got any better at this. We all go into position, locking on our targets.

"Fire!"

First rounds blow off. Let's see… Second inner circle after the bullseye. Not bad.

Next shot, some centimeters off the center of the inner circle around the bullseye, third shot… near the bullseye, but still not dead center. Still can't do it, crazy how I have things to improve after all this time.

"Change rifles!" We get the sniping rifle, now let's see how I hold up. "Fire!"

First shot… On target, on the middle circle. Second shot… just on the line between the first circle around the bullseye and the next one. Now, last one… No dice, still not on the inner circle. Dammit, I got better no doubt but I'm still nowhere near Tama's level. Eh, I think this is fine, to finally show a not so awesome side of myself.

"Ayamine, Sakaki! Ten klicks on the track field!"

And off they go. Didn't expect Chizuru to have to run. So Meiya surpassed her? Way to go, girl.

"… Shirogane-san." Tama called out to me. She wasn't smiling and her brows were lowered, this is so not like her.

"What's up, Tama?"

"Why did you hold back?"

"Huh?" Tama being angry during training. This is a new one.

"Y-You heard me. Why did you hold back today? You could have scored a shot to the bullseye if you were trying seriously." Where the hell did this come from? She was the one who WASN'T mad at me yesterday.

"I wasn't holding back. I'm not so good at zeroing a gun. I can assemble them easily, but adjusting them manually is not something I'm good at."

"Not good at?" One of Meiya's brow rose as her lips plucked. "You almost managed to land a certain hit to the bullseye in both ranges, you're not fooling anyone Shirogane." Her every word hitting like one of her slashes, I can't do more than scratch my head. Last time they weren't so envious of my skill, even if I did hold back.

"Hey, I wasn't holding back, and I told you I don't like to brag. Look at Tama, she got two hits to the bullseye of the second target."

"Shirogane-san, if you were serious I'm sure you could have done that too." Her gaze falls down like my history grades, again looking dejected for real.

No Tama, I can't be as good as you. I've been trying for… I feel like Lonk on the Magorea's Mask game now, always going back in time to save the town.

"What do you think I am, a super elite soldier? I have flaws too, just that I trained a lot to polish them."

I probably trained for more than a lifetime in total. It's scary when I think about it, I'm like one of those prepromoted units of CryRing Saga since my 'growth' is capped. Wait… Does that mean they're gonna bench me in the late game?… I mean, I did end up sitting in the XG firing missiles last time.

"Making excuses? Do you not feel motivated to do your best against us, perhaps?" Seriously Meiya, why are you so angry at me?

"Why don't you believe me? Just because I'm good with many things doesn't mean I'm good at everything."

"However, your performance has been excellent since you arrived. You were always several steps ahead of us in all you did. Why would your performance on the morning practice suddenly drop yesterday and today?" Because I'm tired and having horrible nightmares? Because your attitude is making me really sad? Not like I can be honest with you.

"… You know I have that little project with Kasumi, and I also get tired. I'm a human too. I have peaks and valleys."

"But you have showed us your aim is much better than that. And you don't look sleep deprived, your movements do not denote exhaustion."

"Mitsurugi-san is right, you can always hit the 1500M target's inner circle even if it's on the outer rim during practice."

"Yes, but that's thanks to all the practice I got in my old squad. I was really pushed to my limits, that's why I'm so good now." I mean, I really put some effort in improving myself before coming back here. All the lessons with Tama also helped me out much to even be remotely decent at it, to begin with. I'd be nothing without her training from my first loops.

"Really? And why would you have received such harsh training regarding your gun skills, I wonder?" Meiya, stop with that glare. I guess I could be somewhat serious with them if it makes them drop the cold act.

"It's not that the squad got that training, I wanted to take a harsher course. I just… wanted to be better."

"Eh? Shirogane-san, you chose to take a harder training?" She stared at me curiously as if I were some weird animal.

"Don't you guys want to get as good as you can?" They share a look, looking down.

"Well, of course we do." She folds her arms and groans a bit. "But you're on Tamase's level, and she is a great sniper. You also possess very good skills in CQC and you never fail a question in the lectures. You're telling me you attained your current skill through independent training alone?" She again narrows her eyes at me, sending purple flares through her gaze.

I dunno why they're so mad at me, so… let's be honest with them.

"What would you have done if you lost someone important to you?"

"Huh?"

"I told you guys before. I… got someone killed. I do not want that to happen again, ever . That's why I pretty much spent the last months before coming here training myself, from dawn to the evening. That's why I'm so good." Meiya's eyes relax a bit as she caresses the top of her head, Tama looks down as her eyes almost close while holding one of her elbows real tight.

"… I see. However, why have you been holding back?" Meiya asks, eyes still not entirely losing their edge. Sigh… So there lies the root of the suspicions.

"Are you sure you want me to be serious against you?"

"Of course I do! Why would I not want for you to- Ah!" I stepped towards her in a flash, aiming one finger towards the base of her neck. I poked her, making her squeal and fall back.

"If you can't dodge that, you won't be able to keep up. And anyways, I wasn't holding back today. This is the best result I've ever gotten zeroing a gun myself." I push my chest out, since that is no lie.

"Why did you touch my neck?!" Aww, you look so cute when you're embarrassed.

"You wanted me to be serious against you, I showed you my speed. So, look, I know you're all taking this very seriously and that it's important to you all. So, from now on, I'll be serious against you, using all I've learned so far. So can you stop being so cold with me, Meiya?" I smile at her, but…

"Mitsurugi." A harsh tone together with an aggressive stare.

"What?"

"Stop calling me by my name. Call me Mitsurugi from now on, Shirogane. I will take you on and defeat you, don't think I'll let you ridicule me further." And she leaves for the classroom. Shit, she took it the wrong way.

"Hey, wait a sec! I wasn't making fun of you. I'm sorry, can we-"

BAM!

Ugh, that hurt! Why did she punch me?!

"Who do you think you are, grabbing my shoulder like that?!"

"Hey, what's going- Shirogane! Your nose is bleeding!" Marimo-chan sounded furious. Great, just what I needed. "Mitsurugi, you better have a good reason to explain whatever happened."

"Cadet Shirogane tried to grab my shoulder quite forcefully, so I defended myself."

"I was just trying to apologize! Seriously, what the hell is wrong with all of you today?!"

"That's enough. Mitsurugi, two laps on the track field. Shirogane, go to the infirmary and get something to stop the bleeding. We're continuing the lesson in a short while. I expect you two to be on your best behavior for the rest of the day."

Deluxe, this is the best thing ever. Is she really so pissed off at me being better than her? I just offered to be serious too, I don't know why she's so mad. Standing up again while the Instructor goes alongside Meiya to the track field, I rub my nose a bit.

"Hey Tama, do you know why Meiya was so mad?"

"Um… You should stop calling her in that way. But, um, is this really your best result so far?" She eyed me sideways, with small shadows creeping within her gaze.

"Yeah. I practiced a lot to get this good with a gun. Don't be so cold with me please. I just didn't want to overwhelm you guys, I'm not ridiculing you or anything." I bow to her, hopefully she'll see that I'm being serious.

"Oh, sorry. I wasn't trying to… Well, I know they are very prideful, so please be more tactful from now on. I'll try to talk with them, I don't like this at all." She holds her hands close to he chest, looking down.

"Thanks, Tama. Really."

The rest of the class went by normally, except for the cotton on my nose being bothersome. Chizuru and Kei didn't even ask me what happened. Meiya did not apologize, didn't even look at me. I guess this is on me for being an idiot and poking her.

Class ends and the three storm out of the classroom again, like they have been doing for awhile. Marimo-chan looks at them, but chooses to say nothing and leaves too. Tama looked at me clearly at a loss, I wave at her and she leaves after giving me a bow. You're too sweet Tama, I can't get you in trouble because of my stupidity.

I'm not as dense as I used to be, so I know that going to the PX with them right now is not a good idea. Pushing them for answers won't give me anything good in return. Let's give them some space, I'm sure Tama will tell them that I didn't mean anything bad.

"Sigh… I guess I'll take my lunch and go eat somewhere else."

As I made my way to the PX after waiting a while I saw Mikoto going towards the barracks. Right, she's going to see Marimo-chan. Maybe she can help me get out of whatever the hell is happening here.

I grab a tray and ask for yakisoba and some bread. I ask them to make a sandwich, leaving the tray I go to the track field while eating the thing.

I think I screwed up, I alienated them. Whatever, so long as we pass the CCSE and they get better than before I'm happy. Yeah, that's my goal. So long as they get to live a better life here that's enough for me. I shouldn't get so down, dammit.

… It's not like I'm all alone, anyways. I'm sure they'll chill in a few days. It's just a matter of time, and of me being tactful.

What did we have this afternoon? First Aid? Didn't I bring a book about that? If I try to change my attitude they'll get offended like this morning when I showed them that I honestly am not perfect, so let's do all I can.

I go back to my room and after a little searching I found the book in question. Taking a short shower, then putting some cream on my nose afterwards, I go to class. As I approach the classroom, a conversation reaches my ears.

"… He's truly amazing, I tell you. And never brags or anything." Tama was describing someone. Probably me.

"He randomly uses our names to address us. He knows much about tactics, he's good- no, great in every type of combat." Chizuru sounds somewhat displeased, like when she complained about my eating habits back in my world when we got together. Only with more fire in her words.

"And he's basically the perfect soldier. I do not know why he is even here." Meiya… Why do you… sound so angry?

"Special-kun is too good to be here."

"Oh, so that's how the new guy is?" Mikoto was there.

"Yes, he is excellent in every aspect as a soldier. But I honestly can't bring myself to trust him." W-What? Why did Chizuru say that?

"It's rare enough that he was scouted despite being so adept, it is even more odd considering he was in another country. And to make matters worse, he's playing around with us. He doesn't even take us seriously." Meiya's tone gave out a vibe of aggressiveness I've very rarely felt from her.

"So he's like a super soldier?" Mikoto, are you like them too?

"Shirogane-san is amazing no matter how you look at him, and he did say he wasn't looking down on us. But it makes you wonder, why was he scouted?" Tama was the only one that still tried to sound calm and friendly.

"Special-kun is toying with us. He should get bent."

"Ayamine-san, don't say that! He's one of us!" Tama tried to defend me, but…

"Tamase, we both know where he comes from. Only an American can be so adept with a gun, only one of them would propose such a solution to yesterday's debate. You're telling me to trust an American?" Chizuru's venom was crystal clear.

Tama tried to argue, but Chizuru remarked that Americans are not to be trusted. Meiya agreed, and they told Mikoto to be wary of me. I clenched my fists so hard it started to hurt, it felt as if I had butterflies in my stomach. Alongside a bonfire, that is.

Why did things turn out like this? What did I even do to you? I was just training alongside you, doing my best, giving you advice, preparing the consoles so that you got even better than before. I came here to save you.

…

… To save them ? Or to save the memory of the other world's versions of them?

That's right, they're not the same people I remember. This is a different world after all, it wouldn't be rare for them to be completely different people here.

But even so… I gotta do something. I can't let our relationship take a nosedive here. Even if they're different, even if they're suspicious of me, it's up to me to clear the air. I did this to myself, I gotta fix this shit! Different or not I need them to win this war, and I want them to live.

"Cadet Shirogane, what are you doing there?" The Instructor addressed me as she got close. Right, this isn't Marimo-chan. This angry woman is different. I wonder why she turned out like this?

"Just taking some air, giving the girls space to catch up on stuff with Yoroi."

"That's really tactful of you. Now, go inside that the class will start."

Stepping into the classroom, they looked both startled and angered. They probably hadn't noticed I was listening on them, and only realized when Mari-… when the Instructor called out to me.

"Hey guys." I wave at them as I sit. They avoid my gaze, clearly uncomfortable as oil mixed with water.

"Are you all here? Yes, you are." The Instructor goes to her desk, clearing her throat before continuing. "As you know, today and tomorrow you have First Aid practice during the afternoon. I'm sure I don't have to tell you, but if anyone punches someone without a very good reason they're going to get a reaaally nice punishment. Now, I'll trust in you today and leave you on your own. Do not make me regret this decision."

We all salute and she leaves. She obviously was warning Meiya to not do something stupid again. Knowing her that's not going to stop her if she wants to punch me again. She is really stubborn.

"Hey, you're the new guy? Takeru Shirogane, was it?"

"Huh? Oh, yes. I'm the new guy." Mikoto stares at me from top to bottom, a finger on her lips. Is she… also like the rest?

"Hello! I'm Mikoto Yoroi, nice to meet you."

"Likewise." She smiles like she always does. So… Which is it?

"So, hey, I'm just gonna throw this out there, but are you as much of a jerk as they say you are?"

"Excuse me?"

"Yeah you see, everybody was like super mad about you! He's so perfect, he's been conscripted, he's an alien!"

"Wait, what did they-" Mikoto keeps talking on her own. As usual.

"But you don't look so bad! You even kinda look a bit goofy."

"Goofy? What do you-" I'll never be able to reach her when she gets like this, am I?

"Anyways, I was in the medical bay for awhile, so I need to catch up super fast guys!" Mikoto now addresses the girls, who look even more lost than me.

"Yoroi, you… You shouldn't speak of matters we discuss in pri-" Meiya also didn't get to finish.

"Oh, I remembered! I met a really nice soldier when I was in the bay, he gave me all kinds of advice for the CCSE and for when we get to ride TSFs!"

"Yoroi-san, please hear us out. Everybody is really tense now, so ple-" Much less Tama.

"I also read a lot of books! There's this novel I just know you're gonna love, Chizuru-san."

"Yoroi, we're trying to-" Not even Chizuru can stand up to Mikoto, it seems.

"I know we're going to get along Takeru, it's good to have you on the team."

"Sure thing." I have to hold a chuckle, seeing her doing her usual bullshit. Mikoto is still Mikoto. "Uh… How should I call you?"

"Mikoto's fine. Can I call you Takeru?"

"Sure." The girls wince upon hearing our exchange. They really do hate me in this world, huh?

"Deal then!" She doesn't seem to care, though. "You see Takeru, I'm really good at medical stuff."

"So I've been told."

"All right, how about I do a simple summary as a refresher for all of us?" She offers while going to the blackboard. "Hey Takeru, what's that book you're holding?"

"Oh, just a book on First Aid. Thought I'll bring it to not get anything mixed up."

"Hmm, haven't seen this one. Gaman Editorial? Don't know about this one. This book look really nice, though. The cover, the pages, it's almost new, isn't it?"

"Yes, Professor Kouzuki gave me some books to cover the knowledge I was lacking when I came here." I made up that excuse some minutes ago, I think it's not half bad.

"The Professor? Wow, so this must be… Hmm, what is… Hmm… " Eyes glued to the pages, she gets engrossed in the book.

"Yoroi, is it really so interesting?" Chizuru leans over Mikoto's shoulder to peek at the book.

"So it's not so important to use it, since the risk of death from bleeding out is too big… Yes, that's it. I knew I wasn't wrong about that."

"Yoroi? Hey, Yoroi!" Chizuru is literally yelling in her ear right now.

"Say Takeru, could you lend me this book? You finished reading it yet?"

"Yeah, you can take it. I already read through it." Back in my world when I had the time.

"Yay! Thank you!" She jumps at me and hugs me. Typical Mikoto. The rest look really uncomfortable right now.

"Uhh… Mikoto? You don't have to be so happy about it, it's just a book." Also please let me go, I can't take you being so sweet now of all times.

"No, this one has a lot of interesting things going by the summary. Really, thanks a lot!" At least someone is still the same here.

Unlike the others who are staring with a mix of surprise, towards Mikoto, and annoyance towards me.

"So you even know about medicine? Is there something you don't know, Shirogane?" Meiya asks in a mocking tone, brows surrounded by wrinkles.

"Of course. I'm not a surface pilot yet, so there's lot of stuff I don't know."

"Really now? And what kind of subjects are you not proficient in, if I may ask?"

"Repairs, for example."

Mostly thanks to how much I trashed my TSFs I rarely got to work on them, since they were so bent out of shape the mechanics had to personally deal with them last loop. And I also didn't get much beyond the basics then, with you… with them throwing wrenches at me as if they were freaking tomahawks. During my first loops I was never deployed until Iceberg, so I haven't had to handle a damaged TSF on my own so far.

"Special-kun, you can't do repairs?"

"I didn't have much practice with that, I focused more on combat. I'd like to believe I'm not bad, but I'm not awesome or anything." Kei stared at me for awhile, then looked away. Her eyes told me she believed me, since she did relax them a tiny bit.

"So let's start the class! Miki-san, what is the first thing you have to do when you encounter someone collapsed?"

"Huh?! I… Erm, you gotta…" Startled by the sudden question, she struggled to find an answer.

This went just as I remembered, with Mikoto shooting random questions towards us. Only this time I got all the answers right.

"… So, when you use a tourniquet, after which time is it safe to remove it?"

"You don't have to. It would be the same as if you hadn't even used it, so you gotta take the patient to a medic as soon as possible, before the necrosis starts."

"Right again! You're so smart, Takeru. Alright, now let's see… why don't we practice some CPR? Takeru, would you mind to lay down?" Sigh. I won't be able to avoid this, will I?

"Ok, laying down."

"Now, stay still. Here we…"

And this happened again. She's pinching my nose again, how long does she plan to do this? Well, at least the class is going on without incident.

"… And that's more or less how you do it." She says as she releases my nose, standing up. "Now, let's move on to how to stop bleeding injuries. Takeru, raise your arm."

"Like this?"

"Yes, so we already reviewed the others in the questions, but just in case you have to use a tourniquet here's what you need to do. You need to get a cord or something around the limb, and then tie it really tight. Then you put a stick right here if it's still rather loose… And if it's one of the hands you gotta raise it above the heart, like this."

I can hear my bones creaking a bit. This still hurts dammit! Why do I always have to be the dummy?! Mikoto, please stop! My arm doesn't bend that way!

"Okay, t-that's enough of it, right?" She arches a brow, but then lets go of my arm. Sigh… It's always the same with you, haha.

"So even Shirogane-san can't deal with this kind of stuff?" Tama don't tease me! At least the others seem to have loosened up a bit after seeing these simple practices.

"Yeah, that's pretty much all about it."

Mikoto put both hands behind her back, her right brow lower than her left one. So she got pissed I didn't let her finish the explanation? Haha, she really doesn't like it when she gets interrupted.

"Now, there's one last thing you have to take care of." She aimed a finger around, then finishing by pointing it at me, probably because she's a bit mad. "That's the patients mental state, since they can go into shock. You need to reassure them, lay them down gently if their head isn't injured and slowly loosen their clothes off, also don't forget to keep them warm. Remember to cheer them up, since they will surely get anxious. Now, Takeru could you lay down again?"

Last time she laid down, so if I can avoid that embarrassment again I'll do it. Let's just get this day over with. I sit down on the floor, then slowly lay on my back.

"Is this fine?"

"Hmm… Could you take off your jacket first?"

"Huh? Well, fine." Why would she want me to do that, though? "Anything else?"

"No, that's all. Now, if you'll excuse me." She knelt by my side and pulled up my shirt. But she got it stuck on my head, and now I can't see shit.

"Mikoto, I can't see anything."

"That's part of the plan! You need to feel anxious after all."

"Why?"

"Otherwise it's not much of a training. By the way, do you exercise much? Because we could grind meat on your chest." Great, now I'm getting embarrassed. Nothing ever goes my way when it comes to you, you always march at your own tempo.

"Can we continue with the practice?"

"Sure, sure! Now, don't you worry." She started speaking in a small, sweet voice as if she were reading a book to a child before bed. "Everything's gonna be fine. You just need some bandages and that's that. You just lay down and let me take care of you."

… This is not helping. Brain, quiet. No flashbacks of that right now. Go away, first CCSE! Damn snake… I'm boiling it this time around. Mikoto, hurry up already!

"Say Takeru, what are these scars from?" She suddenly asked in her normal tone, a hand of hers tracing one of my sides. It kinda tickles.

"Scars?"

"Awawa, Shirogane-san! Where did you get hurt like that?!" Why is Tama making such a fuss? What are they talking abou…

Oh right, the scars from the terrorist attack. I forgot about them.

"You have this reeeaaaallyyy big scar on the left side of your chest." She says as her fingers trace it slowly. "Did you get hurt when fighting with Kei-san, perhaps?"

The left? Oh, that's the scar of when I took a metal bat trying to shield one of the professors, I think my back is also full of those small marks too.

Wait a second… How do I even justify this? They were getting super paranoid about me being an American, about me being conscripted… Seeing the scars… is only gonna make this worse.

Dammit… Life, when I called you a bitch that sucker punches people, I didn't actually mean it, you know. There was no need to lay it down on me like this. Sigh… Goddammit.

"Let me see, move a bit to the…" As I was lost in thought, Mikoto moved me to a side. I could only shut my throat up as she gasped when seeing my back, probably. "Uwah, even your back is full of these! Did Meiya-san beat you up during sword practice? All that talk about you being super strong was just a joke, right?"

"Uuh… Not exactly." Shit… I screwed it all up, didn't I?

She returns me to my position, and after putting some paper over my scar and continuing to reassure me for awhile, she declared the exercise finished and I can finally pull my shirt back where it should be. I remain sitting on the ground, unable to lift my face, while I put my jacket back on.

"But really, you all had me with the talk of him being special. Just look how much you beat him up, you shouldn't be so mean to the newbie!" She threw an accusing finger towards the girls, who were clearly lacking words after seeing my scars.

"Yoroi, that's not what happened. He truly-" Meiya again got interrupted.

"Man, don't I wanna hit the PX right now! Wanna go grab some grub, Takeru?"

"… Sure, that's a wrap for today." I take my chance to end this day, the sooner I get to bed the better. I need some time to think how to approach them from now on. I can't strain our relationships any more.

Me and Mikoto made our way to the PX, and shortly after the rest arrived. Nothing much was said on the line, they were again ignoring me as Mikoto kept rambling on and on. We went to the usual table, me trying to not make eye contact with any of 'em.

"Hey everyone, lemme tell you about that thing I saw on TV the other day!" Mikoto started telling them of the news of the dog that got lost and made his way back to it's owner,.

Everybody reacted like last time, then she started to tell them about how Chop-kun's show was still being aired. However, Meiya and Chizuru were staring at me. Their expressions are a mystery to me, as if they were juggling conflicting emotions behind those cold eyes. Meanwhile, I finished my food quickly. There's nothing for me to say now, since they might take it the wrong way. They might not even want to train using the consoles going by their attitude, and even less now that they might suspect me even more thanks to the scars. All that work for nothing.

Wait one second…

"Say guys, can I ask you something?" They all look at me. Life's a gamble, so let's roll that dice. Let's just hope she's not pissed anymore and sends me three ones in a row.

"What is it, Shirogane?" Chizuru placed her chopsticks on the table and looked straight at me. The rest also stared intently.

"Can any of you lend me hand? I've been asked something for my special mission, but I can't do it alone." Let's make it sound as if I was the one asking for help, maybe that will make them more willing to listen. If they're curious… let's use that to my advantage, even if only to make you all be better.

"Shirogane, you said to me once you always performed your missions alone." Meiya gave me a side glance as she kept eating. "What could have compelled such a change, now of all times?" Can't say I didn't expect her to give me the cold shoulder now.

… It still hurts, though.

"Whenever I needed help Kasumi would come to give me a hand, but she's busy for the time being and I can't do this alone. I need someone else to spar against." Brain, thanks for that wording. Their eyes sparked up as the word 'spar' left my lips. I just know this is the best bait I can use right now. Or so I think.

"Takeru, what are you doing? What's this about a mission?" Mikoto stared at me, lost as a penguin in a desert.

"Oh right, Yoroi doesn't know." Meiya folds her arms and coughs before speaking up again. "Shirogane is usually tasked to perform certain special missions for the Professor. He calls her Sensei for this reason, since he learns many a great deal of valuable lessons from them."

"Mitsurugi, you knew of that?!" Chizuru looks at both of us quite surprised. Right, I only ever told Meiya that I call Sensei that way.

"Yes, he mentioned it to me once. Anyways, that's the gist of it." Mikoto nods at her words.

"Huh. So Takeru, are you doing some fighting training?"

"Something like that. I can't tell you the details, but tomorrow I won't be there for the First Aid class. So, can any of you lend me a hand?" I give them a small bow while scratching the back of my head.

Meiya and Chizuru exchange a glance. I see their lips tense up, they must want to say yes but since they think I'm an 'American' for some reason they-

"I'm in! I'm really curious to see whether you're as good as they said you are."

"I owe you one, Mikoto. Thanks a bunch."

"U-Um… Shirogane-san? Could I maybe tag along as well?"

"Sure, the more the better. If you want to come too, just tell me. I'll tell Sensei when I go report today, and she'll tell the Instructor."

"Then, would it be okay for me to help out too?" Don't ask me so timidly, Tama. I don't bite.

"Of course! It'll be a great help." I beam at her and she smiles shyly.

"Ahem… Shirogane, what do you say if the whole squad helps you with this mission of yours?" Chizuru, you just fell into my trap. Thanks.

"I mean, I won't say no, but do you two agree?" I look at Meiya and Kei. Kei returned a blank stare as she devoured her third yakisoba sandwich, while Meiya kept moving her lips as she had her arms folded.

"I'm in. Wanna see you get serious." Kei sends a thumbs up my way as she grabbed yet another sandwich, but her eyes were just a tiny bit narrowed. Anyways, it works for me.

"Thanks Ayamine. What about you, Meiya?" Her brows twitched, more purple fire came out pouring. Oh right, she didn't want me to call her that. Uuh… That's gonna be hard.

"I suppose I should. It would be pointless to be the only one left out. Surely you won't hold back?"

"Hey, no need to be so cold. I'll face you in what I do best, so you better get ready." Their eyes spark up again.

"What you do best? So is it some sort of sword practice?" She leaned forward, the fire intensifying.

"No, it's something I do better than handling a sword." Because Gamer is my middle name, baby.

"B-Better than…"

… Maybe I shouldn't have said that. Now her eyes were wide, shining like a thunderstorm, but with the surprise of a cat after you find it doing trouble in the kitchen.

"Better than your swordsmanship?!" She rose from her seat like an eruption, smacking both hands onto the table.

Some people stopped talking and looked at us, before remembering that they had to mind their own business as they saw who was the one who rose her voice. Still, the silence was apparent as the not so subtle gazes they were giving us.

"Mitsurugi, don't raise your voice!" Chizuru had to grab her tray, because it almost fell as Meiya hit the table.

She looked around while tapping her glasses, her brows tensing into a V again at the sudden silence around our table. Tama lost her gaze into her soup, Mikoto and Kei didn't seem to mind, though they were also looking down.

"Meiya-san, is he really that good?" Mikoto's question only invigorated Meiya's purple flares, sitting down she folded her arms again and shot a glare at me with the intensity of a Heavy's beam.

"Good? No, he's great. Excellent, I dare say. And you're better at whatever this is? I expect you to be telling the truth. Shirogane, this better not be a lie." Sigh… I'm doing my best to fix this bridge, can you stop with the furrowed brow?

"Of course. Well, I gotta go. I'll go get you guys at the classroom in the afternoon after checking everything, see you tomorrow."

"Later, Takeru!" Mikoto and Tama waved at me, Kei kept eating the… How many sandwiches does she have there anyways? Meiya and Chizuru were whispering something, leaning closer to each other.

Well, I can only hope that being serious with them will be enough to mend our relationship. Whatever, I gotta go warn Sensei about the attack on Niigata and to ask her permission for this training.

… I wonder how they'll be from now on. Having seen my scars after voicing their distrust so openly to Mikoto… Just what the hell is wrong with this world?

… It's not too late, right? I can still mend this bridge… right?

Sigh…

As I got out of the PX and made my way towards the stairs in the empty hallway, scratching my head as I felt my stomach empty despite having just eaten, someone called out to me.

"Wait, Shirogane."

"Hm? What's up, Meiya?" Ah…

"Shirogane, I told you to call me-"

"Sorry! I just… Bad habit, not doing it on purpose. So, what can I do for you?"

"I have some questions for you." Please drop that scowl. It's really painful to see her like this, even if she isn't my Meiya.

"Alright. Fire 'em."

"Could you explain me how were you inflicted those scars?" Shit, I don't have an explanation prepared yet. Alright, bullshitting my way outta this one.

"That's classified. I can't talk about my time before coming to this base in detail."

"Whatever is that supposed to mean?"

"That the Professor forbid me from speaking about it."

Her face reminds me of that time me and Tsukuyomi-san argued about the way the Empire did things during the coup and she called me an American sympathizer. Those hateful, predator-like eyes were now in Meiya's face.

"Shirogane, where and how were you inflicted those scars?"

"What about the non-interference policy?"

"… So you refuse to speak of it?"

Sigh… I won't get her to stop asking this, I know how stubborn she is. Once she sets her mind on something, there's no stopping her. And refusing… might actually finish burning the bridge. Let's use her insistence to my advantage.

"… If you tell me what the hell was going on today with you, I might consider answering." She sharpens her eyes once more as she folds her arms.

"Surely you already know. We do not like to be treated so lightly, even if we know you're better than us."

"Again with that? I told you that I wasn't holding back."

"Not just today. When you first came here, you were holding back. And all of these days under the new regime, you constantly showed more and more how good you truly are. Can you blame us for becoming upset? You acted so friendly but you were just mocking us, not even taking us seriously during our training."

"I wasn't mocking you. I was just minding my speed, didn't want to alienate you all."

"Please, do you think me so gullible?"

"Sorry if I offended you, but I had no intention of doing so. I'm being serious, I was just minding my own strength. And honestly, it hurts to be treated so badly despite me trying my best to fit in. I don't want to end up excluded so, can you stop being so cold?" She flinches back, trying to find her words.

I can tell she's somewhat conflicted, but I've never seen Meiya like this, I've no idea what to say to her right now. Not even when we had fights as a couple she looked so clearly angered.

No, wait… I do recall those eyes… For the briefest moment, when she came to talk to me after Marimo-chan died and I screamed at her, right before I tried to rape her. She was making a similar expression to the one she has right now. Which means she's… truly upset, from the bottom of her heart? But I didn't… do anything…

"Say… Why are you this mad? I… didn't do anything to you guys, as far as I'm aware." She sighs and looks to the wall.

"… Look, we all are here for a reason and we cannot fail this coming CCSE, no matter what. If you do not take us seriously, can we truly call you our partner? How can we develop trust between us if you keep fooling around?"

"So, what? Instead of asking me to be serious for once, you all clam up and treat me like an outsider? Why didn't you just ask me to be serious?"

"Because you're not taking us seriously on your own, you seem to be making fun of us."

"I tried answering seriously during yesterday's lecture and you all got really upset. And I told you, I don't like to brag. I'm not that good, really."

"Huh… Then, allow me to ask you. If you are 'not so good' then, what are we in your eyes? What are you trying to say? It's as if you were looking down on us for some reason…" She takes a step towards me, locking her flare-filled eyes with mine.

"Hey, calm down! I'm not picking a fight with you."

"Really now?"

"Mitsurugi, you're my squadmate." I slow down my tone, gulping and meeting her gaze head on, so that she can see I'm not lying. "I believe we formed some trust between us in the brief time we have spent training together. Can you tell me why are you so upset with me? Is it all about me not being serious with you?" She closes her eyes and takes a breath.

"When we asked you to not hold back, you kept fooling around." Folding her arms real tight, a small frown sprouts on. "We asked for your help earnestly and you just toyed with us. And even during the lectures, you answer as if everything was trivial to you, dismissing our efforts and struggles. You have not been as tactful as one would hope. How can we see you as our partner when you treat us so lightly?"

"… I see. I don't know why you chose to not talk it out before, but you must have your reasons. If you want me to be serious from now on, I'll do it. Just… Forgive me if I harm you, when I focus on a fight I tend to strike with all my strength." That wasn't a problem with Maya-sensei since she could dodge and strike back, but I really don't want to harm any of you, since you're still not at your best level.

"You shouldn't concern yourself with that. Pound me to the ground if you must, but stop holding back. I want to know where I stand, I need to get stronger." Locking eyes with her, I give a nod.

"Fine. No more holding back from now on. And I'll also try to not be so… rude when giving you all advice. I wasn't and am not looking down on you guys, for real." She stares for a second before giving me a nod. "Well, I'll be going now. Gotta give my report." I turn around but feel a hand on my shoulder.

"Shirogane, you haven't answered my question yet. How were you inflicted those scars?" I thought I had made her forget about it. Damn it.

"Why do you want to know that so badly?"

"I… I can't see how you could have sustained such injuries." She lets go of my shoulder and looks away, as if she suddenly got embarrassed. This isn't like her, she's usually so straightforward with everything.

"Why?"

"Why? Because you're basically perfect! I can't even fathom how you, who surpasses all the challenges the Instructor throws your way, could be hurt to the extent of leaving such scars! It wasn't just one, your back was littered with them. I saw them clearly when Yoroi moved you around."

"I told you, I'm not perfect. Nobody is."

"Answer me! How… How could you, someone so skilled and strong, be hurt so? If you truly weren't conscripted before, then… How?" Her lips tightening into a small circle, she holds my gaze in place with hers as if she were an angry crab.

On one hand, I don't want to have them assume I'm conscripted already. On the other, why does she idolize me so much? I had thought she was upset at me for being 'an American' but…

Wait, she kind of did the same last time. Yeah, she said I was the squad's pillar of strength and was willing to let me have my way with her to make me get my shit together again. I suppose she must admire my swordsmanship now, she must have noticed the similarities my style has to the Mugen Kidou she uses. And now she saw the scars, right after all of them assuming I'm from America, for some reason. Sigh… What a mess.

"… If I tell you, do you promise to keep it a secret?" Can't exactly let the squad know about this, since it's technically a military secret. But refusing to tell her will only damage our relationship.

"Of course. You have my word." Earnest and sincere as usual. I know she wouldn't taint her honor by lying, so let's trust her.

"I got attacked by terrorists and got hit by a metal bat and several other things."

"… Huh?" Her face slowly contorts in fear as the meaning got to her.

"The place I was in before coming here got attacked by a bunch of terrorists. I helped the officers that were there deal with them, but I couldn't do much." Not a lie, this did happen. But I probably can't lie without her noticing, and I also can't have her telling this to the others.

"How many were they?"

"Thirty something where I was when it started." Her eyes go wide in surprise. "So we protected the people, or at least tried to. I got some cuts and got hit by bats and other stuff more times than I could count. That was… some months ago."

"You fought against terrorists? I can't…" Shit, her eyes are now filled with a weird glow. I think I just made her think even higher of me.

"So that's how I got my scars, that all?"

"Did you manage to protect the people?" She eyes now draw a downwards arc, she must be feeling bad for me.

"No. The bastards… They just didn't care and attacked everyone. Two of my friends… They died that day." Technically, my squad got wiped out according to my cover, so maybe I can link this with that somehow.

But repeating these words bring forth the memories, brings back the cold hands to my shoulders. The explosion comes back to my eyes. The wings of fire, their scorched bodies, how Sumika was gone when I came back, how my world's Meiya told me of their deaths when we met. And how later she too…

If only I hadn't waited…

"Shirogane? Are you alright?"

"Eh? Y-Yeah, I'm fine."

"You're crying. Forgive me, for making you remember such awful memories." She gives me a small bow, not meeting my eye.

I hadn't noticed the tears falling through my cheeks. Shit, I can't… F this shit, I'm out. I can't keep talking to her or I might end up saying something stupid.

"I'm busy, so I'll be leaving. See you tomorrow, Mitsurugi."

"Yes, see you tomorrow."

I turn around and resume my walk, turning it into almost jogging after a couple of steps.

I slow down after a while, wiping my face. Once I got my shit together again, I took the stairs and went towards the elevator on B5F. After arriving at usual the floor, I walk up to the office and knock twice, waiting for Sensei's voice.

"Come in." The door is unlocked, and inside I go. She spun around in her chair to face me, holding some papers in her hand.

"Good evening, Sensei."

"You sure it's good? I saw through the cameras your little argument with Mitsurugi." She strokes her bangs as she begins to spin in her chair.

"Of course you did. Can't do much about that, I did what I could." Couldn't even muster any strength to say it, I sigh as I sit down.

"Any idea why they're acting like this?"

"I alienated them, training with all I had. They think I'm conscripted, and now that they saw my scars they're probably convinced of it."

"In that case don't worry too much. When the time came for you to train on a TSF alongside them it would become obvious you had experience."

"Yeah, I guess. But that's not the only thing I came to talk about today."

"Really? Then, what is it? Want me to comfort you tonight?" She stops spinning, her devilish smile appearing again along her playful tone, placing a finger on her chin.

"Thanks for the offer, but we have some serious problem coming at us."

"A serious problem? Out with it, what's going on?"

Then, I give her all the data I remembered about the invasion of Niigata.

"… And that's all. What do you think we should do, Sensei?"

"Let's see… I could give them some warning, to watch their sonars more carefully, perhaps convince them to move out if they already had some faint readings. What did I do last time?"

"You sent a warning to them, though you never told me what exactly. You also sent the Valkyries to capture some live BETA."

"So I had the same ideas this time. So, should we go with the same plan?"

"Yes, but this time I want to go there too." Sensei's brows lower, her face suddenly resembling the gaze of a basilisk.

"No, I won't allow it."

"Why not? It'll be a perfect opportunity to test the OS in real combat without having eyes upon me, and I could prevent you from bringing too many Laser Class."

"No is no. You're too important an asset to risk you in a little side quest. I can't lose you this early in our plan. You're staying here, that's an order." Facing me with a poker face, her voice was cold as snow.

Wow, I didn't think Sensei would go so far to keep me by her side. Last time she never really showed me any kind of real praise or worry until the very end.

"You won't let me go?"

"No."

"Even if I give you the theories?" Her eyes grow wide, and I can tell she is wavering despite returning to her poker face.

"You'll give me the theories? What about our deal?"

"The deal was for you to complete the XM3 and let me help you in your problems. If I test that the OS works as it should during the battle, you'll be clearing both conditions at once. The OS will have been completed, even if we can keep improving it, and you'll prove to me that you don't see me as just an expendable pawn this time."

"You are not a pawn. You're more like… a tower. Perhaps, would you like to be the Queen?" She smiles again as she brings a finger to her cheek. You never change, really.

"No more teasing, Sensei. If you want me to be the Queen piece in your chessboard, prove me that you trust in me. Let me show you what I and the XM3 can do against the BETA."

We stare firmly at each other, saying nothing for a little while. Eventually, her serious expression reveals a smile.

"Alright. I'll let you go, but you'll have to follow my orders to the letter. No selfish stunts, got it?"

"Yes, Sensei."

"Well, we don't have any Shiranui you could use. I'll arrange an F-15 to be modified with the OS and the new tech we're developing right now. It'll be another nice batch of data for when the Empire asks for results."

"Alright. By the way, how did the talks go?"

"Fine, I guess. They still have to answer my counter-offer, since they didn't expect me to want access to their data while they were testing the stuff. Really, how stupid can they be?"

"But does everything looks on the right track?"

"Yeah, they were willing to alter the databases, so this time I won't have to hide you under a rock all the time someone important comes to the base I guess. Now we have to wait until I can clear your old records and replace them with the fake ones I made up. However, let me tell you that they seemed really interested in our inventions, given the Empire's position I expected as much. I'm sure I can use this to mend the relations with the UN a bit, gaining the favor of both sides while turning some other heads towards me."

"I can see how the Empire and the UN would welcome the aid right now. If it's the UN offering the help, they might be more inclined to accept it. This will make them a bit less paranoid about us with some luck, and since these things were developed with Japanese tech the UN can even suck up to the Empire with them. Pretty sure you'll get many favors in exchange to have the brand new stealth system and all the new engines and stuff be recognized as a Japanese invention." Sensei smiles at me.

"Exactly. And I'm sure the Americans will surely be intrigued by all these babies. I wonder what they will do. So don't worry about the negotiations, you go out there and bring me more useful data without getting harmed. With data on both the Gekishin and Kagerou I'll be able to properly devise a new improvement plan for both models, using all the stuff you brought here."

"Good to know I'm helping. So, I'll be sorting with the Valkyries?"

"Yes, we'll decide your callsign later. And, by the by, what are you going to do with the consoles?" Let's hope she allows me to do this.

"Can I use tomorrow's afternoon class to introduce the things? I kind of told them I needed help for my mission and all of them agreed to aid me."

"Tomorrow? Fine, I can arrange that. I'll inform Marimo about it so that she can keep things under control. Now, why don't you go spend some time with Yashiro? I'm sure you need something to take your mind off things with how much you two have been working as of late."

"Yeah, I'll do that. Good night, Sensei."

---

Around the same time.

---

[Chizuru]

---

"But he seemed really normal, you know?"

"Yoroi, I'm telling the truth. He excels at everything he does, he was just playing around with us. And those scars? He is definitely a conscripted soldier."

"Agree. Special-kun is super duper good, no way he's a Cadet." I'm agreeing with Ayamine a lot lately. The end of the world is coming closer.

"Um, are you guys sure you're not just jealous?" She still doesn't believe us, huh?

"How could we not be? All we do, all the effort we put in everyday is trampled over by this 'special protegee'. Why did he even need to take the course?" As a Squad Leader I should be ashamed. But as a person, I just can't stand it. He's so good, I don't believe he failed a CCSE.

"Shirogane-san had… trouble with his last unit, right? So he needs to take the CCSE-"

"Tamase, he comes from a foreign unit. Why couldn't he finish his training abroad? Why did the XO personally scout him?"

"… I'm also curious about it. But he's our squadmate now, whatever he did in the past, if he is here to help us, shouldn't we try to be nice to him?"

"Working with an American? I'll pass." I can't believe I'm agreeing with Ayamine yet again. Who could trust an outsider? All they want is to use us to do their bidding.

"Kei-san, that's just cruel. There are a lot of foreigners in the base, they're our comrades too." Yoroi, you're too naive.

They're here to keep this base under the control of America. We can't let our guard down around them. They'll retreat again when it's no longer convenient for them to be here.

"But didn't you all… welcome him just fine when he arrived?" Tamase's gaze sinks in her plate.

"I though he got fed up with the outsider's way of doing things and decided to come back to his roots. After all, if he got taken to another country as a kid he had no say in it, as a child he couldn't disobey his parents." I know that very well, that's why I sympathized with him at first. "But he showed us that not only he is well trained, but he knows much about the foreigners' way of training and thinks they're better than our methods." Even if they're indeed good, we can't… We are not inferior to them. Japan can stand firm by its own might.

"But we can't just leave him alone, the Instructor will rip our heads off." Yoroi says, seriously for once.

"Even so, we have to be careful. I also don't want to seclude him, but we must make sure he truly is our ally and not some traitorous American." And going by his answer to the debate… I have my doubts regarding whether we can place our trust in Shirogane or not.

"So what do you suggest we do, Sakaki?" Mitsurugi said as she approached the table, coming back. She looked conflicted as she slowly walked to her place, a hand caressing her hair.

"So, how did it go? Did you find out where those scars came from?"

"Yes, apparently he received them while defending some people."

"Huh? Defending them from what?" Tamase cocked her head as Mitsurugi sat down.

"Sorry, I promised I wouldn't say."

"So he doesn't want us to know? See? We can't trust in him, he's still keeping things from us."

"I… don't think that's the case." Mitsurugi says as she folds her arms.

"What do you mean?" She avoids my gaze as she tugs at her elbows.

"He seemed truly saddened when he spoke of the matter, he even let out some tears out, so I do not think he was lying. He asked me not to divulge the matter, but he is not a conscripted soldier at the least."

"But… that still doesn't make him any less suspicious. Why can't he tell us about that?" If the XO ordered this, why is she preventing him from speaking? Because it'll confirm that he's an American through and through?

"Chizuru-san, you're being paranoid. Why can't you trust him?" Yoroi joins her hands, eyes downcast.

"Because he arrived at the most perfect time." Mitsurugi answers for me before I could. What is your position regarding Shirogane, I wonder? Are with or against him?

"What do you mean, Meiya-san?"

"He came just before our training became harsher, as if to warn us that we had to improve ourselves even further." She places an elbow onto the table, looking down at nowhere. "He had many words of advice for us, and not a single complain about our performance. Never bragged, never made fun of us, always smiling and being friendly. He's truly an impeccable example, too good to be true. Isn't it odd? What would have we done if not for him taking all the difficult questions and putting the Instructor in a good mood everyday?"

"… You're right, it can't be a coincidence." It aligns to well to be a mere coincidence. Even if he had trouble in his last squad, why would he be so considerate towards us? Even when we argued with him, to never grow upset… to never raise his voice and always be so patient… It is odd.

"… We'd have been so dead." Ayamine says, leaning back and looking up as her lips twist in.

"Also, the fact that he came here under the personal orders of the Vice Commander is another reason to suspect him. What reason could the XO have to add him to our squad a mere month before the CCSE?" I'm glad to have him on the team, but I'd like to know where his loyalty lies. I can't work with an American in good conscience, who knows what he'll do in the CCSE?

"Shirogane-san has to take it to be able to become a surface pilot. Even if he's so talented, if he doesn't graduate it doesn't matter."

"Tamase, you are too kind." Mitsurugi says. "He could have easily graduated anywhere with his skills, it's actually hard to believe that he was allowed to come here. Who would give away such a talented soldier? I wouldn't have let him slip out of my grasp if I were the commander of his former base."

"Mitsurugi is right yet again. I want you all to think about what we'll do during the CCSE, in case he decides to go against us. Let's try to get along, to avoid enraging the Instructor, and let's see how he acts from today on." I look at all of them in the eye, as a leader I have to transmit my resolve to them. Otherwise they'll just go and tell him everything.

"Chizuru-san, you're too cold." Yoroi's eyes almost close as she looks down into her plate.

"No, I just don't want to fail again. If there is anything that might get in my squad's way it's up to me to bring the matter to the table, so that we can decide what to do as a team."

"Then shouldn't we ask Shirogane-san about this?" Tamase, you truly are too naive. Surely you know what the word 'betrayal' means, right?

"You think he'll talk?" It's really weird how much we agree these days.

"Exactly. Even if we ask him, he'll just say again that he isn't perfect and that he wasn't conscripted."

"Actually…" Mitsurugi caressed her ponytail, looking up. "Shirogane did seem pretty shaken about our attitude today. He did ask me to not be so cold towards him, to not leave him out of the squad. He told me he was going to be serious from now on. I believe we should refrain from making a judgment until we see if he truly shows us his true colors."

"He did? Well then, I suppose we can give him a second chance. But Mitsurugi, what do you suggest we do if he turns out to be influenced by the American Way?"

"… I suppose we can only grit our teeth and work with him until we get commissioned. I'll be going back to my room. Good night." Mitsurugi stands up to leave, and we all soon follow.

I can't let this chance go away, I have to pass the CCSE. Even if it's in the UN, after two years of service I'll be able to request to be transferred to the MDF. Even if my father disowns me, I rather die fighting under my nation's flag than live on as a dog of America.

Shirogane, I don't know who you are or why you're here but I won't let you ruin this. The squad is already quite hard to control, I don't need another reason to fight between us. I thought you would be a good addition, but you're a giant mystery. All that skill with guns must have come from America. No way in hell I'll trust an American soldier. Not after what America did.

I know, I'll go check his records. I wonder if I can find from where he got transferred. Yeah, he is Japanese. I'm sure he must have his reasons. I shouldn't judge him because he was forced to live in America.

I sigh, shaking my head. Moving my neck in circles, I crack my knuckles as I speed up in the hallways towards the library, since it's almost lights out.

The clerk lets me in, reminding me I have less than an hour to be here before he has to close it down. The dim yellow lights partially illuminate the library's rows of bookshelves, the farthest part of it being blocked by shadows. I walk to the open space to the left, where some PCs were placed on rows, separated by small walls into cubicles. I sit down and swipe my ID Card, putting my Rank and name in the confirmation box that appears on the screen.

The PC is unlocked, bringing me to the black screen with just a few icons. We Cadets only have S1 level of clearance, but this should be enough to look at his summarized personal data. Let's go to the records…

"Cadet Squad 207th… Members… Shirogane… What?!" I could only gape at what the error message said.

I blinked, it didn't change. I took my glasses off and rubbed my eyes. But the message didn't change. I closed my eyes and sighed, exiting the window. I then tried again. But the message didn't change.

There's an S5 lock on Shirogane's personal data, I can't even access the screen pop up. What is this? Why does he have such a high security lock? Who are you supposed to be? Even if you're the XO's special boy, this is just unacceptable. Not even Mitsurugi or me have such a lock, even if I suppose her profile is as bare bones as my own.

Wait, let's check the public databases of the Shogunate. At least some info should turn up there. How was the address again? Let's see in the book of useful links… Here it is.

Now, I don't know anything about Shirogane other than his name so I hope there aren't many Shiroganes with the same name. Let's sort it by age… Hmm… This one should be his profile, going by how old he looks. There are no other Takeru Shirogane profiles in the right age range anyways. Why does it only has his name on it? The rest of the columns are all blank. Well, doesn't matter. Let's see here…

But, again, an error message popped up on the screen.

… What does this mean? Access Denied?! Why would his public profile be blocked as well? Did he… hack the database? This is illegal. No, scratch that, it's impossible. No civilian should have this kind of privilege.

"What can I… Mitsurugi! She is the only one that can know for sure." With her resources I'm sure she'll be able to find out more about him.

I rush out of the library, towards Mitsurugi's room. If there's anyone who could find out the meaning of this it's her. There's no justification for his data to be blocked. But… what if… he's an undercover agent? That would explain his skill. But from which faction? From Japan to spy the UN; or someone sent to spy us?

No… He got sent to our squad so suddenly… Considering mine, Mitsurugi's and Ayamine's backgrounds, even if I do not know of Tamase's and Yoroi's, this could only be one of two possibilities. He's here to watch over us, or… And with his skill with guns, coming possibly from America… He's here to make sure we fail the CCSE.

I reach the barracks, slowing down as I feel my boots' grip ease up on the floor, and go knock on Mitsurugi's door. I hope she didn't go to sleep yet.

"Mitsurugi? Are you still awake?" A short while after I knocked the door opens.

"Sakaki? I was about to go do some jogging, why did you knock so hard? It's not that late yet for me to be asleep." She looked surprised as she stroked her long ponytail.

"I have a favor to ask of you. Could you come with me to the library?"

"The library? What is this about?"

"I think I found out… a lead on Shirogane's background." Her gaze grows sharper as she raises her chin, I had forgotten how imposing she can be.

"Is this true?"

"Yes, and only you can obtain this information. I know it goes against our non-interference policy, and that you dislike using your influence without good reason, but we cannot ignore this. Could you please come with me?"

"… Understood. Let us go."

---

**[?]

---

"Hmm… A most interesting development indeed."

"All leads on the matter make us believe that your suspicions were correct." The soldier said. Truly unexpected, but a welcome surprise.

"I see. Then regarding our deal…"

"It will be done. If everything goes according to plan, they will get the approval to send the project there."

"Do you think you can convince that fox?"

"Professor Kouzuki is a very hard to approach woman, but given her current position she won't be able to reject the proposal, in my opinion."

"And what if she does?"

"We can always resort to them. I'm sure they also have the same wishes as you do regarding this business." Yes, despite our differences this is a matter in which we think alike.

"Then you have my support. I expect good news soon. I'll give the orders to my fellows once you confirm the deal on the other end. I suppose they won't mind this arrangement, what do you think?"

"No, they seem mostly pleased with this deal. If they can get their hands on those Type-94 you promised them they will be satisfied. So long as they keep the 1Cs that will be produced under their grasp, I believe they'll be satisfied."

"A reasonable demand. By the by, did you acquire any intel on that new cadet on Squad 207?"

The man looks down, coughing once.

"… I'm afraid not. Any info on him is under a heavy lock."

Damn you, Kouzuki. Just what are you doing now? You've stopped giving reports on your research and now this. On whose side are you?

"Alright. Let's not push our luck in that matter. I'll be awaiting your call."

"Very well. Have a good day." After a small bow he turns around and leaves.

I wasn't expecting the pieces to fall down with such ease in this lineup. Be as it may, I have little choice but to leave the 1C on their hands. However, with their support, I'm sure Kouzuki will find herself unable to refuse our terms.

Now all that's left is dealing with this 'Shirogane'. How should we off him?

As the Fog Sets In

Chapter 12: As the Fog Sets In

---

November 2nd. 02:26 PM.

(Hallway. Yokohama Base.)

[Takeru]

---

Sunny day, the sky only has a few clouds up there. The usual bustling in the hallways, the complains in the rooms coming from the people having to wait for their next orders for who knows how many minutes, the bored soldiers doing patrols, just another uneventful day in Yokohivema Base.

I already checked the batteries, the joysticks and the connection to the data center. The consoles are ready to be used and today I will start the special training of the squad.

During breakfast, Mikoto and Tama remained the same, and later asked me some tips to complete the morning exercises, but the other three didn't do much conversation. I expected Meiya to be a little less cold after the talk we had yesterday, but I guess I'll have to start over with them. They might be more different than I thought to the ones I knew in the other worlds.

… It's depressing, really.

The Instructor was coming along to make sure the girls behaved well and to monitor the data from the exercise, so I was in charge of the 'class' this afternoon. I never thought I would be teaching someone officially, the hairpins of life are a real mystery. I'll just have to careful with my braking to avoid more discussions and grip onto what little good signs I notice.

I enter the classroom and the girls fall silent in attention, except Mikoto who keeps on rambling about a trick with a kendama.

"Hey y'all, good afternoon!" An unnecessary loud and joyful greeting.

"Hey Takeru! Are you ready to spar with us?" Mikoto comes up to me by the door with her usual giggling face.

"I was preparing that, yes. So, are you all coming with me?"

"Wait, we haven't got approval from the Instructor to go with you yet." Chizuru, why must you always be like this?

I take out a small paper from my pocket, the official document that allowed me to treat this as a real training.

"What is… Why do you have this?!" Haven't seen her this surprised in my life. In any of all of them.

"I did tell you yesterday that I was going to get permission from the Professor. Now, you're not forced to come along. If you don't want to, you can remain here."

They started exchanging glances. Mikoto seemed all in this, Tama was nervously looking at everyone else as if unsure of what to do, Meiya and Chizuru were whispering with each other with their backs turned to me, and Kei switched glances from me to the rest as if bored.

I waited for a minute, but Meiya and Chizuru were still debating. What the hell are they even talking about? You know what? Let's roll.

"Alright, this is already taking too much time, the ones that do want to help me with this training follow me." I turn around and exit the classroom, with Mikoto following closely behind me. Soon after the rest also catch up to us.

"So Shirogane, what are we going to do?" Meiya asked, trying to get by my side.

"Don't be so impatient. You'll have enough time to figure it out. And it's not like you have a chance to beat me in this." I say in my old cocky tone, poking fun at them.

"What did you say?! If it's a duel you want, I am more than happy to oblige. I won't lose to you today, Shirogane." Meiya, you're so easy to taunt. Even if you do look very intimidating right now.

"Shirogane, as the Squad Leader, it's my responsibility to put you down from that pedestal. Don't look down on us just because you trained abroad!" Chizuru's pride wouldn't let her back down. I mean, Kei is always triggering her, she's super sensitive to any kind of teasing.

"Special-kun, you die today." Kei, I knew you were going to be game too.

"Hey Takeru, what are we gonna do? Can't you tell us just a bit?!" Mikoto was… how to say it… rebounding upon herself in excitement.

"Nah, we're gonna do some special training. You'll face me in some new training courses, you'll see when we get there."

"Um… Shirogane-san, is this really okay? I mean, the Instructor…"

"The Instructor is already in the room where the training will take place. Don't worry Tama." I smile at her, making her relax a bit. I do wonder why they fear her so much… I guess Marimo-chan doesn't exist in this world, huh.

We kept walking, going towards the elevator in B5F. When I got to the stairs, they seemed to stop for a second before following.

"Shirogane, can you tell us where we're going to do this trainings?"

"You'll have to follow me to get there Sakaki, don't be impatient."

"We would like to go at our own pace, there is no need to rush." Chizuru is being extra cold today.

"Can't do that, because the training will take place in one of the lower floors we usually don't have access to. Just for today, we can go there. But only those who come with me will get permission to pass."

"Why? Whatever is the meaning behind such secrecy?" Sending a hand to her air intakes, she glared at me. "And why are we going to the lower floors? Could we not train on our usual grounds?"

"I told you already. This training is different. We can't do it in the track field or in a classroom." They wanted to protest, but remained quiet and kept following me.

Eventually, we made it to the elevator in B5F. I swiped my ID Card and it opened, but as I got inside they again remained standing there, as if unsure of whether to cross the street right before the light became red.

"C'mon, get in." Mikoto and Tama come in, but the other three remain outside.

"Shirogane, what level of clearance do you have?" Chizuru keeps glaring at me, what is her problem? I know I kinda took them lightly, but weren't they the ones who wanted me to take them seriously?

"S1, but for today I can go to the floor where the training will take place."

"Oh, really?" She sounds like she didn't believe me.

"You're free to stay behind, if you want. The elevator won't stay open forever."

She and Meiya again shared a glance, but then Kei walked past them and got inside, sending a gaze my way as she passed my side. With a sigh, Chizuru came in and Meiya followed.

As the elevator made its way to B17F the faces of the girls grew more and more surprised the more the elevator descended. Even Kei's eyes are widening.

"Shirogane, where are we going? At which floor will we stop?" Meiya arched her shoulders as she looked at me.

"B17F."

"… What? Why are we going to such a lower floor?"

"Having second thoughts, Meiya?"

"Never said that, I'm surprised as everybody else is here. And I told you to stop calling me by my name." Man, look at that fire. You're beautiful even when you're mad.

"And I told you manners are not my strong point. But please do forgive the rudeness, Meiya-sama." She flinched when I called her that.

For a second an expression of pure bewilderment showed itself on her face, but she closed her eyes and then simply returned an angry glare to me.

"Shirogane, what makes you think you can mock us so openly?" Chizuru spoke with clear disgust.

"Hey, I'm just breaking the tension here. Really guys, this isn't the end of the world. Relax, otherwise you won't be able to do your best against me." Tama and Mikoto nod in agreement.

"You are right. Sigh… It's still a surprise, to go to such a lower floor." Meiya kept gazing at the panel as we went down and down.

"Shirogane, you could learn a thing or two about respect."

"Sorry Sakaki, but that's just how I am. I'm not good with manners and I'm always doing lame jokes and puns. Is what I do to avoid being a ball of nerves." And to not get depressed about how much you all seem to hate me now.

"… Really?"

"Hey, can we stop with the aggressiveness and try to get along? It goes against all you told me about teamwork when I first arrived." She always insisted on how important it was to generate trust with your comrades, both here and in the other loops.

"What do you know? You're not even… Forget it." She clicks her tongue and looks away.

"I'm not even what?" What was she gonna say?

The door opened as we reached our destination and the girls got out quite fast.

"Alright, follow me." I take them to the room in question.

The same room where me and Kasumi worked on the things, the same boring meeting room lighted by a bright, cold, white light. Inside of it, the Instructor was sitting by the table.

"Salute!" Chizuru ordered as soon as she saw her.

"Good afternoon, squad. I see all of you accepted Shirogane's proposal. I am here only to oversee this training. To prevent any unnecessary fighting." She shoots a glare towards Meiya, and then sits down again.

"Well Takeru, what are we gonna do here? What's the deal with those TVs?" Mikoto I appreciate your enthusiasm, but those are for later.

"We're not using those yet, you all take a seat in the sofas. I'll check everything is set up properly before starting."

They looked rather puzzled but sat down without much complain. Now, let's check that the data cables are all in their place. Yes, now… the wireless tracker is on, all Game Guys are linked. The Instructor gives me a nod to indicate everything is all green on her end as well. Okay, let's get this show on the road.

"Ok, all green. Allow me to explain what you'll be doing here. You'll face me in a special training, one designed especially by Professor Kouzuki. This is part of my special missions, so as you can expect I'm really good at this. Any questions?"

"What kind of battles will we do? I do not understand how we could face off here of all places." Chizuru really didn't like being here, facing the unknown is something she is terribad at after all.

"I'll give you your… terminals now. That should answer your questions." I hand one MMTS to each. They look surprised, to say the least.

"Shirogane-san, what is this? A Pleiades, maybe?"

"No, this is a new training device developed by Professor Kouzuki with me as its tester. The MMTS, Mobile Multipurpose Training Simulator, is a portable training terminal that can perform many different types of training depending on the cartridge you insert in it."

"What?! Such technology exists? You said you were the tester, is this the reason you are special?" Meiya looked exactly like when she… when the other one found it during first loop.

"Yes, I can't tell you the details, but I've been helping in this thing's final stage of development. Today you will all face me with these in the trainings it can do. Let me tell you that I'm quite proud of the results I got with it."

"Special-kun, this for real?" Aww… She's using my words. Sarcastically, yes, but she's using them nonetheless.

"Yeah, if you got scared feel free to leave." I shrug while chuckling a bit. Kei looks like she wants to choke me right now.

"Shirogane, enough with that attitude. So, how do we operate the terminals?" I answer Chizuru's question using my own Game Guy to show them how it's done, and again they're shocked at how 'easy' it seems to be.

"Now let's start this show. I'll let you decide in which order you'll face me and in which training course."

"Someone is confident." She taps her glasses, giving the tiny machine a good look. "Now, what courses are available on this sim? It can't be too powerful."

"We have a race simulator, a stealth simulator, an army management simulator, a puzzle simulator and a TSF simulator." All of them open their eyes as wide as they could when hearing the last one. Tama's eyes went white, Mikoto is shivering, Kei and Meiya have their mouths wide open and Chizuru almost dropped her glasses.

"WHAT?! A TSF simulator?! Shirogane we have no authorization to train with that!"

"Sakaki, you're too loud. And we have authorization from the XO to use this things, so no worries there. Right, Instructor?"

"Indeed." She smirks at their reaction. "Do not worry about that, these machines are nothing like a real TSF simulator. No one is going to go after you for this, so use them to your heart's content." Nice follow up, NotMarimo-chan!

Their hesitation and shock loses traction after hearing it, then they start talking between themselves to decide who goes when and what games they'll play first. Of course, they don't know these things are games. I can't wait until I show you the Stallion, if you're so surprised about the Game Guy I'm sure you'll be blown away by it. Assuming they want to keep training and don't start suspecting I'm evil incarnate again for some reason.

"Shirogane, we will face you in this order. Me, Yoroi, Tamase, Ayamine and Mitsurugi. We'll use the puzzle sim first, then the racing, army management, stealth and TSF sims in that order. Is that alright?"

"Sure thing. I'll give you the cartridges, you can practice a bit to get a feel of how it's going to be. Take some minutes to see how awesome the MMTS is." They do seem intrigued, but are still keeping it to a minimum. Except Mikoto, she's beaming at the Game Guy. You'll always be a gamer, no matter what world you're in.

I hand them the PoyoPoyo cartridges, and proceed to enjoy their sparkling eyes and gasps as they start up the game. Looks like they're enjoying themselves, I mean the first levels are really easy.

"I can't believe such a thing exist. This is truly a wonderful invention." Meiya was impressed, absorbed into it.

"Yes, it's simple enough to get the basics down in just a few minutes, but I think it has a surprising depth with the formations you can do." Of course Chizuru would over analyze this.

"Well, do you all feel ready to challenge me?" Ohoho, look at those eyes! Yes, be motivated! Get fired up, I'll throw you all into a cold sea in just some seconds. I'll show you the real horror that lies behind those cute Poyos.

I start up my Game Guy and sit down on a sofa, between Meiya and Chizuru.

"So, are we going to compare our scores on each stage?" Chizuru said as she peered at me.

"No. We will use this Join Cable to play against each other Sakaki."

"Eh? Play?! You're treating this as a game? What about being serious?" And here we go again! Seriously, I'm starting to get fed up with your screaming. You weren't so noisy before, not even back on school in my world.

"You'll see soon enough. Let's see if you can make me go serious on you." Her brows again form a V, her lips pluck into a small line.

"I'll make you eat those words."

Cable connected. Two Player connection established. All right, let's do this.

We start on stage one, I drop my cute slimes down fast, forming towers to make combos. Chizuru seemed puzzled at what was going on in my side of the screen.

"Shirogane, what are you even doing? You can't get points if you- Huh?!" Once my big combo was executed, a lot of black slimes appeared on her side.

"Fuhuhu! If you do big enough combos you can disrupt your opponent with black slimes!" Full accel ahead, get your game on Chizuru!

"That's not fair!"

"There's no fairness on the battlefield! Prepare yourself to be creamed, Sakaki!"

"Creamed?" Meiya, not now!

Two combos later had me on a nice flow, while Chizuru was almost close to lose. She had very little available space left. Oh, two triangle slimes! C-C-C-Combo!

"Aaah! No, I have so little… I lost." She looked at the screen in a daze.

"Well, you did last more than I thought you would. Good fight, Sakaki."

"Shirogane, how did you even move your slimes so fast? Have you been training with these for a long time?"

"Yeah, these things are really good for training your hand to eye coordination. And it's also really cute." Tama and Mikoto gave a nod in agreement.

"Must be nice to have these things abroad. I'm sure you had a lot of time to perfect your technique over there." Ouch. Careful with that edge, Chizuru. You're gonna cut yourself.

"These sims were made in Japan, though."

"WHAT?!" You all look just like Yuuko-sensei when I told her the same.

"Look at the back of the thing. It says 'Made In Japan', right?"

"Shirogane-san, are all the training simulators and their courses made in Japan?"

"Yeah, they're an invention of Yuuko-sensei." They look shocked at me. Now what?

"… You use her first name?" Chizuru was simply tilted. Meiya was in whatever state comes after that.

"… Special-kun, who are you?"

"Takeru Shirogane, it's a pleasure." Giving her a smile and low eyelids, she returns back her usual poker face but I can tell she's upset, and also curious, thanks to how the edge of her lips retreated inside for a millisecond.

"It is a very interesting way to train, indeed." Meiya says with a nod. "I would never had thought about it. The screen looks far sharper than that of a Pleiades, the buttons feel truly nice to the touch, and this software is simply amazing. Shirogane, are those black computers by the TVs also training simulators?"

"Indeed Meiya, those are the more… awesome ones. After we are done with these trainings you'll get to face against me in those. Assuming you still want to do so after I beat all of you." And she's upset again. I mean, she was upset from the beginning but now she seems like… determined to win, I guess?

"Now's my turn! Takeru get ready!" Mikoto came and sat where Chizuru was before.

I ended up beating them all. Tama was the only one who seemed to know what she was actually doing for some reason, the others lost their cool as soon as the black slimes appeared on their side.

"Now that we are done with this one, let's start the racing one." Whatever happens, I have at least showed them the things. Let's just keep at it with a positive approach.

"We couldn't even put him in a pinch…" Chizuru hangs her head, looking as if only a rope was keeping her from falling down a ravine. Come on, now. Don't get so down.

"Here's the cartridges of F-Mega. Practice for awhile with it." They switch the cartridge and after powering up the MMTS again, their eyes sparkle at the sounds and graphics.

"Alright. This time we have to defeat him. Let's start this!" Following Chizuru's howl, all of them started the first race in the basic track.

However…

"What is even this speed? I can't… I'm crashing!" Chizuru, that's not how you use the Desert Thunder LPT. Stop trading paint with the walls.

"A-Ah! No, to the left! Not so much! Why did I explode?!" Meiya, you look so cute right now. It's just like when we married and I kept making you play against me. And just like back then, she knows no cornering.

"Awawa! I'm constantly hitting the walls! I can't do this." Tama, have more faith in yourself. You did got very good in both worlds once you got some practice.

"… This sucks." Kei I think you and Kasumi would get along really good.

"Uwah, this… is so COOL!" Glad you like it Mikoto, but do try to not… Aaand she went off course. She doesn't seem to care and as soon as she respawned she blasted the accel again. Hahaha, typical Mikoto stuff.

After they finish their first race, and by finish I mean ran out of time after exploding a lot, I put my own F-Mega cart in.

"So, ready for our showdown?" She groans as she taps her glasses, crossing a leg over the other and getting comfy onto the sofa.

"… Yes, in such a hard training course we should be evenly matched. You will surely have trouble controlling your vehicle." She raises a finger at me, taking a pose similar to the ones she did when she was Class Rep in my world.

"Ohoho! We'll see about that." I pick my Red Lightning TUE and choose the basic track after the two-player screen came up.

"Shirogane, why would you choose a vehicle with such low handling? You're certainly going to crash much with it."

"Thanks for your concern, Meiya. But there's no reason to worry, I will win." She still looks mad when I call her by her name, but is curiously peeking behind me as we start the race.

Alright, not yet… A bit after the second honk… And off we go! I stick to the inner side of the curve, quickly leaving Chizuru behind.

"What is the meaning of this?! How are you not- Oh!"

"You sure you got time to worry about me?" Apparently she already crashed.

Slightly let go of the accel, veering left. Accel again as I take the rest of the curve, now I got a nice, steady long road without any curves or anything.

Chizuru was getting closer now. Not that it mattered, since as soon as she has to take a curve… I press the brake and do a power-slide, managing to go In-In-In. Chizuru tries to take it in stride, and ends up going off the course.

"Say Sakaki, are you even trying?"

"Of course I am! You're just…" She bites her lower lip as she crashes again.

"Perfect." Meiya said, jealousy dripping from her voice.

"Aww, don't praise me so much. This is just the first track, there's another twenty something more difficult than this one." And I never got as good as Mikoto was in racing games. Damn bastard always beat me in them, he and his super precise cornering.

Chizuru was going steady along a clear road and ended up crashing. Really, it's not something to be so surprised about.

"Huh? Shirogane-san, is that true?" Tama couldn't believe it.

"Yeah, this is the easiest mode to take this training. If you can't pass this, the next generation of Cadets is going to steamroll you."

"Next generation?" For Kei to speak up, this must have piqued her interest. Meanwhile, to the left. Slightly lower the speed…

"Yes, the idea is to eventually have these sims distributed worldwide to aid Cadets in their training." Their eyes keep getting wider and wider.

"Is this true? All Cadets in the world… trained with these?" Meiya seemed surprised, but in her tone something else stirred.

"Well, last lap. Not much left."

Chizuru still tried to bridge the gap, but her control wasn't getting any better. I won while she still had three laps left.

"I can't believe… You had no problems with this one. Even when it's so hard to control." She adjusted her glasses while getting off the sofa.

"Practice makes perfect. Now Mikoto, your turn." She smiled widely, crashing onto the seat ready to play.

We made our way through the games, they were trying their best, but…

"I'll attack your Guard with my Commander. Axes have an advantage against spears, so it's guaranteed to defeat it." Pressing the buttons, I get ready to choose the right weapon.

"No, wait! She can survive the hit, you're just wasting your attack!"

"Meiya, dear, did you forget that I picked up a Shield Smasher axe last turn?" Meiya's eyes are filled with horror as her Guard dies. This now gives a path for my mounted units to kill her healers.

"NO! Not the clerics!"

"Are you begging me, Meiya?" Her narrowed eyes lock onto mine, the emotion made her raise her voice.

"Stop it! Claire and Ramyl are… those two are unarmed, why would you do something so low as to attack them?!" I can't believe she got attached to her units just by reading their summaries.

"Because they're your lifeline. Do you think the enemy won't attack our suppliers in real life if they get the chance?"

"Ah, you have a point… But we will fight the BETA, not other people!"

"Then today you will learn how important it is to secure your supply lines, to avoid your formation from crumbling. This is what happens when the frontliners fail!"

"Please, don't! They're…" Ouch, I got a crit against Claire. The animation was quite brutal, Meiya looks dead inside. "This is… so frustrating… Now that I can't heal my knights…"

"Giving up already? Is this what they sacrificed themselves for? You wouldn't make a good commander, Meiya." Taunting: Successful.

"Never. I won't yield, your cavalry is surrounded now! Even if I lost five comrades this turn I can still-"

"My turn isn't over yet."

"Huh? What? None of your warriors can attack me from their positions."

"Meiya-san, he still has a mage right there. See?" Her eyes go wide in terror as Mikoto points to my mage. It's so nice seeing so many emotions in your face today.

"AAH! I forgot about it!"

"Say goodbye to your Samurai." I know she has a fetish for swords, but to see her choose the Samurai as her prepromote without a doubt was really funny.

"No, not Kenshin! Stop Shirogane! Don't… Aaaahh, what can I do now?!" She lost her cool once I took down her favorite unit.

"You can give up or die fighting." I give her a smile, and get a furrowed brow with daggers instead of eyes back at me.

"No… I'll win. I'll defeat you! I just have to defeat your King, then your army will fall!"

Sadly for her, I killed her king two turns after that. She looked completely defeated, looking at me with a mixture of envy, terror and respect. Next up was Steel Gear.

"Hmm, you wouldn't happen to be… near the second room to the right, Ayamine?" She keeps her poker face, but I saw her brows move a bit. "Would be such a shame if I set up this bomb here."

"Tch. I'm not dead yet."

We can't really see each other in the Steel Gear game, we are each taking our turns to find and kill the other but she's giving me a hard time.

"Hmm… I wonder where could you be?"

I'll move here, and set some explosives in this hall. This should do it.

"Don't get confident. I'm still on the game."

"It's your choice, Ayamine. What are you gonna do?" She returns her gaze to her screen. All the girls were behind her sofa, peeking at her game. They all were rooting for Kei.

"Done with this. Get ready." Her face changes, her eyes get a flare on them.

Let's execute the trap, then. I've been laying wired explosives along a hallway and now that I'm gonna blow them up the whole hallway will be blasted, but some items will be destroyed too. Like the gas tubes.

I press the command to detonate the explosives and the chain reaction appears on the screen. For a Game Guy game this looks really good. Then the game displays that some tubes were destroyed, leaking a poisonous gas into the area. But since a wall was about to fall, it broke and blocked the way I had gone to hide. Now the gas can't reach me. It's all a matter of whether Kei is or not close enough to me to kill me before the gas kills her, so she can't hide anymore.

"Cheap. Coward."

"Say whatever you want, but you're gonna lose." The girls behind look dejected. Meiya and Chizuru look especially shaken.

Kei looked more serious now. She pressed the buttons faster than before. However…

"Eh?! Why is the laser trap activated?!"

"I found the room some turns ago and flipped the switch."

"Tch, damn you." As she moved her character it appeared on my screen, she hadn't detected my character yet. All right, it's my chance. Let's use the sniping rifle, and here we… Dead!

"Eh? I… What? From where?" For the first time since we started this she looked genuinely shocked.

"You fell right into my trap." I send a wink her way, which makes her more annoyed.

The other girls didn't knew what to say to her. Ayamine was the one that got the most close to be a problem for me in this game.

When we made it to Valgern-On they were blown away by it, but due to how fast paced it is they stood no chance against me.

"Awawa! Jump! And from here I'll- Ah!" My Kaiser stunned her Xao-Myun and then I strike it with more shots. She has 23% shields left.

"Fuhuhu! Is this all you have, Tama?"

"It's too fast! I gotta pull back to counter attack, then-"

"How about no?" I shoot at her and bring her to red numbers. Her jumps are really predictable, she always jumps and later moves instead of pressing both buttons at the same time.

"Awawa, I'm gonna lose… Maybe if I go on the offensive!" She tries to counter attack, and that surprisingly went well.

She took 20% of my shields with that unexpected move. But she was already too low on health, some shots and down she went.

"Nice fight, Tama. That trick at the end was really good."

"I still lost. You truly are unbeatable." She sighs, looking dejectedly to the ground.

For a first time it wasn't so bad. They do look dejected as hell right now, let's see if I got them interested in the trainings.

"So, what did you think of the MMTS?"

They exchange some glances and, after some nods, Chizuru speaks up.

"They are most interesting. The simulators are very polished and the teachings they have are very impressive. To think this training method could one day be common worldwide is honestly shocking." Glad to see all that work wasn't in vain. "However, as a Japanese citizen, I am worried about the Americanization of our training. I do not think this was made completely in Japan as you said, it's too similar to a Pleiades. The same could be said for the software, that has many English terms despite being of Japanese origin. Even the fact that the TSF sim is about Anti-TSF training makes it clear it's an American invention." But all of this was made in Japan. Also, why do they let their hatred towards America get in the way of everything?

"I mean, it is a Japanese invention. Also you do know this is a UN base, right? We should be fluent in the international language, and if using some English terminology can speed up the translations and help foreign Cadets who don't know so much of our language to not be so lost during training I don't see the problem." She did not seem to agree.

"Hmph, English can eat… Ahem, regardless of that matter, I believe I understand how much one can improve using a MMTS."

"So would you all like to continue training with them?"… Wow, they did not expect that question.

"But… these must be a military secret, right? We couldn't keep using them even if we wanted." Chizuru shot down my proposal as fast as a laser.

"A secret you already know of. And I got permission from the Professor to allow you to join me in my special mission if you want. It's up to you if you want to use them or not."

They look slightly troubled by my offer. Meiya and Chizuru were again whispering between themselves while Mikoto and Tama looked at them worriedly, restlessly folding their hands into their pockets.

"While they are indeed useful devices, I believe our priority is to prepare for the CCSE." Chizuru said in a monotone while doing circles in the air with one finger. "The next generation of Cadets will surely make good use of these. And if they're deemed worthy I'm sure we will get another chance to train with them."

"Sakaki is right. While there is much to be gained through this method, our current objective is the CCSE. Increasing our physical aptitude should be our number one concern." Meiya spoke solemnly, not meeting my eye.

"Mikoto, Tama. What about you guys?" Meiya and Chizuru looked at them, they looked downwards.

"I… agree with Mitsurugi-san." Tama barely managed to bring out the words, arms compacted onto her sides. Mikoto gave a small nod to indicate she also thought the same. Sigh, can't say I didn't expect this.

"And you Ayamine?"

"Who knows?" She shrugs. Kei, dear, please give an answer.

"What does that mean?"

"These things might just explode."

"C'mon, don't be like that. They were made very carefully, they wouldn't-"

"Oh, one caught on fire."

"Huh?! Wait, they're fine." I see her smirking at me. KEI!

"Huhuhu."

"Ayamine, can you give a me straight answer?"

"No, can't do that." She says in her usual bored tone while looking away.

"Why not?"

"Cause I'm lesbian."

"Wait, WHAT?!" This is one major change in this world, what the hell?!

"Just kidding." Don't deadpan me like that!

"Ugh, I don't know why I try with you. So you're refusing too?"

"Yeah, sure."

"Can you tell me why?" She seems irritated at my questions. She faces me and looks right me in the eye before answering.

"Because I don't give a shit about this. I'm here to become a Surface Pilot, not a tester. Don't dump your work on us."

"Hey, that's not what this-"

"Shut it. I don't care. They're interesting, but useless to me. I have a test to pass, these things won't help me pass the CCSE. You happy now?"

I can't say I didn't see this coming. Well, I tried. No hard feelings. Right, they're not who I'm remembering them to be. They are, but they are not. I have to get to know them from point zero, since they are different.

At least Sensei might find some use for the consoles, maybe we could trade them to get resources or something. It's clear the anti-American sentiment is stronger in this world, so let's stop digging this hole.

"Alright, I guess that ends this training session. Thanks for your cooperation, squad."

"Eh? Shirogane, are we not using those black ones?" Huh? Meiya seemed interested in them, but considering all the English terms that are in both CryRing and Steel Gear… Yeah, I better wrap this up before they start to openly call me an American sympathizer.

"Nah, you already did enough. Plus Ayamine is right, this is my mission. I wanted some input, a different point of view one might say, and you already gave it to me. As you all said this won't help you pass the CCSE, so let's end this here. Thanks a lot for helping me out, guys." I say as I take the Game Guys out of their hands and put them back in the briefcase they were in before.

They seemed to want to say something, Chizuru was glaring blades at Kei who simply looked the other way. Now, what the hell is their problem? They already rejected the idea of working with me, they don't trust in me. Now what?

"But… you promised you would fight us seriously today! You still haven't finished this training!" Meiya was not letting go of the idea. What got into her all of a sudden? They just said they wouldn't benefit from this, they'll just get more paranoid anyways.

"Meiya, you all just said this is useless to you. Let's not waste more time, you can still go use the rest of the afternoon on your training. I don't want to get in the way, so let's-" Chizuru came closer, took a pose similar to my world's Chizuru when she was Class Rep, and objected firmly raising that same finger again, more circles being drawn on the air.

"Mitsurugi is right. You said those were more amazing than the MMTS, so why don't you show us what they can do?"

"Because they're a military secret. And you just said you didn't like the idea of training with these machines. Honestly, I'm not stupid. I can tell you don't trust me, and I don't want to force you guys to go through with this if it makes you uncomfortable. It's okay, I'll deal with this myself. You did enough for me already." I have to mind my words, I don't want to anger her further.

But she looks super annoyed at my response. Chizuru was again glaring at Kei. Tama and Mikoto were exchanging glances from me, to Chizuru, to the Instructor, as if unsure of what's going on. Meiya just folds her arms and sighs.

I don't get it, if you wanted to use the Stallion, why did you refuse so vehemently a second ago? What are you playing at?

"Alright, so if we agree to help you in your mission, would you show us those machines?"

"Of course. I welcome the help, but are you sure? You just refused a second ago." I won't say no if I can get you interested in them, but I can't read what you're playing at right now.

"Well, maybe I should have waited a bit. I… cannot believe you performed so well in these trainings." She looks away, clearly bothered.

"Hey, it's just a matter of practice. So, do you all wanna try them out?"

"Yeah! I'm in!" Mikoto jumped up with stars in her eyes.

"Me too!" Tama chimed in.

Why were they being so cold a second ago? Were they testing me? Wait, I think they did something like this in my world when I started dating Sumika. They were constantly trying to make me step on the stick, trying to make me admit we were dating. That was such a silly thing, but I feel they're doing the same here. What did they expect I was gonna do? Are they so suspicious of me they felt that they had to test whether they can trust in me?

"What about you Meiya?"

"I too would like to face you in those machines. And you still insist on referring to me by my name." Her sapphires turn into blades aimed at me, making my heart ache. I've been calling you that since forever, you can't just expect me to…

No, forget it. She's different, another person. Let it go, man.

"… Sorry, I'll try to fix that. Well, Ayamine, you're the last one. Are you-"

"Sure, whatever." If I hadn't spent a lifetime with another her I would think she was just flipping me off. But she does look at the Stallions quite intensely. She wants to see them in action.

They wanted to use them, yet they pretended to not care. So they were testing me. Sigh… It's gonna be hard to regain their trust.

"Alright. Instructor, can you check the ethernet connection as I start them up?"

"Yes, leave it to me." Not showing any interest in our discussion, more than as an spectator, she begins to help me with the checks.… I wonder what she thinks of this, why is she doing nothing.

… Maybe she agrees on the Anti-American sentiment, and so, doesn't care what they say to me. Guess I'm just another trainee for her… as it should be. She really… isn't Marimo-chan.

Once everything was set, I put the disk in each Stallion and turned them on. As the anime opening of CryRing Saga played on all the TVs, the girls jaws pierced the floor. Their eyes stared in shock at the images, producing not a single sound as they were lost in what they were seeing.

"… Shirogane, what is this?" Chizuru had to adjust her glasses, trying to keep her cool.

"CryRing Saga. It's the awesome version of the same named program we used a while ago."

"How is this… This is… The drawings are moving?!" Meiya's eyes were going to pop out any second now. Tama and Mikoto's eyes became white dots as they stared in awe at the screen. "Shirogane, how is this possible?"

"… Science?"

"Be serious! How… I cannot believe these drawings can move…" Meiya was again mesmerized by the opening, staring firmly at it with wide eyes.

"Special-kun, this for real?" Even Kei's eyes were wide as a watermelon.

"Yeah? C'mon, bring the sofas closer. Let's make you go through the tutorial."

---

**[?]

---

"This is a most welcome surprise." I reread the report the agent gave me, a smile yet again forming on me.

"It seems he said the same thing when informed of this matter, according to the agent. He already was suspicious of some movements some people were doing in one of the hangars." My fellow tells.

"Haha, I see. Great minds think alike." How would I like to have such a competent person on my side. But perhaps it's because we're so similar that we will never be able to work together.

However, this is truly a most unexpected surprise to be sure. Not even in my boldest dreams could I have thought her able to convince them of this. I didn't knew she had it in her. That incident must have left quite a shock in her soul.

With this piece I'm sure we'll convince Kouzuki to… see the same landscape we do. She could never refuse to be in charge of this research, much less in her position. Her support will disappear faster than a candle's flame in front of a typhoon if she doesn't procure any further results. I'll have to thank her in person for this piece she gave me. What could I reward her with, however? Some fruits, a bottle of sake perhaps? A fruit basket with some sake, that should be most appropriate as a show of thankfulness.

"Sir, according to the report, he promised his support to aid us in the production of the amounts of Type-94 you requested. He also agreed to let the Fuji Corps be the exclusive users of the 1Cs that aren't in our control, and to ease the pressure to take them from our units."

"Perfectly perfect. All the pieces are falling into formation. What about the medicine?"

"Still not secured. They demanded some Type-97s in addition to the money we proposed them." Sigh… I need it, so badly.

"I'll allow it. Send ten of them in good condition. So let's review, we hand her and her research to the fox, we have acquired all the needed hands to approve the new budget for the production of the Type-94, all in exchange for our support in keeping the status quo. Of course, I hope the UN keeps their end of the deal and keeps that squad as mere Cadets." The last thing we need is the hostages getting deployed. I can only imagine the amount of political fuckery that would cause. It would be funny to see, I admit.

"Actually, sir, about that… I have one more matter to inform you about." For him to waver in this way, I wonder what the informant relayed to us this time.

"What is it?"

"There's a new member in Squad 207."

"Hm? Just that? I don't see how that deserves my attention."

"All data about him is locked behind the highest lock in the UN, and his public profiles are also locked."

"What did you say?!"

"He also possesses great skills in all areas, be it fighting or in war knowledge. He doesn't seem to be an average recruit, sir."

"Who is this person? A foreigner?"

"No, sir. He's Japanese. From what little info he could gather, this young boy came from abroad after his former squad was wiped out not so long ago. His name is Takeru Shirogane. The other faction wants to put him out of commission." A Cadet from abroad… whose squad was wiped out in recent times… Could he have been stationed in that base as she was?

"You said Shirogane?" He nods. The name doesn't sound familiar. "And under whose wing is he? America?"

"No, Kouzuki seems to be responsible for this. She herself asked for the boy to be transferred to her base, and I doubt she would be conspiring with anyone to harm the hostages."

Kouzuki found another pawn, huh? Killing him may be the smarter solution, but I don't see the need to rush. We should investigate more throughly. Plus, if she finds out one survivor of that was assassinated she may turn against us. And, for all I know, he might be on our side.

"Send a message right away telling him I want to observe this Shirogane. Do make sure he is unable to intervene during the CCSE, we can't allow the hostages to grow wings or they may turn into a problem."

"Yes, sir! Will that be all you require of me?"

"No, could you call her to a meeting? I want to thank her personally for the efforts, as well as relay the news of the soon-to-come transfer to Yokohama."

---

Same Day. A bit over 7 PM.

( Brain-cylinder room.)

[Takeru]

---

No sounds in the room, I slowly move the thread in the small gap available. Inhaling deep, to not screw this up because if I do it's back to the beginning for the third time, I slowly move my hands back. And so, finally, I managed to form the shape I wanted to show Kasumi.

"Sigh… And this is a Dancing Butterfly. Think you can you do it?" She gives me a nod, and she tries to imitate my movements.

The first times she also got it wrong, her brows moving for a sec as she got pissed. Giving her some pointers, since her hands are much smaller than mine, she gives me a nod and tries again. Very slowly she moves the thread, and, after a while, she manages to make the butterfly. A wide smile appears on her face.

"Thanks, Takeru-san." Eyeing the shape, she can't hide the smile, which I can't help but to share. "Do you know more tricks?"

"No, not really. Cat's Cradle wasn't something I used to do back home, after all."

"I see. What did you do in your world for fun?"

"Playing videogames, most of the time. The Game Guy has been my main go-to console for a while, but I also got a Dreamcost and a Nientedo 64 back home." I only used the Stallion to play through Valgern-On 2, I didn't get to actually play either Viper Eater or CryRing to the end.

"… Those programs don't seem much fun to me." She pouts a bit, moving her bunny ears real slow.

"Haha… I know you think they're hard, but not all of them are like that."

"So… What were you playing back there?"

"Oh, someone gifted me a used copy of Magorea's Mask for a test I passed, so once got some time I played through that one. Had finished it before recovering my memories, too." Was actually looking forward to discussing it with Mikoto back then.

"… What is the game about?"

"You see, the protagonist is looking for an old friend that was always with him during his last quest, but as he traveled he got lost in a forest." I feel a tingly feeling on the back of my head just as I began to remember the cutscene, her eyes widen a bit. "But then he runs into a kid wearing Magorea's Mask, a mask that is imbued with the power of an old and evil deity." Slowing down my tone, I arch my brows as to make it sound scary, remembering that cutscene.

… Which in all fairness, was scary as hell.

"And then, what happens?"

"Oh, our hero tries to fight him, but the masked kid is too strong and turns him into a coconut scrub." For real, I still get shivers remembering that scene. Kasumi quivers a bit, eyes fixed on mine as she waits. "Well, the boy then has to find a way to go back to normal, recover the Magorea's Mask, and save the town of the game before the moon falls down. And he has a very limited amount of time to actually pull it off, only three days is all he can afford."

"Oh…" Her bunny ears fall down, dried up like a flower left without water. "But, how does he fight back?"

"You see Kasumi, our hero also has the powers of masks on his side." She twitches, making a cute squeal as her bunny ears move.

"But aren't the masks evil?"

"No, not all of them are. He also has his own magical instrument, that lets him go back in time to the beginning of the three days. So long as he doesn't give up, he can always keep trying."

"I see… So, how is the game played?"

"By doing side quests and exploring around, there is a vast world to explore with lots of different locations and characters." I tell her of what I remember of the game, the tingly feeling intensifying as I recalled the landscapes, the temples, and the puzzles, and she nodded quickly, asking all about it, and getting surprised when I told her of some solutions and of the bosses of the four temples. "So, the more you play and explore means you can get more useful masks that will help you in your mission, and also help the people of the area during those three days."

"So the one with the better mask wins? That sounds like a masquerade."

"Hahaha, yeah, it kinda does. But guess what? The best way to win is to not have a mask at all." I rise a finger with a smile, enjoying her widening eyes.

"But how? You can't be in a masquerade without a mask."

"You see, once the hero loses all his masks after gathering them, he obtains the strongest one in the game, the Fiery Daemon's mask. It is so OP, it can almost one shot all the bosses of the game!" And thanks to Onimura, I knew that tidbit before going into the game, though I didn't knew what exactly would happen once I returned all the masks.

Seeing the transformation for the first time was oh so awesome! Going back and mowing down the bosses in one or two hits felt so satisfying, too. Especially to that damn bull. Had it coming to him, damn bastard.

"So, you win in the end?"

"Yeah, Magorea's mask is sealed and the town is saved."

"Does the hero find his lost friend?"

"… No, he has to keep searching on his own, leaving the friends he made in the town behind."

"That's sad. I don't like it."

"Well, yeah. But it isn't all bad, you know. He did help out that town, without him they would have been screwed." She closes her eyes, nodding after a while.

"So… Are there other games like that one?"

"Oh, yeah! There's a whole franchise of 'em. You see, there was this one time where I tried playing the first game when I was little, and I hated it."

We kept talking of games and their stories, she listening intently and curiously asking me about my world, about what games I played with Sumika, and of why I didn't bring those games here, instead of the 'harder ones' I brought, a small pout in place.

Thankfully, Kasumi is still friendly with me. Coming here to chill while we play is one of the few pleasures I have left in this rotten world. She said that Sumika feels really happy when we do, but that she's feeling some confusing feelings in her as well. Don't worry Sumika, your pain will be over soon. I swear I'll end this the right way this time. Even if it seems I'll have to go alone for the most part.

The girls were blown away by the Stallion. But after we finished 'training' with them, Chizuru got all defensive about how it was impossible that they were made in Japan. Meiya also seemed distrustful, believing it was an American invention as well. Mikoto and Tama looked like they enjoyed it, but I didn't want to put them in a rough spot and said that I was going to keep performing my mission alone. Kei didn't stop staring at me intensely since I started up the things, so I know she must also be suspicious of me.

Thankfully, NotMarimo-chan stopped them before they started asking questions or getting too bothered. She then made us give an overview of what we thought of the new sims, to think of how we could improve further in our trainings from what they learned today. While it seems they do see some merits in the consoles, their suspicions that they're from America made them close up. The Instructor simply closed the class by saying we can always improve, especially when looking for different ways to train, and that was it for the day.

Sigh… Whatever. I'll be myself and stop antagonizing them. I don't want to keep fighting with them. It does seem like the bridge has been burned, but even so I still gotta try to put out the fire.

A sound echoes through the room, what's that?

Kasumi moves her ears as she goes over to a machine and comes back holding a paper. Is that thing a fax?

"The Professor is calling for you." The paper read 'Shirogane get here'. Sigh, as pushy as always.

"I'll be back in a second." I stand up and get out of the room, Kasumi trying to do origami by herself by the cylinder.

My steps echo in the silent hallway. This long hallway always manages to creep me out. I get back to the main floor and knock on Sensei's door. I hear her voice and go inside, where I find another old face I recognize.

"Oh, so this is him?"

"Yes, the one and only. Shirogane, allow me to introduce you to Sakon Yoroi. He's the one that will help us with your files here." Yep, that's Chief Yoroi alright. Same coat, same hat, same face. But is he the same inside?

"Good evening, I'm Takeru Shirogane. Thanks for your help, sir." I take a serious tone as I extend my arm to offer a handshake, but then I'm met with two ice spears in his eyes. At this point I'm not surprised.

"Are you really Takeru Shirogane? Please, you can use your real name with me." Smiling, he addressed me with his playful tone.

"I am Takeru Shirogane, sir. That's my real name." His smile vanishes as he takes a step closer, ignoring my hand.

"Oh, perhaps you think you can fool me, American dog?" Oh shit, here we go again.

"Chief Yoroi, what's the meaning of this?" Sensei sounded really angry and… Holy shit! She took out her gun!

"Please, Professor. Forgive my curiosity." He raises his hands in a defensive manner. "I merely wished to test whether the man was who you said he was. His records were already cleared quite throughly, and it's surprising to see a young Japanese man that willingly joined the UN and came back here despite being abroad."

"Yeah… About that. Yoroi-san, do you know anything about the reason my records were cleared?" His faces goes back to his usual one, showing no concern at the gun that was still being pointed at him.

"The Professor just told me you were unaware of this. She also told me you were living in Yukon since two years ago, enlisted as a Cadet in the UN."

"Yes, pretty much." That's the story she came up with to cover me.

"You have no idea why your data is missing?"

"No, honestly don't have a clue. One day, I woke up in a hospital without knowing why I was there, and it seems that no one was able to locate any relatives I might have had. Been living there since then, enlisted as a soldier to not have to go to the refugee camps." I practically have the thing memorized by now. He looks into my eyes, I quietly return his stare. Lying with a straight face sure gets hard in front of people like him.

"… You must have had to deal with many unpleasant situations back at Yukon, I'm sure."

"… Yes, I had it hard before coming here." I can't help but to frown. All those messed up accidents… and now they won't even trust in me.

"I see, forgive me for prying." He smiles again, taking a step back, this time offering me his hand, which I then shake. "I am not in a position to know of how the databases are handled, so I do not know why this error happened. I'm afraid I cannot help you with that." He tips his hat forward slightly.

"Don't worry Shirogane, he's already agreed to fix your profiles. We'll find out about your past if it becomes important enough." Sensei was still pointing her gun towards Yoroi-san. I mean, things are different this time around. I shouldn't be surprised.

"By the way, Shirogane-kun. Do you like American food?"

Again with the misdirection? Talk to the suspect about a random topic, and once they seemed to relax, throw a hard question at them. It's a simple trick, people tend to lie less when they're relaxed.

"Yeah, I do."

"Hmm, I see. Maybe I could bring you a hamburger next time I bring intel to the Professor."

"That would be appreciated, Yoroi-san." I return his smile with my own. "Though, I like pizza more than hamburgers."

"… Oh? Is that so? Out of curiosity, what would your favorite Japanese food be?"

"Hmm… Steamed doubin, without a doubt. Though, mackerel and natto rolls are what I like to eat the most everyday."

"Hoho, I see…. And just to make sure, you were trained in America right?"

"Yes, I was part of a UN base in American soil these last two years." According to Sensei's plan, that would make most Japanese people not care about me. Since they would keep their distance, I would not have to be giving explanations about my origins so much.

"And they allowed you to come here? Such a talented soldier, I would keep you close if you were in my team. I cannot imagine what reason they could have, but reading your report I can sort of understand." What is there to understand? What's about the base Sensei chose to be my transferring point?

"Chief Yoroi, you're asking too many questions. I only allowed you to ask a few things about him." Sensei was not fooling around here.

"Alright. I do not wish to see your beautiful face making such a frown, so I'll just ask one more question. Shirogane-kun?" He now looks at me, and takes a serious tone again.

"What is it?"

"What do you think of Her Highness, the Shogun?" Shrinking stern eyes gaze at me, the severity of his question is not lost to me. He's asking me where my loyalty lies. Though, I've no reason to lie about my loyalty.

"I think she's a good person. With her as the pillar of strength, the Empire can look towards the future with hope."

"And what about her situation? I'm sure that you must know of the Empire's affairs after coming back."

"I do not have a reason to voice my opinion on the matter. The Empire's matters should be solved by the Empire. Even if foreign powers could lend a hand, it's Japan and its citizens who must decide how they wish to interact with the world. It's up to the Empire to decide how it wishes to manage its power."

"A very… interesting answer. So, you do not care about who holds the power?" Hostility, disgust, rejection. Right, he is loyal to the Shogun so hearing that I don't care about who holds the power here might have sounded like I didn't care about her current struggles.

"If the people wish the power to be with the Shogun, I see no reason to oppose or antagonize them. I'm here to help, not to create more problems. Butting my head into the political struggles would cause more harm than good, due to my role in the army. Sometimes, one has to know when to keep some distance from certain discussions." His gaze somewhat relaxes upon hearing my words.

"I see. You know about the current power struggles and decide to remain neutral to not spark a conflict. Professor, you got yourself a good guardian." Now he was nodding in acceptance. I'll never be able to read you or your daughter.

"Enough with the chit chat. Can we get on the business? Those records are not going to fix themselves." She finally lowers her gun. Sigh, thank God she didn't have to use it.

"Do forgive my curiosity. Let's get on with it then. Takeru Shirogane, we'll need your fingerprints for the registry and your blood type." Sigh… Again using my full name, huh?

"OK, let's get this done."

More papers to sign, some confirmations on my medical test, a fingerprint registration, and that's all done.

"Good work Chief Yoroi. Here are the reports you asked on the devices we've made." Sensei hands some envelopes to him, who puts them inside his coat.

"Thanks for your cooperation, Professor. I assure you this aid will not go unnoticed, if it brings the results you speak of I'm sure the Shogun will prepare a very generous reward for you."

"Yeah, I know. But you might want to hold onto that, I'm very close to making another breakthrough in a more… tasty project." She looks at me while licking her lips. Sensei, you just love to stir the bees. No, you couldn't let this end peacefully.

"Hmm? I wonder what could it be? Does it have anything to do with that live test of the stealth technology?" He knows of that?!

"So those Royal Guards were spying. Yes, the devices are not the only things I created. You would do well in looking forward to it."

"Ohoho, and I suppose Takeru Shirogane is involved somehow?" Sensei makes her devilish smile as she chuckles.

"Maybe. You'd do well in not antagonizing us. I may not be willing to give you early access if you get in our way."

"Oh no, that would be troublesome. Whatever will I do." He says in a deadpan tone. "I'll be awaiting that intel. And as thanks for you sharing all this… Let me give you one warning."

Me and Sensei lose our smiles as he changes his tone. What is this going to be? The coup? The HSST?

"You might receive a bad present this Christmas." Oh, it's just Alternative V. But I guess they don't think we already know about it. We should act concerned and-

"Oh, that? Yeah, I know. My guardian already warned me about it, but thanks for the reminder." Sensei, what the hell? And why did you have to mention me?! Don't give me that smile!

"Hmm? He did?… Interesting. You wouldn't happen to be willing to exchange him for some very large funds?" Great, now I'm on the sights of the Ministry of Information. Way to go, Sensei.

"No." Despite Yoroi-san's playful tone Sensei answered fully serious, with a bothered face.

"Ohoho, I think I might want to not push my luck further here. It's been a pleasure, Professor. I'm glad you have not forgotten your duty to Japan." Sensei ruffles her hair as she sighs deeply. She does not like to deal with him, after all.

"If that's all I'll call Pyatkh to escort you. Wait by the elevator, and do not go wandering off."

"Yes, I know. Until next time." He bows to us and leaves.

But before leaving he shot a glare at me. Not the playful one, not the serious one. A small trail of smoke coming out of a forest, a lone dark cloud floating up above. His glare was filled with doubt, with suspicion. I don't know if it's a good idea to be on his bad side. I waited a bit after he left to turn around and face Sensei, who was spinning on her chair again.

"Sensei, why did you tell him about me telling you of Alt. V?"

"For you to have a serious enough reason to be here. You are supposed to be the guardian the UN assigned to me, in case I get attacked by my enemies. You are a special individual trained in many areas, and were sent here to protect me under my direct orders. I asked you to come here as my bodyguard and my American allies sent you with a tip for me. That's your cover, for those who can and will access your information. And it's not like it's a lie, only the part about you coming from America is."

"I mean, yeah, I get it. But I think you just made him more interested in me." She strokes her bangs as she stood up again, grabbing her mug and going to pour some coffee in it.

"Look Shirogane, you were a Royal Guard here. Those guys are practically fanatics of the Shogun, the thought of one of them joining the UN is not unheard of, but it's still rare. You were not given on a loan, you joined us. So you needed a damn good reason to be here while making them reluctant to approach you. They would have still put you under the microscope, but at least now that they know you're here to protect and aid me they will be more careful about what they may try to do to get intel on you."

"Yeah, I know this world is different. Thanks for taking care of everything again."

"Aww, don't be so humble now. I'm just doing my part, so long as you play yours there's no thanks needed. Do be careful around them, and in the CCSE as well. I know you realized, but your training is harder now. And so will be the CCSE, so be on your top game and don't take it lightly."

"Yes, I know. By the way, did you see the data from today's training?"

"Not yet. I was making some adjustments to the OS and the engines today. Let's talk over this after today's training, you have until nine. Go and keep Yashiro company for awhile longer, will you?"

"Yeah, got it."

"And Shirogane?"

"Hmm?"

"I want you to push your squad with all of your might starting tomorrow." She was serious, I can tell when she is simply talking and when she's giving an order by now.

"Why would you want me to do that? I thought you would be against me revealing my strength."

"They seem to be doubting you, so at least let them see how good you truly are. They won't stop being jealous, but maybe they will stop being so annoyed about how you seem to be playing with them. Do not hold back, at all. You can pound them into the ground all you want, I'll tell Marimo to not intervene." I did my best to not harm them today, and now you're telling me you want me to beat the crap out of the political hostages that are being watched by, like, the whole base? Yeah, what could go wrong with that.

"Uhh… Pretty sure that harming them is not a good idea."

"Don't harm them, show them how good you are. Shame them, crush them, and all without actually hurting them. I know you can do it, so go out there and show off a bit. It will also work as a warning to all the eyes that are laying their sights on you."

"So that's the real reason."

"No, both are equally important. Now Shirogane, what are you gonna do tomorrow?" Sigh, she loves to boss me around. How I'd like to wipe that smirk off your face when you get like this, Sensei.

"I will continue to give my all in the trainings, until the CCSE. Anything else, Yuuko-sensei?"

"Yes, I have a question for you."

"A question? What is it?" That's weird, she's doubting. Her eyes moved down for a second, her smile is getting smaller.

"Shirogane… Regarding the theories, do you think you could tell me more about the Causality Nucleus thing you said you were?"

"The Nucleus? I guess, since it doesn't really have much to do with things here. Alright, let me remember… "

It pulls itself towards causal leaks if it's connected, it brings towards itself data that is related to him with a strong pull, it's own information cannot be leaked easily and can grow in power from time to time. That was all, since even though I tried to read them I didn't get a thing from Sensei's notes.

"I see. And you had said that emotions can cause causal leaks during one of our talks before, right? About how you work as a conductor, something about an emotional link."

"Yes, that I did. You explained to me back in my world how the emotional state of a person can affect the kind of futures and parallel worlds it receives information from, and that the conductor can strengthen said link."

"That applies to someone who is a Nucleus too, right?"

"I guess? Why would it not apply?"

"Oh, not saying it doesn't. But if you're both anomalies at the same time, and depending on your emotional state you, as a conductor, can open links to other worlds, then also you, as a nucleus, will receive any data about you from those worlds as soon as the conduit is formed." Her eyes are burning with the passion only found in her when she is theorizing about some crazy idea.

"But you also said that it's really hard to do consciously. I don't really have any idea if I have affected anyone so far with a causal leak."

"And that's what we're going to test after the Niigata incident." She declares with a smile.

"Huh? Test?"

"I was thinking of how to gather data regarding your petition, to fix what caused your world to fall in ruin. So after you give me the theories and I confirm if my ideas are correct or not, we'll start working on that as well."

"For real?! That's… much faster than I expected. What about the 00 Unit?"

"I will still need time to recheck all the theory throughly, instead of just copying the equations. I might also need to modify parts of its hardware too, and that will take its fair share of time. So, in the meantime, we'll start dealing with your problem. To be sure nothing bad happens try to stay in a good mood, don't let things get to you." Her gaze was piercing me, but I know she means well. Can't go screwing things up now.

"Yeah, I know. Is that all, Sensei?"

"For now. Don't be late for the testing."

"Got it. Later."

---

Same Day. Near midnight.

(Imperial Palace. Tokyo.)

[Maya]

---

Having finished the meetings for the day, I bow and leave Yuuhi-sama's side. Walking on the hallways, I draw a long breath. However, I cannot yet go to rest. I look around and after confirming no one is in the vicinity, I lean onto a wall.

"HQ-01 here. Chief Yoroi, do you copy?" I say in a whisper into the comms I had in the neck of my dress.

"Loud and clear." His usual voice reached my ears. "I am in the usual spot."

"Roger, I shall be going."

Taking one of the secret passageways, I arrive at the small garden that's outside. The cold evening wind greets my skin, the sound of distant steps reaches my ears. Instead of going into the garden, I turn to my left sharply and approach a small building that's left in a corner. I look behind me and at what's around me, and after sensing I was not tailed, I go into the storehouse.

Closing the door behind me, I take a few steps into the darkness. A small sound appears to my right.

"… Good evening, 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi. As cool and beautiful as tonight's evening breeze." The man said giving me a bow.

"Chief Yoroi, please do not waste our time. How did the meeting went?" He looks as expressionless as usual, what dim light filters into the building tells me there's a certain tension in his posture.

"… Well, here's the documentation the Professor handed me." He produces a few folders from his coat and hands them to me. "She mentioned a few other tidbits that were not in the papers before I left, however." He proceeds to inform me of what Kouzuki told him.

Some more developments, perhaps? Why is she researching weaponry instead of finishing… Or, is it because she's close to starting the project?

"As per usual, your dedication is much appreciated. Is there anything else left to report?" He closes his eyes for a moment, then tensing his brows he opens them again.

"Yes… Fact is, she let me meet the person she wanted to cover." Yoroi's tone grew slow and serious. Who is it that made his complexion waver so? "Ahem… Please do not shoot the messenger, I am merely telling you of what I saw." He raises both of his hands slowly, lowering his head slightly.

"I understand, Chief. Who was the one Kouzuki desired to cover?"

"… 1st Lt. Shirogane."

"Oh, is that so?"

I see… Yes, if his profiles were not fixed then he would have been put in a most precarious position. It makes perfect sense, however, I wonder if Her Highness… No, if she sent him there to that squad, she should have expected something of the sort.

"You… do not seem surprised, 1st Lieutenant."

"I am not allowed to speak of the matter, but I myself have confirmed that man is not a spy or a faker, if that is what you were concerned about."

"But… How is this possible? I thought he-"

"Chief, you should know when to stop asking questions." I take one step forward, glaring at him amidst the darkness.

"Oh, apologies. I still have a rookie in me, it seems. Hahaha…" His laughter trails off as he puts his hands inside his coat's pockets. "Still, I suppose Her Highness-"

"I already reported his presence in the proper manner, and we were given no special orders regarding him. I assume he is performing a Top Secret mission there. Do keep in mind his standing, Chief."

"However, the Professor doesn't seem to know who he truly is. She said he's there as her guardian." His eyes squinted, letting me see he was telling the truth.

"Is that so? I suppose this is the Shogun's way of supporting Kouzuki." Though, perhaps the fox requires of his… services if the project is soon to be started. "In that case, I am sure you did not speak of-"

"Absolutely not a word left my lips." His eyes narrow, I nod as I gesture for him to continue. "However, I think that, in light of certain circumstances, Kouzuki should be… informed of the minimal intel."

I inhale slowly, then I tap my glasses. It is true, if he is to stay in that squadron under his real name people will start recognizing him. Hmm… I cannot mention his name to Yuuhi-sama since she ordered us not to, but she ordered me to remain as we were unless something happened. If I keep bringing this up, someone might notice it. I would like to believe the Shogun's chamber is free of bugs, but walls have eyes and ears in this palace. Regardless of why Takeru is there, we should do something about this.

"Chief, could I rely on you to misdirect Kouzuki?"

"I doubt anyone could pull such a feat." He says as a small smile is painted in his complexion.

"She could be deceived to facilitate a meeting, regarding his 'lost' data. We'll use that to contact him and see what the fox has planned for him. I am sure Her Highness also desires to hear his report, however, for whatever reason, she has left him incommunicated in Yokohama. I trust you know how to approach this."

"Yes, you can leave this matter in my hands. Though, he didn't even flinch when we met. He was also very calm, eerily so."

"Truly? Was Ta… Ahem, 1st Lt. Shirogane bothered by anything?"

"No, he seemed comfortable. Even when Kouzuki showed her hostility, he remained calm and composed. Some of his answers denoted an air of maturity he did not possess before." He then tells me of his answer regarding the questions he gave, especially the one regarding his loyalty. Of course, remaining neutral is all he can do in his current role. "He did arrive quickly when called, so I suppose the Professor has him stationed near her office at times. I suppose that after that little matter with the infiltrator she wanted an extra layer of security now that the cyborg left." I nod in agreement, looking at the sole window that filters what little moonlight is accompanying us here.

I see… So you're calmer now. If he didn't react or give any signs to Yoroi, then I suppose I should have no motives to make a move. And I do agree, Takeru is well suited to guard that fox. That being said, I do wonder why Her Highness allowed him to be on the Cadet squad. However, knowing him, he might have pressured Kouzuki to be near Meiya-sama in her daily activities. You are terribly stubborn when something gets on your head, after all.

"However, did he remain at ease all throughout the meeting?"

"Yes, as I said he was oddly calm. He didn't react to my usual approach, nor showed anything when I asked him about this fake data in his new profile. It was shocking, to be honest. I was ready for him to get angry and raise his voice at some point." Yoroi looks upwards, a hand on his chin.

"If I may, what is the cover story for him?"

"Well, he's supposed to be a recruit from Yukon that was living there since two years ago. Of course, he 'has no idea' why his past data was erased in his absence from the Empire and he so conveniently doesn't remember his past either." Sigh… Such an obvious lie wouldn't normally fly, but I suppose Kouzuki should be able to give credibility to his identity there. I only hope he doesn't stay out in the open for long.

"Alright, I will be returning to my post. Next time you go to Yokohama, you know what to do." I say, tapping my glasses once more.

He nods and tips his hat, leaving the storehouse. Waiting for a moment, I get out and remain gazing at the sky. For a brief moment, my feelings betrayed me and I allowed myself to smile. So you're comfortable in Yokohama. Sigh… If you feel no need to show your fangs, that is one burden that has been lifted from my shoulders.

… I still harbor doubts on the reason Her Highness sent you of all people, but Yoroi is right. After that little incident, we couldn't merely stand idly by. I wonder when you'll grace us with your report… There are so many things I wish to ask you. Where were you all this time, for one.

I sigh loudly and take the hidden route once more, returning inside to finish my night duties. Sadly as it is, I can't tell those two about the good news. Hopefully you can come back home soon, Takeru.

Watering the Seed of Doubt

Chapter 13: Watering The Seed of Doubt

---

November 2nd. 07:33 PM.

---

[Meiya]

---

After the afternoon's event, Shirogane returned to the lower floors and we haven't seen him since. He didn't return to his room and didn't come to have dinner, according to Kyouzuka-san.

While we were taken aback by his sudden proposition to join him in his mission, those machines were definitely marvelous. I can't stop feeling jealous of him, he's skilled, knowledgeable, and has whatever it is that's necessary to aid the Vice Commander in her developments. How could I ever compare? Even after what I learned yesterday…

"I still think you're being too paranoid, today you treated him horribly! He was just trying to show us some new ways to train. Imagine what we could learn with those things!" Yoroi complained to Sakaki about today's training.

We had to talk things through with everyone during lunch today, to tell them to let us test Shirogane. We couldn't tell them what we found out, but they still agreed to be more tactful with him and let us control the situation.

Of course, all that went out of the window when he proposed us to keep training with him. And even after that, those machines… The WMTS, such an advanced machine, to be able to make those images move. I have not seen anything like it, it was truly more 'awesome' than the MMTS, and that was already quite impressive.

Yet, I cannot see how we could embark in such an endeavor with the UN, considering how much the Empire is struggling to make ends meet. I doubt we have the resources or the tech to start that kind of project. And, if we did, I doubt it would be handed to the UN for testing. Why did he lie about them being Japanese inventions?

"I really think we should apologize. Takeru didn't deserve that."

"Then Yoroi, why did you not join him in his training?" She cannot hold my gaze, she starts fiddling with her hair.

I'm envious of you, you can be so honest with yourself. I also wanted to see what one could gain through those machines, but if they come from America… And if he approves of their use…

"… I think we should all work together to pass the CCSE. Antagonizing him like this will only make things worse." Yoroi said as she returned her attention to her dinner.

"That's assuming he is going to help us." The venom pouring from Sakaki's voice was apparent. Tamase rested her spoon and, after a noticeable moment of stillness, spoke up.

"I… I think we need to have a talk with him. He may not be able to tell us everything about where he comes from, but if we make it clear that we want to trust him, I'm sure he'll open up a bit." I wish I could be as positive as you, I suppose that is yet another difference between my upbringing and theirs.

"He'll just dodge the question." Ayamine, who had remained silent until now, squinted her eyes as she spoke up.

"Ayamine-san, please. We need to try. Mitsurugi-san, what do you think we should do?"

"I… do not have an answer yet." Not when I still don't know as much as I would like to know about this.

"Why not?" Ayamine was sending a dubious look at me with one finger on her cheek.

"Because there's something I'd like to confirm."

"What is there to confirm? Mitsurugi, if you don't want to tell them then I-" I meet Sakaki's gaze, she swallows her words.

"Sakaki, I would like to ask you to give me more time. You all already know that I cannot simply ask for information whenever I please. I would like to make my decision based on hard data, not on an emotional outlook." That's easier said than done, however. Shirogane, who are you really? I want to know, I want to trust you. But you are a too grand mystery, I cannot let my guard down around you.

"Fine. I'll say nothing for now." She taps her glasses, sighing. "Then let's change the topic, it's already November. The CCSE is around the corner but I would like us to discuss possible ways we can deal with it. Now that we have gotten such a hellish training, and that we have confirmed that Shirogane has ties to America since he's involved in the development of those simulators, we can expect a lot more obstacles than last time."

"Sakaki, I told you to not make such a rash judgment. Please, leave the matter to me." This time, however, her gaze doesn't waver. She moves her hair out of her face as she shrugs.

"Oh, really? Then what should we do? We need to start thinking on a way to neutralize him, in the case that he turns against us. Those machines, his skill and knowledge of guns, how he defended the use of English over our own language. He's clearly influenced by the American Way. Moreover, if he became our enemy, I fear that even with all of us fighting together we would come short in trying to stop him." I nod in agreement, leaving my gaze on my plate.

Remembering this morning practice sent a chill down my spine. Now I'm sure of it, he is using the Mugen Kidou. However, where and how did he learn of it? Is he a traitor? Perhaps, a fellow in disguise? Is that why Tsukuyomi approached him before? However, if he was trained in our style… Why was he in America?

"So Chizuru-san, what are you suggesting we do? Harm him?" Yoroi did not like where the conversation was going.

"I don't know what to do about him. That's why I'm asking you all. I also want him on our side, but he may abandon us when we need him the most." She raises both hands in a defeatist way as she sighs.

"Can't we just abandon him first?"

"Ayamine-san, please don't say that!" Tamase sent a glare at Ayamine, she is very sensitive when it comes to our constant infighting.

"Then what do we do?" She returns the gaze and Tamase falls silent, holding her hands close to her chest.

"He is stronger, faster, smarter and has more endurance than all of us. It won't be an easy fight." Sakaki was serious about the idea, it seems. I know why, but even so, I would like to confirm our findings before we have this conversation.

"Um… I don't think he'll betray us." Tamase said as she poked at her food.

"Tamase, you're too naive." She shook her head, again tapping her glasses. "If he's from the American Army, he won't hesitate to leave us behind if we become a burden to him. I cannot trust someone like that!" She raised her voice, sounding somewhat agitated.

"Sakaki, stop. There's no reason to treat Tamase with such harshness."

"Mitsurugi, stand down. I am the Squad Leader, it's my responsibility to keep order in our team. If she is doubting we have to address this, now." I can't argue with that, I know she is right. But Sakaki, your way of doing things is just…

"I don't see a bad person in Shirogane-san, I think he's trying his best to fit in, despite how we're treating him." Tamase was doing her best to hold Sakaki's accusing glare. "I am kind of jealous of his skill, and I would like to know where he learned all he knows but, to go as far as treating him like a traitor? That's too much."

"Then, you're on his side?" Sakaki changed her tone to a small, slow whisper. In doing so, she sounded far more threatening than before. She adjust her glasses, leaning forward to meet Tamase's gaze, who cannot hold it and flees away from her eyes.

"No… S-Since when are there sides in this? Aren't we all part of the same squad?" Her hands began to shake.

"Sakaki, that's enough. We shouldn't be-" Without even registering me, she continues to talk.

"Tamase, think about this please. If he is indeed a Cadet, why is he so skilled? Why is he the tester for those machines? Why does he address the XO so casually? I find it preposterous to think other Cadets are trained like we are being as of now." All of that is true. Shirogane does not seem to be a Cadet, no matter how you look at him.

"… You're right. Sorry." She hangs her head, not wishing to further the discussion.

"Don't apologize, Tamase. It's not like I don't understand your or Mitsurugi's concerns. But… I can't let you down again. It's my fault that we failed the last CCSE, so I can't let anything get in our way this time." She returns to her usual position, hanging her head. So it's still bothering you.

"Chizuru-san, don't say that. There's no need to go reopening those wounds." Yoroi gave her a pat in the shoulder.

"She's right, though." Ayamine, must you?

"Ayamine-san, please don't-"

"No, Tamase. Let's hear her out." Tapping her glasses yet again, she narrowed her gaze as she looked at Ayamine. "Do you have anything else to say to me?" I wish I could stop them, but they won't hear my words. It's always like this, these two are too prideful.

"You didn't listen to me. We should have not used the toolkit on the bridge, and now you're doing the same. You speak over us, using your position as the leader to give your opinion more weight. You're no soldier, you're a politician." Her scowl and hateful tone resurfaced once again. I send a gaze to Yoroi, and she slowly moves to the edge of the table.

If they start fighting again, we will have to call for the Instructor. Even if she is already fed up with us and this will only result in another hour of lectures about teamwork. Sigh… I wish I could do more than give advice and logical arguments. Why can't I convince them to stop fighting with my words?

"Oho, and why don't you try to actually take part in our conversation, instead of throwing one liners all the time? And I am your leader, my orders are absolute. If you don't obey your orders, you'll bring chaos to your team."

"That's not true. Orders in the field are not absolute, there's never one surefire way to say which decision is the best. That's why command is split into many small teams, and why it's recommended to soldiers to give immediate reports if they see any change in the situation. Taking two seconds to consider a suggestion can make the difference between victory and defeat."

"Now you sound like Shirogane when he questions some of our lectures, are you on his side? Also, taking time to consider what? Those at the top have more intel than whatever a soldier could see. If you want such freedom, you have to scale the ranks."

"Superiors who don't take advice from their comrades are trash. Your rank doesn't make you better than your subordinates. Also, there's the chance to have an inept or corrupt commander. What would you do if you're given orders that go against the Empire while you fight under the UN's flag? You'll accept them because they're orders? Such loyalty to our nation." Sakaki lost her poker face, now being clearly gritting her teeth.

"You two, stop this. We should be-"

"Mitsurugi, stand down. My loyalty is with the Empire, Ayamine. I can't say the same about the daughter of a pair of traitorous pigs who joined hands with the Americans, and now is defending someone that seems to be an American soldier through and through. Must run in the blood." Ayamine's face twists into a look of pure rage. Yoroi gets up to go look for the Instructor, I need to calm them down at the least.

"Stop this! We shouldn't be fighting among ourselves in this way. Both of you have to calm down, this is what caused us to fail last time." But it's as if they didn't hear me.

"Wanna go outside, princess?"

"Fine by me, traitor."

By the Holy Emperor, not again. They leave the PX towards the track field, without losing eye contact as they got up. Why did Ayamine pick a fight with her? Was she defending Shirogane? Then why was she so harsh with him during this afternoon? Or perhaps… she was annoyed Sakaki spoke so harshly to Tamase? I can only sigh and shake my head, send a hand to my forehead.

"Mitsurugi-san, is this really for the best?" Tamase was quivering as we watched them leave the PX.

"Leave them be, Tamase. They will never listen to us."

"Um… So about Shirogane-san, do you have… an idea on what to do if he does abandon us?"

"… No. I have no idea what to think of him at the moment, to be honest." I want to trust him, truly I do. I don't see a bad person in him. But my success comes first. I cannot fail this CCSE or it's back to prison for me. And if he turns out to be a traitor…

"Do you suspect him too?"

"I have my doubts. He did seem honest when I approached him yesterday, but…" He lost two friends, he wasn't lying. But then, why was he sent here? And from where? Did… Sister sent you to me? Is that why your records are locked?

"But what? Did he say something harmful?" Her brows arched, her voice stirred imitating the sounds of shattering glass.

"No, nothing of the sort. I just wish to confirm something about him with my sources, that's all."

"Alright, if you say so. Sorry, for making a scene with the leader. It's my fault they're fighting again." She hangs her head as affliction shows itself in her face with the brightness of an eclipse. You worry too much about everyone, Tamase.

"Please don't apologize, it's not your fault. You of all people should know how stubborn rivals can be." She laughs weakly.

"Yes, that's true. Oh, Yoroi-san! What happened with the Instructor?" Yoroi scratched her head while sighing, one eye closed.

"She's calling us for another personal lecture in her room, she's currently going to the track field to stop those two. She seems really angry this time, more than usual." And to make matters worse, Shirogane won't be there with us to somehow put her in a good mood like he always does.

Sigh… I guess I'll have to go talk with Tsukuyomi tomorrow. As we go to the Instructor's room, I detach myself from what's in front of me, choosing instead to relieve my battle with him today. It was hard to keep my eyes to myself today during our trainings. My blade has never felt this kind of… pull from someone else. Trading blows with him, a heat wave surged from me, I couldn't control myself as we danced together. For the first time in months, I forgot about the dark cloud that ingrained itself in the back of my head, about this cold drill on my chest.

I just thought about you, my eyes focused on those two magnets that glared at me, my hands looking forward to that shiver that came when I parried your swings. I didn't want our duel to end, it was too… pleasurable, as shameful as it is to admit. I enjoyed every second of it like nothing in my life, I never thought that sparring seriously against another Mugen Kidou user could fill me with so much sunshine. It was like peering into a window, to remember my lessons with Tsukuyomi, those so distant peaceful days with Grandfather.

Even when I did an effort I was throughly bested again, and that has only made me more curious about you. Shirogane… Who are you? An American? Or, perhaps, are you truly a fellow of mine?

---

November 10th. Near 6 PM.

(Yuuko's Office.)

[Takeru]

---

"… and that's the whole mission. I do not need to remind you that I expect you to be on your best behavior and obey all my orders."

"Yes, Sensei. I know." I roll my eyes, making her sigh. "So, what will my callsing be?"

"You'll be given the codename Viking, and outside of my orders you'll have to follow Isumi's too."

"Roger. I'm deploying in a Kagerou, right?"

"Yes, you'll recognize it immediately. It's a midnight blue one, with all the new parts we made and the polished XM3 prototype installed. I also made some quick adjustments to its joints like you asked me, that should give you a bit more dexterity but be careful with how many weapons you use, that stunt of carrying more than full load on the Gekishin won't work this time."

"But can't I play a Gun Sweeper role? I mean with four weapons I could-"

"Shirogane, you had five weapons back then. And if you had an additional pylon in your back, I'm sure you would have used it too. Stick to using four weapons, along the Retractable PR Daggers. Was I clear?" I can't really object here. She is right, I can't screw up against the BETA.

"Yes, Sensei. I'll hold back on my stunts. Will I be deployed alongside the Valkyries?"

"Yes, but I modified your comms to distort your voice and block image feedback. Last thing we need is a rumor about a Cadet that's already on the same skill level of the members of the Special Task Force without even taking the piloting test."

"Yeah, makes sense. Then, what are you going to do with the BETA we capture?" She closes her eyes, and starts moving one hand in the air.

"Live testing, to see if we can make Laser weapons a reality, to find a virus or something that kills them, to know more about them in general. Did you know that the Destroyer's shells can regenerate? If we could copy that, our TSF's could repair themselves. That's especially important for the small and hard to produce parts that go in the joints and radars."

"Alright. Since I'm giving you the theories already I think I can give you some more accurate intel. I'll tell you what I know about the BETA, first I'll give you a hint and then you'll tell me if you want to hear all of it. Is that alright?" She gives me a nod, entwines her fingers, and slowly moves forward in her desk.

"Go ahead. Tell me, Shirogane."

"Do you want to know why viruses can't kill the BETA?"

"Yes."

"Because they're not alive."

"Huh?! Not alive? Explain."

"They're technically biological weapons, they do not 'think' or 'feel' anything. I don't know if they have a heart, but they definitely seem to not feel pain going by my experience when I infiltrated a hive."

That was nuts, those bastards kept charging at us even when we blew up their limbs. They are truly monsters in the full meaning of the word.

"They're not like ants or bees. They feel no fear, they have no emotions whatsoever. They are made from carbon based materials like most life in this planet, but you could say they're somehow 'programmed' to act in determined patterns, that's why they don't adapt to our tactics on the go and most of the time they just use the same basic approach. However, since they're not 'alive' and have no self-preserving instinct, even if they are infected by something they probably would ignore it as they keep doing what they're supposed to do regardless of the state of their bodies. So unless we make a virus or something that kills them in a short while or cripples them so that they can't move, chances are they're going to keep rushing at us."

"Is this true? They're not… Wait, but if they're not alive, how can we communicate with them? Does the 00 Unit work against them? Is this why the fatal mistake happens?"

"No, but it's the reason to something important regarding their behavior. Should I tell-" Sensei's burning eyes stop me mid-sentence.

"Everything. Spill it, I don't care about the ripple effects anymore. I need this intel to counter them."

"Alright. Since they don't see themselves as 'life' they think that any other carbon based entity is just like them, therefore they're not alive. The BETA will never recognize us as a self-aware, intelligent, living race."

"… Never? How can you be so sure?"

"Because we did manage to communicate with them, for a brief moment. They don't think themselves superior to us, they see us as resources to be recycled just like any other dismembered BETA corpse. We're nothing but building materials to them." Sensei closes her eyes for a few seconds, rubbing her forehead in silence..

"That's… I see. So using the 00 Unit to pilot the XG and scan their hives should be enough, right? Since we can't even get on the same terms as them."

"I don't know about that. Our talks got interrupted, but it seemed to not be aggressive towards us. Only when we attacked it with the XG it started to defend itself." Sensei eyes sparkle as she leans forward.

"Are you talking about a BETA? What class was it?"

"A Reactor Class."

"Huh? A Reactor Class? What does that mean?"

"That the Reactors are not machines, Sensei. They're BETA, and they are the 'antennas' that send the orders to all the other BETAs. And one of them was… uuh… Kinda self-aware? It was intelligent that's for sure, I could talk with it for a while." I honestly don't know how to describe the Superior well, since we only talked for… What? A minute?

"So the Reactors not only record information… But they're also a type of BETA, like a commander. And one BETA out there is smart enough to hold a conversation with a foreign entity, huh." Her eyes stare off into space as she massages her chin and leans back in her chair.

"Want me to tell you how the conversation went from what I remember?"

"Hmm? Oh yes, please do."

I tell her all I recalled from my encounter with it, save the fact that it was on Kashgar and what happened to Meiya. If she knew that rushing Kashgar is a way to prevent the BETA from outsmarting us she might try to send us as quick as possible, I need everyone to get better before that.

"There's also like… billions of them across the universe, I don't remember the exact number it said. And the more a hive grows the stronger the Reactor may become, so the more time we take to exterminate them…"

"The stronger they will get. Billions of BETA… Even if Alt. V was enacted there's no guarantee that humanity would be safe from the BETA in the planet that was chosen. Fighting now seems to be the only way for us to get any chance of retaking our peace for sure. With how little people will go in the shuttles, if the planet is attacked they'll be done for. And after the Earth gets bombarded with all those G-Bombs…"

"Exactly, that's another reason to not let Alt. V happen. That's why we need to get as many resources as we can, starting with an improved XM3." However, Sensei stopped talking all of a sudden. She's holding her chin looking at nowhere, deep in thought. Did she figure something out from what I told her?

"Hmm… Then I might have to…"

"Sensei? What it is?"

"Shirogane, I have something to show you." She takes some papers from the pile and hands them to me. What's this? A diagram? Let's…

… ! This thing!

"I received a 'proposal' to take care of a certain project that was abandoned after an incident. I don't think this is a coincidence, so-"

The blue Takemikazuchi appears in my mind, firing at the BETA inside a hive. That's… When did this happen? This is… the… JFK Hive? Where was it again?

… It's cold.

"Shirogane? Are you listening?"

"Sensei, there's… Sigh… There's no hive near American soil here, right?" She makes a puzzled face.

"Huh? Of course not. Wait, did you remember something?"

"I… remember a blue Takemikazuchi shooting the EML-Railgun in a hive. The hive was… near America, I think?"

"A blue Takemikazuchi? When was this? After or before Sadogashima? How did the operation go? Who took part in it?" Her tone was tense as she spoke the questions quite rapidly.

"I can't remember well. I think it should be after Sadogashima, during my first loop. Along America and the Japanese troops there were… French ones, I think. Sorry, it's all just a blur." Sensei relaxes as she breaths a sigh of relief.

"For a second I thought Kamchatka was going to fall to the BETA before we got our shot at Sadogashima. So you already know of the railgun, how does it perform?"

"I think… it does great, from the bits I can recall." Ugh, my head hurts a bit. Stupid railgun, making me remember these things.

"Hmm… So do you think we should accept the deal?"

"What deal?" She sighs as she narrows her eyes.

"So you weren't listening. I got a proposal from the Ministry of Defense, they said they are willing to let the UN finish the development of the railgun. It makes sense since that thing could only be completed after I handed them our advanced weapon's data and an essay on how to apply G-Elements to weapon design. Thankfully they managed to retrieve the black box of the thing from Russia, but now that the XFJ Project fell down they had no more backup funds to finish the testing and development."

"XFJ Project?"

"I told you about it before, right? The deal to make the Shiranui Second with America. The railgun was also included into that, under the Project Prominence's portfolio." Okay, stop. Too many new words in a short while, I demand an explanation.

"Sensei, what's that about?"

"Prominence? A plan to make a countermeasure against the BETA without making use of any materials obtained from them. Thanks to our current relations with America and the accident in Alaska the joint project is in shambles now. I think only the Eurofightas Project is still ongoing on that fortress, the rest of Prominence was halted after America dropped most of its support, I think."

"… Sensei, you do know you're just dropping a lot of unknown info on me right now, do you?" Why does she look surprised?

"Wait, really? Didn't I tell you about this already?"

"No, you only briefly explained the overall political situation of the Empire. Is this something I should know?" She readjust her position on her chair, and after collecting her thoughts for a second she responds.

"Yes, it is. So… In summary, Prominence was a plan to make 100% Earthling weapons. Its HQ was assigned to Yukon Base in Alaska, but last September there was a terrorist attack there. They managed to activate some bombs America had set underground and ended up blowing up half of it."

… Huh?

Half of Alaska… was blown up?… You have to be kidding me.

"… So you're telling me that half of Alaska was nuked out of existence by some terrorists?"

"Yes, the units stationed at Yukon Base were charged with stopping the terrorists, and many of them ended up getting caught in the blast. This happened on the 21st of September. After this, the Soviets lost a lot of power and got in a huge argument with the UN after the vast majority of their bases in Alaska got wiped out, which is why they're holed up in Kamchatka now. The rest of the forces managed to not lose too many people, but many politicians started to question Prominence's viability compared to the use of G-Bombs or the Alternative Projects."

"But it was a terrorist attack, how could they have let that happen? And so close to America too." I just can't believe they could get ambushed like that. I mean, if that happens to America, what's left for the rest of the world?

"There were many sleeper agents within the forces at Yukon Base. The only way to stop the bombs was to go to the underground command center nearby them after the terrorist broke Yukon's control room, then they took many TSFs from the base and made a defense line around it to prevent anyone from disrupting their plan. This allowed some BETA to reach the detonation point of the bombs before anyone could get to the command center, and that triggered the activation of the Red Shift. Since the activating program was fully automated in case of a BETA invasion they couldn't stop it, and more or less half of Alaska disappeared that day." This is… Did this happen last time and I didn't knew?

"But… What could they gain from that?!"

"Matters not. They're against us, so that's that. Europe is the only power who still continues supporting Prominence. The Empire would too, if they hadn't picked another fight with America." Again this. All these grudges and doubts are going to end up being the Empire's doom.

"And why should I know about this?"

"Didn't you read your report? I wrote that you were a Cadet from Yukon Base, your squad got wiped out during this incident and the UN reassigned you here, on the grounds that you had potential and I requested you to be my personal assistant. I did that because most of the files on that base and the ones nearby got destroyed and the vast majority of the young squads were killed during the incident, along with their Instructors. It was easy to put some false data in the report, since it's still being updated with all the unknown casualties that have yet to be accounted for. I did have to use a favor on someone important, but it was worth it." She went to such lengths to cover me? Thinking back, I never knew what she wrote on my file in my previous loops.

"Huh… I somehow forgot to check that, with how tired I've been after training and the testing of the OS. So the railgun has been offered to you?"

"Yes, and while it is tempting, there is one little problem that comes with it." For her to be bothered by it and be willing to tell me about it, what the hell is this problem?

"That you'll owe a favor to the Shogunate?"

"Well, yes." She closes her eyes, fuming a bit. "But that's not what I'm talking about here. See this, do you recognize this person?" She hands me a profile, a woman with long black hair and violet eyes. Yui Takamura, a member of the Fudai.

"No, I don't know her. What's the deal with her?"

"She's in charge of the project. If I accept to take care of the development of the railgun she'll have to come along to oversee it. Having another pair of Imperial eyes on the base doesn't bother me, what irks me is the timing. This woman was in Yukon Base during the incident, and I put in your report that you were from there. So…"

"The Shogunate is sending her to watch me?" Sensei gives a nod.

"It's too soon to be a coincidence, Yoroi was quite suspicious of you after all. I wouldn't doubt that he informed the Shogun about you, and then she sent this Takamura to both get the railgun done and to gather intel on you, since you're supposed to be a member of the Guard. The timing is too suspicious to be anything else. I don't think she actually knows about all the people that were in the base during the accident, but I think she would be suspicious of a Japanese soldier that she didn't knew about at the time, since Imperial soldiers tend to try to get close to other fellow Japanese people when they're doing missions abroad, even if only for surveillance purposes. Had she heard about a Japanese Cadet being there, I'm sure she would have at least gone to watch this person train."

"So they didn't have any intention of cooperating with us, huh? All that talk Yoroi-san did about his duty to Japan and how he didn't knew a thing about me was just an excuse to get the intel without getting into a fight. You think they're trying to silence me despite knowing I'm your guardian?" Sensei nods, this time with a furious look on her face.

"I would call him to ask for an explanation, but that would be too obvious. If the Shogunate is willing to go so far I don't think I can keep relying on their support for long. So, how do you feel? Is the railgun worth the risk of having a spy in the base? I mean, if they're sending her after you despite all the security I put on your profile, I don't think it'll take much time for them to send someone after me." She's right. This is a clear sign of aggression towards us. I'm basically Sensei's guard dog now, according to the cover, so if they want me gone they might want her either gone or under their control. I can't let them harm her.

But if the thing is as powerful as I remember it, then it would be worth the risk. But I never had to deal with someone tailing me. Tsukuyomi-san wasn't exactly ordered to deal with me during my last loops, that's why she didn't harm me. She was being considerate of Meiya's position. But if this Takamura is sent specifically to take care of me… I probably can't harm her without ruining the UN's relations with the Empire since she's a noble. If I can't fight her then… No wait, what if she teams up with Tsukuyomi-san? If whatever made Maya-san not attack me that day is proven wrong by this Takamura, then both Tsukuyomi cousins might come after me.

Damn it, but this… If we had the railgun at Sadogashima… No pain, no gain.

"Yes, let's do it." Sensei rests her chin on her palm, raising a brow.

"You sure? This might be getting us into more problems than we can take care of, you know? And I'd like you to stay alive, if you don't mind."

"But if we can get one railgun I assure you that the invasion of Sadogashima will go really smoothly. You also probably will get in trouble if you refused, so I would like to not give you more things to worry about." She ruffles her hair while giving me a look with squinted eyes.

"I should be the one worried here, they're coming after you. If they moved so quickly I don't think this Takamura will be subtle about her true intentions. It's not like I can do much with this fanatic type of people, they won't listen to reason or threats."

"Point taken. Then we will have to tie her hands. If she is assigned as a UN officer she will have her hands tied, any action she takes will be on the Empire after all. Wouldn't that work as kind of a limiter? Pretty sure the Empire can't lose the UN's support, as much as they might hate it." I want to believe their hatred is not strong enough to either blind them or make them do something more stupid than the coup.

"Hmm, that's true. In any case, the railgun is a very powerful weapon so if you're sure you can deal with her, I'll do my part to restrict her movements as much as possible."

"Alright. Oh, and we should also take this in consideration when we reveal the XM3, I think a certain faction should have it harder to get their hands on it." I mean, this isn't the world I remember.

Her Highness might be a completely different person here, so, as much as it pains me to be branded as the enemy of Japan, if the Empire gets in the way I'll have to take care of them too. Sensei gives me a devilish smile.

"Ahaha, you say some nice things from time to time. You're absolutely right, now that we know the Shogun's position towards us there's no reason to give them anything else easily. I'll keep gathering data on the Blood squad, but that's all they'll get for now. I'll arrange things to have the railgun be put under the Alt. IV's Research Team. That should keep them at bay from trying to steal it once we finish it."

"Do you have more data on this Takamura? Just in case I have to fight with her."

"Yeah, I'll whip up a report on her. Now then, let's return to the Niigata Operation. Here's the detailed plan, read it before going to bed. Rest as much as you can, I want you before midnight at the hangar, I'll send Yashiro to wake you up. Now, let me tell you in detail what I modified in your TSF."

---

November 11th. 0 8:15 AM.

---

[Meiya]

---

"So nobody has seen him since yesterday's afternoon?" We all give a nod. Sakaki looked troubled, and we all fell silent as we finished our breakfast.

These last few days after the day we went to the lower floors Shirogane kept training with all he had, but after some days his attitude changed. He was now more distant towards me, Sakaki and Ayamine. I could keep up with him but his attacks kept throwing me off balance. We are evenly matched in Iaido, but I cannot beat him when he switches to Kendo. He also stopped giving me advice after our bouts.

The same could be said for all the rest. Ayamine was the only one he had trouble with in CQC, but during firearms practice he stopped missing the bullseye. The lectures were the same, since he was already perfect in them. He finally stopped playing around, but now he shows no hint of a smile when we spar, he even stopped making jokes and doesn't try to participate in our conversations at the PX much.

He's still friendly towards Yoroi and Tamase, and they did try to get him into our talk at dinner, but he excused himself saying he had to take care of a special mission. Sakaki says he's minding his distance because he's an American, but going by how she looks at him I think she does feel some measure of guilt. Yoroi was right, we were unnecessarily harsh on him and now he feels left out.

The contrast between his old and current self is too large, me and Sakaki have tried to engage him in conversation yesterday at dinner, but he said to be busy and went his way. It's as if he were scared of saying something wrong and therefore decided to shut himself in to not clash with us anymore.

And to make matters worse…

That night at the library we found out his records were blocked, however shortly after his public profile was reuploaded. Shirogane does come from an American base, even if it was under the UN. Apparently there was some error in the older data from when he lived here. However, his UN profile is still under the heaviest lock. That made us doubt him much, and maybe that was what caused him to feel like an outsider. Sakaki is still doubting him, but I… How should I react to this?

When I asked Tsukuyomi to investigate him…

"Meiya-sama, you should not involve yourself in such matters." She answered bluntly to my petition.

"Eh? Tsukuyomi, this is a matter regarding my security. I wish to know more about him, please. Would you look into him? Anything is fine, I merely-"

"Meiya-sama, I cannot comply." Her eyes were now stern as well as her tone.

"You cannot? Even if I order you to do it under the name of the Mitsurugi House?"

"Please, do not ask the impossible out of me. You should focus solely on your own endeavors." She closes her eyes and does a small bow.

"Tsukuyomi, what is the meaning of this? Why can you not investigate him? Who is him?" Does that mean that you cannot involve yourself because it would cause problems for the Empire? You refuse because it would blow his cover as a fellow in service of the UN?

"That is none of your business. I cannot involve myself with him, he is not a danger to you so there's no reason for you to worry about him." So… Is he… with us then?

"… How can you be this certain? Who is Takeru Shirogane? Please, tell me."

"… I'll say it only once more. I cannot involve myself with him, and neither should you. That's all I'm willing to say." What? Not involve myself with him? A slight dizziness strikes me, the puzzle shifting in me, leaving not a drop of assurance in me. I want answers, clear ones.

"Is he an enemy spy, then? An American soldier sent to-" Tsukuyomi's cold eyes bathed me with a frozen downpour, halting any movement I was doing. She was still composed, but it's clear to me that I angered her.

"Meiya-sama, do not speak any more of this. Do not involve yourself with him more than necessary, unless he approaches you himself. And to quell your doubts, I would never let anyone dangerous get close to you. It pains me to hear you say such words, for you to have so little faith in me."

"No, that's not it. I'm very thankful for all you always do for me, Tsukuyomi. It's just that… He's such a mystery, I want to know more about him. I… My mission is… "

"Curiosity is not a sin, but you should be careful with it. Do not seek answers you do not want to hear, haven't I taught you that since you were little?"

"Yes, but… "

"Meiya-sama, you have to focus on your training. Only through it you'll be able to fulfill the role you've been given. Do not worry about anything else for now, if there is ever a problem I will deal with it. Please, trust in me." She bows deeply to me. Tsukuyomi, don't… I don't want you treating me in this formal way too.

"I do trust you with my life. If you say I shouldn't worry then I won't. Thanks for your efforts, Tsukuyomi. Forgive me for troubling you."

"There is no need for you to apologize or to thank me. I'm merely doing my work as your retainer."

Since then I've tried to keep my curiosity at bay, but with how much he's excelling in the daily trainings I can't help it. I find myself staring at him before I realize it.

I want… to train with him more. He knows the Mugen Kidou. I still don't know whether he is an exile or one of us, but, if I am to be her guardian, I have to be the strongest I can be. So, sparring with him is the best method I currently have, and you tell me to not get close to him?

Are your movements bound by something, Tsukuyomi? What wouldn't I give to be able to talk with him like before. I am thankful that he's being serious against me, but I miss his remarks and little pieces of advice now. I truly… shouldn't have been so harsh with him, he did make a point to voice his worry about our attitude towards him, and I let my prejudices blind me. But… But on the off chance that he is on the Americans' side… Ugh, what should I do… I know I can't let this be, and yet…

"So guys, what are you all doing today?" Yoroi broke the silence, trying to engage us in conversation.

"I will go train my swordplay." I answer first, there is nothing else I could do if we can't find Shirogane to have a talk with him.

"I'll go to the library to review some material from class." Sakaki said, as she finished her breakfast.

"Oh, could I join in? I have a lot of trouble keeping up." Right, Yoroi was behind us in the lectures.

"I guess… I'll go to the firing range. Ayamine-san, what about you?"

"Hmm… I'll rest today." She said as she finished her last yakisoba sandwich.

Then, as we all got up from our seats…

VROOOOOM! VROOOOOM!

"What is happening?!" Tamase was so startled by the sudden outburst of the alarm that she almost fell down from her seat.

"An emergency summons?!" Sakaki and me looked around, and we realized this was no drill.

The rest of the people in the PX started running out, the sound of many footsteps in the hallways could be heard along the sirens

"Sakaki, we have to go to our classroom!"

"Yes, you're right Mitsurugi. Squad! Make haste!"

We all left along the stream of people, navigating towards our destination while dodging rushing operators and MPs. We managed to arrive there rather fast, the Instructor was already there. Shirogane was not. We salute her once all made it inside, forming in a line in front of her.

"Squad, do you know where is Shirogane?"

"No, Ma'am. We haven't seen him today." Sakaki answered.

"I see. Then you'll have to inform him when you find him, assuming he isn't on his way here. Alright, I'll begin to explain the current situation."

At 6:20 this morning a Brigade-size herd from Sadogashima started moving south, eventually making landfall at 6:48 AM near the old national highway. And since 7:10 they have been engaged by the MDF forces, along with some reinforcements from the Royal Guard. However, by their movements, it was decided that the target of the BETA was our base, and we would move to DEFCON 2 until all the BETA have been eradicated.

"This is not a drill. I repeat, this is not a drill. Go to your rooms and gear up for any eventual battle. If the base moves to DEFCON 1 you all will have to grab a machinegun and fight as well. You all are to remain in standby in the track field. Dismissed!"

"Yes, Ma'am!"

We all went back to the barracks, got into full gear, and made it to the track field. However…

"Shirogane-san is not here yet?" Tamase said nervously as she looked at the clock on the outside of the base. Over half an hour had passed since the alarm rang out.

"Where could he be now of all times?!" Sakaki was clearly nervous about this, holding her elbows tightly as her arms where pressed against her body. We went to check his room, but he didn't answer when we knocked.

"Should we go look for him one more time?" Yoroi's hands tightly embracing each other, she asked us as her eyelids cascaded downwards. I am anxious too, where could you be?

"Squad, are you all… Shirogane is still missing?"

"Instructor! Is… Is the base on…" Sakaki stuttered at the end and couldn't finish her sentence.

"No, we're still on DEFCON 2. I came to see whether you had found Shirogane. Mitsurugi, go and check his room again. Yoroi, go back to the classroom. The rest stay here, I'll try to contact the XO to see if he's performing a special mission now."

"Salute!" We salute her as she leaves, and me and Yoroi go to fulfill our orders.

Of all the times to be gone! Now's when we need you by our side, Shirogane. American or not, having you fighting with us would be a huge relief. For you to simply vanish like that…

I reach the barracks after sprinting from the track field non-stop, and pause a second to catch my breath. Alright, here we are.

"Shirogane! Are you there?! Answer me!" I knock strongly. He couldn't have slept through the alarm, right?

But if he's been doing some mission until late, he might be exhausted. I have to confirm whether he's here or not. I resume my knocking.

"Shirogane! If you're there answer!" Mmgh, where could he be?! Wait, why don't I just enter his room? Is the door locked? No, it isn't. "Shirogane, I'm going to enter. If you're in there, please answer." Nothing. Sigh, guess I am left with no other choice.

I slowly open the door and am met with darkness. Upon flicking the switch on I see that the room is empty and soundless. So he isn't here? Where could he be then? I should go back to tell the Instructor about… Huh?

As I was about to leave, a strange object caught my attention. What… is that thing on his desk?

A small metal box was on top of the wood. It looks… beautiful. The metal is more bright than any I've seen, and it has some sort of pattern on its surface.

"Whatever could this be? It's so beautiful." I grab it and inspect it closely, it's truly nice. The feel on my hands is very smooth, I've never seen such a polished steel case.

Wait, what am I doing? I should be notifying the Instructor that… that he isn't here. Right now, he is not here. So… I can… do whatever I want in his room. I can search it, top to bottom, as much as I want. I can get the answers I want, starting from this box.

Who are you? Are you my ally? Why are you so skilled? Where did you learn the Mugen Kidou? Give me all the answers I want, let me confirm whether I can trust you. I open the box and I see a badge and an ID card.

"Is this… a militar badge? 'Champion'? What is this thing?" Did he get awarded for something? Maybe for helping with that terrorist attack? And what about this ID Card? GR Card? GR…

Whatever could it mean… I have to make the most of this chance and search his room throughly, but I don't have much time before everyone else starts to wonder where I am. Let's put this back on the desk and be fast about this, I may be able to…

No, what am I doing?! This is against regulations, this is violation of personal property! I'm doing what Tsukuyomi told me not to do!

But then, what is this ID Card? It's also made of a different material than ours, it's more bright, it also says Champion and has Shirogane's name. It also has a most odd black line on its back. Another mystery to the Shirogane list.

I'll come back later, and if he isn't here by then I'll… Being a bit curious is not bad, I'm not stealing anything and I'm not harming him. I want some answers, that's all. It's… for the good of the squad, and the CCSE. Yes, I have to make sure I can trust him. That's why I'm spying… No, why I'm intruding…

"Mmgh, fine! I'm doing something wrong and I don't care! I want answers!" I desire to know who you are, and nothing will stand in my way. Ugh, why am I so obsessed with you, Shirogane? Tis a most shameful display indeed, yet I cannot restrain myself.

I leave the room quickly. Sigh… Me, someone who is always so insistent about sticking to the rules and the morally right thing to do, is now willing to go against the regulations and my own morality to satisfy my curiosity.

No, this is a serious matter. I have to confirm who he is, only then I'll be able to untie this knot on my chest. Only then I'll be able to trust him again. Yes, I'm doing the right thing here.

I don't know where you are right now, but please don't come back Shirogane. Let me see whose side you're on. Let me satisfy my curiosity.

The Start of the Storm

Chapter 14: The Start of the Storm

---

November 11th. 23 : 4 3 P M.

(Takeru's room.)

[Takeru]

---

Zzz…

Ugh… Who's shaking me so much? It's so cold. Someone took my blanket off, they have some nerve.

"Wake up, Takeru-san." A kind, sweet voice drives me away from slumber.

"Ugh… Kasumi?"

"Good morning." Her usual smile greets me as I open my eyes.

Oh, right. Niigata. I stretch my arms as I raise from the bed. It's the first time Kasumi comes to wake me up in this world. I had almost forgotten she used to do that.

She jumps in surprise, did she read my mind just now?

"Um, did I use to wake you up in the other world?"

"Yeah, everyday just before my alarm went off. You don't have to do it if it's a bother, though."

"… No, I think I'll start waking you up. Sumika-san will be happy when I tell her about it."

"Alright, you do you. I'll get ready. You can wait outside." And there she goes, not hitting herself against the door this time.

After a quick shower and changing into my uniform I open my closet and grab the Minaru Kamui and hold it close to me for a while. I won't screw up, I'm definitely coming back alive. After taking one last look at it, I stash it again inside the closet. Going up to my desk and taking out the metal box, I remember that last peaceful week we had. This is my first step to regaining that, like hell I'll fail. I will protect the Valkyries, I will make this mission go better than last time. There has to be something I can do to help, there has to be a way for me to at least watch their backs so that we can all come back from this mission.

Leaving the box on top of my desk, I turn out the lights and get out, and along Kasumi I go to the changing room to get my suit on.

"Are you nervous?" She asks me as we walk.

"No, I'm actually quite relaxed." For some reason I didn't have a nightmare today, so I'm as fresh as I haven't been since I came here.

"Why? You'll be fighting the BETA, you might die today."

"Because I won't die, Kasumi. Have some faith in me, will you? You saw all the simulations we did, right?"

"But to go into battle with an untested OS is very risky. What if a bug appears while you're fighting?" She sounds really worried. She does have a point though.

"I won't be alone out there, and I won't be doing any risky stunts this time. I promise you I'll come back home safely."

"If you say so." You don't sound convinced.

I go into the changing room and get into my suit. Finally, I'm marching into the battlefield again. If I remember correctly, three members of the Valkyries that I never met were put out of commission today, two died and one was hospitalized, so this is a prime chance to change history for the better. If I can save them, or at least one of them, our survival chances will go up. We will need all the hands we can get for the eventual battle of Kashgar.

With Kasumi leading the way, we made it back to the elevator and we dropped all the way down to Hangar 90, where Yuuko-sensei was already waiting for us.

"Good night, you two. Good to see you're here on time."

"Hey there, Sensei. How are the preparations?"

"Perfect. I already gave the briefing to the Valkyries, so you're all that's left. That Kagerou over there is your unit." She points towards a midnight blue TSF, I remember seeing Eagles during my missions and in the hangar but this one looks different.

Just like the Gekishin I piloted the other time, this one's shoulders and chest are more spiky. Its head is less round too and now has a small antenna and additional sensors to its sides. However the biggest difference is in its waist, I remember the Eagle to have a more square shape to its waist, but this one's was not only a bit smaller and had a certain inverted triangle shape to it, but it has some sensors in it as well. It also has two thrusters on its back where the pylons are supposed to be, they look more curved than our usual Jump Units and instead of having one set of Variable Wings it has two smaller ones. Sensei, you did this on purpose, didn't you? If I can only fight with guns and daggers there's no way I could go and do some of my reckless movements. I wanna sword.

"So Shirogane, what do you think of it? I based its improvements on a prototype that was tested in Project Prominence. Since you're supposed to be one of the few survivors you should get used to hearing about the different projects that were there."

"I was just a Cadet according to the report, so why should I know anything about all the different stuff they were testing there?"

"Because there was a competition there, the Blue Flag, where all the nations showed off some of their TSFs in live combat."

For real?! We have TSF tournaments here?! Why did nobody told me that last time? I would have loved to see any footage that was recorded!

"So this model is based on one prototype? I suppose that it's made this way for quick maneuvering at mid-range, right?"

"Exactly. You'll be fighting as a Gun Sweeper today, even if you'll only have two rifles with you. The extra speed from the new engines and the two additional thrusters along with the XM3 will make up for not having another two guns in your overall performance. Since you'll be using 36mm ammo you'll be carrying two extra magazines along with your daggers, one on each knee. Also it's painted with ARP and all its sensors and the new radar and antenna should give you some stealth capabilities, even if you're not using the complete stealth protocol we discussed the other day. I couldn't make it in time to change it to OBL but it should still be fast enough for you to be comfortable in it. I'd say it's almost like a 3rd Generation TSF now."

"Yeah, there's no reason to use only infrared today. So I guess this will be a more accurate test of all the tech you made using the notes I brought, right?"

"Yes, especially the new Jump Units. I added the Variable Wings to give you more control on all those aerial movements you were doing last time. I updated the XM3 with our most recent avionics and adjusted them as much as I could to fit your piloting style, the new radars and sensors will give you more accuracy and will also help in sending jamming signals to cover your position. Remember that this is a secret mission, you're not supposed to be spotted by any other force. But with all the new toys you'll have I guess I shouldn't worry."

"Don't worry, Sensei. I know how important the mission is, I'm not screwing this up."

"So long as you understand. Remember to leave Isumi and the rest to deal with the capture of the live specimens, and since you're not a Vanguard do not try to go after the Laser-Class unless something unexpected happens or either me or Isumi order you to do so."

"Even if I could save someone?" She stops when she was about to respond, and after a second of pause she answers.

"Only if you won't put yourself at risk of getting killed. If you do something stupid I won't let you take the CCSE. Are we clear?"

"Yes, Ma'am."

"Alright, you'll move out in one of the carriers in a private room until you reach Yokota Base. I've assigned Pyatkh as your escort, to keep you unnoticed until you get there and can ride your TSF. She'll deal with any troublesome people that might try to snoop around, but she won't know who you are. So, utter no words during the travel."

"Got it. So… We do have confirmation that the route we'll take is safe, right?"

"Yeah, don't worry. The intelligence crew in Camp Zama is doing their job well. The location I chose for the mission should also be rather far from the IJA bases near the shore, so there's also nothing to worry about. Yokota Base does tend to do air surveillance missions to ensure the area around this base is safe from time to time, so we'll use that to keep this little trip from being noticed, though I did tell everyone to be on their guard for this mission."

"… So the rest of the UN is also helping out. Good to know. Anything else I should know before leaving?"

"Yes, as soon as you reach Yokota Isumi will contact you once 'the Viking' has entered your TSF. Do not, I repeat, do not talk at all until board your TSF. I'm sure many will be very curious about who 'the Viking' is, and whether you're just a smokescreen or the real deal. Your carrier's position should be in the second railway, Pyatkh should be waiting at the exit of the elevator back at B5F. That's all."

"OK, I'll be extra careful out there. Well, time to go." I turn around, ready to leave towards the carrier.

"Shirogane?"

"Hmm? What is it?"

"How many members of the squad were lost last time in this battle?" How weird. I thought you would be the last to be concerned about that kind of thing, so long as we brought back results.

"Three. Two died, one got hospitalized."

"I see. Don't try to do the impossible if you see them about to die. I know you said before you were prepared to not being able to save everyone, but don't push yourself too hard."

"Thanks, Sensei. And don't worry, I won't do something stupid." I smile at her, as I did the Kagerou was released from its hold, the platform it was on taking it away from the hangar.

"Well, looks like the ground carriers are almost done. Get to your ride, and put on your helmet." Back to her usual bossy tone, she waved a hand to send me away.

"I know, I know."

"Good luck, Takeru-san. Bye Bye." Kasumi waved at me as I left the hangar, I waved back before putting the helmet on.

Hurrying back to the hallway, I rode the elevator back up and meet 2nd Lt. Pyatkh once I got out of it. We exchanged a salute and she guided me to my ride, without asking any questions. The way there wasn't through the usual road to the railway, but around all the boxes and trailers that were stocking the carrier ships. A few people were waiting for us, I recognized some of them from the underground control room. Sharing a salute, they formed a human wall around the loading ramp that I would use to enter my ride. Following Pyatkh to my room, a few soldiers seemed to stare at us, until she glared at them and they scattered.

Two MP were guarding the entrance of a single door with nothing too special about it, Pyatkh dismissed them and said she would guard the room herself, to which they agreed after she mentioned it was an order from Sensei. She bowed to me, reassuring me she would keep me, and any details she might infer about my identity, as an absolute secret. I bowed to her in return, entered the room, that looked like a more compact version of an officer's quarters, sat down on the small chair and awaited the vehicle to start moving.

Sigh… Today is when the true change starts. I'm taking the Valkyries to victory no matter what. Different world or not, I gotta do what I gotta do.

A few minutes pass before the ride begins to move. There's no windows in my room, so all I can do is sit tight and wait.

---

Around an hour and a half later.

---

KNOCK! KNOCK!

I stand up and open the door, Pyatkh salutes me as I did.

"Viking, sir, we have arrived at our destination. Please follow me, your TSF should be at the ready." I nodded, almost answering to her. Getting out of the room, I follow her lead out of the carrier.

The few people that were still in the ride were all from our bases, they didn't really look my way but gave me faint nods as I passed them, that I returned in kind. Since we could move faster due to the space in the hallways, we quickly made it back to the loading ramp we used to ride the carrier.

The ride had touched down in the open field, we were surrounded by people in UN uniforms, some supply trailers, and all the Support Vehicles and their crew that were readying up the TSFs and Infantry Armors.

Stars having exclusive use of the sky for now, the paved road in the middle of the countryside was obstructed by all the vehicles we came with. In the distance, I could see what I think should be Yokota Base. The Support Vehicles were already putting our TSFs in formation, some of the people that came with us were going to what I believe are the carriers that will accompany us in the mission while the personnel from the nearby base was refueling our machines, that would return to Yokohama.

Hurried murmurs booming in the night, only a few lights stroke through the night to aid the crew's sight as they worked on our machines. However, there was a large area where there was no one working at the moment, behind all the trailers and whatnot, and through it me and Pyatkh walked without no one noticing our presence.

"Allow me to inform you that you shall be traveling at low speeds, to not waste fuel and make as little heat as you can." She said, leading the way to the Kagerou that I could see at the distance. I nodded her way, she did the same. "I know that sending someone who hasn't practiced with the STF to such a mission is nothing but madness, however the Professor has chosen you for a reason. I hope this mission can be a fruitful one for us. Best wishes, Viking." She smiles, offering me her hand.

I take it and shake it firmly. I was about to answer but had to shut up as I remembered I can't talk. I bit my tongue, can't do much more than groan a bit. It hurt a lot, dammit. She seems to be holding a chuckle. Now that I think about it… I never talked much with her. Nodding my way, she ends the handshake, softly sending a hand to her fringe, before gesturing towards the kneeling midnight blue machine.

"Well, I believe that Kagerou is yours to pilot. I think you should board your unit as soon as possible. And don't worry, no one will inquire about your identity. I made sure no one was foolish enough to try. I shall do a short patrol around it, just to make sure the coast is clear." I nod, she salutes me with another smile, I return the gesture.

She goes up to the Kagerou, I lose sight of her. Looking around me, I sense no one staring. I sigh, looking up, enjoying the calmness of the night with the background noise of the workers as they hustled about. Pyatkh came back in sight, gesturing with a hand for me to approach her. Jogging towards her, she gave me a nod, I gave her one last salute, and then finally move towards my TSF while she hurries to the carriers that would accompany us.

Looking to my left, I could see the Shiranuis, where the shapes of the Valkyries could be seen by their feet in the distance. They had lined up far away from my Kagerou, all to keep me hidden I guess.

Sigh… Alright, time to bring forth a good change in this world. And you Kagerou will come with me in my first hope-filled step into this bloody road of carnage. Getting close to the TSF, that was kneeling on the ground, I trigger the rope with my headset after linking it to the machine by using the control pad on the lower part of its legs, and grabbing onto it I reach the cockpit.

Closing the cockpit, I bolt myself to the seat as the images and confirmations appear on my view. Completing the data link, I do a once over the system. Everything is okay… the prototype OS is running well… no lag or errors coming up… All systems functioning well, the suit is linked, the weapons are ready, the voice distortion is working…

"Sigh… All set, I guess." I lean back on the seat, feeling a small rumbling in my hands as I finish linking up. I take a slow breath, filling my stomach with air until I have to release it.

"Viking, Valkyrie Mum here. Report your status." Haruka's voice reaches my ears. I had steeled myself during this week, but man, my feels have received a crit right now.

"… Viking here, all systems green."

"Roger that. Please proceed to the formation and be ready to launch at my signal." Grabbing the controls and moving them, my TSF stands up. The head visor coming alive, I walk to the side of the other TSFs.

On the view, the carriers had already taken off. Through the data link, Cpt. Isumi's orders and flight plan came to my unit. I quickly do the set up, beginning to warm up my Jump Units, starting to set the coordinates and path we'll take. Making sure I was lined up with the ramp correctly, I lean back and await the signal.

I inhale slowly through my nose, grabbing the joysticks a bit more strongly. Remembering our last talk by the memento, remembering what happened in the Reactor's room, I lick my lips and then exhale loudly. This time you won't die Haruka-san, nor anyone else from the Valkyries. I'll make sure to do my share so that this loop goes right, starting now!

"Valkyries, Viking, take off! I repeat, take off!" I step on the pedals and move the controls forward. Let's go, Kagerou!

I'm met with more speed than I had thought I would have, blasting off the ground with a loud burst. This is almost like the Shiranui I had last time. Did my notes brought such a huge improvement? Perhaps them and the data of that Prominence project mixed well together.

I'm on the sky flying towards my designated point in the formation, the rest of the mechs are all Shiranuis. With me, we are a total of thirteen TSFs in the squad and there are two large carriers coming along us. There's three TSFs on the front in an arrowhead, I suppose Hayase is there with the other two Vanguards. Then on each side there's two Gun Sweepers, one Gun Interceptor, and one Impact and Blast Guard. If nothing has changed about them, then the Interceptors are Munakata and the Captain. Akane should be a Sweeper, Kashiwagi should be an Impact Guard, and Kazama should be a Blast Guard. I'm also a 'Gun Sweeper' today, so that leaves two unknown Sweepers, one unknown of each Guard and the other two Vanguards I also don't know about.

I heard from Kashiwagi that Tsukiji was also in the squad, I wonder if the rest of Akane's team in the lacrosse match is here as well. I'll find out soon enough.

A beep sounded in my ears, a permission for a connection appeared in my view. Accepting it, my eyes meet a pair of crimson eyes that I haven't seen in many, many years.

My heart delayed a beat for a sec, I had to gulp hard and stop my breathing to not blurt out anything stupid.

"Greetings, Viking. I am Cpt. Michiru Isumi from the Valkyries."

"… Greetings, Captain." It's good to see you again, Ma'am. It's… truly a blessing.

She gives me a salute through the projection, then remains staring as her brows curve just a tiny bit. She must not like having to send her image but receive nothing on her end. I wonder what my voice sounds like through the distortion.

"I was told to not ask any questions, but for your feedback to also be obscured… I suppose the XO must value you much to go to such lengths." Yeah, I guess… So, she's just curious? She keeps staring, but then she seems to catch herself, as if suddenly getting the answer to a hard math problem in a test. "Oh, forgive me. You're not supposed to speak about yourself. Well, I know this is a rather precarious arrangement, however I shall be counting on you to cover our backs, Viking!"

I close my eyes, briefly remembering that talk we had on the ship, that last talk we had as she had to remain behind in the XG. Don't worry, Captain. Me and the rest will soon be ready to join you in the front. Sadly, all I can do for now is watch your backs.

"Yes, Ma'am. It's an honor to be here."

"… That is good to hear." She smiles, nodding. "Now… If I may, might I ask if have you received any special orders from the XO?"

"No, I was told to follow your orders on the field."

"Roger. If and when you receive any orders from her, please notify me of it immediately."

"Understood, Ma'am."

"Also… I know this might be prying, however, may I ask if there are plans to have you join us in our missions in the future?"

"Well… I suppose I will in due time. For the time being, I am appointed under the XO's direct command. Being her bodyguard, I do not doubt we shall work together in the future, yet, I do not know when will that be." I spent a lot of time rehearsing that answer to say it in one go confidently in case anyone asked. Pretty proud of it, to be honest.

"I see… That is unfortunate. Well, in any case, it is a pleasure to have you here today. Let's hope we can have more than one mission together." She seems to be chuckling, but I could only feel my stomach churning.

"We will bring Alt. IV to fruition together, Ma'am. Be sure of that."

"… Yes, well said. "I am waiting for the day when you can finally join our ranks officially. Well, if you have any questions, please do contact me. Valkyrie 1, out."

Sigh… Please don't joke about that, Captain. Though, I wonder what orders Yuuko-sensei has in store for me. It can't be something dangerous since she told me to not die today. Guess the stealth mech is the best recipient for any sudden orders, so they might not be for me but regarding the mission as a whole. And, as always, she didn't tell me about it. Dammit, Sensei.

Sigh… At least the Captain seems like herself, nothing like Meiya and the others. I hope she really isn't much different than before, except for that weird juice. I won't complain if she forgot about that accursed little juice.

That being said, it is a surprise for real. We're flying out in the open, and no one is detecting us. Our route being updated every now and then, green circles denoting where is 'safe' for us to be, the crew from Yokota seems to be doing their job with great efficiency. I know we're one of the most secret squads in the world but it's still surprising to see the scope of our operations.

And, despite all these resources, we're still getting our butts spanked by the BETA. Sigh… Leaning back, I slowly inhale as I let the rumble of the flight ease my worries, sending those visions away.

"Hey, Viking." A voice I recognize speaks through the common channel, startling me a fair bit.

The hell are you doing, Hayase? Yuuko-sensei told me that we were supposed to be quiet while we were flying towards Niigata. And to use the common channel instead of a personal connection… Well, I do have her authorization to talk while I'm in the cockpit, thanks to the voice distortion.

"Viking here. What is it, Valkyrie 2?"

"Say, in a scale from one to ten, how good are you? Because it feels reeeeaaaalllyyy bad to have a random join us in such an important mission." Ah yes, classic Hayase here. I wonder if she'll end up hating me too? You know what? Whatever, they can't hear my real voice anyways.

"I'd say an eight."

"Oho, someone's confident! Well, try to not get in the way and actually get some kills, though in that TSF I'm amazed you can even fly alongside us."

"You say that but I bet you're actually interested in the mysterious pilot. Fast as always when it comes to seduction, Hayase." Munakata didn't waste time to tease her. Glad to see that some people haven't changed. "Viking, be careful or she'll gobble you up whole."

" M-U-N-A-K-A-T-A! That's not what this is about!"

"Valkyries 2 and 5, if you're done chatting remain silent!" The Captain scolded them before Munakata's teasing got stronger. You did this to yourself, Hayase. "Viking, Valkyrie 1 here." The Captain opens a private line with my unit. I'm getting scolded too, right?

"Viking, hearing you loud and clear."

"Forgive my subordinates. The first one is too competitive for her own good, and the other one simply cannot contain herself when she sees an opening. Do not take it as a personal offense." Always so dedicated to the team.

"I have taken no offense, Captain. A little bit of teasing is good for a team's morale on the field. It's alright, really." It's also really refreshing hearing their voices again. I can only hope I can get along with the Valkyries of this world, it would be horrible if all my squadmates ended up hating me.

"Thanks for your understanding. Valkyrie 1, out."

She cuts the connection, and I'm again left alone as we fly.

The rest of the flight went by peacefully. It almost doesn't feel like I'm going to battle, with the beautiful sunrise on my sight.

We finally reach the shore and take our position on the field. 5:47, we arrived with just enough time to get ready.

The whole land on my vision is also a wasteland, I read up on the invasion of the '98 and apparently it was because the BETA split in two groups that Japan didn't fall. A big part of the Kanto region got turned into a wasteland by the time Operation Lucifer recovered Yokohama.

All the Japanese forces had withdrew to the east and left the BETA from both Sadogashima and Yokohama to ravage the lands. Some places on the southern and central parts seem to still have some vegetation here and there, like the place where we found the Shogun last time and the area near Mt. Tengen, mostly thanks to the efforts of the Royal Guard and the fact that the BETA simply didn't have much time to gather all the resources near the mountains.

Unlike the lands beyond the Second Defense Line that are now declared inhabitable by the Shogunate and there's nothing there more than some lone military bases in case the BETA attack from the west again, and some people living in defiance to the law in their old towns.

"Valkyrie 1 to all units, listen up! Recheck your loadout and assume formation. According to our intel the BETA will be advancing towards us in some minutes, so be ready at any moment." The Captain ordered just as we finished landing.

The carriers went to another location, for when we have to make our retreat, after dropping the equipment to capture the BETA. Some big containers with an orange liquid, some Super Carbon wires and a claw-like add-on for our arms, as well as some more fuel to resupply what we spent on our way here.

All my equipment is fine, the thrusters are also in perfect condition. I refilled my first tank of fuel and have the secondary at full load. No problem with the joints or anything.

"Valkyrie Mum to all units, report your status." Everybody then answered the same, everyone had no problems with their machines.

Our mission is to engage the BETA near the shore after the initial bombardment from the MDF happens and before the rest of them arrive, to avoid being detected. Given the current relations of the UN with the Empire I wouldn't put it past them to attack us at first sight. I'm actually surprised we made it here without being detected, Japan's defenses are really bad.

Even with the support of the crew from Yokota to give us updated intel in our flight, even if this squad is using Shiranuis and all of them are registered as allied units, and even if my Kagerou has stealth protection this is just ridiculous. We made it from one end to the other without being detected, at all. No wonder the coup went so smoothly last time, Sagiri must have known the precarious state of our internal defenses. Or is Sensei abusing a crack in their system to make this happen?

The minutes slowly click by, when at 6:21 Haruka-san's voice could be heard again.

"Mum to all units, we have confirmed that there's a Brigade-sized herd of BETA moving towards your position. Approximately 50% of it is made out of Tank-Class, there's a 10% of Grappler-Class and a 5% of Destroyer-Class. Less than 5% of it are made out of both Laser-Classes and Fort-Class. The rest are infantry types. The MDF Naval Platoon will be engaging them shortly. Be at the ready for their eventual arrival. Valkyrie Mum, out."

So the bastards are coming already. In less than five minutes they should be arriving at the shore. Now all we can do is just pray that things go well out in the sea for our troops.

The minutes sway by, like the waves on the shore. The seconds draw out, like the light that begins to pour from the sun. My heartbeat suddenly becoming a clock, I watch the clouds move. Nothing keeps happening, the waves sway back and forth, the gust picks up some dust, swirling it back and forth, the clouds are tugged along, my heart remains present as I become aware of my breathing, watching the shore from my visor.

And nothing keeps happening.

And the waves keep swaying.

And the clouds move and dissolve, move and vanish from my view.

And the light becomes ever present in the landscape, the sun is ready to draw its usual arc up there.

And yet, nothing keeps happening.

6:25 AM. No updates yet. It should be coming right about-

"Mum to all units! The Ocean Defense Line has been breached! Prepare to engage at any second. The MDF Naval Platoon will be sending missiles towards the shore as the BETA surface, remain in your current position until the bombardment has ceased."

Sigh… Finally.

"Valkyrie 1, roger that. One to all units! Assume your formation, remember that we are here only to thin their numbers and capture some live specimens. Don't go doing anything crazy!"

"Understood!" All of us answered in unison.

Now, it's showtime. Come already BETA, I'll use every single bullet I have on you today. And as if answering to my challenge the first figures of the Fort-Class appeared on the distance over the water.

"Took you long enough, you bastards."

The radar beeps, the missiles are just about to hit. And as the Destroyers rushed out of the sea a whirlwind of fire ravaged the shoreline. Multiple tornadoes made of blazes scorched the BETA, only to be followed by giant explosions.

The mixed bombing approach, huh? First drop the heavy incendiary bombs, then the explosive ones hit the rest. With the first one you can deal easily with the Destroyers thanks to how squishy and fragile their bodies are, then when the Tanks and the rest arrive you drop the heavy missiles to deal with their overwhelming numbers with the great AoE of the explosions.

If I hadn't seen the drop of the Orbital Corps and the explosion of the XG I would be shocked right now. But I can't really be surprised when at least a hundred Destroyers are charging at me.

"Valkyrie 1 to all units! Commence operation, march forward!"

"Roger!"

The arrows appear on the radar and everybody charges at the BETA, flying NOE.

I boost jump and enter formation with my flight. The Vanguards are rushing towards the Destroyers, they jump to their side and shoot as they keep marching onwards. This makes some Destroyers stop, causing the ones behind to ram into them.

"Flights B and C, attack the Destroyers. Remember to leave some of them crippled so that Flight D can later capture them!" With the orders clear, the six members of both flights, me included, form a triangle as we advance.

With the Gunsweepers at the tip of the spear, the Interceptors on their eight and five respectively, and the rear flight moving side by side in a square, we advance into the BETA. I hope the aliens are ready for some tight service, because today's beach episode is filled with hot stuff!

As soon as they entered our range, we send our heat waves at them. Sometimes a spurt of blood gushed out, sometimes we hit their shells. Veering to a side along the small dunes, we prepare for the imminent contact with the charging Destroyers.

"Viking, come along! We'll flank them from their sides. Take my eleven!" Akane told me as she moved forward, she's currently Valkyrie 8 and is my pair in the right side of the formation.

"Roger!" Our side of the offense moved forward through the sand, we need to halt the Destroyer's advance before the gap made by the bombardment vanishes.

I do a double boost jump to gain altitude and using the thrusters in my back I adjust my position to have a clear look of the Destroyers. I lock both Assault Rifles onto the herd and shoot at them. Akane seemed to be a bit behind me, she couldn't keep up with my speed.

"Valkyrie 8, I'll spearhead the assault on our side, you stay nearby and finish all the ones that I cannot kill. If I get too far away, send a message."

"Roger!" Wow, didn't expect her to comply so easily. So when she doesn't have a bone to pick she's obedient? Who knows what Yuuko-sensei told them about me for this mission.

As I landed I flicked my joysticks hard, boost dashing out of the way of a charging Destroyer as I lock my gun on it, then with one gun pointing forward and one pointing backwards I open fire. The bullets break through the herd as the splashes of BETA blood paint the wasteland of sand, my quick turns create small splashes of dust as I keep moving in short hops.

Akane finished the Destroyers that I injured but didn't kill, covering my rear. I take a dash backwards as I sick my guns on the Tanks that appeared to my left.

"Viking, Eight, Nine and Ten. Move forward and finish this herd, We're wasting too much time with them. Five, help me cover their six!" The Captain ordered, showing us the positions she wanted us to take on our radars.

Without delay, me and the other three rush forward forming a line and attack the BETA.

The Captain and Munakata then covers us as we advance into the herd shooting left and right. I jump and use the thrusters to spin, making uranium rain upon the BETA. Using the extra thrusters I boost dash in midair, switching my gun for a dagger before I land, and once I hit the sand I dash forward while using only the left thrusters to make me spin again, slashing the Destroyers backs. By my side, the other three had penetrated the herd with their firepower making more of them crash into the others' backs.

A bleep in my radar catches my attention. The Vanguard sent us new data, the rest of the herd is closing in on us. Not a second later, the red spiders and boiled crabs appear on my view, dripping a bit of water from the ocean.

As I spin around and slash at a charging Grappler's head-like appendage, I keep shooting behind me with my other gun at all the Tanks that were closing in on us, taking the high ground of the small sand dunes.

The other Gun Sweepers were also nearby firing with their four guns at the BETA, then we get a warning to pull back. Shortly after canister shells sent from the rear rain on the monsters that charged at us, killing and crippling.

I start doing consecutive boost jumps to rejoin the line as the rear snipes the Grapplers that approached us, while the Captain and Munakata keep the Tanks at bay. I use this chance to change the magazine of the gun I was using and sheathe my dagger.

"One to Midfield and Rear! We're moving forward, break through the Tanks and secure a vantage point to support the Storm Vanguards!"

"Roger!"

I do a full boost jump to my right as I avoid most BETA in the way, but it seemed Akane was having some trouble keeping up with me and the Captain. Right, they not only lack the XM3 but they don't think to do anything more than a simple boost jump. The other side of the formation also seemed to be falling behind.

Doing a barrel roll and using the additional thrusters to drive myself towards the ground I put my left gun on the pylon by the side of my leg and I take out one dagger. I stab one Destroyer from above as I landed, did a sidestep and dashed forward into another one shooting it at point blank. Boost backflipped outta the way and sicked my gun on the herd from above, making blood and sand spurt high as I did.

"Valkyries, try to synchronize your jump timings with mine. You'll get surrounded if you don't put some speed in your stride." I can only hope they took it in good faith.

"Thanks for the suggestion. One to Midfield, synchronize your jumps with Viking's. We need to finish this quickly. Rear, cover our advance but do not fall behind."

We resume our double boost jumps as the Tanks and Grapplers rush at us as if they were sandsharks, the other three are having some trouble with the timing but they're definitely moving faster now. We shoot at the ones that get close as the four of us drive past the first wave. The Captain and the rest follow right behind us.

"Mum to all units, we have confirmed that the Laser-Class have reached the shore. Exert extreme caution from now on!"

"One, roger that. Valkyrie 1 to all units! Be ready for incoming lasers at any time from our twelve. Vanguards report your status!"

"Two here." Hayase sounded shaken. Don't tell me… "Half of my ammo remaining on my guns, no serious damage to my unit. We're currently retreating from the shore towards your position. We couldn't get past all the Fort-Class, there's too many of them to do it without support." Thank God no one died.

"Roger that. Attention all units, we move to Phase 2. Frontliners, cripple the BETA as much as you can. Flight D, switch one rifle to the paralyzing shells and be ready to zone out and capture the ones that are hit by them. Carrier crew, are you ready to deploy?"

"Mum, we're ready here to move out at your signal." I wonder how they're going to transport the Destroyers and Grapplers, though. Tanks could be dragged by our Humvees, so a TSF squad has to be with them too, as well as some mechanized infantry.

"Copy that. All units be ready to move out as soon as I give the order." The Captain said as our radars got the updated arrows and positions of our allies, now including the carrier's crew, as well as the area we could safely move in due to the approaching MDF units.

"Roger!"

"One to Three and Four, go to B Flight and coordinate as their vanguard. Two come to C Flight."

"Roger!"

"Viking, do you hear me?"

"Loud and clear, Captain."

"When Two regroups with us you are to join her as our frontliners. Leave me and Five to cover your backs."

"Roger." Of course, we have to operate in elements to avoid being flanked, and we do need to make haste before eyes fall upon our area of operation. Seems like I will have to go melee, Sensei.

"Two here. Captain, your orders!" Hayase's Shiranui dropped out of the sky, making tidal waves of sand fly away from its glistening frame under the sun. Half of it was painted in BETA entrails by now.

"You are to charge alongside Viking. Work together to cripple those bastards as much as you can!"

"Roger!"

A private channel is opened with my unit. I could imagine Hayase's smirking face despite having the feedback blocked thanks to how she was chuckling.

"Looks like I'll have to tag along with you, Eight." Is she gonna call me that now?

"I'll be right behind you, Two." Just like last time, eh? Seems like I'm bound to team up with you.

"You better! If you're as good as you said, go and crush those bastards as hard as you can! Now, on me!"

Now forming a spearhead with me and the three Vanguards, we charge towards the BETA. I do a double boost jump and use the backthrusters' Variable Wings to line myself horizontally above the BETA, blocking the sunlight to avoid it from screwing up my shots. I open fire towards the Tanks and Grapplers, ripping the Tanks' legs and damaging the Grapplers' backs. Hayase charges in after my attack gave her a path forward and slashed the legs of the Grapplers from their sides, tumbling them down.

As she back dashed shooting at the Tanks, I landed and boost dashed forward dagger at the ready. More Tanks and Grapplers were falling apart into the sands to our coordinated attacks as we moved forward. The others seemed to be having no trouble keeping up.

As we retreated before we were surrounded, the Captain's missiles hit our pursuers as Akane and the others kept shooting at the BETA that were nearby to give us room to retreat safely. We also kept shooting towards the unending stream of Tanks that jumped at us and the occasional Grappler. I had to switch another magazine. I'm already at less than half ammo, and around 12% fuel on my main tank. And the red dots on the radar seemed to not even be affected.

"Mum to all units, the Laser-Class seems to be stationed at the shoreline, unmoving. The XO orders the capture of at least ten Laser-Class. The Fort-Class will soon reach your position, be ready to intercept. Valkyrie Mum, out."

We regrouped as we retreated, we dealt with the vanguard quite nicely. Now's time for the real show.

"One, roger that. All units, we'll capture some Laser-Class and finish this mission before we're detected by the MDF. Engage Arrowhead 2 and advance! Storm Vanguards and Viking work as Flight A from now on, the rest of the Gunsweepers assume a line behind them and cover them as they advance along me and Five. Rear, be ready at any time to send the paralyzing at the Lasers. Valkyries, forward!"

"Roger!"

The whole squad starts dashing forward, towards the towering figure of the Fort-Class. Hayase and the other two cannot keep up with my speed as we slash at the BETA that come closer.

Now wielding the two daggers on each hand I slash at the Tanks legs. I keep my pace and stance as I dash and slash about. I take a step back and boost dash forward veering slightly right to avoid a Grappler and slash at its back legs, I do a jump backwards and do some quick slashes towards the Tanks.

I gotta say, my accuracy is busted now. Between how calm I am thanks to Maya-sensei's training, my new pace of attacks and the improved radars, I think I haven't missed a single attack today, not even against the small Tanks with my daggers. I do a triple boost jump to get back to my position behind Hayase, and do a downward slash at the head of a Grappler that was on my way.

We're now just some meters away from the Forts, there's ten of them here on the right side blocking our way to the Laser-Class. Another ten to the left finish the circle that's blocking our way to the Laser-Class.

"A Flight! We'll go and kill some Forts to clear a path for the Captain and the rest to shoot the paralyzing ammo before the Lasers start attacking! Two and Three, take the left. Eight, you come with me to the right!" Hayase shouted over the speakers.

"Roger!" We both charge forward, ignoring the Tanks. I try to adjust my speed with hers as we close in on the Forts. The other two Vanguards take the Forts to our left.

A stinger flies our way, I sidestep to the right and resume my boost dash. Hayase just a bit behind me, we time our jumps and slash at the Fort from below together, tearing its sting apart before it retracted. We then switch to our guns and open fire from below it towards the head, uranium tears into the monster as a stream of blood is splashed onto our TSFs. One Fort down. We dash away from the tumbling corpse, slashing the nearby Tanks that tried to jump us.

I do a double boost jump to avoid a stinger and then use the extra thrusters to do a boost dash in midair, landing myself nearby the next prey. I dash under it from its side avoiding the legs and start jumping and slashing at it, it doesn't even flinch or stop in reaction to the injuries. Hayase arrives besides me and starts doing more damage with her sword.

"Hey, Viking! Take my rifle and go blow the nearby one's head off with your acrobatics! I'll cut this one's head myself!" I catch the rifle in midair as she threw it at me, it immediately gets linked to my unit.

"Do you not mind me getting all those kills?"

"You're killing them with my rifle, so they're my kills!" Hehehe, never change Hayase! You always manage to make me smile even in the direst of battles.

I double boost dash from below the Fort towards the other ones while clearing the red sea that's in the way, I got five shots of 120mm in this thing. I do a full boost jump, using the extra thrusters to balance myself in the air. Now, just like with the TR! Eat this! I fire two consecutive shots towards the head aiming at its neck, it exploded in answer to my treat.

I do a barrel roll to avoid another stinger, and I was ready to charge at the Fort with my dagger but Hayase dashed out of nowhere and cut the stinger before it goes back into the Fort.

"I'll cover you from the Tanks, you blow their heads off! With this the path forward will be done!"

"Roger!" I dash towards my left, shooting my remaining 36mm on the Tanks that appear before me and some Grapplers that got close. I do a triple boost jump and shot the three remaining shells onto the Fort's head from its side, making it explode. I do a boost dash to land near a Grappler that was getting too close to Hayase and slash its claws off with one dagger, using the other to tear through its flesh.

Now with some free room, Hayase boost jumped towards a Fort while shooting at it's stinger. Her Shiranui spun around with a sword on each hand, turning itself into a blade cyclone, slashing at the Fort's body and tearing its head apart in a flash. I dealt with the nearby Tanks to give her a safe landing. More fire opened from behind as the Midfield advanced and cleared the bulk of Tanks that were in the area. The other Vanguards were slashing at a Fort from below, getting showered in blood and flesh as they kept slicing at the gargantuan BETA until it fell.

We made a path between the Forts, the ones that were to the sides were bombarded with who knows how many ballistic shells in perfect synchrony to the same spot. There were still some of them, but we'll have to hold them until the Captain and the others manage to capture some of the Laser-Class.

"One to Storm Vanguards! Go after the Laser-Class, we will send the paralyzing shells as soon as you get close! Use the BETA as cover to advance!"

"Roger!" Hayase and the other two rushed forward.

"Viking regroup with the Midfield, we'll hold the line and give cover to the Vanguards until the Lasers have been captured! Rear guard, ready the paralyzing shells!"

"Roger!"

This is it, just one more push and the mission will be over. This is the most risky part for all of us, since the Vanguards have to rush into the Lasers and the rest of us have to hold this place to prevent the Vanguards from being surrounded.

I shoot what little is left of my ammo along the rest. Two Gunsweepers were facing towards the shore, sniping with their 120mm at the BETA that tried to jump the Vanguards. The Rear arrived behind us, and as we covered them they readied the paralyzing ammo.

But then…

From the corpse of a Fort many Tanks started coming out. We were surrounded by the corpses of the Forts as wave after wave of Tanks poured from them.

"Impact Guards, send the canister shells. All units with missiles use them freely, assume a Trail and watch each other's backs!"

This won't do. There's too many of them, we can't waste this much time here or the Vanguards will… I open a channel with the Captain.

"Viking to One, requesting permission to charge into the herd as a diversion. That way you can shoot them down easily as they chase me around. My higher mobility will allow to perform this without risk to my unit." I can't see her face but I can sense she's considering the idea, going by those small groans.

"Viking, permission granted. But stay close by, otherwise we won't be able to give you covering fire. Eight, lock onto Viking's IFF and cover him from the Tanks." Akane acknowledges the orders and boost dashes to my side, guns at the ready.

"Ten requesting permission to provide support to Viking, Ma'am!" A voice I don't recognize speaks on the common channel.

"Nine requesting the same!" This one is… Tsukiji? I can't really remember well but I think it's her.

"Permission granted. Five, regroup with me and aid me in clearing the other flank along the Rear."

"Roger that!"

"One to Viking, start the diversion!"

"Understood!" C'mon Kagerou, give me all of your accel! Let's flow into our enemies, like an unending waterfall!

I do a full boost dash, piercing through the Tanks. I spin around, do a forward dash, sidestep, jump, cancel and slash again. I take a step back and do a wide slash, killing three Tanks that were too close for comfort. The Tanks to my left are decimated by the other's fire.

Akane was shooting three rifles at the same time, timing each shot quite nicely with my jumps to hit most of the Tanks that were surrounding me. I start retreating, dealing with the Tanks that get close as the Captain gives the order to raid the Tanks to both sides.

The three Valkyries that were behind me bombarded the corpses to the left with a flurry of shells, dealing with most of the Tanks that were still coming towards us.

A loud explosion could be heard as the rear blasted the canister shells upon the Fort's corpses that were in the other side, killing most of the Tanks that were coming out of them.

Full boost dashing ahead, I use the extra thrusters to align myself to make my Mugen stance as an inferno comes out of my lower Jump Units. I end up gliding for a while, ripping through the Tanks and some Grapplers, surfing onto the sand dunes. I cancel the dash and do a boost backflip to get back near my flight. As I retreat more uranium rains on the Tanks.

We can do this. There's not so many on my side, and the others seems to have dealt with their targets too. We somehow survived the Tank ambush, there's still a lot of them around but we dealt with more than half of them already. We just need to wait for the Vanguards to-

A warning appeared on my screen as a familiar beep sounded on my ears, and by instinct I moved backwards. Light flashed before my eyes, there were Laser-Class inside a corpse of a Fort we killed.

"Scatter!" Just as the Captain shouted, we all moved away as the beeping of the Laser alarm roared alive.

A shower of light poured from behind us, as we barely manage to escape the Laser's assault. Those bastards! A feint ambush to make us lower our guard, all to use the Lasers in a corpse that was left on our rear! This is the work of the Superior no doubt, only through him can the BETA do this kind of tricks.

We scatter about as we dodge the beams of light that follow us closely, using the BETA as cover. How many Lasers are in that corpse? If there's some Heavy Laser inside there…

"One to Vanguards! Give me a report!"

"T-Two here, Captain both Three and Four were hit by Lasers from our six. What's the situation back there?!"

What?! The ambush… costed us the lives of the two Vanguards? Damn it! I couldn't… Nobody could have done anything. You sons of an eldritch bitch!

"Two, get away from there. Capture of the Laser Class will be impossible in this situation. One to all units! We're retreating, Rear guards, aid the carrier's crew and ready the containers with the captured BETA." The Captain sounded nervous, it's rare to hear her like this. Only when things went wrong in Sadogashima she sounded so conflicted, so preoccupied.

"Shirogane, can you hear me?" A private channel opened up.

"Sensei? What is it?" I got startled by her sudden appearance.

"Suzumiya is getting me updated on the situation from one of the carriers, there's apparently a nice amount of Lasers near you. Tell Isumi to capture some of them and then issue the retreat order."

"You think we can avoid their attacks while capturing some of them? We're at our limits here." That seems crazy, going by the fact that we're barely dodging them while we retreat now.

"Give Isumi the message that I order her to use 'that' ammo. Get someone to cover you as you move around, leave the capture to the experienced members. That's all."

"And I suppose you won't tell me what 'that' is?"

"Shirogane, there's no time for this. Or do you have an idea, perhaps?"

"We could send canisters at them, forcing the Lasers to look up. Then, a small group can rush into the group, paralyze some of them to allow the capture, and kill the rest. Me and some others could remain behind to give them cover from afar. We won't be able to escape safely anyways without killing the Lasers."

"Not bad. That's similar to what I had in mind. Take a rifle from someone and send canisters from the back, do not go near the lasers. Tell Isumi to send 'that' after the canisters." And she cut the connection.

No time to waste then! I open a private channel with the Captain.

"Valkyrie 1! Orders from the XO have arrived!" I explain to her the orders Sensei gave.

"Roger! Blast Guards, ready the Yellow Dust shells!" The what now? Yellow Dust?

We retreat to a small clearing behind some BETA corpses, safe from the Lasers for now. One of the Valkyries hands me a rifle and I assume my position crouching along the Rear forming a line, aiming at the corpse from which the Lasers appeared. The Captain got her Shiranui in position, right in front of those of us who would provide the bait.

"Now, on my mark… Three, two… FIRE!"

Not a second later from the Captain's order, the canisters were flying towards the Lasers. They got taken out of course, but that's what allowed our two Blast Guards to rush out of cover, shooting the Yellow Dust straight at them while they were looking up.

BOOOOOM!

An explosion louder than anything I've heard roared through the battlefield. That shape… A cloud of literal yellow dust covered the battlefield. What the hell is that thing even?

"One to Five, Eight, Nine, and Ten. Come along with me, I'll use the paralyzing shells I have on me to stun the Lasers and you'll help me carry them. Viking, Six and Seven, cover our backs. The rest, prepare our escape route!"

"Roger!"

I stay behind slashing at the Tanks and Grapplers, while the other two Valkyries cover me with their guns. There's too many Tanks and there's also more Forts getting closer. The Laser on the shore have not attacked yet, but if they do…

We need to clear this last horde or… again someone will be gravely injured, or worse. Inhaling sharply, I refocus onto the battle. A beep reaches my ears shortly after.

I'm all out of ammo.

Well, fuck. I guess I'll just mind my pace with the daggers and-"Aaaauugh!" What? What happened?!

A Destroyer charged out of nowhere onto one of the Valkyries that were covering me, she couldn't dodge it entirely and half of its TSF was broken, falling to the floor as pieces of its armor teared from its frame. She was still alive, but…

The other one shot the Destroyer from behind, and continued to shoot at all the nearby Tanks that were trying to climb onto the remains of the TSF.

I rush back to protect the broken Shiranui from the Tanks. Damn it, if things keep going on like this, this will end like last time. It's like I didn't change anything!

Wait… What if this time this invasion is also different?

"One to all units, we've captured some Lasers. We're retreating! All units start falling back. Two, report your status!"

"I'm retreating to the carriers away from the battle since one of my legs got hit by a laser, I'll be there in three minutes tops."

"Roger, everyone else let's get out of here! We've already lingered enough!"

"Eiko! Can you hear me?!" Kazama shouted over the common channel. They must be really close for her to lose her composure, since she was always so calm during our missions together.

"Touko, I… I can't feel my legs… I'm done for, get out of here." She sounded very weak. At this rate she'll die.

But we're ordered to retreat, we have to get out of here. If we linger here any longer… They're gonna die.

Feeling my heartbeat wanting to imitate a rocket, again an empty pit in my stomach as acid rose up from my throat, I looked at the radar, at my surroundings, at my remaining fuel.

I can do it. I'm not gonna be doubting here, every second counts!

Biting my lips as I pulled my controls too hard, I dashed to stand between them and the BETA.

"Viking to Six and Seven. I can buy you some time, get the injured one out of the cockpit ASAP!" Waiting not another second, I rush against the Tanks.

I'm getting low on fuel, but no way in hell I'll abandon a comrade that I can save. Even if I can't do more than simple boosts, that's more than enough! I won't give up so easily, I already went through a truly hopeless situation… and this isn't like back then! Biting back the pain in my head below my ears at my sudden sharp movements, I suddenly slow down as I approached the red current coming my way.

A dash to the left, I slash at the Tanks with the sword. I take a step back, get one dagger out again, and dodge some of the ones that were trying to jump on me.

I keep jumping and canceling to distract them, slicing their hands when I find an opening, kicking them if I can't do that. I won't last much longer, if I can't rip through them it's very hard to land a killing blow with how small they are, and there's too many around.

Damn it, some of them jumped onto my back! I do a boost backflip into the ground, crushing the Tanks that were on me. I do a crouch dash as I slash the ones that tried to jump on me, but I can't shake all of them off. Some are now firmly grabbing onto my legs, not letting me dodge as well as I could.

"Dammit! Let me go, you damn monsters!" I was never surrounded by so many Tanks without ammo!

Shit, this is not going well… I can't line up a good slice to tear them up, I can't get rid of the ones clinging to my Kagerou's legs. Dammit… Dammit! What can I-

SWISH! CLANK!

Another Shiranui dashed forward, slashing the Tanks that were on me with its dagger.

"Viking, are you okay?!"

"… Y-Yes, I'm alright. Thanks, Eight."

But… something was wrong. Not only Akane's, but the Shiranuis of the ones that charged towards the Laser-Class looks like they're melting, like some mannequin made out of wax that got close to a source of heat.

"Seven to Viking, I've recovered Six. Let's retreat!"

"Roger!" Outta here! Forward dash!

"One to Rear, use another Yellow Dust to deny the advance of the BETA. They'll attract the eyes of the IJA if they follow us."

"Roger!"

I do some consecutive jumps and joined the rest of the squad. The Captain and the others were just a bit behind me. We move away from the path the BETA were marching on, flying NOE to avoid the lasers. The rear shot another of those yellow dust clouds at the BETA that were following us, forcing them to halt.

Some minutes after that there's no more red dots on the vicinity. The IJA is currently engaging the BETA, no one is coming to our position. It's over, we made it out.

"One to all units! Report your status!" Everybody reported themselves, Hayase had catched up to us in the way.

All the crew from the carrier were fine, those who survived at least. No one is coming here, so it seems we really weren't detected. By a hair's width, we got lucky the BETA separated into three different groups and no one detected our signals or came to out area. Sensei, as always, made the right call by choosing this battlefield.

I let out a sigh, moving my neck in circles. Gritting my teeth, I restrain my hand from hitting something. I exhale through my nose like an angry bull, leaning back into my seat.

In the end I couldn't change the outcome of this fight, was I not enough? Or is it because this world is different? The BETA didn't seem different from what I remember, so what happened? Had I not being here, would the result had been worse than last time?

A private channel opens with my unit, and an unexpected voice speaks to me.

"Viking, can you hear me?"

"Loud and clear. What is it, Valkyrie 8?" For Akane to do this, what does she want to say to me?

"Yes, I was wishing lto ask your opinion on my performance today as your partner in the right element, if you would be so kind." She's speaking formally to me, Sensei just what did you tell them?! Well… let's use this chance to help her out.

"You did well today. While your maneuvering is still rather rough, your accuracy is very good. You have a good sense for being on the offensive, as well as a good eye for providing cover. You saved my back in more than one occasion today, without counting how you dealt with the Tanks that had me at the last moment. I'd recommend you to work on your dexterity, if you can maintain your accuracy while moving faster you'll be a fine frontliner in the future. Just remember to take two seconds before acting, haste makes waste after all."

I remember that she was always rushing stuff last time, so if I can somehow convince her to take a more analytical approach to her offense she will end up being a great pilot. She was better than Chizuru as a Gun Sweeper, since she is more suited for offense. Last time, Chizuru was more adept for an Interceptor role but who knows how she'll turn out this time around.

"Thank you very much for your words! I'll keep them in mind during my practice. Valkyrie 8, out." Wow, didn't think she would be so elated to receive some praise.

Well, this might have been her first mission… Right, I don't know if they needed hypnotherapy or not. Maybe that's why she was so quick to follow my lead, maybe the Captain didn't want any accidents and preemptively gave them a does, just in case. And now that the high of the battle is running out, she looked for an opinion on her performance.

"… You all did so much better than my first times, so you should be proud, Akane." You all must have been made a wreck of nerves, yet still managed to keep yourselves in check even during the last assault.

I hope she can stop chasing so madly after the Storm Vanguard position this time, if she can make the most out of her current role she'll learn a lot of valuable lessons. Which then will make her a better beacon for her squadmates from her cadet squad.

Being able to attack on all angles is something only the Gun Sweeper can do, it's not like the Vanguards are the best units of a flight. But I guess that with the sword fetish they have in the Empire, relying on guns might be seen as a 'disgrace'. But, if Akane manages to improve in this role, she'll fare better in the missions to come… And maybe she won't suffer the same fate she had to go through last loop.

I resupply my fuel near a carrier, and after the captured BETA are put into the tanks with the orange liquid, the Captain gives the order to retreat and we take off flying low. It's just 6:58, but it feels as if I was fighting for hours on end.

---

Same Day . 0 2:21 PM

(Yokohama Base. Yuuko's Office.)

---

"… And that's all." I finished telling Sensei of all that transpired, she pushed a button and stopped the recording she had set up.

"I see. So they used not one, but two ambushes. Did this happen last time too?"

"I don't know. Last time you didn't let me join the operation, and you told me nothing about it." When I came to talk with you about it I was super happy that things were resolved faster, but you were real cold now that I think about it. I'm sure it was because of the Valkyries we lost during the fight.

"Well then, I think I might know why this turned out the way it did." She starts spinning slowly in her seat.

"You do? What caused this?"

"You said that in the other version of this world the UN and the Empire were on rather good terms. It may not have been a perfect relation, but they were not at each other's throats like they're here, right?" I nod. "Then, since things are different here, it's possible that the MDF didn't take my warning seriously. I told them to be prepared for a possible BETA incursion, and yet it seems they weren't ready when the BETA surfaced from Sadogashima." Her lips plucking a bit, her spinning picked up speed. "We lost two ships today to the Forts, that is a lot of missiles that didn't hit the BETA when they reached the shore. It's also possible that in the other world we attacked the BETA as soon as they surfaced on Sadogashima, making the battle on the sea easier and thinning their numbers even further."

"Sigh… So it's the grudges again. Luckily we didn't run into anyone on our trip back, who knows what they would have done if they encountered us."

"Well, it's thanks to this that we had a big enough area to move on and just enough time to complete the mission. It's tough to know we can't rely on our most closest ally, even more after this matter with this Takamura. Here's the report on her I promised you. She's quite important, you know." She hands me an envelope with some papers.

Let's see… Her father created the Zuikaku, she graduated at a rather young age from a Surface Pilot Training Program of the Empire, fought on the Defense of Kyoto, served on the Royal Guard until she was given on a loan to the Ministry of Defense. She's been working on the EML-Railgun and the Shiranui 1C since they were put in charge of Chofu Base, and she was eventually loaned to the UN when the XFJ Project was created as the leader of it.

She supervised the testing of both the railgun and the Shiranui Second test models in Yukon and Kamchatka along her squad. After her heroic actions on the Yukon Incident she was given the rank of Captain in the UN Army, despite the fact that she couldn't prevent the bombs from exploding and she couldn't save her squad from being caught in the explosion. Apparently that's one major problem the XFJ project has, since both prototypes of the Shiranui Second got destroyed they can't continue the testing without making another, which would require money and parts. From America. That's not happening any time soon.

She has also been trained in the use of a sword, like Meiya I guess. She has her own personal yellow Takemikazuchi and has ties with some important people in the Imperial Army. She's a big fish alright, I don't think I'll be able to harm her without getting all of us in trouble. Maybe I could make her have an 'accident' while on the field? I honestly have no idea what I could do to deal with her.

According to the report she's a very cold person. Strict with everyone, bound by her honor to serve to deliver the best possible results. A noble through and through, talking things out with her is out of the question. Maybe the reason Tsukuyomi-san warmed up to me a bit last time was because of a causal leak, but this time I won't be able to hax my way out of this.

Whatever, I'm sure she isn't stupid enough to try to harm me in public, so when she decides to strike at me I'll use the 'self-defense' card as my reason for dealing with her. Let's hope it never comes to that.

"So Shirogane, still think this is a good idea?" Sensei was still showing doubt in her voice.

"Yeah, the railgun is worth it. We probably will have to argue with the Empire to keep it after we finish it, but it's a weapon worth the trouble. If we had it today, the invasion would have been over in a flash."

"Alright, if you say so. Now then, there's a few questions I have regarding the theories that I was hoping you could answer."

"Sure, what's up?"

"First, what's the flaw of the 00 Unit?"

"… When Sumika is connected to the Reactor to purify her ODL, part of her knowledge is shared to it." She frowns, hiding her mouth with one hand. "The same can happen when she has to scan a hive for their data. By the way, we can get intel on all hives with a single scan."

"… Is that so? That's a small consolation, I suppose."

"Well… There's one thing I never got to know for sure. When the base was attacked in that memory I showed you, the BETA were already using our tactics against us but you couldn't figure out if that was because of any data shared through our Reactor or if they had chosen to take us seriously."

"Take us seriously? Didn't you say they would never see us as an intelligent race before?"

"Yeah, and the you of that world compared the situation to a typhoon or other natural disasters. We may not be alive in their eyes, but they might want to understand and neutralize us, if and when we become a problem."

"Sigh… I see. I suppose we should test whether intel can be shared through our Reactor first then."

"You mean… in case you can't fix the issue?" She nods, squinting her eyes as hard as I haven't seen her ever do.

"I… may not be able to find a solution without overhauling the structure of what I already built, and we don't have time to make an entire new vessel for the 00 Unit with so little time left for Christmas. So we'll start doing small tests, I'll try to force a connection with what I have built as of now."

"Wait, you can do that?"

"Of course, I have literally hundreds of failed prototype units to do tests with. What do you think I used to change your TSF's main unit to make the adaptation to the XM3 work as well as it did in such a short time?" She shrugs, again sounding dry.

"I see… So you used one of those CPUs… I never thought about it much, but it makes sense."

"Sigh… I do have to show some results to the UN, besides the main goal for Alt. IV. My architecture was just well suited to do what you asked me to with the OS, and it was a nice test to check some things could be emulated through the software." She smiles faintly, leaning back into her seat and spinning again. "Thanks to the theories, I suppose I could try to see if we can trigger a connection without the 00 Unit to see whether our Reactor shares intel with the BETA or not. I'll devise some tactics we haven't used yet, wait nineteen days, and then send the Valkyries to an expedition to Sadogashima for a short culling operation as an excuse. Of course, I'll try to see whether we can actually get any intel from the Reactor without the 00 Unit."

"Okay… Well, I can't help with that, so best of luck. Just make sure to wipe any data from whatever you'll use to test this."

"I know, I don't want to give them any advantage here. So, there's something else that's been bugging me…" She entwines her fingers, stops spinning, leans forward into the desk, and places her hands atop the wood slowly. Her brows curving, her eyes seemed to pierce into me as she held my gaze. "I suppose the last mission you showed me was… an assault on the Original Hive, wasn't it?"

…

"Considering what you've told and shown me, and that we have plans being prepared to quickly deal with it after attacking the 20th or 19th Hive, it was the most logical option. What happened during the mission?"

"… I already showed you what's most important."

"Speak, now."

"… You really think it's a good idea to know?"

"Are you saying you aren't willing to tell me?"

…

"Sigh… We took down the Reactor, as I showed you before, after having a short talk with it. Only me and Kasumi survived." I claw at my pants, looking down.

"Why did you keep quiet about it?"

"Because… we need more firepower before we attack the Original Hive."

"We might not have the time or resources, as I suppose happened in the last world you were in. This is a direct threat to humanity's survival. Shirogane, you should know that-"

"That's why I made a plan for that. There's no need… to repeat that suicide." I take a sharp breath as I return her gaze, she sends a hand to her chin without showing any emotion in her face.

"Mind telling me what this plan is all about then?"

"The BETA take nineteen days to process new intel. Assuming the worse case, in which you can't prevent the data leak from the 00 Unit, we would have to give up on the scans to keep our intel safe." She nods, leaning back into her seat. "Then, we can use the XG-70B for another mission after Sadogashima. And we get another to use Model D."

"And then what?"

"That's only if we follow the same pattern as before. Since I know of what happens on Operation 21st, we can use the XG to blow up Sadogashima without giving the BETA any chance to pass its intel to a Reactor. The key here is that, since a BETA has to pass the knowledge manually if the 00 Unit doesn't make a link to the Reactor, so long as we wipe them out in a single swoop we can prevent them from gaining intel on us."

"… I see. Murder everyone in the place, to avoid having a straggler pass down the intel. Just like a medieval raid of sorts. Still, they might adapt as they did to our air raids at the very start of the war. So, what happens if the plan fails?"

"… That's why we have the better XM3, to be able to last longer in the field and destroy the Reactor without forcing the XG to deploy. And you'll have intel on the first mission, we have the upper hand now." However, her stare doesn't change.

"And what if that also fails?"

"… We cannot rush Kashgar as we did last time. I'm not repeating that suicide."

"… Even if that is our only choice left?"

"It won't be."

"And in the scenario that it becomes our only-"

"I won't let it happen!" Unable to hold back, I hit my leg. Unable to stop, I keep shouting. "That shit won't happen again. I'm gonna take down all the lasers in Sadogashima myself if I have to, but we're not repeating that mistake again."

"You say mistake, but I assume the operation was completed successfully?"

"At the cost of tens of thousands of lives, the 00 Unit, the XG, and…"

…

"And what?"

Now that I think about it… What the hell happened to Sensei in that world? We deceived the Americans to prevent them from getting more stuff to make G-Bombs.

I'm sure she would have… had to face some pretty heavy consequences for that. What if she convinced me that my fight was over… so that I didn't-

"Shirogane, what else?"

"… We lost all our influence at the end." She frowns, empty of an answer for a sec.

"How so?"

"You had to share the intel of all the hives to the UN because they didn't want to cooperate and wanted to switch to Alt. V at once. In the end… We barely were able to complete the mission, it was a miracle it happened at all."

"… So you're saying that, in this world where I have less support, we might not be able to successfully complete that operation with its best outcome as before?"

"… Yeah, I guess. I also don't want to have to rush it like that. Just… The rest of the UN was fine with switching to Alt. V, didn't care about the consequences, didn't even plan on using whatever of the fleet was ready. We had no choice left, that's why we took that drastic measure. So…" Even if that world's Sensei screwed me over… "… The future needs you standing with power after we take down the Original Hive. It's true I don't know what happened after that… But I don't want to leave behind that same situation here if I have to return to my world. We can manage this situation better to make sure that, at the least, it doesn't come down to that ultimatum." I take a deep breath, looking at her. "So, can we take some time to check whether we truly don't have a choice here?"

"… I suppose. However, if it turns out we do not… Don't make a fuss about it."

"… Deal. But if that is the case… Keep your end of the deal after this ends."

"I will. And don't worry, I also would like to avoid such a disaster." She stands up, going towards her coffee machine. "I'd like to start reading the theories now to begin the prep work, so you go on and rest for the day. If anything comes up just leave it for tomorrow, I want no distractions now."

"Roger. Later, Sensei." I stand up and leave the office.

And from now on the real fight starts. Once Sensei gets to work with both theories she'll have to tune the 00 Unit to prevent the leak. I'll have to wait until I can see the data from today's performance of the XM3, but I'm more than happy with it. The Kagerou felt like the Shiranui I used to pilot, it was truly awesome. No wonder, she used some of the tech she's been working on for the 00 Unit on it.

Well, at least she seems willing to give my ideas a shot. Even if we avoid the coup and make our TSFs better, there is little we can do against the bigger events. The defense of the base and the sharing of intel through the 00 Unit… Those are the main problems we have to tackle to have a shot at a different road post-Sadogashima. Everything is just a preparation for that.

Sigh… I can't do anything for now, I already tried to make the most out of Niigata and barely made a draw with this world. I'll just eat and rest for today. All I can do is believe Eiko-san might live, that Sensei will find a solution to our roadblocks, and that I can step up if there is something I can do to help.

Reaching the end of the hallway, I swipe my ID and the elevator opens. Tapping the buttons, it rumbles to life again and begins to make its way to B5F. I lean on a wall, closing my eyes and simply resting until I have to get out.

Before the Downpour

Chapter 15: Before the Downpour

---

November 11 th . Near 4 PM.

(Hallway, Yokohama Base.)

[Takeru]

---

Getting out of the elevator at the ground level, squinting my eyes at the pouring sunshine, I made my way to the PX since it's still near lunch time. The habitual noise in the place, I grab a tray and get in line.

"Rice, miso, and mackerel please." I say as I hand my tray.

I did what I could, but still, the mission left an awful taste in my mouth. Nothing could be done, it still makes me sick. At least we finished the mission successfully, and we avoided the outcome the invasion had on the first loops too. Guess I should begin focusing on the next flag to avoid getting too down.

I wonder how things will turn out in the CCSE, now that I'm on bad terms with everyone. I barely managed to do anything in the mission, will I be able to make them get along for the test? Well, no point in worrying about-

My tray is dropped rather violently, it has less than half of our usual rations.

"That's your fill, move along now!" Kyozuka-san said with an annoyed tone.

"Um, excuse me, but this is not even half of our usual rations." Brows arching up, lips half open doing the same.

"That's all people like you get here. Hush now, and go to the table. After all the problems you're giving those poor girls… You have some nerve to talk back." I hear the other people in the line snickering. So, you hate me too.

I grab my tray and go to a different table that was empty. Screw all of you, really. I just got back from fighting the BETA, from saving your hides, and this is what I get? Well, they don't know about it. Sigh… Is there anything I can do to mend all this mess?

I couldn't do a thing to save the other two Vanguards, I still don't even know their names. I can only hope that Eiko-san doesn't die, if I'm going by what happened last time she should get hospitalized. But there's the chance that things go differently this time around.

I eat the little food I was given and got out. I can hear them whispering about me and calling me names behind my back. So this is what Dad meant when he told me once about how to deal with cowards. He always said that there was a group of people that would go around spreading rumors and trash talking about others behind their backs, but when confronted about it they negated everything, getting scared and playing the victim. I won't fall for such provocation, I'm here to help.

On my way to my room I saw Meiya at the distance, she's looking out of the window. She seems… angry for some reason. I shouldn't talk to her, I can't seem to make amends with them. I want no more problems right now and it hurts a lot to see their faces scowl at me.

I know they're not the same, I know I'm being an idiot. But my heart can't take it. I tried being serious these last few days, I tried giving them some pointers, and what did that achieve? Meiya and Chizuru were still frowning at me without answering, and Kei was seriously trying to hurt me during combat practice. I honestly don't know how to approach them anymore. They did try to smooth things over during yesterday's dinner, but I could tell they were forcing themselves because they couldn't look at me in the eye.

Sigh… I honestly rather not talk with them anymore. I don't want to end up angering them on accident.

I walk past her, and as I did I heard her gasp. Maybe I surprised her walking so fast, whatever let's go to the stairs.

"Wait!" She calls out to me as I'm descending.

"Good afternoon, Mitsurugi. What is it?" I greet her after she reaches B1F. Her expression is a mess.

She looks at me, but then looks away. Kinda frowning for a while, but then chills down. Oh, she must want to know where I was during the alarm.

"Shirogane… Where were you during the emergency summons?" Paranoia, you're the fish on her plate.

"Special mission on the lower floors."

"Are those machines more important than… protecting the base?"

"Vice Commander's orders. Can't refuse them, you know." What is she after this time? Can't we just agree to ignore each other? For the sake of coexistence? Please?

"Is that so? Say, can I ask you a personal question?" A quiet, slow tone. Full of insistence, she won't take a no for an answer.

"Go ahead."

"Shirogane… Are you part of the Royal Guard?"

… What did she just say? Why is she asking me this question? Did she learn something about this world's me?

"Oho, a most revealing reaction indeed." She folds her arms, narrows her eyes at me, a brow of hers slowly moving up for a moment.

"Mitsurugi, I'm a UN soldier. I'm not part of the Guard."

"Really? Then, why is your profile on our database blocked?" Did she try to access it?

"There was some incorrect data on it, so they had to revise that."

"Hmm… Then why was your public profile blocked as well?"

"I dunno. I just told you there was some incorrect data on them."

"Dodging the question?" A disgusted expression floods her face. What got into her today?

"Say, is that all? I don't know why my profiles were blocked, for real. I'm kinda tired, can I be on my way?"

"Oh, yes. Do be on your way. But allow me to ask you one final question. I'd like you to answer it honestly, if you could." She gets closer, bringing her face just a few centimeters away from mine.

Usually I would have gotten embarrassed or excited to have Meiya so close to me, but this time she wasn't getting close with affection. I could feel the aggression emanating from every cell in her body. Now what did I do?

"What is it?"

"Why do you have a Minaru Kamui in your possession?"

… Wait, what?

"What did you say, Mitsurugi?"

"Oh, did I stutter? Forgive me. I said, why do you have a Minaru Kamui in your possession?" She raises her voice a bit, leaking hatred.

Why does she knows about it?! There's no way she…

"Did you enter my room without my permission, Mitsurugi?"

"Could you answer my question first?"

We stand there, gazing at each other for a while.

What did she enter my room for? What did she see? What is she going to do with that information? But more importantly, she now knows I have the blade. That is a treasure in this world, I can't bullshit my way out of this one.

"So, are you going to answer, Shirogane? Why do you have that sword with you?" What the hell do I tell her? I don't want to get into a fight, but how can I convince her that I have it rightfully?

"… It was a present."

"A present?" She looks insulted, as if the words had hurt her pride.

"Someone gave it to me as a memento before I came to this base."

"As a memento? Do you seriously think I'll believe that?!" She finally snaps as the anger surfaces in her voice like a whale near a shore, sending waves upon waves at me.

"Believe it or not, it's the truth. The original holder of the blade died and someone close to that person gave the blade to me, so that I wouldn't forget what I learned from that person, so that I would always remember our time together, brief as it was. That sword is not mine, it's our sword." Easing up a bit when I return her gaze, a hand goes to the ponytail.

"Hmm… Can you tell me who gave it to you?"

"No, I promised I wouldn't say. It has nothing to do with you. Why are you asking me about it?" Let's pretend I don't know.

"That blade is a national treasure, it can't be given away as a personal present. There aren't many of those intact, it's not something that someone like you should have." Why must you be like this?… What did I even do to you?

"And why is that? I got the blade fairly, I didn't steal it or anything. And why did you enter my room? That's against our regulations." She groans, brows lowering, getting angrier.

"Regardless of why I intruded on your privacy… Do you think you're above the law, Shirogane? That blade is not something anyone should wield, for it is meant for Japanese hands."

"Sorry to inform you, but I'm also Japanese." She purses her lips as she folds her arms.

"I didn't mean it literally. Only a few select people can wield that blade. And I doubt you are one of those chosen ones. You might end up court marshaled for this offense if you do not return it at once." I thought that she would lay off if she knew the owner gave it to me and I pushed towards her breaking the rules, but it seems I can't dodge this one. Seems she… doesn't even feel bad about it.

"Look Mitsurugi, that blade means a lot to me. It's from someone that's… truly important to me, someone that marked my life." She flinches back, her eyes ease up a bit. "So, I don't know how much it means here but, I guess I won't be able to keep it with me, right?"

"Indeed. I was probing you for answers, in case you had a valid reason to hold onto it. But as I thought you do not."

"So, what are you going to do? Report me to the authorities?"

"I may have to do so. That sword is too valuable an item to leave it in your hands. Do not take offense, please. It should only be wielded by those in direct service of the Shogunate. You, a UN Cadet that came from America, should not have such an item in your possession. You do seem to be telling the truth, however. Would you accept a suggestion I have to resolve this situation then?" She looks at me waiting for my answer, sheathing her inner blade.

"… I believe that we should consult with the authorities of the base. I don't want to bother them, but it may be for the best to resolve this quickly. And you did enter my room without permission." I could maybe get Sensei to lend me a hand here, I think I should have asked her about the katana earlier. I need some cover and more info to deal with this. This might spiral out of control if we don't handle it with care.

"No, this is a matter that does not concern the UN." Wow, Meiya is not backing off. Is she not remorseful about entering my room? "I would like you to come with me to meet a unit of the Royal Guard that is stationed on this base. We should hand the blade to them, I will do my best to clear any suspicions they may have against you if you cooperate. I assure you no harm will come to you, so long as you hand over the Minaru Kamui willingly."

Can't say I didn't expect her to be so firm about the sword, though. But I can't go along with her idea. I mean, if Tsukuyomi-san learns I have a Minaru Kamui… I'm going to get us into a huge problem.

"I still think we should talk with the Instructor, considering how you learned of me having the blade. And even with you defending me the Guards might press charges against me." Or worse.

"You sound as if you didn't want to meet the Royal Guard…"

"You said it's illegal for me to possess the blade. Do you really think they'll let it slide?" No way in hell I'll walk into the lion's jaws. Since it seems like I'm on the watch list of the Shogunate, I'm sure Tsukuyomi-san must have received some orders about me. It's too dangerous to go meet her without a third party knowing of it.

Meiya sighs and looks right into my eyes, her sapphires brimming with fire, sharp as the finest blades forged by Muramasa. The sight sent a small spike into my heart, a twinge of pain right below my ears. Feeling a small shiver on my sides, a pair of cold hands on my shoulders, I sighed and looked away. She takes a step forward, her glare ready to slay.

"Shirogane, if you do not comply, I will call the Royal Guard myself and tell them to-"

"Tell them to what? Pray tell Meiya-sama, what shall you have us do?" Tsukuyomi-san, followed by the Three Idiots, approached us. Guess I'll die today.

Meiya steps forward and gives Tsukuyomi-san a small bow.

"Good afternoon, 1st Lieutenant. I have something to ask of you. Cadet Shirogane has-"

"Meiya-sama, what did I tell you to do regarding this Cadet?" Tsukuyomi-san's eyes were stern but her piercing glare was not flowing upon me, but onto Meiya. She didn't let her finish and seemed really angry, like when she came to the rescue when everybody got drunk at the hot springs.

"Huh? I know, and I haven't forgotten. However, he-"

"Meiya-sama, I told you to not get involved with that man. Forget whatever it is that made you argue with him." Meiya's face is painted with shock as her eyes waver, enlarge and shrink in disbelief.

… What the hell is going on here? Is Tsukuyomi-san trying to make Meiya go away to deal with me herself? Right, she doesn't want to put Meiya in unnecessary trouble. Can't say I didn't see this coming, but something feels off here…

"Tsukuyomi, this man has in his possession one precious item that-"

"Surely you understand who ordered me to take this course of action? Are you going to act against her wishes?" Tsukuyomi-san got closer to Meiya, making her slowly take one step backwards.

But what did she mean? The only person that can boss around Tsukuyomi-san, other than Meiya, is… Yuuhi. So Yuuhi ordered Tsukuyomi-san to leave me alone. Of course, a dead Royal Guard is suddenly alive as a Cadet in the UN. That's why she sent Takamura, and maybe I'm being observed by the Three Idiots on my daily activities. But why is she scolding Meiya so much? Shouldn't she just tell her to leave? And it's very weird to see this world's Tsukuyomi-san so furious towards Meiya.

"But… Tsukuyomi, please listen. He has a-"

"That's enough!" If she were getting upset at me, I could understand it. But with Meiya? The fuck is going on here?

"Tsukuyomi… Why do you refuse to listen?" Meiya's voice resembled a broken glass, her shoulders were trembling a bit.

"Do not make a scene, please. I taught you better than this. Besides, we cannot involve ourselves with him. I will not repeat myself, if you do not wish me to report this to her you will stand back." Meiya tries to hold her gaze, but eventually gives up. Her fists are tightened and shaking.

"Fine, I'll let it go."

I don't like this. Meiya may end up resenting me even more if I let things sit like this. As much as I want to get away from here, I can't let Meiya leave like this. But what should I…

Hmm… Wait one sec… I have an idea. A dangerous idea. But I could use it to gather some intel here.

I can't normally approach and speak with Tsukuyomi-san after all. Sure, they may already know I'm not this world's me but at least I can use this chance to get some insight through her expressions and words. And it's not like she has the authority to detain me. She wouldn't harm me either, that will only strain the relations with the UN and she wouldn't do that now that we have the deal on the rails.

Sure, her sense of duty is very great so she might attack me. But I don't see them not coming after me if they ever learn I have a Minaru Kamui with me, so being honest about it might be the best thing I can do here and maybe I can score some points with her by showing I care about Meiya.

Sigh… Will the 'I have amnesia' card work here if she pressures me though? No, they must know he's dead since Her Highness seems to be wary of me. I can try to be as honest as I can and hand over the sword, and with Meiya's help she might not show her fangs at me. It is a very important treasure here so I have to show her that I really have no bad intentions or anything. And I'll send some questions in if I find an opening. But I gotta get away from her without making Meiya more hateful towards me. So, let's tell her myself.

"1st Lieutenant, may I?" She seemed startled as I addressed her. The Three Idiots stood uptight and ready to intercept, but Tsukuyomi-san waved at them and then looked my way once more.

"What is it?" She doesn't seem offended or angry… or she's keeping her cool real good. Meiya folds her arms and stares intensely at both of us.

"Could you please listen to Cadet Mitsurugi's worries? She found out I have a katana in my possession and wanted me to return it." The Three Idiots frown at my words, Meiya smiles faintly and addressed Tsukuyomi-san once more.

"1st Lt. Tsukuyomi that is what I wanted to tell you about. Cadet Shirogane has in his possession a-"

"Silence." A simple word. A calm tone. Yet, it was enough to freeze Meiya.

"Eh?" Her mouth grew smaller, but her shaking lips didn't close. I can't believe it either, I guess she wants to deal with me personally.

"Meiya-sama, you shall remain quiet. Cadet Shirogane, can you tell me what is this about?" She shifts her gaze to me as she took one step, getting closer.

"Someone gave me a katana, and Cadet Mitsurugi told me it was illegal for me to have it. I believe I should return it, right? I didn't knew it was against the law and I had no bad intentions, really." Tsukuyomi-san shakes her head, then strokes her hair as she looks at me.

"So this is about a sword? That is none of my concern." I don't know who's more surprised between Meiya, the Three Idiots, and me. Tsukuyomi-san continues to talk slowly. "There is no law that forbids an owner to give its sword to someone else, in fact that act of trust is one of the most sacred traditions of the Empire. To take the sword from you would be equal to trampling over the wishes of the original wielder. You may keep it, I shall not object." Saved by the honor code, who would have said it. But she seems… too composed. Even if they're suspicious of me and Meiya is here, this feels off.

"Tsukuyomi, that is-" Meiya shut her mouth as Tsukuyomi-san sent a glare her way.

"I see. Forgive the trouble, 1st Lieutenant. I'll try to not get in Cadet Mitsurugi's way from now on." I bow to her. The last thing I need is to get on her bad side, considering that I'm already on Yuuhi's black list. Even if I have a thousand questions right now, maybe she's just lying to not get Meiya involved.

"There is no reason to thank me." She gestures towards the trio, signaling them to leave. Once they were far away, she turned to face us bearing an angry expression. "However, do let me tell both of you some things." Ouch. Here comes the 'Why you alive, dead man?' question, perhaps? Meiya also tensed up. Let me see what's under those emeralds, Tsukuyomi-san.

"What is it?"

"First, Meiya-sama it was most foolish to argue with your squadmate here when you could have come to consult with me on your own. You did not think on the repercussions this would have for both of you if someone saw you. And, yet again, you ignored my advice to not approach him. I do not know how you found out he has a katana, but I believe you should reflect on your actions."

Meiya lowers her gaze to the ground in shame. Her lips tremble slightly as she nods in acknowledgment of the words.

"Next. Cadet Shirogane, you should be more careful with your belongings. Had anyone else learned of such an item being in your possession, you would have been placed in a very compromising position. Meiya-sama's worry was well placed, even if you have the right to wield it. Luck has smiled your way for your squadmate to be the one who found out about this and not another. You should mend your carelessness so that this does not repeat itself."

She sounds like an older sister scolding me like this, even if she doesn't know I have a Minaru Kamui. However, she does not seem hostile towards me. I give her a nod and, for the briefest moment, she smiled.

"And last. Both of you really need to stop quarreling. As fellows, you have no reason to doubt each other. You will need to join forces in the coming CCSE, so stop with these needless arguments. Cadet Shirogane, I expect you to be on your best behavior around her. Meiya-sama, I expect you to start behaving in a proper manner befitting of your station. You seem to have forgotten what I taught you about poise and composure, that is most shameful." Critical Hit to Meiya's Mental Fortitude Stat. She seems really shaken by this scolding.

"Thanks for the advice. I'll keep it in mind." I bow again, Meiya follows suit.

"Forgive the trouble, 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi."

"Do not mention it. Forget we ever met today, we're lucky this happened after the alarm. If people weren't outside to breath some air this wouldn't have gone unnoticed. We have been ordered to not interfere with him, so do not expect our assistance next time." Ordered? This again…

I'd like to ask her, but… What if I blow my cover and she stops being careful around me? Being Meiya's guardian she must know about my situation already. So, she's holding back for now. If I want answers the only time I can get them is now, before Takamura arrives. But Meiya is here.

Sigh… I'll have to let it slide. The signs I got have only gotten me more confused, she really didn't send any aggressiveness my way. Is she holding back because of Yuuhi's orders? Is she not sure whether I am or not this world's me? She must have tried to investigate my background, after all.

"Well, I'll be on my way then." And with that she leaves with hurried steps.

After she went a considerable distance I reassured myself she wasn't going to suddenly turn around and come after me, and so I went my way to my room. I need a shower and a nap to clear my head.

"… Forgive me. I shouldn't have become so suspicious of you." Meiya said as she walked by my side, hanging her head.

"It's fine. I know you don't like me much. Let's just ignore each other until we get commissioned." I really don't know what to do with you anymore. Being friendly didn't work, being serious didn't work. Asking for their help didn't either. What can I even-

"Wait, Shirogane." She stops me as I was almost to the stairs.

"What it is?"

"… Are you truly not a member of the Royal Guard?" She drills her eyes into me, folding her arms as usual. Her gaze is wavering again.

"Of course not. Why would I be here as a Cadet then?" She takes a step towards me with clashing waves in her eyes. She's doubting, now that she thinks I have the right to wield a Minaru Kamui she must have assumed I'm on the Guard. Which is kinda right for this world's me.

"Then, why did she call us fellows?"

"Because we're squadmates?"

"Do not be foolish! She called us squadmates before, and don't tell me you didn't notice her tone changed when she said it. To refer to us in such a way… It means she sees you as one of us. So if you're not on the Guard… " Her eyes narrow at me again. Wait, 'one of us'?

"Mitsurugi, I don't know what got into you, but I'm not your enemy. I stopped holding back, I told the 1st Lt about my sword, and I'm not snapping at you despite what you did. Can you please speak your mind with me? What do you mean by 'one of us'?" I honestly have no idea what's she's talking about. How could I be 'one of them' if I'm not a Royal Guard? Maybe she thinks I'm a vassal or something?

"You're telling the truth? You aren't a member of the Royal Guard? Then, what about your swordplay? Where did you learn that style?" Again with this? I mean, can't blame her for noticing.

"I learned it on my old squad, I told you that already. Look, I'm not on the Guard. She said so herself, the blade can be passed to other people. That's all there is to this." Her shoulders start to tremble.

"… That's all, you say? If someone gave that blade to you… And you have the right to wield it… Then I'm… My mission…"

"Mitsurugi? Hey, what's up?" I've never seen Meiya so visibly troubled, except during the coup but that was a limit situation. "D-Did I say something harmful again?"

"Stop that. You… Because of you…" She looks at me as purple blazes roar alive in her eyes. Now what did I say?!

"What is it now? Can you speak to me? I don't know what's going on here, and I want to know what's up with you. Tell me what's troubling you, please? Why are you so rejecting towards me?" I take one step forward but then she moves away, avoiding my gaze.

"… Forgive me. What I can tell you is that 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi sees you as someone who serves the Shogun, that's why she called us fellows. Excuse me, I need to get some air." And she stormed out of here, not giving me a chance to stop her.

Okay, what the actual hell just happened? She said Tsukuyomi-san thinks I serve the Shogun, which means she must think I'm this world's me, and Meiya does not like that one bit. Which is weird, she should be friendly towards a member of the Guard or someone who serves Yuuhi, why did she react like that? She said something about a mission, so she was talking about how she's Yuuhi's body double.

How could I ever get in the way of that? Does she think that I got sent here to keep tabs on her? She did react super badly when they brought the purple Takemikazuchi here and when Tsukuyomi-san remained with her instead of going to Yuuhi's side during the coup.

I have so many questions. And I don't think that going after Meiya right now is a good idea. I need to go talk this out with Sensei.

Wait… She told me to not bother her no matter what. Goddammit, this is too important to leave it for another day, and it's not like it'll take too much time to tell her about it. I mean, what if Tsukuyomi-san approaches me thinking I'm working for Her Highness and I blow my cover? With how little I know of the Royal Guard's way of doing things she'll notice right away I'm not one of them.

And so, I rushed towards Sensei's office.

---

A few minutes later .

(Yuuko's Office.)

---

"So you're telling me that this woman thinks you're here by order of the Shogun?" Raising a brow, hand on her chin, she stared at me.

"You don't have to make that face, I can't believe it either!"

"But… What does this mean, then? The timing for the transfer of Takamura was too good to be just a coincidence. If they think you're on their side, does this mean the Shogun thinks so too? No, that can't be. She should have access to all the data on the Guard, she must have some files on this world's you. But then…"

"Could it be that they are the ones that are misunderstanding this? They might have seen that my records are blocked and that I belong to the Guard going by my profile in their databases, and then they assumed I was here by orders of the Shogun in some secret mission, and didn't tell her about me." Yuuhi didn't knew Chizuru was in our squad last loop until I opened my mouth, after all.

"No, that's impossible. They would have reported this to her, they wouldn't have let this slip. Especially considering you're in Mitsurugi's squad. And even if they didn't, Yoroi surely reported your presence here. I don't know what happened in your other experiences, but do remember that our Shirogane was a Royal Guard here." She has a point there.

"Then… What the hell is going on here?"

"I have no idea." She shrugs then begins to spin on her chair. "But this also might be a trap, to try and make us probe for intel. They may excuse themselves saying that the Shogun ordered to not harm you because of your memory loss now that they know about it. Actually, that might be an explanation." Bringing a hand to her chin again, she looks up as her spin slows down. "Instead of confronting us directly, they use Yoroi to get something out of you. He's very perceptive, he may have noticed that fighting you head on would be pointless, so he suggested that the members of the Guard here shouldn't get close to you and if they did they could feign ignorance on your situation or lie."

"… And so, they sent one person I can't deal with easily. A noble who's part of a top secret and very important research project. Sigh… So all she said was a lie then?" I kinda hoped that I didn't have to go against the Empire, but if this is true and they're lying to get me by surprise… Tsukuyomi-san did say that they shouldn't involve themselves with me. You don't talk about your allies in that way.

"Hmm… Maybe. I'll call Yoroi to ask him if he could find any documents about you and then I'll try to get some intel about this Takamura. Depending on how he answers, we'll know what to do. You stay alert, they may go after you at any time." I don't want to admit it, but she's right.

"Yeah, I know. This was just too shocking to ignore, that's why I came in a rush here to tell you." I sigh as I scratch my head. Today has been crazy.

"That was the right thing to do, this is either a trap or a very important hint towards who the other you was. In any case, I'll move some strings and see what I can find, you go and rest for the day."

"No need to tell me twice. Oh, before I forget. Is there any way I can lock my door from the outside?" She shakes her head as she shrugs.

"No, we never had a problem with someone barging into another soldier's room without permission. I'll have Marimo give Mitsurugi a nice, long talk about it. That should help in keeping her from telling your squad about the blade." I'm sure the Instructor won't appreciate to have her day off be interrupted again, and by another lecture no less. And it will probably just make Meiya more resentful towards me. Great. Can't do much about that though.

I leave the office and go back to my room. I've checked that everything is still here. My books, my medal and GR Card, our sword. It was obvious that someone had entered and moved everything, just what was she after? Why did she enter my room after the emergency alarm?

Was she that paranoid that I wasn't there? Well, doesn't matter now. I've never seen Meiya look so… it was more than just sad, like she was genuinely scared of me for some reason. Lately, it feels as if this world was in the middle of a party where I am the pinata. I'm being hit left and right by unknown threats and low blows, I don't even know who's my friend anymore. Even Kyouzuka-san is treating me like shit.

I sit on my bed, letting out another sigh as I rest my arms on my legs. Hanging my head, I close my eyes and remain like that as I breathe in and out.

My squad is suspicious of me. Tsukuyomi-san thinks I work for the Shogun, but Yuuhi sent Takamura to take care of me so that smile of hers might be a trap. The UN and the Empire are almost done with each other's shit, we can't expect support from America but we also can't trust the Empire. It's a miracle the BETA haven't destroyed Japan already, going by today's battle at Niigata. Had the Laser-Class at the shore started to attack we would have lost many more people, their numbers worked against them this time. We lucked out to have so many BETA around us to hide behind, and even more to not get spotted by anyone.

At least the XM3 worked flawlessly today. Yeah, think positive! I totally stomped those monsters today! And this is just the prototype, with more live testing and the data from Tsukuyomi-san's squad it's going to be even better. Can't fail this CCSE no matter what, so let's help Mikoto and Tama as much as I can. I can only hope the other three don't give me more problems. So long as they don't try to harm me or take my stuff, they can say whatever they want.

No hard feelings, I know I'm an outsider here after all. They already… made that very clear to me.

---

November 12th. 11:10 AM.

(Track field.)

---

"Next pairs are Sakaki with Ayamine in HTH, Yoroi and Tamase and Mitsurugi with Shirogane using weapons."

I crack my knuckles as I go towards the box. I just had to do a literal Shoryuken to stop Kei. She's gotten good, like really good. Shame she hates my guts, though.

"So Mitsurugi, what should we-" A sword is sent my way, Meiya was already on her way with one in her hands. Sigh…

I did try to reach out to her during breakfast and got the silent treatment. I take my usual pose in front of her as she also takes her Mugen stance. After gazing at each other for some time she rushes at me.

To the left, parried. I move to my right and attack, she parries it, I send a slash at her waist and force her to take a step back.

We continue to spar, but she's putting more force in her slashes now. She's gritting her teeth, her eyes are once more filled with purple fire.

"… What's the matter, Shirogane? Are you not feeling motivated today?"

"Hey, stop that. I'm being serious here." I press her advance once more, forcing her to switch to a defensive form. Once more our blades are locked in a struggle.

"… Mugen Kidou."

"Huh?" The slight distraction let Meiya escape from my pressure. She again faces me, with her sword above her shoulder pointing at me in the bunny stance.

"Mugen Kidou. That's the name of my style. Shirogane, what's the name of yours?"

"… Name?" Maya-sensei did tell me she nicknamed it Unending Waterfall, and that she developed it due to her rivalry with Tsukuyomi-san, but… Should I call it that? I mean…

"What is it?!" She again comes at me, faster than before.

"… I don't know, I was just taught its principles." I dodge to my left, sending a slash at her shoulder.

"Really now?"

"Say, can you tell me what's up with you? This is no way to treat a 'fellow'." She scowls at me, again putting more force on her swings.

"Weren't you the one who said you were a UN soldier?" She forces me to take a step back as she comes at me with a downwards slash from my right.

"You're on the UN too."

"That's different! I'm here to-"

Gotcha. Her temper flared up and she loosened her posture for a second. I take a step back, pointing my sword backwards, preparing the upwards slash.

Meiya's blade went to greet the sun.

"Looks like it's another win for me." Thank God she's so easy to taunt.

"… Bested again." I gotta at least try to not make things worse.

"Good fight Mitsurugi." I offer her a handshake, but she returns a glare my way.

"Good fight? Do not mock me. I couldn't even graze you! What was good about it?!"

"That you did pressure me for a while? You are getting better, quickly at that."

"… Really?" Her aggressiveness slowly fades, she stops tightening her fists.

"Yeah. So, can we talk for a while? What was that about us being fellows?"

"I already told you." She goes to pick up her sword. Ignored again, what did I even expect?

As I leave my sword in the box and wait for the rest to finish, Meiya also comes back and leaves her sword in place.

At first she ignored me, but after a short while I felt her stare on me. I looked at her, she looked away. I remained watching her, eventually she tried to look at me again, and surprise filled her eyes when she saw me staring at her.

"Hey. You seem to want to ask something."

"I do not." I hold my chuckle down. She really looks funny when she gets upset like that.

"Then why were you staring?" I got a bit closer to her, she started playing with her tags.

"I was not."

"Mitsurugi, being honest here. What happened yesterday?"

"I won't intrude on your privacy ever again, forgive me for that." She answered fast and honestly, looking at me with clear eyes.

"I'll consider forgiving you if you explain to me what happened. Can you tell me why you got into my room?" She grimaces as she looks down.

"… I went to look for you during the alarm. I didn't find you, but when I was about to leave I saw a steel box on your desk. I…" She pauses for a while, grabbing a strand of hair and playing with it. "I opened it, and that sparked my curiosity. Then, after the base called off DEFCON 2, I returned to your room to… inspect it."

"Nice way of saying ransacking it." She bites her lower lip softly.

"Forgive me. I was too curious about you. Your swordplay and tactical knowledge are great, so I thought that I could find something that would confirm or deny whether you were on the American's side." Again with this. Sigh…

"And? What are you gonna do with that intel now?"

"What are you talking about? The books you had were all in Japanese, the uniform you had when we met was also of Japanese origin, even if I haven't heard of that brand." She slowly returns my gaze, small waves conflicting in her. "If… If it isn't something classified, could you tell me what does that steel box means? Why do you have another ID Card and that medal?"

"It's… a gift from Sensei."

"A gift?"

"Yeah, apparently the badge is some sort of commemorative of something. The ID card is for all the special missions she assigns me, I only use it when she calls me to her office. It's how I go to the lower floors when she needs me, like when we trained with the simulators." Necessary bullshit is necessary.

"Her… You can go to her office?!" She covers her mouth after shouting in a panic, and, after looking at the Instructor and confirming she didn't hear thanks to being away separating Chizuru and Kei yet again, she breathed a sigh.

"Yeah, how else am I supposed to report my progress? Though I only go there rarely, that's why I don't have the card with me at all times." Not a bad lie, if I say so myself.

"I see. So she considers you a 'Champion', huh? You are special after all." This time she didn't say it in with any sign of hostility, she's honestly praising me. Which is weird.

"So, what did you do when you found my sword?" Half closing her eyes and digging her gaze into the ground, she grabs the edge of her tank top tightly.

"When I got it in my hands I could tell it was a sword, but the cover felt familiar for some reason. When I removed it and took out the blade I…" Now her eyes close, lips twisting. Lowering her head as wrinkles fill her nose, she barely whispers out the words."… I fell to my knees. I couldn't believe my eyes, yet no matter how much I examined it, I could only reach one conclusion. You had the same kind of blade I do." She takes a deep breath and looks at me again. "Why did you have it? Who gave it to you? Were we supposed to work together? Doubt took hold of me, I even suspected you might have been a member of the Royal Guard sent to keep watch over me. And yet my doubt was unnecessary as you are my fellow, apparently." Finally got to the important part. Not that the rest was unimportant, but this is what I want to know the most.

"What's up with the fellow stuff? I have no idea what that means."

"… That's what I want to know. You're not on the Guard, right?" I nod at her. "And you don't know what the Mugen Kidou is?"

"… No." She narrows her eyes at me, getting just a tiny bit closer.

"Why is there doubt on your voice, Shirogane?" I know I'm playing with fire here, but I gotta get some answers.

"Because I feel kinda bad not knowing my style's name. You sound so proud of it, and here I am with not a clue." I look at the sky, now that I think about it I may never get a chance to finish my training. Maya-san might have never developed this style in this world, and even if she did, the chances of us training together are null.

"I see. It means that, just like me, you have the right to wield the blade."

"That's all?"

"Yes, what else could it mean? Having the blade is a great honor in and of itself after all." So it's just like an honorary title given to those who have katanas? Like, 'fellow swordsman' kind of thing?

"Huh, neat. Well, I know we aren't really on good terms, but I'll try to not get in your way anymore. I do not want to get yelled at by that 1st Lt. ever again. So, can you promise me you won't barge into my room again?" She looks straight at me and nods. I know she's honest, so I can trust her in this.

"You have my word. I won't intrude on your private quarters ever again. Well, may I ask you what did you… think of today's bout? Did you notice a difference?" She looks away, but her tone was no longer full of mines. Let's sail this boat to calmer waters.

"You put too much force on your swings. That's not a bad thing, but your strength is your speed to draw your blade, you should focus on that. You did fight better than your usual."

"I see. So, Shirogane… What are you going to do with your sword?"

"What do you mean, what? I'm gonna keep it hidden as I was doing, it's not like I can go around carrying a katana."

"Yes, indeed. But I was referring to… you know, using the Mi… your sword for… its intended purpose. I know we're not supposed to talk about it, but being fellows maybe we could share some insight with each other. What do you say?" She gives me a small smile, but that only raises questions within.

"Purpose? What are you talking about?" Meiya looks intensely at me, first scanning my face throughly and later furrowing her brows at me.

"You… do not know of its meaning?"

I'm pretty sure she isn't talking about the whole 'giving you the handguard' business here, so what is this about?

"Again, no idea what you're talking about."

"Do not be foolish! Don't tell me you-"

"Squad! Assemble!"

Our talk interrupted, we went to the Instructor. Meiya was once more staring blades at me.

"Squad, with this we've finished this morning's practice. You're all doing good times and slowly improving. However…" She briefly glares at Meiya. "I've heard some of you have been causing quite some trouble. If I hear about any more problems in this squad, all of you will receive a punishment harsher than anything I've given you until now. Understood? Dismissed!"

We salute and she goes her way. I've never seen her so pissed off. She may have lost quite some free time yesterday, so it's understandable.

"That was so scary! What do you think happened?" Tama said as we started making our way towards the PX.

"No idea. Did anything happen after the summons? By the way Takeru, where were you during the alarm?"

"In the lower floors, forced to do a special mission."

"Shirogane, you're still… working on those sims?" Chizuru changed her tone midway, sheathing her blade.

"Yeah. It's not like I can refuse an order from the XO."

"… You sure about that?" Kei came to my side on the left, almost bumping her shoulder with mine she stared at me. Saying nothing, just giving me her usual deep stare.

"Yeah, I was on a mission during the alarm. What about it?" Not a lie.

"… Nothing." She looks away and marches forward to the PX.

Not much else was said as we entered and got in line. Again I got half rations.

"So, guys. About homework…" Mikoto asked the girls for advice as we started to eat.

Chizuru chose to sit by my side for some reason and leaned close as she talked to me.

"Shirogane, can I ask you about the problem on page 87? What would be the best approach to defend the beach head?"

"Page 87? Oh, right." The island assault one, was it? "Support from the Ticonderoga should go first to the vanguard and then to the middle of the enemy force, let a small chaser force finish the stragglers that are too close, regroup and rebuild the line and keep the artillery support coming until the rest of the fleet arrive. The wincon isn't survival, it's annihilation. Don't bother pressing forward, use the artillery to keep the bulk of them as far away from the fronliners as you can, so that they can dispatch anyone who reaches the line without putting themselves in danger."

"Huh… Why are you not trying to expand the beach head? Wouldn't it be disadvantageous if your forces were surrounded?" I finish munching and after drinking some synth juice I continue speaking slowly.

"I got a Ticonderoga with me, that kind of fire is more than enough to keep the frontline safe, so long as a proper defense line is set. If you try to move forward you would have to spread the line, making it wider and thinner. And then you won't be able to provide fire support to all the line at the same time. By defending a smaller area you can create something of a bottleneck, which allows you to trim the amount of places you need to commit to artillery defense. So you won't have to choose between two different targets and risking your line to be breached. Remember that the goal is to protect the shore, not to defeat the aggressors."

"I see. Thanks for the advice." She gives me a small nod and continues to eat.

What's wrong with her now? Some days ago she was glaring at me with chainsaws instead of eyes and now she's being polite all of a sudden? Well, we just got scolded hard, she must be doing this to make it look as if we were on good terms, since we are being watched probably.

The rest of lunch and the afternoon lectures went as usual. Except Meiya kept staring at me, yet refused to answer when I called out to her. What's this about a purpose and why does she not want to tell me?

"Remember to read up on the questions you got wrong. Tomorrow we're doing more reading on combat scenarios at morning, so do be ready for that. We'll go to the shooting range for more practice during the afternoon. Dismissed!"

"Salute!" The Instructor leaves and we relax our posture.

"That was a good answer on the last one, Miki-san!"

"That's not true! I just got lucky, I didn't really-"

I leave towards the PX, I don't want to ruin Tama and Mikoto's talk by making the other three turn against me. I also don't like the stare Meiya's giving me right now. They followed closely after I left, and we again arrived together at the PX.

"So Shirogane-san, what are you doing this evening? Wanna play something?" Tama asks me as we all sit on the table.

Thanks, but I don't wanna ruin your games. I know the others will get on a bad mood if I'm there.

"No, I'm going to rest up. I am pretty tired today."

"Are you alright? Did you catch a cold?" Aww, your honest worry is heartwarming Tama.

"Nah, I just need some sleep that's all." Yesterday night I stayed playing with Kasumi again, and thanks to that my eyes hurt. I didn't realize how much strain it causes to look at a small screen for such a long time. She is getting better in CryRing, but F-Mega is just a no go for her.

Hm? Meiya, who was sitting to my side, bumped her feet on mine. I looked at her but she kept eating normally. Must have been just a coincidence.

"Shirogane, if you're free… Would you mind helping me in showing Yoroi some of the subjects we saw when she wasn't around?" This is weird. Why is Chizuru being nice all of a sudden? Just because of the scolding? Whatever, this is a nice chance to try to fix the bridge.

"Sure, why not?"

Ouch! This time Meiya hit my ankle a bit more strongly, so she is doing this on purpose. I look at her but she's eating without even looking at me. If she wants to say something she can just speak up. Or is she looking for a fight? What's up with her?

"Thank you Takeru! I really can't keep up with all of this." Mikoto beams at me and Chizuru.

"Don't mention it, Mikoto. It'll be a pleasure to help."

Ouch! Why is she hitting me?! What the hell is your problem? Why can't you just talk?!

"Mitsurugi, what about you?" I stare at her, letting some of my annoyance slip.

"I have not decided yet. I was thinking on going for a jog later." She slightly narrowed her eyes as she took a brief glance at me. So you don't want the others to know?

"Miki-san, what will you do?"

"Me and Ayamine-san are going to do a juggle competition today." Kei nods with a small smile on her face.

"Well, we all need a break every now and then. Then Shirogane, can I count on you to help me with Yoroi?"

"Sure." She smiles faintly before returning to her usual cold face. Meiya was glaring at me as she ate.

We finish our dinner and exit the PX together.

"Ayamine-san, you wait for a while. I'll go look for the bean bags." Tama dashes off towards the barracks.

"Well, I'll be going to the track field." Meiya said, clearly staring at me. I wink, which seems to startle her a bit, but then she returns a subtle nod before going her way.

Us three went to the library after picking up our notebooks on the barracks. Helping Mikoto was a piece of cake, since I know what she usually has trouble with and could break down the problems nicely for her. Unexpectedly, Chizuru then demanded my help too.

"So, I shouldn't press towards the canyon?"

"No, you'll get flanked when you have to split. Your numbers will work against you here."

"Takeru, you're so smart!"

"Hmm… That does seem like a good answer. Well, let's leave it at that for today." We close the books we were using and returned them to their respective shelves.

"Thanks a lot you two! I really got a lot of things sorted out." Mikoto's usual smile widened as we exited the library.

"Don't mention it. Glad I could help you."

"Well, it's kinda late so I'll be hitting the sack now. Good night, you two." And off she goes. Now let's go see what Meiya-

"Shirogane." Or not.

"What is it, Sakaki?" She adjusts her glasses and takes a second to speak again.

"Thanks for your help. It was a relief to have you here today."

"It was the obvious thing to do, helping a squadmate."

"Yes, of course." She stops, looks down, and continues. "Well, the CCSE is getting closer, so… Thanks for giving your all on our training. Good night." She slowly goes her way without waiting for a reply.

So… We cool now? Was a scolding all that was needed? No, she's just being polite. She probably still sees me as an American and she did mention the CCSE. Oh well, whatever.

Now then… What do I do about Meiya? This may be a trap, she might just be setting me up. There's almost no one on the track field at this hour, so if Tsukuyomi-san wanted to get rid of me…

As I was lost in thought, I saw Kasumi coming towards me on the hallway.

"Hey Kasumi. What's up?" She gets closer, signaling to my ear. I lower my head and she whispers in a very low tone.

"The Professor says she wants to test the new data you brought with the OS. Come with me please, we'll go to the sim room after lights out."

Sigh… I wanted some sleep, looks like that's a no go.

"Fine, I get it. But can I ask you a favor before we go?" She nods as she moves her bunny ears.

"What is it?"

"Can you see if Meiya is plotting something? She wanted me to go to the track field, and was very insistent on not saying it out loud. I dunno why she wanted to keep that a secret, but it's weird. Can you lend me a hand?"

"Yes. Shall we go now?"

"Can we? What if it's dangerous?"

"Don't worry, I'll contact the Professor if anything dangerous comes up." She takes a small communicator from one of her pockets.

"Ok, thanks a lot Kasumi."

We stealthily made our way to the track field, stopping at a door. Opening it slowly and peeking through the space, we saw Meiya jogging alone in the night.

"Can you do it from here?" She gives me a nod and closes her eyes.

Only the distant sound of Meiya's boots hitting the ground can be heard now. After a short while, Kasumi moves back from the door.

"So, what did you see?"

"… She's weird." Kasumi's shoulders and bunny ears drop as a long sigh escapes her.

"What do you mean?"

"She's thinking about you. She's angry, sad, glad, all at the same time. I think she doesn't even know how to feel. But there is no one else here, and she isn't plotting anything that would harm you."

"I see. Then it should be safe to go talk with her, right?"

"I don't know. She is very unstable now."

"Well, if anything happens, just go and pull me away." She gives me a nod.

I go into the track field, Meiya notices me and stops jogging.

"Yo, sorry to make you wait."

"I thought you were not going to come, to be honest." She wipes the sweat off her forehead as she approaches me.

"So, care to tell me what this is about?" She folds her arms as usual as she scans my face.

"Surely you already know. Shirogane, do you really not know the meaning behind the Minaru Kamui?"

"I told you that I don't already. Is this about how you give the handguard to someone to tell them that-"

"N-No! It's not about that! How can you know of that and not of what I'm asking you?" Her narrowed eyes were again showing hints of purple embers in them, which contrasted with the slight red of her cheeks.

"I just heard about it once, that's all. So, I don't know what's the hidden meaning of the blade. What's up with that?" She closes her eyes for a while, and after she opens them up again they seem to have regained their usual shine.

"… You told me someone gave that blade to you. And that you couldn't tell me who that person was because you were forbidden of speaking about it. Am I correct?"

"Yeah. So, what about-"

"And you seemed terribly composed when you spoke to the 1st Lt. too." She isn't listening. How I hate it when she gets like this. "While I am thankful that you spoke up, it only raised more questions. She scolded us both, allowed you to keep your blade, and referred to us as fellows. Surely you see what that means, right?"

… No, I don't. I mean, I can't tell her that Tsukuyomi-san might have been lying, because I'm supposed to be a walking corpse to them. But Meiya mentioned her mission yesterday, she came at me more than seriously today, went out of her way to mention the Mugen Kidou, seemed to be nice until I told her I don't know of this 'meaning', and called me out here to speak about it alone. No, she tried to make it seem as if I was the one approaching her, since Tsukuyomi-san ordered her to not involve herself with me. And she said having the blade made just like… Wait a sec…

"Are you trying to say that… they're giving me the same treatment as you?" She nods as small pyres of fire resurface in her eyes.

"Indeed. I also have a Minaru Kamui and I also cannot speak of my mission with anyone. However, I was… fated to walk this path, one might say. Shirogane, I am not going to pry into your life anymore but there is something I wish to know, so I ask you to be honest with me."

I give her a nod as I gulp. What is she gonna ask? To go talk with Tsukuyomi-san for confirmation?

"Were you aware of this? That you were seen as a servant of the Shogun?"

"I had no idea that the blade carried that meaning, for real." She relaxes a bit, the fire slowly leaving her eyes.

"I see. Then, I suppose you cannot speak about who gave you the blade not because of a mission you were given but, because of a personal reason?"

"Pretty much. I told you I'm not on the Guard. So, is the Minaru Kamui something that's given to people that are being scouted into the Royal Guard?"

"Yes, something of the sort. Its meaning is more deep, but there is no reason to explain it. So you are not a fellow of mine." She again sharpens her eyes at me. Now what?!

"Look Mitsurugi, I might not be a 'fellow' but I'm your squadmate. I'm fighting seriously with you, and I did came to talk with you despite what you did, despite me not doing anything to deserve this hostility. Being more civil with me isn't out of your reach, I'm sure." Unable to suppress my frown, I simply spit out some poison.

"I know that my recent actions speak volumes of how I saw you, and I do regret them to a certain extent." She slowly said, eyes closed and arms folded. "However, leaving that blade in your hands is something I cannot do. Now that I know you are not one of us, and that the 1st Lt. misunderstood your standing, I must once again ask you to hand it over before charges are pressed against you." She takes a step closer, staring right at me with those sapphire blades of her.

… You know? I should be getting intimidated or something, but… seeing her so shining again instead of filled with paranoia… She does look like my Meiya now. Like the one who struggled with her allegiance during the coup, the one who was willing to die to save a single old lady. I bet that whatever the hell the Minaru Kamui is meant to represent, it's something tied to this Japan's culture and she's protecting that from an evil 'murican from her point of view. I don't feel hatred coming from her, for now at the least.

"So, I suppose you want me to go talk again with the 1st Lt. right?"

"Yes, I wish to clear this misunderstanding. You came willingly to talk with me, you don't seem to be lying. Despite coming from America and my recent actions towards you, I can see you're being honest about this. So, I'd like you to return the blade to the Empire before you suffer the consequences of having it in your hands."

"… Okay, fine. But I want someone else to be there too, in case the guards try to harm me." She lifts her chin, sharpening her sapphires. Of course she would be offended.

"Do you really think the Guard would-"

"To someone they see as an American? Yes, they would. I mean, you also see me as a filthy 'murican, don't you?"

"I… well… I mean, I know you're Japanese." She looks away. That's all I needed to know.

"It's cool. Whatever. I know you don't trust me so-"

I stopped in the middle of my phrase as I heard something from behind as Meiya widened her eyes. Kasumi was quickly coming to my side. That means… something dangerous is getting closer.

"Yashiro? Oh, do you have another mission? At this hour?"

"I don't know. Hey Kasumi, what's-"

"Let's go. They're coming." She grabs my arm and starts pulling me.

"Hey Kasumi, stop that. What is it?" She shakes her head and continues pulling me. I feel a hand on my shoulder.

"Yashiro, I'm in the middle of something here with Shirogane. Could you please-"

"You should run too. The red guard is coming, and she's angry."

Meiya's eyes shot wide open, I see her tremble for a split second. Using that brief instant, Kasumi starts pulling me away again with me actually following her this time. I do not want to be on Tsukuyomi-san's sight when she's angry.

Shortly after, we made it back inside with Meiya following us closely, however Kasumi took a different hallway, and before Meiya could react we were out of her sights. I heard her calling for us, but I think it's better to put some distance with her. If Tsukuyomi-san finds us together again she'll get angrier. I'll apologize tomorrow to her.

"Kasumi, it's alright. You don't have to keep pulling."

"No." She grabs my arm tighter and keeps trying to pull.

I pet her head and return to my usual walking speed, and after some seconds she stops pulling and we walk together the rest of the way towards the elevator on B5F.

… She didn't let go of my arm, though.

---

Some minutes later.

(Roof.)

[Meiya]

---

"I told you to not approach him!" Tsukuyomi berated me as she hasn't done in a long time.

I managed to get to the barracks without running into her, but Tomoe was standing guard outside my room. She took me to the roof after contacting Tsukuyomi on her communicator, and here we are now.

"I didn't approach him. He came on his own to-"

"Meiya-sama, your feet were rather busy during dinner today." She noticed? I was trying to be subtle about it too. "Did you enjoy the feel of his legs by your side, perhaps?" W-What?!

"Tsukuyomi! I would never do something so unsightly!"

"Then, care to explain what were you doing?" She takes a step closer, drilling her gaze on me. My throat constricts itself again, barely allowing me to squeeze out a reply.

"I was… only trying to… have a talk with him."

"This is the last time I shall overlook your misconduct. Stain your honor one more time and I shall report all of this to her. Was I clear?"

"Yes, I understand. However, he told me he wasn't a fellow. He himself said that-"

"Silence!" I flinch back at her sudden outburst.

"T-Tsukuyomi?"

"That's enough. Perhaps, are you insinuating you do not trust in my judgment?"

"No, of course not! But he himself said it. That he… isn't one of us." I lower my gaze, unable to look at her in the eye.

"Could you answer that same question if he were the one asking?"

"Huh?"

"If he asked about your past, what could you tell him? How does he know you're with us?" What is she saying?

"Tsukuyomi, I'm… well, just looking at me should be enough."

"And yet, that's all there is to it. You just might be similar to her, by a genetic coincidence. How can you prove to him that you're on his side?" How can I… Wait, is she telling me to not judge him? Is he still being evaluated?

"But he cannot explain where he comes from or-"

"And could you explain to him where you come from, Meiya-sama?" Where is she going with these questions? She should know that I'm…

…

"… Tsukuyomi, are you saying… he's… the same as…"

"I believe I've already reprimanded you enough. You have been warned. Please, behave appropriately from now on."

She leaves without even waiting for my reply, without even stopping as I called out to her. I gaze alone at the sky, in the silence of the rooftop.

She was trying to tell me our situations are similar ones. He cannot explain to me why he has the blade just like how I can't explain that to him, and then he has to lie just like I have to about my origins and standing. We couldn't risk anyone hearing us by coincidence. But… An American, being admitted into the Royal Guard? A Japanese that willingly joined the UN?

Yet, he knows the Mugen Kidou even if he isn't aware of it. Perhaps, is that another lie to avoid a leak? He's better than me, even if he doesn't know of it.

Like the shifting clouds up above, my feelings clash against each other. Holding my elbows tightly, I go towards the fence, looking at the grounds below me. The wind blows, yet what makes me shiver comes from within.

Someone who Tsukuyomi watches over… that's in a similar situation as me… who was handpicked to wield a Minaru Kamui… and trained in the Mugen Kidou…

Someone who… could replace me.

---

November 15th. 05 :51 PM.

(Shooting Range.)

[Takeru]

---

"FIRE!" We all shoot towards the target. Let's see… not dead center, but bullseye. Nice one, myself. Internal high five! I got all my shots to the bullseye today, I definitely got better with a gun this time around.

During this week the girls got a little tiny bit more polite with me. Chizuru stopped looking bothered and started asking me for advice again, albeit very rarely. Tama and Mikoto seemed to be less nervous during lunch and dinner now, and Kei simply ignored me.

Chizuru and Kei are probably still suspicious of me, but they were trying to not let it show. For the sake of the CCSE, probably. I did my part and tried to lend them a hand when they asked me something. At least I can have peace for a while, I don't have any desire to spark another fight.

Meiya, on the other hand, reverted to how she was before. Didn't do much conversation with me, didn't reply when I approached her. I did try to apologize the next day, but she dismissed me saying I had no reason to. Oh well, I can't stop her from being suspicious and I can't risk myself and go to talk with Tsukuyomi-san about the Minaru Kamui.

That night however…

When Sensei showed me the data from the Battle of Niigata I was floored. I didn't notice due to either the adrenaline or tension, but I was moving 23% faster than the Shiranuis despite using an inferior TSF. Sensei said that I got a 54% increase in mobility and dexterity to the standard that the prototype was supposed to have. I also had an accuracy of 87%, which is probably my highest score ever. All of this with a refurbished 2nd Gen TSF, imagine if we could improve the Shiranui with these babes! Sadly, there's no money to make another Shiranui Second and all the Type-94-1C that are the base for the Second are in control of the Shogunate's elite forces.

Well, at least I know I have one TSF I'm comfortable with. I just need to get a blade sheath for a PB Sword and that's all. Maybe I could get our usual rifles that have both types of ammo instead of the lighter ones that only have one type. If I could have again 36mm and 120mm ammo at the same time… Oooh, I shudder just thinking about it. Then again, I'd like to know what that yellow thing was. Sensei said it was top secret and that she couldn't tell me, so who knows what that thing actually is. I mean, it did kinda melt the external armor of the TSFs in… What? Three minutes? That's nuts.

"Squad! I have an announcement for you!" The Instructor addresses us as the girls where looking at the targets. "This Saturday we decided to give you a break from your training and let you go on a vacation to a tropical island to the south." CCSE, here you are. F-ing finally.

"Instructor… this is the CCSE, right?" Chizuru asked weakly, her nervousness apparent in her tone and eyes as the coming damage a kitchen will suffer whenever Meiya steps in it.

"Aww, you just had to ruin it. Yes Sakaki, this is your second and last chance to pass this test. You all will be allowed to take three items with you, but no weapons, food, or combat gear. I want you to decide your items by tomorrow. Dismissed!"

"Salute!"

So we can take stuff with us this time? Aside from curry powder, what could I take with me? Hmm…

"Squad! I'd like us to agree on what we're taking to the CCSE." Chizuru addressed us, signaling us to get together.

Maybe I could take an empty bottle, to get some fuel for the boat just in case shit hits the fan.

"I was thinking of taking some sort of sheet, to cover us during the night and protect us in case it rains." Meiya gave a nice suggestion, but there's already a tarp in Point B.

Wait, are we going to go to the same island? Everything has been kinda different this time, they may send us to a harsher island this time around.

"I'll take some tools, in case someone decides to blow it again." Ayamine spoke throwing mud at Chizuru.

"Thank you VERY much for your suggestion." Chizuru answered waving an axe in every word. At it again, huh?

Then again, taking another bottle is not a bad idea. I could find another source of water on the island, and that would give me more since from the start we are given less than what we should have so that's not a bad call.

"I was thinking of taking a small pouch with bandages and stuff. I know we can't take much gear with us, but some small tissues and some alcohol for injuries would do wonders. Also I wanted to take some synthetic incense to deal with the insects and arachnids we may find." Survivalist number one, nobody could outmatch you in that Mikoto.

So maybe I should take some cloth with me, too? Just in case?

"Tamase, what about you?"

"Um… I was thinking on taking some binoculars with me. Our kits already have both a small pot and some fire starters to cook, but last time we didn't have binoculars." We have the lens of the big as F rifle for that. Unless we go to a different island, of course.

"Well thought, Miki-san!"

"Shirogane? What do you think?" Chizuru stared at me as she played with one of her ponytails.

"Some curry powder and an empty bottle. Haven't decided what the third thing is gonna be."

"Curry powder? Why would you take that with you?" Tama seemed puzzled at my choice.

"I heard stories about the CCSE where people had to eat snakes and toads, so I thought that taking some powder would make them less disgusting to eat." Mikoto makes a disgusted face as she groans. Sorry about that.

"Yes, I've… heard about that too." Chizuru closes her eyes and spoke slowly. Bet you had to eat some during the first time around too.

"You do think ahead in a very peculiar way, Shirogane. As expected of our special member." Meiya smiled, yet her cold tone was apparent. Why is she so angry, yet refuses to tell me why? She never, ever, did this while we were together. Then again, different world.

"Ahem, given the training we've received until now, we can all agree that this CCSE is going to be very hard. We will need to be on top form for it, let's discuss what's on our minds during lunch."

We all then go to the PX. This feels kinda weird, even if Tama and Mikoto were always nice with me, I don't know for how long Chizuru will keep up the act or if she's being honest since she's keeping her poker face all the time.

I get the usual half rations again. If I didn't have to save my world I'd be so done with this. I'll have a talk with Sensei about this when I come back from the island, since she's engrossed in the theories for the time being.

Meiya sat in front of me and with her were Chizuru and Mikoto. The other two were to my left. The blue samurai cleared her throat as we all sat, and started talking as she got our attention.

"I would like to discuss our pairings. Going from our last experience, there's the chance that we will be split during the test at some point. Since we probably won't know the full layout of the island when this happens, I suggest we decide on some pairs now, based on our synergies." Meiya was being serious about this, in the end I never knew how their last CCSE went.

"I don't wanna pair up with glasses." Kei answered almost instantly.

"The feeling is mutual." Chizuru replied with the same edge. Careful, you two.

"Umm… I don't really mind who I'm paired with, but since I'm the one with the worst stamina I'll have to take care of the targets that are closer." Tama said timidly as usual while she poked at her food.

"Then… How about this?" Chizuru raised on finger and pointed it at Tama. "One possible solution is to have me and Tamase together, she'll cover my back and look for traps while I'm the one that 'protects' her from danger. I have adequate strength to be able to manage by myself just fine in case we need to use force for something." Stopping for a second, she points to Mikoto and Kei. "Yoroi could go with Ayamine, to help her deal with the traps and use any long range weapon you may find. Also to stop her from eating raw stuff and fix any injuries she may sustain." She then points to me and Meiya. "Last, we have the two with the most endurance. Mitsurugi and Shirogane could go to the farthest targets, and since both are nimble and strong I'm sure you won't have problems." I catched Meiya drawing a small smile before returning to her serious expression.

"Hmm… We could also go for me and Tamase, Mitsurugi and Yoroi, and last Special-kun and the leader." Ayamine brings another option to the table. Chizuru and Meiya didn't like it much.

"Ayamine, why are you suggesting that?" Chizuru questioned her as she started to eat.

"Me and Tamase are a good pair, both of us are equally good when it comes to disabling traps and have different skill sets. Yoroi and Mitsurugi are similar to that, one is more of a supporting soldier while the other is the one that gets shit done. And I just want to see you suffer dealing with Special-kun." Oh, here we go again. Kei is just smirking at her while Chizuru is holding back a retort.

"You two, please keep it down. Then, how about we discuss two teams of three members?" Meiya took the kayak to another river before the rapids came.

They kept talking between them about different teams and their merits and bad points. I think we should be talking on the what and how, instead of focusing on who we're going with.

"Shirogane? Is something the matter?" Meiya was looking at me with an accusing glare. What's up with her?

"Nothing. Just thinking."

"Then I would like to hear your thoughts on the matter. Do you have anyone you want to pair up with?"

"No, not really." She narrows her eyes as she strokes her hair.

"Hmm… Then let me ask you something else. What do you expect from this CCSE? How do you think it'll go?" Sharp, relentless questions. What did I even do? I have been trying to be nice, despite how I feel like it's a waste of time with you.

"I expect the place to be full of traps. Other than that, I dunno. It'll depend on the weather and the terrain."

"A nice observation. Then you do not mind who we pair you with?" Chizuru was looking at me quite intensely. For all I care, it can be any of you.

"No, it can be anyone. I don't really mind."

"Alright. Nice to know that. Now then… Anything else? Does anyone have any suggestions or anything?" Chizuru asked to the table, resting an elbow on it.

"I do." Mikoto raised her hand, really slow. "I think we should take our time to deal with the targets this time. Since technically it's going to be either an infiltration or escape mission, if we destroy the objectives too fast it would ruin our score. If we get a low score we won't pass the exam." So you can fail the thing if you screw up, even if you make it to the destination point.

"Point taken. Anything else?"

"I have one too." I wait for them to stop chewing and start speaking. "When we make it to the targets, we should not infiltrate them during daylight. The place is supposed to be dangerous so let's play our part accordingly. No sane soldier would try to sabotage a facility in the middle of the afternoon." Meiya did not like my suggestion and arms folded directed her gaze at me.

"Oho, quite the analyst aren't you? Then what shall we do if the place is brimming with traps? We would benefit from having light to disable them." Her bothered tone was showing her inner annoyance at my words, despite the smile on her face.

"We can infiltrate them at dawn break, where there is light and there's supposed to be less security compared to early morning." She tries to retort but closes her mouth shut. Giving a nod, she acknowledges my advice.

"I see. That does make sense." Despite saying that, Meiya still looked a bit bothered.

"Good advice, Shirogane. I think we should do just that. Alright, is that all?" Chizuru looked over the table and we all nod. "Well, all that's left is to get ready."

Seems like everything's done here. I already told them about the mistake I did last loop when I was trying to rush stuff. They're making small talk, so I guess I'll first get ready and then go rest for a while with Kasumi.

"Thanks for the food."

"Ah, wait Shirogane." Meiya called out as I got my tray.

"What?"

"We have something to talk with you about. Do you have the time?" Her sharp eyes betrayed her calm tone. What's this now?

"What's up?" I sit again. I can only hope this isn't about me being a 'foreigner' again. Chizuru clears her throat this time and looks at me.

"Shirogane, I know we have had our… differences. But I'll be relying on your talents these next days in the CCSE. Let's pass it together." Chizuru gave me a serious look as she adjusted her glasses.

"No hard feelings, Sakaki. I'll do my best." She answers with a smile.

"If you don't we'll kill you." Kei's words were full of venom. At this time, really?

"Ayamine, please don't. We don't need you two to start another fight at this moment."

"Like you're one to talk." They stare at each other, quite intensely. Kei gives me a look I don't really understand, and with a disgusted face she leaves the table.

I suppose she hates me. She was the most vocal one when I showed them the Game Guys. Can't really expect them to simply be civil with a 'traitor' because they have to work with him. Honestly, the foreigners that work here must be so stressed, I'm surprised that Alt. IV was even assigned to the Empire in the first place.

Meiya and Chizuru heave a sigh of relief as she leaves.

"Thank the Holy Emperor she left. We don't need another lecture from the Instructor right before the test." Meiya relaxed her shoulders and leaned back a bit.

"Ayamine never backs down on what she believes is right. I know I'm not one to talk, but she still seems to hold doubts towards you Shirogane. I would leave her alone if I were you during the test." Chizuru tells me as her eyes immerse themselves on her tray.

"Can't force her to be nice with me, it's okay."

"I'm sure we will make it through. I know I also have given you quite some trouble, but allow me to say this. I will do all I can to make us pass this exam. Can I count on you to do the same, Shirogane?" Meiya, why do you doubt me so much? Do I really look like such a dick to you guys?

"We all are going to do our best! Right, Shirogane-san?" Tama spoke up, barely lifting her gaze from her tray. Mikoto also smiled my way despite choosing to remain silent. Thanks a lot, really.

"That's the idea, I do not want to fail this. Well, I'll take my leave."

Mikoto and Tama gave me a small smile as I got up, Chizuru retained her usual serious expression. Meiya however was drilling those sapphires into me again. If only you would talk with me…

When I got to my room I started preparing for the travel in the submarine. I took the Minari Kamui and held it close to my chest for awhile. This is another important step, I can't mess this up. I don't care what the hell Meiya thinks I am, I'm passing this and getting commissioned along all of you.

Now, let's see. The curry powder, the bottle and the blanket. I write that down in the paper we were given to present the stuff we wanted to take, I'll go file it in a while. I grab the metal box and look at the medal and the GR Card, this is for all of you too. To get to officially pilot a TSF again. One step at a time, I'll fix all these causal leaks.

Well, let's take a shower. After that, I'll go present that paper and then I'll hang out for a while with Kasumi. Tomorrow before noon we have to get on the submarine, so sadly we can't play until late. Though, she must also be busy helping Sensei with the theories somehow.

I enter the bathroom and close my eyes, enjoying the warm water falling on me. We will travel until we reach the island non stop, so I only hope nothing happens during the way.

Muddy Water Moody Hearts

Chapter 16: Muddy Water/Moody Hearts

---

November 17th. 3:11 PM.

(Yokohama Base. Runway 1.)

[Yuuko]

---

"Raise rifles! Fire!" One of the officers gave the order and several gunshots were heard.

All the staff present were saluting the three flags that represented the losses of our members during the Niigata Incident. Of course, we couldn't say they died during that so officially they died during a test run.

Eiko Higurashi, Ayu Daikuuji, Mayu Tamano. We lost three valuable members of the A-01 squad, I cannot imagine what would have happened if I hadn't sent Shirogane along with them. Thankfully he's out there making sure we get Squad 207B ready to join Squad A-01, but still…

I only hope you don't let your guard down. The CCSE's obstacles were decided a month ago so there was next to nothing I could do to aid Shirogane. I suppose I should trust in him overcoming this if he is to play the role I need him for. After all, High Command was suffering a lot of pressure this time so there was little room for modifications to the plan. Considering your warning of Alt. V and the elections next year I'm not surprised they're trying to keep the pigeons inside the cage.

Don't do anything reckless, Shirogane. If I had warned him, I'm sure he would have tried to take some weapon with him. Even if it goes against what I promised him, I have to leave him in the dark to avoid people to get suspicious of him. Even if Shirogane is supposed to be my bodyguard, he's still a trainee according to the records so he shouldn't have access to this kind of intel. Furthermore, if he for some reason were to fail, I can still assign him as my assistant anyways and have him fight as the Viking.

The ceremony is finished, and all personnel returns to their duties. I take one last look at the flags, squinting my eyes one last time the faces and voices that no longer were with us, before I exhaled through my nose and slowly turned around. The Valkyries slowly came towards me, most of them still hanging their heads.

"Vice Commander, should we go to the briefing room immediately?" Isumi addresses me with no longer a hint of sadness in her tone.

"Yes, I know your squad is not on top form but we still need to start this project. I'll be waiting." I quickly make my way to our briefing room.

It's time we start the testing of the XM3, I'll use the Valkyries as additional samples to gather data. Since I'll be focused on these theories for the foreseeable future I need to take care of this now, especially now that I have to rely on her for the second one.

Once I reach the room, Piatiff comes up to me.

"Vice Commander, I received word from Y about the matters you discussed." Finally, it took your sweet time to answer my call.

"Alright, let's go inside. You can tell me in detail there." We enter the room and I sit down. It's rare for Chief Yoroi to take so long to answer, let's see what I got. "Tell me, what did he answer to my petitions?"

"He said he found no intel about Cadet Shirogane and refused to divulge anything about Captain Takamura."

"So he refused. Not unexpected, but more straightforward than I thought he'd be. Any word on their reactions to the testing the Blood squad has been doing?"

"He said that the Shogun was most pleased with the results she heard from them, and Her Highness would like to make a formal agreement for the licensing and producing rights." Fast as always, damn royalty. For all I know, Takamura might even take the railgun with her by force once we finish it.

"Remind me, the Blood squad was testing the F-4J variations of our new tech right?"

"Yes, ma'am. Engine 0460-NE-TH3, Jump Units 311-ZEU-I0, and radars and sensors V-C834-URI." Ugh, she had to use the codenames. I gave them nicknames for a reason, we made so many prototypes and diagrams that I no longer remember which is which.

"Then we'll make a deal for those models only. The improved variations that were used on Shirogane's F-15J will be released as a different batch, and will be out of our deal. Of course, the new armor and antenna designs are also out of the deal." I won't show them all my cards, if he refused to give me any intel whatsoever under the pretense that she's a noble is all I needed to hear. Time to put up the firewall.

"Yes, ma'am. Allow me to inform you that the revised OS has already been installed on all the TSFs of the A-01 STF. According to the checks it should be working flawlessly."

"Perfect. Has Shirogane's F-15J been repaired already?"

"Yes, it's back to full functionality."

"We'll use the data on its computer along the spare parts I got to make a whole new TSF. I already gave the orders to the engineering team, but make sure that they stay in Hangar 90 during the process. I obtained all the data I could get on the Active Eagle, so I'll leave the Chief Engineer on charge of this. I want a daily report at 7 PM about the progress of this project."

"Yes, ma'am!" Since she's a foreigner I know she won't betray me to the Empire or America. At least I have some people I can rely on here.

We already have the tech tested to make a trial for mass production, with this all the F-4J and F-15J on the base will get a great boost in performance and will gain some stealth. Once we roll out the XM3 our firepower will be at its highest level. This will make some people happy, but now with this Takamura's arrival in a few days and Yoroi's answers I'm convinced the Shogun is only using us. The days where the UN and the Empire cooperated with each other seem to be at an end.

So, if I can develop our own brand of the F-15 using Shirogane's data, I'm sure the UN will give me much more support than before. Especially since most of the units that are fighting on Africa and on the Far East Frontline are F-15 variations, aside from the soviet machines of course.

Hopefully that will be enough to placate Her Purpleness, since all these new toys will be recorded as Japanese inventions. Doubt she will start a frontal assault on us, but with the Royal Guard behind her… If they come at us with all their Type-00 we won't be able to hold the line. Thanks to their policies, we can't have any TSF that isn't made in Japan. How would I like to get some Typhoons or even some Super Hornets, but I'm stuck with Shiranuis for my best squad. The only 3rd Gen TSF that is incompatible with any and all other pieces of hardware.

I believe that Shirogane's F-15 will end up being better than the Shiranuis we have, even with the XM3 he had there's no argument that his mech was still more nimble thanks to the upgraded parts. If the Empire would have given me some Type-00C I wouldn't be complaining, but thanks to their backwards way of thinking they refuse to give even one to anyone.

Isumi and the rest of the squad arrive. All of them salute me, how many times do I have to tell them to drop the formalities with me?

"Valkyries, let's get right to the point. From now on, during the evening, you will be testing a new OS for TSFs that has been in the works for some time now. Its prototype was used on the F-15J that joined you on the Niigata Invasion. I want you all to do your best during these testings. You will also have some special training on some new simulators I developed, in which you'll take some other training aside from the new OS's testing. Isumi, you'll be in charge of the drills. 1st Lt. Suzumiya, I want a daily report at 7 PM. The rest, break it down as much as you want. The more bugs and issues you find, the better. Of course, this is a secret mission. Not a single word gets out to anyone other than me, not even to the CO or High Command. Any questions?" 2nd Lt. Suzumiya quickly raises her hand and I nod her way.

"Vice Commander, will the pilot of the F-15 join us for the testings?" Oho, looks like you got yourself a fan Shirogane.

"No, the Viking currently undergoing a different mission. As I said before, that pilot is my personal bodyguard so do not expect the Viking to join this unit, in the short term at the least. Anything else?" Isumi raise her hand this time.

"Vice Commander, I have two questions. First, what kind of trainings do you wish us to perform?"

"All kinds. From urban fights, to infiltrations, to hive missions. I want a complete testing of this OS. Of course, in due time we will do some live tests with it. As for the new sims, just use them and get a feel on them. You'll have to go to the underground for these tests, but I expect you to be pleasantly surprised by them." If only those girls had agreed to train with Shirogane. Well, it's their loss. I want some data on that, and I want to see if the Valkyries can get as good as Shirogane by playing that 'Valgern-On' game.

"Understood. Then, due to the losses during the Niigata Invasion we no longer have enough Vanguards. How should we modify our formation, in your opinion?" I sense her worry in her voice, even if she is hiding it behind a poker face. The members of Squad 207 that joined the Valkyries just completed their first mission, they're not ready to take the position of Storm Vanguard.

"I know that sending someone on their second mission as a Vanguard is madness, but those are the cards we have been dealt. All members of Squad 207A did a good job, I'll let you decide who the partner of 1st Lt. Hayase will be. Any other questions?" And now Hayase raises her hand. What is today? Why do they have so many questions?

"Vice Commander, I wanted to ask… How did you predict the movements of the BETA? Do we have that technology with us?" Oh, so that's it. I forgot about that with the theories and the negotiations with the Shogunate.

"That's classified intel. And it's not like we predicted all of their movements, we didn't expect the Forts to be so full of the lower strains. Also, it was the first time they had Laser-Class in them. Now, next question. Anyone?"

Now, it seems that nobody has any more questions. I dismiss them and then go to my office, where Yashiro was waiting for me.

"Good afternoon, Professor. The scanning has been done. The list is ready."

"Well done, Yashiro. So did you identify all the spies in the base?"

"I think so. Many people were glancing towards the ceremony, and there were many whispering to try and learn what actually happened. But the ones that wanted that intel not out of curiosity or sadness, but with desire to profit from it… I have them all marked here. They're just ten."

"That's still a lot of people. Well, I'll give the order for them to be… sent on a very cruel mission to the frontlines." Yashiro shuddered at my words as a fearful expression flooded her face.

"What will you do with them?"

"Well, we do need more 'volunteers' for the live testing of the Yellow Dust, right?" She twitched with a horrified look on her eyes, as if a circuit board she was working on gave her a discharge.

"Professor, human experimentation is illegal." I know that already.

"They are going to be executed anyways, what's the harm in making them be useful one last time?"

"That is torture. You shouldn't do it. There's plenty of live BETA to test the chemical on." She was shooting an angry glare at me as she kept moving her ears up and down.

"We still need data on how it affects humans."

"I do know that. However…"

Then, the door to my office opens and… Ugh, her.

"Hi, Yuu-chan. I got the results of the analysis of those Shiranui."

"Motoko-nee, how many times do I have to tell you to not call me that? Also, knock the damn door before entering. And don't bring your smoke in here." I swear, she does it on purpose every damn time. She knows I hate the smell of tobacco, and yet she always comes here with a recently lit cigarette.

"Yeah, whatever. Here's the report, it's now 2% less deadly."

"2%? All our work for months just for a 2%?"

"What did you expect? They were in contact with the gas for around two minutes, it's actually amazing their jump units didn't melt too." I know we are on uncharted territory here, using G-Elements to make chemical weapons, but to see so little progress is disheartening.

"No, you're right. How was the data from the BETA?"

"No changes, they still only get stunned for around five minutes. We would need to concentrate the liquid more to make the effects either last more or be more severe, but if we do that forget about anyone close from surviving."

"We don't even have enough G-Elements to make proper testing in the first place. I'll be handing you some more live samples to test on, remember to be careful with them. Also, tonight I want to have a talk with you, there's some papers I want you to read." I'm sure that the other world's Motoko had a hand in that second theory Shirogane gave me, only her could have helped the other me with all those psychological matters. She is truly an eminence when it comes to the human body, especially the brain.

"I know that, I'll be careful with the dolls. And what are the papers about? Are you going to finally introduce me to that Shirogane?"

"No, how many times do I have to tell you? Shirogane is my bodyguard. I'm not lending him to anyone. You just want to examine his brain, don't you?"

"And his blood, cells, natural immunities. If he is keeping up with you he's someone worth studying." You make it sound as if I were some kind of monster.

"Maybe when he gets back, I might introduce you two if you help me with my problem. I'll go gather the dolls, you go on ahead and ready the chamber."

"Fine, fine. Don't worry, Yuu-chan. We are making progress, so don't stress yourself over this."

"Chief Researcher Kouzuki, please stop calling me that." I try to glare at her, but she only smiles at me. I'll never be able to deal with any of you two.

"Ooh, so scary. Well, Vice Commander Yuu-chan I'll be on my way. Bye!" And with a half-hearted salute she leaves the room.

Seriously, why do they always tease me like that? Sigh… No matter what I do, they always have that attitude towards me. It's good that they haven't changed, but it's still annoying. Especially when I know Motoko-nee is only here to support me, stop teasing me if you know I don't like it.

"Professor… Are you really going to send the spies to the chamber?" Yashiro asked with a trembling voice.

"Technically, they broke their oath to the UN by taking part in multiple political actions. So we are just deciding their punishment. And if you have any mercy for them in your heart, remember that they won't hesitate to kill you or me if they were ordered to do so."

"I know… It's just that…" She hangs her head, clearly conflicted with our current situation.

"It's on my hands, Yashiro. You do not have to tag along if you don't want to." I turn around and leave, towards the Command Room.

Yashiro soon follows with her eyes glued to the ground.

---

Same Day. 9:16 AM.

(Tokyo. Imperial Palace.)

[Yuuhi]

---

"So the rumors were true then?"

"Yes, Your Highness. Someone did exert some pressure on both the Minister of Defense and some members of the Parliament for some reason." Maya was making a pained expression.

This is a grave violation to our political accord. I am the only one the Minister of Defense should obey, and the members of the Parliament should not be influenced by members of the other branches of our power.

"I suppose this is connected to what Yoroi had reported? The restart of the railgun project in Yokohama?"

"That's what he concluded, Lt. Colonel Iwaya also had the same thoughts." I'm glad to see some people on the Ministry of Defense are still on my side, even if it only brings hardships their way.

"I see. What amount of funds were taken from the Kyoto Project?"

"Around 20%, however some workers were fired as well."

Sigh… These men will never understand. What are they even trying to accomplish? What could possibly be gained from making our civilian's lives worse and ruining the restoration of the Capital? What could be worth taking such a daunting road as to hamper the restoration, knowing the nobility would certainly inquire into the matter? I am simply at an utter absence of answers.

"Give word to the MDF that I order more patrols in the civilian districts. Their security and wellbeing should be their priority, do not let anyone interfere with the repairs and maintenance or the distribution of food and medicine, even if they are from the Guard." I know that the army is not obligated to follow my orders now, but I hope they can perform this duty for me. It's frustrating, I feel like a puppet with its strings cut, left with no option than to further fall into stillness.

"Y-Your Highness! The Royal Guard would never go against your wishes!"

"Maya, you know that some of them bear quite the strong grudge towards me, for asking help from America during the '99. And that's without taking into account all the grudges they still hold towards Operation Lucifer." I'm truly surprised they still heed my words, to be honest. With how prideful they are, I had assumed they would have been much more dismissive towards my few requests. "Furthermore, it wouldn't surprise me if they began to openly oppose the MDF instead of cooperating with their men, now that the Diet has chosen, or perhaps has been forced, to take this road to gather the much needed funds for our rearmament in such way."

"With all due respect, no one would dare question your position within our ranks, for your efforts are what have maintained our peace thus far."

A frown betraying her facade, small taints began to burn away her composure, the darkening shadow of a paper being burnt atop a candle could very well be her expression as of now, just before it lights up in a blaze. And yet, as slow as the beginnings of a squall, the dam was almost about to overflow, those drops had amassed on her eyes, soon to simply spill away and flood everything around.

Kneeling in petrification, as if surrounded by barbed wires, she barely restrained her desire to look down, away from me, away from what she was recalling regarding that mission, those days, those so distant, so darkening, so sorrowful days were… we simply lost what we cherished oh so dearly.

She gulps, taking a moment to tap her glasses. I slowly sigh, entwining my fingers. That simple thought was plentiful enough, bountiful enough to force me to sheathe my smile.

I wonder when it this began, that thinking about you brought this pause to my heart. How a simple word made me abhor this nothingness all around me, how a mere thought could oh so easily enhance the solitude of this palace on my shoulders.

"… I appreciate your words, however, we both know what repercussions those days, and that particular operation, had in our fellows. It is most foolish to not take into account the possibility that, perhaps, my words have a listener no longer within the Regency Council."

"As much as it brought us shame what had to be done before and after that operation, you only had the wellbeing of the people in mind. I assure you, no one would dare to question your authority!"

"I appreciate your loyalty, truly I do, however that is no longer the state of affairs within our force." Yet again, I sigh. Yet again, she frowns. "By the way, how have those tests on Yokohama been proceeding? Has Mana sent her report already?" Giving her a smile, to change the air between us, she then taps her glasses and nods, her eyes not entirely satisfied with the end of this trail.

"… Yes, she is most impressed with the machines. Just with a few modifications and upgrades, the F-4J gained an admirable mobility and speed. If those parts are mass produced, our fleet of Gekishins, and perhaps of Zuikakus as well, would gain a few years of reliable usage. According to her report, Mana believes it possible that they could be deployed to the frontlines under this new block."

Impressing. For Mana to give such praise they must be truly amazing. I do wonder why no word was given until so recently, it is odd this went unnoticed for so long… and it is worrying to ponder that the UN could be hiding much under Yokohama's veil.

"Did Kouzuki mention anything regarding doing a similar refurbishing plan for the F-15J or other armaments?"

"No, so far Mana has received no word of any more developments from her. However, she did ask about Takamura to Chief Yoroi. She seems suspicious of her."

"Is that so? She is a member of the Fudai, with how the nobility has treated Kouzuki I'm not surprised she is doubting her. Did my envelope reach Takamura already?"

"Yes, Your Highness. Yoroi delivered it to Lt. Col. Iwaya, so it is a matter of time before we receive an answer."

That is good to hear. Now, I think I know how I can prove to Kouzuki that I'm different from the rest of the nobles, so long as she is willing to listen.

"Then… Once Kouzuki sees for herself that Takamura is someone that can be trusted I want her to notify me, I have a message I myself want to give to the Vice Commander." Maya looks slightly troubled by my words but still nods at me.

"Understood."

"Maya, how many spare Type-00C do we have here?"

"How many? I think around… ten, perhaps? We still have not filled all the vacant positions with recruits. I apologize for the delay, it has been a tall ordeal to find people worthy of our trust." She bows down, I sigh as I slowly shake my head at her refusal to loosen her facade.

"Do not apologize. However, do not worry about recruiting more people. Please tell our mechanics to get those Type-00C in prime condition as soon as they can."

"What is the matter, Your Highness?… Have you found recruits by yourself?"

"No, I wish to give some Type-00Cs to Yokohama Base as a sign of friendship." Maya seems to be appalled by my words, for her to widen her eyes so, for her mouth to also follow suit, for the expression to last more than what a frail moment.

"Your Highness, please reconsider! If you do so, the other Regent Houses will not remain quiet, and that will assuredly brew animosity towards your person. All variants of the Type-00 are the Royal Guard's prized weapon, to lend it to foreigners is-"

"I will not simply lend it. Officially, it'll be a test for export purposes. We are in grave need of more funds, and we have a very capable TSF at our disposal. With our current resources we cannot produce many of them, however if we manage to ignite interest on their services the Empire could then proceed to make an appealing deal. It is a nice business opportunity we cannot miss, if I say so myself."

"H-However… to give our most prized weapon to foreigners… Our trade secrets would get exposed! This won't be welcomed by the population or the rest of the Guard. Please, do not act on the belief that you are-"

"Sadly, that is the board we face today, Maya. And this is as little as I can do, to not upset the frail balance of power that has kept us afloat during these tempestuous years."

"However… Even if Kouzuki would be on your side, we cannot trust in the UN. Gifting our most advanced craft, our greatest domestic weapon, to the foreign powers so easily will-"

"By those standards, shouldn't we dispose of all of our F-4J and F-15J since they're originally foreign tech?"

"N-No, I was not referring to-"

"Also, under that same mindset, we should discard the Zuikaku as well since it is no more than a clone of an American TSF, a foul amalgamation of prized Imperial tech and foreign developments."

"No, I never-"

"By that logic then, we also should destroy all of our A-6s as well as all of our ships that were procured outside of the Empire with the aid of COSEAN, since they aren't produced domestically. The same should then apply to the tanks, helicopters, building materials, food, and so on. Maya, do you truly think a nation can be self-sufficient in this day and age?" She lowers her head to the ground hastily, perhaps I let my irritation make it seems as if I were reprimanding her when I had no such intention.

"My apologies! I did not meant to criticize your judgment, I will accept any punishment you give me."

Why do always have to be so extreme? There's no need to be like that with me when we're alone. Maya you're like an older sister for me, and you should know that already.

… Takeru would be making fun of you for being like this right now. Sigh… I look backwards for a moment, to where he always used to stand, and am met with absolute absence. How much do I miss his optimism and smile, even if they had also vanished during our last months together.

"It is alright, raise Maya. I have taken no offense, so, if you understood my wishes, please relay the message to our mechanic crew. I'll have a talk with the other leaders, I am convinced we can reach an agreement."

"How can you be so sure of this, Your Highness?"

"Because they need my approval for the transfer of these next batch of Shiranui-1C to the Fuji Corps, even if only as a formality. The IJA won't welcome them unless I bequeath my blessing to this arrangement." Soft as it might be, it is the power I still hold today. And I have an obligation to wield it as best as I'm able, to ensure no more swords have to be broken. "I'm confident that I can make them agree to my terms after some cups of tea."

"Understood. I'll go right away to deliver this message. However, before I take my leave, there is one last matter I must inform you of." She then looks down, eyelids descending as softly as leaves during Autumn, the most chilling view of a desolated forest at dusk, the lack of habitual sounds and tells, the forced neutral facade in her face forebode ill matters.

"… Whatever is the matter?"

"… After hearing the project of the food plant had been rejected, Raiko-sama has requested an audience with you. She also let me know she was desiring to discuss other… matters, regarding your refusal to continue the operations of-"

"I believe I have made myself clear enough on this matter. Inform her my stance hasn't changed, and do thank her for the patience she has showed during these trying times for the project. Also… request a report from her, regarding the matter of the food plant. That shall be all."

"… You do not wish to grant her an audience then?"

"… No, there is no need. Has her squadron remained stationed as I requested of her?"

"But of course, Your Highness. Raiko-sama's Chain Squadron has been sending constant reports to us on their surveillance of the Capital. Please rest assured, the Amato House has remained loyal to your wishes. I myself have confirmed she has followed your commands to the letter, despite her… strong opinions against your posture, which I must admit I share to some degree."

"… Is that truly so?" I inhale slowly, feeling a small twister form on the base of my neck.

It rotates, trying to spur back those days once again. What was lingering in my mind after our prior talk was drawn to the twister, biting my lips I swallowed all that vile down. All those words, all those images, all of it is taken to its tail, clogging my mind and stagnating my breathing for a moment.

"Do you still refuse to give her your blessing, Your Highness?"

"… I have made myself clear already. No more words are required between that woman and me."

"However, in light of recent events, perhaps it would-"

"Do tell her I am most thankful for her support and that I desire to maintain the peace we enjoy today, as he would have wished. No more blades need to be broken. Would that be clear enough?"

"… Yes, Your Highness." She nods, stands up, and after a deep bow she leaves uttering no further words.

I waited some moments, making sure no one would come in after she left. And once I gained that confirmation…

"… Sigh." I should apologize to Maya once the night is over for me.

I inhale through my nose, looking towards the balcony. I stand up and walk up to it, taking in the view, sighing yet again.

Grabbing onto the cold fence, those days return. Placing a hand on the base of my neck, I begin to take deep breaths, to reiterate my forgiveness towards him, to reaffirm my pledge towards peace, letting the twister run its course, letting it be drained away.

And yet, the absence around me only makes those echoes all the more unbearable on my ears.

"… It is no surprise, that you still remain trapped in those days. I do not believe myself capable of ever leading you, Raiko-san."

For I am not a warrior, my ways of fighting are different than what she holds dear. Yet, those days are over and I cannot let them return. Thinking twice, I should be requesting Daizaburou-sama's counsel for this matter. I am certain he should know how to quell her frustration, justified as it is. Our plans have all met with dead ends, and I cannot yet tell her of these accords with Kouzuki. While I…

certainly appreciate her fervent devotion, there is no more need… for such hostile stances to remain in our code.

Peace… I shall tackle those matters at a latter time. Until then, I shall focus on what little it is I can do without tipping the scales. Tis a harshest trial I am facing, yet these are the cards I've been dealt with.

Now that I think about it… Meiya must be about to begin her own trial as of now. I wonder, how is she faring as of late? Hopefully you can brave through whatever obstacles lay in your path, sister. Mana did report that she managed to endure her harsher training regime, and even said there was a new recruit on the team. Thinking back on it, Mana didn't report much about her, not even her name. What kind of girl could this sixth member be? A foreigner, perhaps? I only hope she's getting along with Meiya. I should ask Mana for more details next time.

"In any case, I hope the tailwinds remain at your back, Meiya. Please remain strong during these days." Closing my eyes and interlocking my fingers, I send a prayer to the skies. May you fare well in this trial of-"… Your Highness, the president of the council of maintenance workers has arrived. Should I tell him to come in?" The Grand Chamberlain notifies me of my next meeting, breaking my concentration.

"Yes, it is alright." She bows and swiftly exits the room once more.

Sigh… I can't even have a minute for myself. Am I not even allowed to daydream for a moment? I wish I could contact Meiya from time to time, but even that is seen as 'taboo'.

Takeru, you were right. The Empire's traditions and customs are not upheld by anyone and are just twisted to the convenience of the powerful. I wanted to believe that there were more honorable people within our ranks, but most of the nobles only work for their own house's interests as opposed to doing so for our people, and our politicians only wish to retain their seats. They rejected all the laws and projects I sent without much explanation, and suddenly they approve such a big increase in the budget of the production for the Type-94? Preposterous, how they think I'll be beguiled by such balderdash.

You must be laughing at me in Heaven. I never thought I would be chosen as the Shogun, but it's my duty and I will fulfill my role. I won't let your death be in vain when you took my place in Operation Lucifer, I'll fix this nation even if I have to go against all the other Regent Houses. I already know only the Kujo house is on my side, so I need to be careful around them.

However, it is no wonder how powerless I am now after the hardships that came after Lucifer despite your efforts to aid me. However, I cannot see how you would have taken these two years. I doubt you would have enjoyed this state of affairs.

"Hehe, you would have lost your temper many moons ago, assuredly." I caress my fringe, smiling. Even so, placating your anger would have been far more pleasant than it is enduring the void you left on my side.

The door opens and the man in question enters the room. This will be another endless day of reunions, I suppose.

---

**[?]

---

"Are you absolutely sure of this?"

"Yes, I'm being serious. I must be careful about this, any odd movement they notice would get me in prison. Just… If it's possible, I'd like you all to consider my offer."

"I assure you, we are more than willing to agree to your plan and I might be able to convince them. But this eventually falls on you, we cannot involve ourselves unless there's definitive proof."

"I know that. I'll try to gather any intel I can on my end, and for the record I'm not asking you to rush in here and kill them all. I just wish that, if the situation escalates, and your end is secured, you can lend me a hand. I assure you your help will be rewarded quite gracefully." I hear him laugh on the other end.

"Your initial offering was good enough already, if you assure us we can get in there, I will definitely get the approval to deploy them. I shall await that intel, in the meantime I'll start the talks on my side to get things done. But I promise nothing, you know we are also on a very complicated position." Of course I know, I was there too. That's why I can't let this chance pass me by. It is my obligation to do this!

"Thanks, I'll end the call here. And worry not, the support for the Sakhalin front is already on the way. Godspeed." Hanging up, I quickly survey my surroundings to catch any possible eavesdroppers. I can only hope this went well and the call didn't get spied upon.

Luckily there's no one at this hour moving through the hallways. With this, the worst case scenario has been avoided. If they agree to help, I'll be able to stop all resistance before things escalate out of control. If I can bring the Royal Guard down, the rest should be over quickly.

And if I do die, may this blood of mine serve as the fuel that will spark up our soul's fire back. I won't let the Empire continue on it's current way, even if I'm seen as a heretic. I'm honor-bound to follow this path, no matter what awaits me at the end of the road. Nothing shall hinder my plans this time.

Is there anything else I can do? If I want to stay unnoticed I better leave it for today. Tomorrow, however…

There are a couple of people I'd like to call. The Captain of the 1st Regimen, Naoya Sagiri, and the Captain of the 2nd Regimen, Takako Saito. Of course I'll have to lie a bit, or a lot to be more accurate, but I need to confirm on whose side they are.

Maybe this is a too bold move, but I can't move my bishops before moving my pawns. Is there anyone else I should try to contact? Hmm… I should get one of those jamming devices to cover my voice before though. Last thing I want is they reporting me to the authorities. I'll try to be more careful from now on. There seems to be quite a commotion on the palace as of late.

Hahaha, what a fool I am. Of course there's a commotion, with Alt. IV standing on its last legs. Well, let's take one step a time. With some luck, the BETA will attack again and give me a window to act to my leisure here. Seriousness above everything, failure is not an option. I do need to get some more intel to get them to act, so let's be discreet about this. Only I can perform this duty, it's my responsibility to put a stop to this.

---

November 17th. 1st Day of the CCSE.

(Island. Around 6 AM.)

[Takeru]

---

"Alright. Squad, let's march to the rendezvous point!" Chizuru shouted as we finished burying the torpedoes in which we got sent here. I had forgotten how much this thing shakes.

The way here was pretty awkward. The submarine was so small we were all basically pushing against each other the whole time. Thank God I was the last one to enter and took my spot against a wall, I only had to deal with Mikoto's comments about how jacked I was. Honestly, she's always in her own world.

The sun started peeking through the horizon as we moved, eventually making it to the place where we meet up with the Instructor, however Sensei wasn't here sunbathing this time.

"Good day, squad. As of now, your second CCSE is in motion. Squad leader, here are your orders. Your supplies and equipment are in that box over there. Once all of you are ready I'll start the explanation."

"Roger!"

I ended up with the worn down one again, I make sure to apply the tobacco spray on it. Then I tear a bit of the broken belt and make a strong knot. I don't know how to knit so this is the best I can do, at least the belt won't break on me and I did the knot as tight as I could. After we all got ready the Instructor started the briefing.

And to my surprise, it's the same mission on the same island. Which means that there's gonna be more traps than before.

"If you are to separate, each team has to take one map and one radio with them. You have three of each, so be careful to not lose or damage them. You have 144 hours to complete the test. If anyone gets left behind and part of the team arrives at the evacuation point, we will give the rest one day more to finish, unless the remaining time is less than that. That is all. Synchronize your watches with me. Three, two, one… Start!"

…

"Alright, given the size of the island and how far apart are all targets from one another, I think the best way for us to rack up as many points as we can is by splitting up from the start in three groups." Chizuru said as she looked at the map. Just as before.

"Um… Can I take Point A? Since it's closer to the shore my stamina won't be so much of an issue if I travel through low ground." Tama pointed to the target to the west of our current position.

"I see. Shirogane since you're faster and have more stamina than us, can you take care of Point B?" It's like I'm fated to go there.

"Sure, I got it." I'm gonna get that fuel just in case. For all I know, the traps might be so brutal that escaping on the boat might be the faster and safer way to… Wait, what if they put traps on the sea too? Ugh, now I don't know if it's such a good idea.

"Then let's arrange the rest accordingly. Mitsurugi will go with Tamase, Shirogane with me, and Yoroi and Ayamine will take care of Point C. Any objections?" Surprisingly, Meiya raised her hand in protest.

"Yes. Why don't I go with Shirogane? I have more stamina than you, and our physical strength isn't that different. You could support Tamase well, and I would be able to keep up with Shirogane without hindering him."

"Yes, but if you go with him he'll have to use any long range weapons you find, nullifying his CQC strength. I believe I should be the one accompanying him." Chizuru was being insistent on this. She still doesn't trust me apparently.

Meiya sent a look my way, as if to gauge my reaction. Chizuru also looked at me narrowing her eyes, I just shrugged.

"Sigh… If Shirogane doesn't mind, what about you Tamase?"

"I also don't mind. I think Mitsurugi-san is right though. They are the ones with the better stamina after all." Chizuru drops her shoulders, clearly dejected.

"Understood, then let's go with that. I will go with you and Mitsurugi with Shirogane. Is that alright?" We nodded at her.

"Where do we regroup?" Mikoto had one map on her as she looked around. "How about that hill over there? It seems to be the highest place of the island." Meiya and Chizuru looked at the map and then to our surroundings.

"Let's do that. We'll rendezvous atop the hill. Anything else anyone wants to say before we depart?" Chizuru looked around us. Nobody said a word.

Then each team took one map and one radio. Me, Chizuru and Mikoto are the ones who carry them.

"Squad! March on! We'll wait until the third day on the hill before departing for the evac point, so do not waste time. Let's clear this!"

"Roger!"

…

… This is harder than I thought it would be. Granted, I'm not having problems with it, but the amount of traps is just insane. Every five steps I have to either stop to cut a cable, trigger a net or take a turn to avoid a pitfall. These bastards went all out this time. Luckily for me, Meiya hasn't said anything and is focusing on clearing the traps to our right.

It feels as if we weren't moving at all, with how much we are stopping. Wait, I kind of can take care of these traps by myself right? So I should do what Mikoto did for me the first time around, I'll take the vanguard and dispatch most of the traps so that we can advance faster.

"Mitsurugi, I'll take the lead and dispatch as many traps as I can, we're not making progress if we keep stopping so much." Anger I can feel you. She stops and rearranges her hair.

"Are you saying I'm a bother to you, by any chance?"

"No, I said that I can clear the traps faster by myself, while you cover the flanks."

"But what if you fall in a pitfall? We would lose valuable time, and you could get hurt."

"I'm not so careless, and anyways you have my back, so if anything happens you can help me out. We're moving too slowly at this point." She seems to be considering it, arms folded. "The heat is just going to wears us down if we do this slowly, we gotta push forward without stopping every half a minute." She wipes the sweat of her forehead, her whole body is glistening with sweat right now, and I'm no different.

"Even so, there's the chance that either of us gets stuck in a trap, or hurt gravely. We should be careful, mind our pace, and advance together." No, we should… Whatever, I'll just do it and deal with it.

I turn my back and move forward faster, well not fast, but compared to slowly walking and stopping every minute anything seems faster. Oh, a net to the left. Well hidden too.

"Hey, come back here! Where do you think you're going?!"

"I told you already. Stick to the traps to my sides, I'll clear the front."

"You are no one to order me around, I did not agree to-"

Click

I react to the sound and throw Meiya to the ground as a barrage of bullets pass right above us. What the actual hell? They hid a machinegun with rubber bullets in the bushes, if that had hit us it would have hurt like hell! What are they thinking?!

"Shirogane… Could you… get off me already?" Huh?

I was on top of Meiya, like the time I… Ugh, F you brain. Why do have to remind me of that, now of all times?! It's not like I wanted to force myself onto her. I was just… Forget it. Let it go.

I move away, looking at our surroundings to make sure there's no more little cables hidden in the vicinity.

"… Thanks."

"Don't mention it. Be more careful, alright?" She nods, looking away.

We resume our march with me at the front, now without complains, and start moving a bit faster. Now we're making some progress!

…

Damn, the sun is going down already. I can't believe I'm making less progress than last time. Well, in my defense, there's ten times more traps and I'm traveling with Meiya, who is really slow when it comes to disabling them.

"Shirogane, should we set up camp? We won't be able to see anything once it gets dark."

"Hmm… Wait, this place is… It should be…"

"Shirogane? Are you… ignoring me, perhaps?"

I know it was close by, I recognize these trees. This is where we set up camp all the previous times, so the thing should… Oh, I think that's it. Behind some trees I could see the entrance that was built into the mountain. I feel a hand in my shoulders.

"Wha… Don't scare me like that, Mitsurugi." Why does she look so annoyed?

"Shirogane, I do not like to be ignored. I'd like it if we could… get along for the duration of the test. So, help me set up camp already before it gets dark."

"First, I wasn't ignoring you. Second, we're not setting up camp here." Now she's angry. She really likes to fold her arms when she gets upset for some reason.

"Why? It's getting dark, we won't be able to see anything if we continue to march. Explain yourself."

"The objective is right there, so we should get a bit closer today. That way we can destroy it at dawn when we wake up."

"What? Do not lie to me! There's no way-"

"Look over there." And her eyes go wide as her mouth hangs open.

"How did we make it to the target in a single day?!"

"You did count the amount of traps we dispatched, right? We walked without stopping all day long, save to eat and drink. It wouldn't surprise me if Tama's team is going to destroy their target tonight." You all gained a lot of stamina compared to the other loops. Even when we had to move slower this time we still made it in our first night.

"Be serious! There's no way… It has to be a diversion, how can you be so sure that is our target?"

"Look at the map, going by how much we walked it wouldn't be weird. C'mon, it's still far but we can close some distance before we lose all light."

"… You're serious? We made it… in one day?" Her tone relaxed as a smile made its way onto her face.

"See? So, come on, let's try to get a bit closer before it gets dark."

"Fine. Let's keep going."

"You're so much more nice to be around when you're not paranoid." I smile at Meiya, causing her to purse her lips as she puts her hands on her waist.

"Watch it, Shirogane. I do not like to be made fun of."

"C'mon, loosen up a little. We're making great time today. Stop being so down." I say as I resume my walk.

"… Fine. Lead the way, I'll follow you."

We walk for awhile more, for maybe two klicks, until I reach a place big enough to settle in. We still have a bit of light.

"Alright, let's set up camp here. I'll go deal with any traps nearby."

"Then I'll light the fire." Meiya says as she slows down, opening part of her beltkit.

All done here… Now, on our way forward for tomorrow… And that's it.

Meiya had hidden the fire very well from view, she was already covered by a sheet above a leaf bed.

I don't know how to make those, so I'll just sleep on the floor covered with the blanket I got with me.

"Shirogane, you stay on that side." Meiya told me as soon as I began taking my blanket out.

"Why? Shouldn't we try to be as close to the fire as possible?"

"Yes, but… You're male." She looks at me sideways, readiness to retaliate in her posture.

"I might be male but I'm not a pervert."

"So, you're not… going to try anything weird when the sun goes down, right?"

"… No, I'm not. I won't touch you, I promise." She seems to relax a bit. After giving me a nod, she opens her rations.

Way to bring down my mood, honey. Thanks for letting me know you see me as a creep. Sigh… I guess… the bridge is truly broken.

I too take out my night's ration. Let's just eat and… Those sons of a bitch! They gave me less than last time! Looking at Meiya, I see that she has even more than what I had in my previous loops. Who's the one in charge of making these things?!

I crunch into a small synth cereal bar that tastes like diluted toothpaste. The mark on the pack says E rank. The synth foods gets rated based on how much percentage it has of organic material and how 'good' said material is. It goes from A as the highest to E as the lowest, so I suppose this is only proteins and vitamins jammed together into some sort of… I was gonna say dough, but I have no idea how this is even made.

Instant ramen would beat the crap out of this thing. To think Mom said microwave food tasted bad, if she took a bite of this she would either faint or start making a ruckus about how could anyone consider this food.

… I wonder how are things over there. Did that world got rewinded too? Or is it still on the same spot in time? I look at the sky, the stars are really pretty. Sadly, they might all be overrun with BETA. Why is it that there's no BETA in my world? Did something happen to those silicon beings before they made them?

"Shirogane, are you not eating?" Meiya's words brought me back from dreamland. I had eaten only half of the rations.

"Yeah, I was just thinking."

"… About what? Are you worried about something?" It feels so weird hearing her voice without knives. It's really nice on my ears to hear her normal tone again.

"It's something personal, I was just lost in thought remembering something." She does not seem satisfied. Moving just a tiny bit closer, she again talks to me.

"Then, what are you be thinking about? We're in the middle of the CCSE, what personal matter could be troubling you? We need to be focused here." She sends a doubtful look at me, I avoid it as fast as I did to my homework back in school.

"No need to glare at me like that. I was just remembering my Mom." I keep eating the… grovel? This tastes like overboiled veggies that got then dried at the sun for a day.

"Your mother? Is she still in America?" A hint of disgust appeared on her tone.

I sigh, taking a moment to answer. What do I even tell her? Anything I say will make her think badly of me anyways… She seems determined to be hostile with me, shouldn't I just shut up?

… But if I do that then, we'll never talk again. We'll never… never again…

Shivering a bit as I bite onto the dough again, feeling as if cold hands were poking my sides, I look up, to not see her rejecting face anymore.

"… I don't know."

"What do you mean by that?"

"That I don't know where she is."

"… Is that so?

Please stop… Don't look at me like that… Just shut up, dammit. Don't… use her voice like that. Just leave me alone, please…

"How could it be that you know not of where your parents are?" Tilting her head back, her eyes narrow a bit.

"Sigh… Look, she was supposed to be here in Japan, but all my data about my time here was wiped from the databases, so I don't know where she is."

Frowning, I return a glare. Holding it, her own seems to ease up as she scans my face. Sigh… Why? Why do you… No, different people, different world. Don't forget that, just shut up and take it.

"My parents might be… dead for years for all I know." At least here that's the truth, and I don't know about the other world. If time reversed, they might still be alive. If not, then… that world is also in ruins until I get Sensei's help.

"… Forgive me for prying. I did it again." She gives a small bow.

"… Don't worry 'bout it."

…

"So… Your mother was supposed to be here?" She isn't letting that go, huh? Refusing her would only make things worse, let's just be honest.

"I thought so. I don't really know much about my life here, after all."

"Huh?! What do you mean?!" Why is she so startled?

"Didn't you read my reports already?"

"Yes, I did. But there was nothing about this. Are you telling me you do not know of your past?"

I mean, lying about it is pointless. If I'm ever asked I'll have to be honest, and frankly, it is almost as if I had amnesia this time, with how different this world is for whatever reason.

"Pretty much. I woke up one day in a hospital without remembering where I was, how I got there, or anything at all. I do remember our culture and traditions, how to write, parts of our history. But I don't really remember anything about my life here, not my family, friends, where I lived or studied. Since no one could find anyone related to me and I didn't have anywhere else to go I was offered to become a UN Cadet to have a place to live in, and that's how I joined the army. This was two years ago."

"You… You're basically all alone." Wow, thanks for the gut punches, honey. Keep 'em coming, who needs some peace of mind anyways?

"… Yeah, you could say that. I at least had my squad with me before but…" I bite into the cereal with too much force, causing part of it to fly away into the grass, as those days, those last days I was with them return to me. "… well, not anymore." At least Mikoto and Tama are still friendly with me and I have Kasumi.

"… Just like me."

"What was that?" She said something in such a small voice that I couldn't hear her at all.

"Nothing. So, does that mean that you do not remember all of our customs?" She moved her bangs out of her way, looking at me again. However, this time her eyes were like the ones of the past Meiyas, she put out the fire for some reason.

"Somewhat. I did have to read up on some stuff that I obviously had forgotten, but there might be some stuff that's common sense here that I forgot about." This also explains my usual weird words and lack of knowledge of this world's specific historic events. "That's all there is to it, for real." So please just let it go. It's cool, you don't like me. I get it and that's fine. Just… don't remind me of it every second.

"… I see." Closing her eyes, folding her arms, she seems placated with my answers.

Sigh… Thank God. I lean on a tree, gulping down what remained of my pitiful excuse of rations. I rub my arms, trying to drive away the coldness that surrounded me all of a sudden. At least we aren't arguing about anything anymo-

"Then, allow me to ask you." Goddammit, Meiya. Now what do you want? "Do you know of the color rankings of the nobility?"

More and more accusations, I guess. But… As I looked back at her, I didn't see the frown, the downwards brows, or even a speck of alertness in her posture. She was squarely gazing at me, awaiting my reply. She's… not upset or anything? She then began to tap her forearms with a finger, a sign she was growing impatient at my silence.

"Uuh… It was white for the vassals, yellow for the nobles, red for the special guardians, blue for the Regent Houses, and purple for the one that's the current Shogun, right?" She nods, too slowly as she still doesn't break her gaze from mine.

"Exactly. It also matches up with the dresses of the Royal Guard, where black is given to those of common descent that are inducted into it. So you did remember that. Then…" She pauses for a second as she shifted her hands around.

Don't just stop like that. I'm already aware of my breathing, feeling my heartbeats as I wait.

I don't know why, but she seems to be less hostile right now. And if she is… let's see if I can fix the bridge a little. But nothing good ever comes when she hesitates like that, so I don't know if I want to pursue this matter. Sigh… Whatever.

"… Come on, now. What is it?"

"Well, you do know that only the members of the Royal Guard are allowed to wield katanas in the Empire, right?" Wait, really? So that's why she thought I was on the Guard before.

"No, I didn't know that. Is that why you got so suspicious of me?"

"Yes. However, that is not all there is to it." She again stops and looks away. Stop it, nothing good ever comes when you of all people start hesitating like that.

"Mitsurugi you can't just stop there, you know?"

"Do you truly not know? Or are you testing me?" She again meets my gaze, her lips molded into a small circle, her voice again accusatory, and yet… no fire is in her eyes. She's doubting, but why?

"I'm not testing you. I am really curious about why the Guard didn't take offense with me having a sword, so please tell me about it. I think… we both need some answers, right?" Forcing a smile at her, she closes her eyes but nods all the same.

"Then, allow me to satiate my curiosity. What is the color of the hilt of our swords?"

"Blue? Wait… Are you saying it's related to the Regent Houses?" Meiya smiles proudly as she raises her chin.

"Exactly! Most members of the Royal Guard, or those related to the nobility, are given nameless katanas, with their hilt showing the color of their station. However, those who belong to one of the Regent Houses are given a copy of that House's katana. The Minaru Kamui we both have is one of such, given to only the members of one certain Royal House or their most trusted acquaintances. I myself am a servant of a House, and is the reason why I possess it. Each house has a special blade design unique to them. Holding one of them gives one recognition within the Empire. It's as if you were part of said house and gives you authority over their vassals. "

Wait… The sword we both have… Given to only the most trusted people… The royal house Meiya serves… Oh my God… Realizing what that meant sent a shiver down my spine, again feeling cold fingers tap my chest and sides as a face returned to my mind. The Minaru Kamui is… the blue blade of the Koubuin House.

"So… holding our swords is almost like being a noble?"

"Not almost, you are a noble. Someone who is trusted to such length to be given the house's blade, someone who is considered family despite not sharing a blood connection, someone who can stand behind the leader of the house with a weapon at the ready. To give that someone the proper status, that is the meaning of all blue katanas in the Empire." She finishes with a proud nod as she puffs her chest.

Maybe bringing the Minari Kamui wasn't a bad idea. It was a horrible one. How am I going to explain this?! No, forget that. What effects will this have if people learn about it? I'm sure that the number of people that have blue katanas is very low, and all leaders must know of them. If they learn that there's no one who could have given me the sword… They might assume I came with a fake one to take advantage of it. So that's why Meiya was so aggressive towards me that day.

"I didn't knew it was so important. No wonder you got so defensive when you found it." She looks down, clearly bothered by something.

"You were chosen by someone to take their place in service of a Regent House. They must have trusted you much to bestow such an honor to you. I know you possess the skill to be granted a blue blade, however…"

"You can't trust an American with such an important item, am I right?" She winces as she hears me, but nods at my words.

"Exactly. I… Forgive me for bringing this up now of all times, but I still hold doubts towards you. I suppose 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi knew of it, and that's why she called us fellows. But you weren't aware of this. Now that you know, allow me to ask you. Shirogane, what will you do with your blade?"

I didn't expect this. I should have known the sword was related to the Koubuin House. And I have a tickling clock over my head to deal with this issue. I know that she's worried about Yuuhi. She loved her sister a lot, and I know that hasn't changed in this world. Anyone who holds that blade could do some serious damage to the Empire now that she's the Shogun, most people in the Imperial Palace are her vassals. It may even be possible to request an audience with her and kill her during it. Honestly, this is such a stupid method to give 'status' to someone. It's actually surprising this hasn't been exploited in the past. So she will tell Tsukuyomi-san of this if I refuse to return it, and that will be my downfall.

If I'm right about this… having a 'fake' sword of the Shogun's house might be one of the worse crimes here, even worse than treason. It could be seen as an offense against the Empire's order, or the Shogun's integrity. I'm so dead, aren't I?

Can I hide somewhere on the base and fight with my voice distorted like during Niigata? I mean, Sensei might figure something out but that will only give her more trouble. We can't afford to damage our relations with the Empire. If this info gets out, I'm sure Sagiri could use it to spark a conflict.

" The UN had a sword from the House of the Shogun illegally! They were plotting against us!" I can already hear him saying that, this could very well lead to an earlier coup. If Sensei loses the support from the Guard… No, if the anyone from the Empire goes against the UN we can kiss Alt. IV goodbye, even if Yuuhi still supports Sensei. No way in hell that mess won't end in flames in this world.

Unless… I don't think apologizing will cut it, I don't think handing it over would solve this. But… I did this to myself, and since Sensei didn't react at all to the sword when I showed it to her after our talk, this might be a well kept secret of the Shogunate. I gotta deal with this myself, I have to be thankful I learned of this now before it's too late.

"… I think I understand how much damage one could do with it… But still, I'd like to deal with it myself." Reaching out to Tsukuyomi-san on my own is better than having Meiya take me to her, as I hope it'll show her I truly want no problems.

"Why?" Her tone changed, her eyes filled with doubt. Shit, this is what I'm trying to prevent.

"Well, I'm the owner of the sword. Whether I'm recognized or not, it's my responsibility to deal with it."

"Then why not hand it over before more misunderstandings take place?"

"That's what I was thinking about. I'll go talk alone with 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi about this." Meiya furrows her brows again. Now what?

"Why do you wish to go alone? I could aid you in your apology."

"With all you've told me, I think it's best for me to deal with this alone." And I don't want you to learn that… I'm a faker. If she does, any and all feeble hopes of getting along I have will end up in ashes.

"You sound as if you believed that you were going to be punished. Why would you think that?" Her tone and glare, her tightened folding arms, all of her was once more blazing at me. I can only run away and look down, emptiness filling my insides.

"… Well, if I'm not seen as a legitimate owner I might get sent to prison or worse. And I don't know who I was here, what if I end up being a traitor or an exile?" Her accusing doubt is replaced by seriousness, she slowly strokes her bangs as she thinks.

"Hmm… You're right, that is also a possibility. But, well, you will return it, then?"

"No need to look at me like that. I don't want to cause trouble, if me having this blade is a problem, then I have to return it, that's all. I really don't want to part ways with it, but I can't let it be used to spark a conflict. I can't allow the relation of the UN with the Empire be damaged because of me."

"You… You're more serious than I thought you would be about this."

"That was unnecessarily rude. What is it with you now?" I glare at her, mustering some anger to stop these cold, void waters that seeped into my lungs, making every breath hurt the more I look at her, the more those blue eyes creak open the dam of those awful accidents and in they flow, in they come with all the debris and shit mixed in the stream, filling the cold lakes in me.

Seeming to have flinched a bit, she coughs and sends a hand to the air intakes before returning my gaze again, this time having put out the fire once more.

"My apologies, I meant no offense. I didn't think you would… feel so strongly about this matter, since you lived in America for two years and lost most of your memories."

"Hey, I'm still Japanese. I may not be your fellow, but that doesn't mean I'm your enemy." Looking down, I hunch over and massage my shoulders.

I really would like to avoid a fight with Yuuhi. But I doubt the amnesia card will work, even less now that I have to give them the blade. Even if he was a 1st Lt. at such a young age, I doubt he would be related to the Shogun's House, and in the off chance he was for some reason I don't think he would have been given a Minaru Kamui. And when that happens… there won't be much I can do to salvage this mess. Sensei won't let my presence ruin her plans, who knows what she'll do in front of that threat.

… All I know is, if I don't handle this well they'll definitely ask for my head, or for me to be detained at the least. Sigh… Just what can I do to stop all this shit?

"Forgive me for doubting you." Back in the island, she was giving me a faint bow. "Well… You do not seem to be lying, but even so, allow me to accompany you when you go return it." I know that gaze, she isn't taking a no for an answer.

"Fine, if it makes you believe me. You can come with me, I guess." She smiles faintly at my answer.

"Thanks for agreeing to that. Even so, I wonder why they didn't reach out to you to explain this when you arrived here. Maybe they thought you already knew?"

"Your guess is as good as mine, honestly." I shrug, having finished my rations I lay on the ground looking at the stars, not wanting to speak with her anymore.

Sigh… What can I do? Apologize for not knowing it was a fake blade? No, I mean, it isn't a fake one. What will they think when they see it? And also, I was supposed to be a Royal Guard here. How will Sensei's cover work here? Will they believe I somehow survived without them knowing? If they don't…

… shouldn't I just restart all of this?

No, if I let this stand then, won't this data follow me later? But then, what can I do to stop this whole mess?

"Say Shirogane." She speaks up in a slow tone, laying down on her leaf bed. "What if… What if, when you go return the Minaru Kamui, you are asked whether or not you wish to serve the House it belongs to?"

"No way in hell that'll happen."

"Why do you say that?"

Because they know I'm not 'him', therefore I'm a 'faker' passing as a member of the Guard. And now I have a 'fake' blade of the Shogun's house. Sigh… This is one big, effing mess.

"You really think they would welcome someone like me on the Guard?"

"… I think they would, going by how harshly I was reprimanded the other day."

"The other day? Oh right. Did they got you in the end?" She nods slowly.

"They told me to mind my words with you, to not approach you if you didn't talk to me."

I'm sure that's because they want to protect you, but they can't actually kill me for now. If Tsukuyomi-san doesn't want Meiya to involve herself with me, when she didn't do this in all my other loops, it means she sees me as a threat. And I can already guess how she'll react once I show her the blade, then. Sigh…

"… Maybe they were worried about you being close to an American. Can't trust someone like me, after all." I spit it out, not wanting to hold this shit in anymore.

"Do not be foolish! They… Well, doesn't matter now. Let's leave this talk for when we go back to the base. So, I'll take the first watch. You stay on that side, if you cross-"

"Yeah, I know. I won't put a finger on you, don't worry." She relaxes a bit, which drives another hit to my stomach. She was still doubting me.

"So long as we're clear on that. At what hour should we go towards our target?"

"I dunno. As soon as it starts to light up? We do need to do it early."

"Fine. Let's put the fire out, let's take shifts of three hours. Is that alright?"

"Yeah, sounds good."

I wrap the blanket over me, as I put on the little spray to ward off the bugs and stuff. I lay looking at the stars again. A fine first day, I guess.

I can't believe this. Thank God she mentioned this, otherwise things would have gotten ugly when this came to light. I can only hope the Empire is willing to listen instead of asking for my head immediately.

… Yawn, I'm beat though. I didn't expect so many traps today. That machinegun was totally overkill, dude. Let's hope we don't find any more of those. I curl to a side and close my eyes.

---

Around 5 AM.

---

"Shirogane… Shirogane!" Ugh… Shut up, Meiya. I don't wanna go to school today. "Shirogane, the sky is clearing already. We'll lose our window to gain points. Mmgh, give me that blanket!"

Why did she took my sheets off? She shouldn't copy Sumika in this… What is this feeling? Dirt? Why am I…

I open my eyes and find myself in the middle of a jungle, Meiya was staring at me as she smiled but with one of her brows twitching.

"Are we awake now, Shirogane?" A rather gentle tone with a wide smile. But behind it, a really angry pulse was apparent.

"Ugh… Yeah."

"What is it? Did you sleep in a bad position?"

"No… I had… a dream of my family."

"Eh? Oh, I see. Did you remember anything?"

"No, it was just… an everyday scenery, somewhat."

I had a dream about my world. It wasn't anything out of the ordinary, just one of those days where those two would fight over whose lunch I would eat. Heh, I didn't knew how happy I was back then. Compared to her, you…

"Hmm? Is there something on my face?"

I never noticed it, but my world's Meiya had a much more gentle and sweet gaze than this one. Well, considering the differences it's not weird. I guess… I'll never see that sweet gaze again.

"Sigh… Nothing. Let's eat our morning rations."

I again have less than what I should in my pack. One day I'm going to have that feast she made me for the food competition, or that super beef bowl I ordered at the cruise. Yeah man, how nice that one was. Best beef bowl anyone could ever eat.

"Why are you smiling in such a way?" She stared at me, tilting her head a bit and raising a brow.

"I'm just eating. What? I can't smile every now and then?"

"But… You're smiling from ear to ear while eating this tasteless food. What could you possibly be happy about?" She looks genuinely puzzled.

"I'm just thinking that someday I'll have the same food I had with my loved ones instead of this. What? There's no one you'd like to share a dinner with?" She nods slowly, understanding the reason behind my smile. Thanks God she isn't fighting me on this one.

We finish our food and, after getting our bearings in order, make our way to the target. Or so I'd say if this place weren't littered with traps. Thankfully we came here really early, otherwise we might have ended up arriving past noon at the cave. I'm so done with the pitfalls, and the nets, and the random guns. Luckily there's no more machineguns hidden anywhere near.

"So this is the place?" Meiya takes a good look at the hangar from afar.

"Looks like it. I'll check for traps on the right side, can you cover the left one?"

"Leave it to me."

There were some traps that would have scattered little spikes all over but they were obvious to spot. Nothing else here.

"There's nothing on this side, Shirogane."

"Alright, let's move into the hangar. I'll check the right."

"Roger."

No traps here. But what is here is the fuel. Come to papa, oily friend. With this we can use the boat! Like last time when…

Huh? Did we… No, we didn't. But then… Huh? What…

"Shirogane, I found a tarp here!"

"… Oh, cool. There's some barrels with fuel here."

"Fuel?" Meiya gets to my position, her mouth widens as she sees the machine that's near. "Oho, a Humvee? Did you check it?"

"It doesn't have its engine, so it's useless to us." I did check, just in case. But no dice.

"Then, nothing else? It is truly a shame we didn't find a clue about the evac point."

"Yeah, let's make a fuse and blow this place up."

"Would you happen to know how to do so? I am… not particularly proficient on the manual endeavors."

… You don't know how nice it is to see that bashful side of yours again. Sigh… I sound like my Dad, wistfully reminiscing of old things.

"Leave it to me. I'll get it done."

There was nothing new in here. Now, there should be a box with some stuff that I can use to make the fuse right around here in one of these lockers… Oh, here it is. Now let's get this… Huh?

Inside the box there was a paper along the rest of the things. 'After ABC comes W' was written in it. What the hell?

"Hey, Mitsurugi! I found something!"

"What is it?" She came jogging to me. I hand her the paper I found in the box. "After ABC comes W? What does this mean?"

"Maybe it's talking about the targets? Something that comes after the targets, perhaps?"

"So it's a hint of what we have to do after? We should take it with us, the others may have found something similar."

This is a new one. Who knows what this is about? Well, no point in worrying about it. Let's make the fuse.

Turbulent Winds

Chapter 17: Turbulent Winds

---

November 18th. Second Day of the CCSE. 0 1:23 PM.

(Cliffside. Island.)

[Takeru]

---

BOOOOOOOOM!

"Look at that explosion! That went better than I expected!" It's the first time I improvise the fuse so this explosion feels more 'personal' than all the other times I might have seen that hangar get blown up.

"With such a diversion any hostiles in the area would be surely distraught with fear. Another fine work of yours Shirogane." She nods my way, an approving smile raising forth.

Thankfully, it looks like that talk we had yesterday calmed her down a bit. She still looks at me with a bit of doubt, but at least she isn't flat out ignoring me or sending knives in every word.

The way to the hill has been quite slow, we found another machinegun with a whole magazine of rubber bullets that we had to dodge. We also found some sonic mines near the base of the hill we had to avoid, and on the way to the top there's been quite some trip wires set up almost everywhere.

We slowly keep raising as the sun showers us with his heat. Honestly, it's nice to have the light but between the humidity and the heat I'm getting worn down faster than I thought I would. To make matters worse, I've had to disable a lot of the traps under the sunlight, I can't even rest for a little while under a shadow without spotting another wire in the way.

"Shirogane, that over there isn't a cable?" She points to a rock nearby, a slim cable could be seen to its side. Another trip wire?

I get close slowly to check, and on the way I notice something weird on the stone wall. There were three 'stones' that looked somehow out of place. Slightly tapping the cable I see that the 'rocks' move a bit. What is this even? I slowly cut the wire, and the three things get ripped off the wall as a stream of muck comes forth from where they were.

Sigh… Now the wall is covered in mud. I feel like it's better this way, let's just look for another way up.

"Let's go from that side instead." I point to another path to my left. If I remember correctly, that's the way me and Mikoto always used, just that this time we couldn't go with that thanks to the sonic mines that were on the base of the mountain.

Meiya sighs with a tired face as she wipes the sweat off her face, her whole body is again drenched. She must be exhausted, even with her superior stamina with how much time we have to spend under the sun's relentless warmth it's no surprise she's so exhausted. Not like I'm any different at this point.

We climb the wall and reach the place where I got bit by a snake. I double check my belt, it's tight and in place. Not falling this time thankfully. Now then, the trap should be… Huh? It isn't under the usual leaves. Where is it?

She climbs up right behind me and starts moving forward, and as she does I see the snake that once bit me. I'm taking you for dinner. Fuhuhu! Slowly approaching the vines I quickly grab it behind its neck and snap it.

"Shirogane, what are you doing?"

"Found a snake, got it for dinner." Disgust flooded her face. Maybe she also had to eat one of these in her previous CCSE?

"Do you even know how awful they smell?"

"I brought the curry powder with me, so it's alright."

"Right, you did say so. Then, let's keep movi- A-Aaaaahhh!" Meiya stepped forward only to end up hanging from the cliff's ceiling upside down. So that's where the trap was moved, I didn't even see the wire.

"Can you reach your feet?" She was trying to bend upwards to cut the wire with her knife but it wasn't going so well. Grabbing her legs with one hand to not lose balance, she still couldn't cut the wire.

"Uuuhh… Such a simple trap. Ugh, get cut already!"

"Want some help?" She didn't look at me, but I know she's bothered by it.

"If I can't release myself from this, what kind of soldier would I be?" Stubborn to the core, what did I expect?

"The same as everybody else? We're wasting time, you know?" Her grip slips and she falls back. Again she grabs her leg and slowly tries to get her hand in position to cut the wire.

"We… still have until… tomorrow to reach the hill." She was struggling quite hard and the wire started to swing slightly.

And so, I waited for a minute. She finally cuts the wire and falls with a loud thud. That must have hurt a lot, she rubs her back while wincing a bit.

"Wanna rest for a while?"

"I am okay. There's no reason for us to stop for a small- Augh!" As she gets up she winces again, licking her lips. Why do you always push yourself so much?

"Let me see that, we should treat it just in case."

"I'm not so weak to need rest after such a petty struggle. I can deal with this- Ah! Shirogane, stop- Ah!" I press my thumbs on her shoulders again, making her squeal once more.

"See? Your shoulders are all tensed up now. You did bring some bandages, right? It won't take long to treat you and we can't risk this pain getting in your way when you're climbing." Like hell I'll let you risk climbing with a pained back.

"Fine! I'll give you some bandages, but do not do that- Ah! S-Stop it!" You cannot stop me, not when I know where you always get tense.

"Shut up and pass me some bandages already."

"Uuh… Here." She passes me a roll and slowly starts to lift her tank top. "Y-You better not try anything-"

"Ouch, there's blood coming out. Do you have something to disinfect the wound?"

"I think I do. Yoroi recommended me a spray. Oh, here it is." She passes me a small white spray, I recognize it as the one Mikoto was always using on our usual skits when we got together in my first loop.

"Alright, this might sting a bit. So try to hold it in."

"Hmph, who do you think you're talking with? I'm not- Ahh! It burns…" Told you.

"Stay quiet. I'll clean the wound a bit with part of the bandage, and after that I'll hand it to you."

"Huh? Why are you handing me the bandage?"

"I can't really tie it myself. Unless you want me rolling the bandage on your stomach and end up accidentally touching your chest." She tenses up, she's so fun to tease.

I finish cleaning the wound and put the point of the bandage on one of her sides. After two rolls the wound was covered and I tightly tie both ends.

"And the knot is done. There, feeling better?"

"… Yes, thank you."

"What's up? Getting embarrassed?" I smile at her reddening face, causing her to pout.

"What do you expect?! You suddenly grab my shoulders like that, make me lift my clothes, and you even had to go and tease me instead of just passing me the bandage."

"Hahaha, sorry. Consider that payback for how coldly you treated me all these days."

"Uuuh… I cannot believe you're the same person that's so skilled with a blade. Anyways, we wasted enough time and I feel fine now. Let us continue."

"Yeah, I know. Let's go." Thankfully, I can joke about now. Sure, she's still quite pissed, but at least we can have peace between us.

We kept hiking to the top without crossing words. I know she isn't the same but I can't help it when she reminds me of the Meiya I met in the other world and in my own. It seems her body reacts the same though. Her shoulders are always so tense.

Eventually, we made it past the mountain. Now, this part should be easy since we're going downhill but I'm sure this place is going to be littered with traps this time. We're not so far from the hill, so we can take a slower approach to reach it. We are still moving almost as fast as I did with Mikoto in the other loops despite all the traps. Oh, toad! Got you little fella, forgive the rude treatment but a boy needs to eat his daily portion of meat.

"Shirogane! Where are you going?!"

"Oh, shut up! Found a toad, that's all." I show her the toad and she grimaces.

"You… You truly are planning to eat them?"

"Yeah, of course. Why would I be picking them up if I wasn't?"

"Uuh… Yes, of course."

"Why the long face, Mitsurugi? Have you eaten some of these?" She jumps at my question as a thick drop of sweat tickles down her forehead.

"No, I haven't. We… had enough supplies last time. Yoroi found some… mushrooms for us." I would believe you, if it weren't for that disgusted face you're making. "Anyways, we are losing time. Leave the hunting for when we reach the hill, will you?"

"No need to get so angry. Let' go."

The way down was full of pitfalls and sinkholes. Luckily there were no more wires or guns. The rest of the way towards the hilltop was similar to the path to the target. It took us all the afternoon but we reached the top, we seem to be the first ones to arrive.

"We made it. Should we set up camp here?" Meiya says after taking a look at a small clearing between some trees.

I think this is fine, the sun is already going down and we don't want to be wandering around in the dark with how many traps are here this time, much less with her back being injured.

"Yeah, let's settle down here. Can you light the fire again?"

"Sure, are you going to take care of the traps?"

"And look for more toads!" She made yet another disgusted face as I left.

Moving in between the leaves and vines, checking every little suspicious spot, the traps are met with their disabler.… Does that word even exist? Eh, whatever.

There's a lot of trip wires that lead into a pitfall here. That over there… Another machinegun? What were they… Wait, can I disable it? Let's get closer… If I can cut this wire here… Please don't shoot, please don't shoot, please don't shoot…

… Is that it? Can I move it? I pick it up from where it was and move it around. It has a magazine in it and it's not that heavy compared to the guns we are always holding during practice. Oh, look at that! Another toad.

I return to our spot and Meiya was rubbing her back.

"You okay?"

"Yes, I am fi- What is that?!" Her eyes shot wide open as she saw me.

"A gun, can't you tell?"

"Where did you find it?" She got up and came to my side really slow, gazing at the machinegun I had with narrowed brows.

"It was set up as a trap, I saw I could cut its cables without triggering it and then got it with me."

"I would have never thought to do that. But why did you do such a thing?" She narrows her eyes at me slightly, tension in her stance.

"We may need it for something. What if we need to take out a trap from afar?"

"Hmm… Yes, you are right. But… Well, I suppose leaving it in your hands is for the best." She nods and goes back to her leaf bed.

"Want some toad?" She makes another disgusted face.

"I'll pass. I still have my rations."

I get the little pot we have in our kits and with my knife I cut the toads and the snake. I pour a bit of water and put half my curry powder on it. Now I just have to wait a while until it gets done. I set up some sticks above the small fire and put the pot above them. Shortly after, the smell of the curry powder reached my nose. This is going to be delicious, for being toads and snakes.

I caught Meiya looking at the fire and she immediately looked away, bet your tummy wants some of this. Some minutes passed and the food was done. I grab the plastic fork I have and start eating from the pot. It's better than the supplies we are given at least. Meiya was taking some glances at me as I ate.

"There's enough for two, do you want some?" It seems my offer caught her by surprise as she looked at me with wide eyes, but then she looked away again.

"No, thanks. I have my own food, and tomorrow we will meet up with Yoroi so there's no need for you to share."

"Yeah, sure. Here you go, I already got my fill." I leave the pot by her side.

"Y-You don't have to. I already have-"

"If you don't want it just throw it away." She looks down, avoiding my gaze, as she moves her lips a bit.

"… Thanks."

"Don't mention it."

We're on schedule, it wouldn't surprise me if the rest showed up tonight as well. The stars are really beautiful, just looking at them is enough to calm me down. I always used to look at the sky before going to bed, when we talked by the window.

If someone told me that I was going to end up in this causal mess back then I wouldn't have believed any of it. I mean, why did I even came to this world? I have no connection to it. Unless… No, this isn't the same world as before. It's way too different.

Then why? Why am I here? Is it because there's no Sumika in that world? So I can't will myself there anymore? But I time traveled back to October 22nd here, if I could do that then why didn't I end up in the other world at a point in time when there was still a Sumika there?

This is too complicated for me. Maybe it's because I choose to transfer myself willingly after my link got severed? Last time I went back I was still a conductor, and maybe a weak nucleus. This time I went not as a conductor, but as a stronger nucleus. I willed myself, I didn't get 'transferred' here by another force like in all the other loops. Just how I overwrote the Takeru of my world when I ran away, I overwrote this world's conductor when I arrived. Even my room was the one from 2003. Does this have to do with how the nucleus works then? Sensei said that it was drawn to the leaks when there was a strong enough connection. But what if there's more than one connection? I mean, from all the possible parallel worlds that I could have ended on, why this one?

Hmm… So the nucleus when it connects itself through a leak, instead of being the magnet it turns into the metal, being drawn by the strongest 'pull' or so I think. Then, I triggered a leak in this world by forcing myself into it with the microwave's help. But instead of appearing at the same point in time that I was in my world, I ended back on the 22nd. Because the 'awakening' of the conductor had more pull on the nucleus? That still doesn't answer why I came here in the first place. I'm going in circles right now, gotta calm down.

The Why, the How, and the When.

Why did I came here? How was I pulled to the past? And when was the connection to this world formed?

First, I had no connection to this world so unless there's some quantum shenanigans in play there was no 'when'. My world and the other world were the ones that were linked, this one was not even on the equation. So, we go to the first question. Why? What lies in this world that made me come here? I've been rejected by everyone at some point. Sensei tried to kill me, the whole base treats me like shit for being a 'foreigner', the Shogunate wants my head on a silver plate, and part of my squad was and probably still is suspicious of me. Only Kasumi has been always nice to me, probably because she can read my mind and see my emotions. So why the hell did I end up here?! Does it have anything to do with this world's me?

And that leads into the second question. How did I time travel? That only happens when the conductor dies and the loop is still in effect. I was not a conductor when I transferred, and I want to believe I didn't die during the transfer because I would… well, be dead right about now. So how did it happen? Was it because of the revisions Sensei did with her new theories? The higher power we used from the reactor? The fact that Sumika broke the loop after Ouka, blocking me from returning to that world? My emotions to save my squad? I was trying to sever the two worlds' connection, but what if I just got another world into this mess?!

Ugh, I'm going nowhere. I'll need to talk it out with Sensei when I get the chance. Sigh…

Why the hell am I even here? Surrounded by familiar but hostile faces, being pulled into this messed up Japan, blamed for being someone I'm not. I'm suddenly really happy that the me in the past loops was a nobody, imagine if I was part of the Guard like here. Tsukuyomi-san would have detained me on the spot.

That reminds me… Am I even sending data to the squad? I mean, I should be linked to the other two worlds right? Now that I'm a conductor again they should be receiving that data, and being a stronger nucleus would probably help too. Why were they so hostile then?

I look again at the stars. Just two or three days more. Once we get to pilot TSFs I'll do my best to put them to the real test. I failed to protect the three Valkyries on Niigata, so I won't fail on training you.

Meiya still didn't put out the fire, she was still waiting for the rest to arrive. Was she staring at me? Quickly averting her gaze, but was looking just now. Seems like she did finish the food.

"So, how were they?"

"Better than I expected. Thanks again for sharing it." She nods at me, sounding relaxed for once.

"Think the others will arrive tonight?" I get close to the fire, feeling its warmth on my palms.

"I don't know. We did make good time, but they might take a bit longer."

"Say Mitsurugi, how do you think things will go in the way to the evac point?" She seems to be surprised at my words, a hand of hers going to one of her elbows.

"Huh? How… Why are you asking such a thing?" Why did she got so defensive?

"We saw quite a lot of traps today, surely there will be even more on the way to it. There's also the little paper."

"Right. Well, there will surely be more sonic mines on the way, maybe two or three tough obstacles. As for the paper, I have no idea what W could mean." She shrugs as she rests her hands on her leaf bed, stretching her legs forward.

"Me neither. So you think the sonic mines are going to be the greatest obstacle?"

"Well, that was the case last time. Unless we count our discussion as the problem." She averts her gaze again.

"Are you worried the same will happen this time?"

"Yes. I know Ayamine doesn't follow Sakaki's orders when she doesn't agree with them. And now you're here too. I don't think she'll take kindly to your suggestions." At least you're a bit less hostile now.

"I get it. Don't worry, I'll try to not provoke her. So, same shifts as yesterday?" She seemed worried for a second, but nodded at me.

I turned my back to her and curled on the floor after putting my blanket over me. Let's just hope I don't have another nightmare today.

"Shirogane?"

"Hmm? What's up?" I raise a bit and look at her, she still hasn't put out the fire.

"Where did you learn to do massages like that?" She can't seem to be able to look at me. She must be embarrassed to have enjoyed it, probably. Haha… It's so nice, hearing you without that layer of aggression again.

"We just got trained on how to relieve the strain on our partners' muscles, in case it ever became a necessity. I didn't hurt you, right?" I ask, staring at her, she doesn't look at me but still replies.

"No, it didn't hurt. But don't do it again. I won't forgive you if you lay a hand on me again without my permission."

"So… if I ask you before it's alright?" She looks at me the intensity of a thunder's roar behind her eyes and a tinge of red on her face. Teasing you is so much fun.

"Even if you ask I'll say no!"

"Such a shame… Your shoulders were really tense, you know?"

"… Thanks for worrying, but I'll deal with it until we pass the test. Anyways, that's all I wanted to ask. You can sleep now."

Sigh… She's still not entirely back to how I remember her, but she's cool with me now. That's a Gekishin off my shoulders. Let's hope we can keep being on good terms after I have to give her the sword back. Thinking about that…

"Say, can I ask you something?"

"I'm not letting you touch me again." An instant reply, huh?

"Not that. What do you think would happen to me if the Guard decided I have a Minaru Kamui illegally?" She takes a deep breath, leaving the silence hanging and faces me with clear eyes and a serious expression.

"You would either be deported, or in the worse case executed. But considering how they were with me all the times I talked with them about you, I believe you'll be fine. As I said yesterday, I think they might even ask you to formally take possession of it. I know you said you don't believe it would happen, but if they asked you… Would you accept?" She stared at me, unblinking.

"… I don't think that would happen, but I also wouldn't accept. I don't think I would be welcome in the Guard even if someone was interested in my skills."

"… I see. So that's what you think…" I thought I had angered her, but for some reason she looked troubled. Is she… biting her lips?

Is she wanting me to… become her fellow? Maybe… now that she saw I was being honest…

I'll see what happens once we're back at the base. I shouldn't get my hopes up, it'll only hurt more if she goes back to how she was all these days.

"Well, in any case, let's worry about that when we get back to the base." She nods and I curl up again, letting the stars lull me to sleep.

---

Near 6 AM.

---

The rays of the sun greet me as I was standing watch. Meiya's still asleep and nobody else got here yet. I had a dream about the time me and Sumika went to the amusement park together before Meiya woke me up for my shift. That was nuts, that roller coaster was really scary.

And how could I forget when Meiya interrupted the play of those colored rangers? Sumika and a boy got called to the stage and she thought it was real! Hahaha, she was so dumb to not realize that was just a performance. She even went and slashed the screen in half with her sword, poor support guys had to pull all the stops to fix the thing for the next scene.

Wait… How do I know that?

Stretching my arms as I raise from the floor, I glance around. What did I even do last time to kill time? I think me and Mikoto just talked about the time she was in the hospital and I joined the squad. Now, however… I don't see myself talking with Meiya for long, even if we kind of made a truce. I'm going to die of boredom, or bust my brain thinking on why I got here like last night.

"Uuugh." Meiya stirred around on her leaf bed. She looks so cute right now.

"Good morning, Mitsurugi." She seems startled as she looks at me with sleepy eyes. Her hair is a mess, now that she undid her ponytail it's all whirly down to her knees. I never asked her why she has it so long though.

"Yawn… G-Good morning, Tak-… Shirogane. Did anyone arrive?" Did she just… try to call me by my name?

"No, nobody's here yet. I'll go gather some leaves and mushrooms for breakfast, you stay watching over in case anyone arrives." She gives a faint nod as she yawns.

Now, time to put all the knowledge that Mikoto taught me to good use. These yellow mushrooms are poisonous, I gotta find the brown ones. And the bitter leaves too. After a little while I got back with some mushrooms and a few leaves. Meiya already did her ponytail and was eating her rations.

"So you even know about survival in the wild?" Sigh… Again with that surprised and dubious look?

"Hey, I asked Mikoto for some pointers that's all."

"Ah, I see."

"Well, here are your mushrooms."

---

November 18th. Second day of the CCSE. 8:43 PM.

(Ministry of Defense. Eiji's Office.)

[Yui]

---

"I can't believe you managed to convince those hard headed men by yourself. You've truly grow, Yui." Uncle says as he lits a cigarette.

"This is all for their sake, it's my duty as the survivor to honor the time we spent together. I won't let their efforts be in vain."

"I see. I only hope they are well rewarded. I'm also surprised you agreed to go to Yokohama as a UN officer, you really were against their involvement when you got assigned to Yukon."

"Well… Let's say I realized your words held some merit. It's not like all foreigners are our enemies, and also it's not like Nikkeis are traitors. There was… someone who helped me understand that."

"Forgive me for bringing those memories back. In any case, let me tell you why I called you here today." Uncle drops his smile as he takes some folders from his drawer.

"You said you had some important business to convey to me, what is this about?" For him to call me to his office at this hour, it must be something serious. Or completely silly.

"First, a word of warning. Be careful with the UN, they are really sensitive after the whole Korean fiasco. Your actions will reflect on the Empire's reputation. I'm sure you know, but it's never bad to remember that." Please Uncle, I'm not a kid anymore.

After what happened with Yuuya I know I have to try to be more open with people. I can't let my pride hold me back, much less now that the UN gave me this chance after my proposal got accepted by the Minister. With some luck, I may be able to get one Type-94-1C to Yokohama after I complete the railgun, to restart the XFJ Project.

"Duly noted. Is there anyone in particular you think I should be careful about?"

"Vice Commander Kouzuki. She moves all the threads in the base and it's a real genius, you don't want her angry at you. Keep her words close to you, as far as I know she thinks the same as you and me and doesn't want any more conflicts between the UN and the Empire. She can become a very important ally for you, if you still wish to continue the XFJ Project." I'm glad to hear that. If I can get permanently assigned to Yokohama to continue the project that would do wonders. Especially if she is as much of a genius as the rumors say she is.

"Anyone else?" He hands me a profile. What's this? A boy? Takeru Shirogane? "Who is this boy, Uncle?"

"Kouzuki's special protegee. There's very little info about him, however he was stationed at Yukon during the incident."

"What?! He… But, I don't remember him. Was there another Japanese pilot on base at the time?" Well… I was focused almost entirely on the project. And when we came back from Kamchatka… Ugh, just remembering how Yifei flirted with him is enough to make me mad again. You two idiots… Why did you have to go and die?

"He was a Cadet being trained in a mixed unit. Apparently, part of the UN's plans to bring as many nations together as they could." So there were Cadet squads that worked like our Argos Test Flight? That's really interesting.

"How did a Cadet from Yukon become the Vice Commander's protegee?"

"Kouzuki saw great potential in him and decided to recruit Shirogane to train him to be her personal bodyguard, it seems. His scores on Yukon were apparently very good, and all his efforts in Yokohama are trampling over his Yukon data." I check the other page of his profile with his current records at Yokohama, to think such a recruit exist.

"Uncle, the reason you recommended me to choose Yokohama… It wasn't only because of Kouzuki's influence, right?"

"I liked you more when I could surprise you." He lowers his eyelids, his voice sounding low and creaking like old wood. Oh, Uncle! Be serious for once! "I got a call from a friend about this super recruit that appeared in Yokohama. When I saw his data, I thought that if he were trained rigorously he could become a good enough pilot to be the tester of the Second."

"But he still hasn't taken the piloting test, right?" Uncle slowly squints his eyes as he entwines his fingers together.

"We have our reasons to believe he'll become a good pilot." So you can't tell me because it's some sort of secret.

Shirogane, I hope we can get along. If you can finish what Yuuya started, the relations with both the UN and America will surely improve greatly. Though, I wonder…

"Is this something I'll have to ask of the XO myself? She is his guardian after all. Or are you informing me of this 'pact' now?"

"No, Kouzuki won't reveal any info about the boy. I can only hope she'll agree to take the torch and continue the XFJ Project. That's why I said, keep her words close to you. She's the only person that might be interested in the project. Otherwise, you can forget about the Second ever being a reality again." He leans back on his seat as he sends a cloud of smoke to the roof.

"I understand. I'll do my best to show her the potential the Second has." I can't express how grateful I am. After this month of negotiations, I finally got another chance.

Everyone, all your efforts won't go to waste. I won't allow it. You can leave the Second you liked so much in my hands, Yuuya. I'll make it fly once more!

"Also a bit of advice, take some natto rolls with you when you go meet her." Uncle says as an uncharacteristic smile appears on his face.

"Natto rolls? Does Kouzuki like them?" I don't know many people that do, but geniuses can be peculiar in their tastes.

"You take some when you go there just in case. Now, onto the not so pleasant news. I'm afraid to tell you that you were used as a bargaining chip."

"What? For what purpose? What did the Empire ask?" I can't believe they had the gall to ask for something in return. We are the ones asking for a favor, can't you bow your heads for once? These developments could turn the tide of the war, they could get us the recognition you all so desire!

"We do not know who, but someone convinced the Defense Minister to accept your transfer to Yokohama as a UN officer. You know that they wanted you to be stationed there as a member of the Guard, right?" Sigh… Damn politicians. If I'm there as a Royal Guard, they won't let me near the UN's research hangars or any sensitive intel. How foolish can they be?

"So someone profited from my efforts? Do you know what they got in exchange?"

"It's a rumor as of now, but it seems that on the next session the Parliament will approve an increase in the budget for the production of the Type-94. A 46% increase compared to the current budget."

"What? That's… Where are they getting the funds from?" Uncle grimaces, closing his eyes.

"You can already guess, don't you?"

The civilian camps… Of course, lower the budgets for schools, hospitals, repairs and food centers, and you suddenly got the money to spend on TSFs. But this…

"Does Her Highness approve of this?"

"Of course she doesn't. But you know that her authority is restricted to military matters now, she can reject the budget increase but can't stop them from taking funds away from the social care system. It's even worse when you take into account that they might have taken funds from the Kyoto Restoration Project."

"What?! But… That was a project ordered by the Emperor! How can they get away with that?"

"Yui, you know as well as I do that the Emperor has no real power nowadays. He's just a figurehead, to placate the people and give some politicians an excuse to do the 'hard things' without receiving much backlash. It's just like in the past, the Imperial family is allowed to keep living in luxury, trapped inside their palace, while the common people die of hunger and sickness. It's like nothing changed in this nation since the end of the Sengoku era." He looks down as his eyes darken, his fists and lips tighten, and he lets out a huge puff of smoke.

"Don't say that, Uncle! This situation can improve, even if I was used as a pawn in someone's board the chance I have now can bring us one step closer to our goal of mending our international relations. Do not despair, I'll do all I can in Yokohama to restart the XFJ Project, so you make sure I get the approval to remain there."

"You do know you might be branded as a traitor to the Empire for choosing to join the UN willingly?"

"Do not worry about me. I'm willing to lose my title if it means making all this a reality." He winces upon hearing my words

"I hope you know what that means. You'll be exiled from the Empire if that happens. I'm sure the UN will be more than happy to have someone of your skill in their ranks, I'm sure I can get you assigned there after a talk with the XO."

"Thanks, Uncle. I don't know what I would do without your support." He laughs again, then he hands me another profile.

"Now, that's the most problematic one of the bunch. I bet even you will be surprised about it." What is he smirking about? I'm not falling for any tricks you may-

"Wh… The Shogun?!" Are my eyes deceiving me? What is Her Highness doing dressed in UN fatigues?!

"AHAHAHA! I knew you'd lose it!" With both hands in his stomach, Uncle starts laughing so much that it turned into coughing.

"Uncle, what is the meaning of this?!"

"Read the profile. By the by, this is top secret information. You'll have to be very careful around that girl."

Meiya Mitsurugi? She's a member of the Tozama, but why is she so similar to Her Highness? What is this? She's there under the Shogun's orders, as part of her training. There's a unit of the Royal Guards stationed at Yokohama Base to keep her safe for the time being. So she's one of the most important people of the Empire, if the Shogun arranged her training regime.

"Uncle, why are you showing me this? Wouldn't it be better if this was kept a secret?"

"Yes, it would. But, you see, my friend I told you about has a certain… reach, let's say, within the Shogun's palace. He came yesterday to deliver this letter in person. It's for you, from Her Highness Yuuhi Koubuin-sama herself."

"… Did I heard that right? Her Highness has sent a letter to me?" What is this about? Where did this come from?!

I take the letter and read it. Three times. A special mission, to watch over Meiya Mitsurugi after she gets commissioned. Apparently, the Guard's squad will have to leave Yokohama Base at the end of November so Her Highness wishes me to be her eyes and ears, to protect her protegee. But that's not all there is to it. My grip on the paper strengthens as a small veil of sweat starts covering my hands.

"Uncle… Is the last part true? About there being an accord between Vice Commander Kouzuki and the Shogun to develop new TSF technology?"

"I dunno. I didn't read the letter, if it says that it has to be true."

"This is…"

"Are you not feeling up to the task? You can always decline it, it's an unofficial order after all."

"No, I'm not scared or insecure. It's just… All I fought for this month alone, to see now so much support for me is frankly shocking. I can't wait to be in Yokohama. I'll gladly accept Her Highness' orders, tell your friend that I'll aid the XO in anything she needs from me and I'll keep watch over the Mitsurugi girl."

Finally, my prayers have been answered. I'll make the most out of this, for it is more than what I hoped to receive. I have Her Highness' trust on me, these new developments, the young pilot, I'm blessed to be given so many things. I can't fail this mission, there's too much in stake here.

"I see. I got the papers for your transfer here at the ready, let's get them done. Tomorrow I'll file them in, I expect that you'll be arriving at Yokohama on the 20th of this month. Take this time to rest, you'll be worked to the bone by Kouzuki when you're there."

"That's exactly what I want. I'll show them the results the railgun can provide and convince them to take the XFJ Project under them as well."

If I can make this accord progress our relations with the UN will dramatically improve, I may have an easier time than I thought in convincing them to take the XFJ Project. I don't know who moved the pieces to convince the Minister, but this has gone in my favor. I now know that I have the support from the Shogun, I need to gain Kouzuki's support now. As well as keeping this girl safe. I won't let this go to waste, not after how everything ended last time.

---

November 19th. 2:25 PM. Third Day of the CCSE.

(Somewhere on the island.)

[Meiya]

---

Spotting another trap I stop in my tracks yet again. Cutting down yet another wire, I breath a sigh. I'm not making much progress here, with how many times I have to stop. This island is truly brimming with traps, more than I thought it would have.

I walk slowly through the vegetation, glancing carefully, almost like a madman, in all directions to spot anything out of place.

"Mitsurugi, is that side clear?" Sakaki calls out from behind me.

"Yes, I'm done."

"Mitsurugi-san, don't force yourself. We're all here together."

"Thanks Tamase, but I must also contribute here."

"Don't be so hard on yourself, Mitsurugi." Shirogane addressed me from the front. "You've been dealing with traps for half an hour, take it easy for a while."

"But I…"

"Rest rest, don't worry." Ayamine pats my back as she moves to take my place.

I move slowly to Tamase' side. Shirogane and Yoroi were on the front dealing with the most traps. He was still carrying the gun he found. Sakaki and Ayamine each had a piece of a rifle Yoroi had found on her target.

We all met up around 1100 hours, with Tamase and Sakaki being the last ones to arrive. Ayamine found a paper similar to the one we found as well, it said 'Run away from the wasps', and combining it with the one we found we deduced something will pop up on our way to the evac point. Tamase and Sakaki had found the coordinates through a code.

And so, we started our march towards our coordinates on the west side of the island. We regularly switched our duties in the formation as we advanced, to give us all some rest under this heat, and now I was relegated to watching the back with Tamase.

Which means I'm alone with my thoughts again. Sigh… Why did I have this weird dream?

I saw myself with Shirogane, living together in some sort of luxurious mansion. The thing is… W-We were kissing. Quite passionately. Is a bit of physical contact all it takes to hamper my thoughts? I mean, it's not like I completely trust him, I still wish to see him hand over his sword myself before I can try to trust him again. So why did I dream of us being lovers? Makes no sense.

As I gaze at his back I feel my throat close shut again, as I recall what he told me yesterday. He doesn't even know if his family is alive. Forced to join the military, just to have a roof and a plate of food everyday. And yet he never complains, he's always doing his best.

Tsukuyomi said we were similar. We both don't have family, as Grandpa couldn't move out of our prior house when the BETA attacked. And… I was never wanted on my parent's house. He's the same, he doesn't have a place to call home. Maybe that's why he was so sad when we pushed him away?

In that sense, we both joined the UN to have somewhere to be. Even if I'm here by the Shogun's orders, someone gave him the Minaru Kamui. And he is terribly skilled in almost everything. If he became my fellow… Having him by my side sure is reassuring, however…

Sigh… Would he even forgive me? The way he spoke about the Guard these days made his apprehension palpable, he doesn't think he's welcome here. I don't think Tsukuyomi would make such a mistake, but still… He didn't know what the blade meant, what if he never came back to the Empire? Maybe he received the blade just before coming here?

Well, I can try to be more fair with him from now on. I also hope Tsukuyomi doesn't get angry about this. I shiver just thinking on what she'd say if he ends up rejecting an offer to join us because of how we were treating him and all I said these days.

We're making decent progress despite all the traps. As we keep advancing we reached a river, a large and deep ravine separating us from the other side.

"It's… pretty deep. Ayamine, take the rope you found, tie it to that tree and cross to the other side." Sakaki gives the order to which Ayamine complies without retort, to my surprise.

"Roger." And there she goes. It's always amazing to see her climb with such dexterity.

With some luck, we might be able to reach our destination well before dusk comes our… Huh? What was-

I felt a cold drop on my head, and as I looked up the sky had clouded and rain was starting to fall, quite strongly.

"Rain?!" Shirogane seemed surprised, not that I blame him.

"What bad timing." Sakaki clicked her tongue as we moved to take shelter from the downpour. "Squad, we'll cross from lighter to heaviest. Tamase, Yoroi. Each of you take one part of the rifle with you as you cross." We all nodded, Tamase and Yoroi each grabbed one part and began to fasten it to their backs.

This really came with bad timing, it'll be harder to cross with such strong rain. There's no telling whether this will be just a squall or a storm. Sigh…

"Shirogane, Mitsurugi, how long do you think this will last?" Sakaki asks us as Ayamine ties the rope to a tree on the other side.

"I think it might be a squall, but some of those clouds look truly dark." It really looks like it won't stop for a while at the least.

"Shirogane, what about you?"

"… It might last for a few hours, probably." He says looking worriedly at the sky. Don't tell me he also knows about meteorology…

"Then, if it doesn't stop raining, should we leave the rope hanging? I think we could destroy the knot with the rifle."

"Sakaki, we would lose the only powerful weapon we have. Shirogane's gun only has rubber bullets, and it is not powerful enough to shoot the rope under this rain. In that same sense, it might come short if we ever need the anti-materiel rifle."

"How about we discuss this after crossing?" Shirogane is right yet again.

"Yes, that's true." Sakaki then looks at the other side of the cliff.

Ayamine gives the signal and Tamase starts crossing with one part of the rifle on her back. Yoroi got the other part on her back and got closer to the rope.

Hmm? Shirogane was looking towards the forest. He dropped his gun near some bushes.

"Is something the matter?"

"No, I thought I heard something. I must have mistaked the sound of the rain with something else." He starts moving his shoulders, he must certainly be tired after carrying the gun all day long.

"Don't worry. There are no big animals in the island." Sakaki says as she takes off her glasses and cleans the water they have with her shirt.

Tamase made it to the other side and gave us the okay. Yoroi starts to cross, taking the other part of the rifle with her.

I had hoped this would be a squall but it's not letting up, and those clouds look really dark. I don't think this rain will stop any-

click

"Mitsurugi! Down!" Shirogane pushed me away suddenly, sending me into the mud. What is wrong with him?!

"Oh man! You fucked up! Heh, point for me! You owe me a beer!"

"Oh shut it. Damn boy, how did he notice?!"

Barely recovering from the shock, I quickly stood up. Four soldiers in gray uniforms appeared from the forest, they were carrying an automatic machinegun. A real one.

"What is the meaning of this?! This island is under the jurisdiction of-" Sakaki's bark was drowned by one of their shouts.

"Shut the fuck up! Can't you tell who we are? We are playing the role of your chasers here, we are here to take you all down Cadets." Says one to my left.

"And to score some points with Jinguuji!" Said the other one to my left. Ugh, more depraved men. The UN truly is nothing more than a dumpster.

"We were not notified of this change!" The briefing said nothing about being actually chased by someone.

"Sorry babe, orders are… Hey, look! We took the boy down!" What are they… I could only gasp at what I saw lying on the mud.

"S-Shirogane!" His shoulder had a huge bruise, there was some blood coming out of it.

"Man, you're right. He really went down faster than I expected." Damn you, this wasn't in the briefing.

"Yoroi, hurry up and cross already!" Sakaki screamed towards the girl, that was trying her hardest to make haste.

"Oh, c'mon now! No need to rush, why don't you stay with us to chat for awhile?"

The four of them slowly closed in on us, pointing their guns straight at our faces, and at Shirogane as he tried to get up. This is bad, at this rate all of us will fail again. Why are you not running?! Ayamine and Tamase were looking nervously towards us from behind a tree. Wait, the rifle!

"Tamase! Mount the rifle and take down the tree!" She looked shocked on the other side, but gave a weak nod.

"Look at her! She wants to resist, that's how I liked 'em. Feisty girls are the best." I glare at the man, who simply snickers at us.

"No hard feelings, right? This is just how it goes. Now, stay put and nothing bad will-"

"SEI!" Shirogane rose up in a flash and kicked one of them. I follow his lead and send a punch at the one in front of me, sending him into the mud.

I sidestep and elbow another of them in the stomach, then grab his shoulder and throw him to the ground.

"Agh!" Sakaki! Damn them, the fired at her! I rush the one that attacked her with a punch and kick his lower parts when he tried to retaliate.

"Sakaki! Are you alright?!"

"Y-Yeah, they're rubber bullets… But they hurt a lot…" She had a giant purple circle on the side of her waist, but it wasn't bleeding.

I hear a loud splash, as I look towards Shirogane I see another two soldiers had appeared and were trying to restrain him.

The two I had thrown to the ground had gotten up and were now pointing their guns towards us.

"No more struggling! We have enough bullets to pacify you both, so stop resisting!" He wasn't lying, they will not hesitate to harm us. Who ordered this? Why does this happen to us?!

"Mitsurugi… This seems to be the end of the line for us."

"… Seems like it."

BOOM!

A deafening noise rumbled through the rain. Tamase shot down the tree, tumbling the rope down. The soldiers were startled, they didn't expect us to actually shoot down the tree.

"You have to escape! Run!" Yoroi shouted as she grabbed the rope, all three of them continued their march.

"Sakaki, now!" I grab her hand and start running to my left into the forest. Forgive me, Shirogane.

We need to lose them, so that we can cross and regroup with the rest. We can't… We won't fail this time! Even if I have to abandon you… Just when we had started to clear the air between us… Forgive me, please…

"Stop right there!" They start shooting at us, we barely manage to avoid their shots thanks to the trees and the fact that we are desperately running, not slowing down at all to avoid slipping with the mud.

"Mitsurugi, where are we going?!"

"No idea! We need to get some distance between us, or find a way to cross the river!"

We continue to run, bullets hit the trees we leave behind to let us know we had become the prey under the rain.

---

Some time after that.

[Wasps]

---

"This is Wasp 3 to Wasp 1, we're currently cornering the two girls. Over."

"Wasp 1 here, I'm retreating…"

"What is it, Captain? Oh, you're taking the boy back already?"

"No… the bastard got away."

"What?! But… you had him pinned down!"

"He broke free a short while after you all left. We tried to recapture him but he messed me up, and he injured Two quite gravely, he broke her arm. I'm taking her to the command post via boat. Seven, do you copy?"

"Wasp 7, loud and clear."

"The boy is going after the two girls, get him at all cost. Use the drug on him if you must. That bastard is really strong, don't think we could subdue him in a fight."

"Seven, Wasp 3 here. The two girls are near to your position, according to the Pleiades. Can you and Eight set up an ambush?"

"Roger that. Leave it to us, we'll coordinate with your signals. By the way Captain, are Nine and Ten not here?"

"I told those two to stay behind, to let us handle this part of the 'test'. I doubt they'll listen. Let's complete the mission before they move."

"Understood. We'll ready the ambush and capture the girls, sir! Wasp 7, over and out."

"Good. Three, make sure you give Shirogane his well deserved payback!"

"Yes, Captain!"

The Eye of the Storm

Chapter 18: The Eye of the Storm

---

November 19th. Third Day of the CCSE. 3:37 PM.

(By the river.)

[Takeru]

---

"You have to escape! Run!" Mikoto shouted at the top of her lungs as the tree fell down.

To think Tama would score her shot in such a situation… Way to go, my dear. She saved our backs right now.

A second later after the rumbling sound echoed about within the rain, Meiya grabbed Chizuru and dashed into the forest. I can't blame them, not in this situation.

"Quiet!" A woman points her gun at me as I tried to struggle against the grip of the man that had me pinned.

"Wasps 3 to 6, chase after the girls!" The man in question says, and the first four rush after the girls. This works in my favor, if I only have to deal with two of them…

"Who are you?! Do you think you can get away with this?"

"Boy, the UN sent us. We are part of the CCSE, just that we're supposed to be a surprise." Yeah, right. If that's the case, Sensei better get ready to find a replacement because our partnership is fucking finished.

"Stop resisting! I'll shoot your legs if you don't stop!" The woman warned me.

I have one chance to get out of this shit. They didn't notice I left my rifle by the bushes over there. I gotta break free and then go for it. This dude isn't that strong.

"Alright… You win." I stop resisting and the man gets me up from the ground.

"Thanks for your collaboration, I rather not have to hurt you." Yeah, because the sting on my shoulder was there from the start.

The other four are too far away now. The man keeps me pinned down as the woman takes out a pair of binoculars and looks at the other side of the cliff.

"Looks like the other three really ran away."

"Well, it is what it is. Shirogane, please do not resist or we will have to harm you." Grabbing both of my hands and my right shoulder he slowly gets me up.

"I'll cuff him, Captain." The woman lowered her gun to take a pair of cuffs from her belt kit.

The man seems to be relaxed, his grip is still firm but with some strength… Okay, now or never!

"Graaaah!" I push myself backwards, smacking the back on my head into the man's face.

His grips falters and I release myself. I elbow him in the stomach causing him to fall. Before the woman could point her rifle at me I rushed and tackled her into the mud.

"Stop resisting! I'll have to-"

I pounce at him as I draw my knife from my belt kit and slash at his face.

"Whoa! The fu-" He falls backwards to avoid my slash. I kick the gun from his hands quickly.

"Stay still or I'll-" I quickly turn around and strike the female soldier with a kick, sending her gun away.

Before I could continue to attack the female, the male soldier got up and grabbed me from behind. I elbow his stomach again just in time to dodge a baton towards my face from the other.

I slash at her face as I move away from her. Of course, I didn't even hit her. She tries to hit me again but I dodge her strike and try to aim at her hand. She moves away and trips with a root.

"Desist from resisting! We will have to severely harm you if you don't!" The male one shouts as he got his gun again and pointed it at me.

Quickly throwing myself behind a tree, I don't need to worry for now. Sadly for him, I just picked up my rifle. Like hell I'll surrender.

"Who would surrender to the enemy?!"

"Look kid, we have authorization to rough you up quite badly, so if you don't wanna get hurt come out of that tree!" I don't care who gave you that authorization, I'm not failing this test nor letting any of you harm my girls! And if I have to bloody my own hands to do so… I will!

"You are the ones that are going to get hurt here!" The man's face contorts in fear as he sees the rifle in my hands. I feel again a pair of cold hands on my shoulders as I pull the trigger.

The female soldier that was getting close ducked as I opened fire on her. The male one took cover and also started shooting from behind a tree.

"Where did you got that weapon?! I heard nothing of this!" The female one hissed from the ground.

"Shut up, you bitch!" I locked onto her again and she dashed to some bushes to avoid the bullets.

I don't have so many bullets, they might have spare magazines to use but I do not. Let's get the hell out of here. I fire one last round of bullets at them and start running. I need to go and help Meiya and Chizuru!

"Stop! We'll open fire if you do not!" A short while after that I heard the sound of wood being splintered by bullets.

I keep dashing through the traps, jumping from the trip wires, sidestepping away from the pitfalls. These guys are real soldiers, I can't lose them despite my current physical state.

Damn this! Why is this happening?! Who are they?! Are they really with the UN? Sensei, did you betray me? Or are they sleeper agents of the Shogunate? Dammit, we don't have time for this shit. Everything was going alright, and you dared to try to harm them.

I couldn't see a wire and I fall face first into the mud. Damn it! I get up and keep running, their footsteps are getting closer. The rain relentlessly falls on me, making my left shoulder ache.

I can't lose them. From time to time they take a shot at me or start screaming at me. A bullet hits the tree in front of me and I duck to my left. I trip again and hit my head against a tree. I get up hastily and resume my escape, as more shouts and bullets roar behind me.

Why is this happening to me? What did I do to deserve this?! I just… wanted to live in peace, to be able to save some of them. To keep fighting until the Earth was safe from the BETA, to protect my world from this madness. And yet this world is constantly trying to get in the way. Do I really want to help Sensei if she knew of this and didn't tell me?

I jump over a trip wire and as I keep rushing through the vegetation I seem to have triggered some more machineguns. I pick up my pace to dodge the bullets, throwing myself to the ground when I see I won't be able to dodge them all.

"Captain! I found him!" The female had sighted me and locked her rifle onto me. She… was aiming at my face. I roll to a side as she opened fire, and grab my gun in a rush and return the aggression. I quickly stand up and resume my escape, but I stop as bullets hit the trees in front of me.

"We have authorization to use lethal force! Get out in sight or we'll shoot at you until you're unconscious!" The male voice tried to sound composed, but I could feel the anger in him.

I answer with more rubber and he has to hide behind a tree. Fuck you, damn soldiers! Who do you-

Rustle

I move away from where I was as the baton hits my left shoulder instead of my head.

"ARGH!" Damn her! She hit me with all her might. The pain spreads the cold sensation over all of my body as the hands are now gently stroking my cheeks.

"Don't think you'll get away with some scratches, you went too far boy!" She says as she prepares another strike.

"Come and get some!" I take out my knife and lunge at her. My speed takes her by surprise as she has trouble dodging my attacks.

I throw a kick at her and she stumbles backwards, I use the opening to give her a strong punch to the stomach.

"Stay still!" The male one was pointing his rifle at me. "Takeru Shirogane, sixth member of the Cadet Squad 207, desist on these futile actions. Surrender now or-"

"Or what?" I had grabbed the female to continue to punch her, but now I bend one of her arms behind her back as I put her in front of me. "C'mon! What's the problem? Shoot already, you bastard!" They aimed at my face, they're here for my blood. I don't care anymore, you might be with the UN, the Shogunate or the Americans for all I care. I won't forget this, whoever plotted this will pay!

"Grrr… You call yourself a soldier?! Hiding behind another? Fight me head on! What is it? You scared, kid?" He tries to taunt me while he laughs and flips me off.

"Shut up! You want me to hurt her some more?!" I bend her arm with more strength.

"Aaah! Stop that! It hurts!" Poor you, your cries are falling on deaf ears. You two were seriously trying to kill me, why should I hold back?!

"Cadet Shirogane, stop right now! You're hurting a comrade!"

"You're not my allies! You were trying to kill me, why should I care?!" I use my free hand to point my knife to the throat of the woman, who starts shivering upon feeling the metal on her neck.

"Stop! We were sent by the UN as your pursuers! This is also part of the CCSE!" The man seemed to have lost his cool act.

"You think I'm dumb? The UN wouldn't send armed squads against Cadets in this way. This bitch here was aiming her gun at my face!"

"Sorry kid, but it is what it is." The man said, grimacing a bit. "We were ordered to not give you an easy time during the test, that's all there is to this." If I were a greenhorn, I would have believed you. But that sharpened glint in your eyes… I can't ignore that.

"Then, is shooting at us without warning part of the exercise? If I hadn't shielded my comrade, you would have hit her in the head!"

"Those are the rules we live by, kid. Welcome to the military, Shirogane."

Don't give me that shit… These rules… That's all wrong, this is too messed up. Like hell I'll accept something like that!

"And? Even if you're telling the truth, do you think I'll just give up?! If you come at me, then I will go at you. Get ready to bleed if you wanna take me out." And anyways, almost everybody in the UN hates me.

I wouldn't be surprised if you decided to 'take your liberties' when restraining me. 'Oh sir, he just tripped and fell on top of the bullets! That's why his eyes are gone! Totally not on purpose!' I can see that happening in this messed up world. That's assuming you're not a double agent of the Shogunate, of course.

"I… Alright, we will not chase you anymore." He lowers his gun to the ground, he's clearly lying though. What is he- Ouch!

The woman stepped hard on my feet as she used her free hand to elbow me in the stomach. Bitch, you're gonna pay for that! I quickly reacted and grabbed her from behind before she got away and, while firmly planting my feet on the ground, got her close to me to used her as a shield from the incoming bullets the male shot at me after quickly picking up his rifle. I feel no pain, she covered me perfectly.

"Zanama! Forgive me!" The man seemed heart-broken about this outcome.

"Aaaauugh…" She wailed as tears seem to start coming from her eyes, not that anyone could notice under this rain. I strengthen my grip on her to restrict her movements.

"You bastard! Shirogane! Release her at once!"

"Why would I?! Go eat a dick, you cunt!" He popped a vein right now, this girl must be important for him.

"Damn you… I'll report this to your Instructor!"

"Say whatever you want, if you raise your gun at me you're my enemy. Even if you are from the UN." I press my knife against the throat of the woman again, this time placing my feet away from hers and strongly bending her arm.

"Aaauu… Pleeaase, I surrender. Don't hurt meeee." She was actually crying. How cute, she thinks I'll fall for this?

"If you don't wanna die, shut up. You're distracting!"

"But… It hurts. Please, I yield. I won't do- Augh!" I hit her on the head with the handle of the knife. She's pissing me off.

"HEY! That was uncalled for! She's defenseless! She already surrendered, let her-" He stops talking as I press my knife against her cheeks. It seems she isn't bleeding out, so they must be using rubber bullets or she has a bulletproof vest.

"I'm going to ask you to do something for me. Use that gun you have to shoot yourself on the foot. Do that, and I'll release her. And take off your boots while you're at it."

"What?! Like hell I'll shoot myself, I'll never walk again! Even if they're rubber bullets these things still harm people!"

"Then… I guess you leave me no choice." I put the tip of my knife against her throat. If I want to get away I need both of them to stop chasing me. Even if the woman truly surrendered, the man still wants to come after me. So I have to make him go away or to not chase me.

"I don't think you'll harm her more, you have been trained by our same teachings. Drop the tough act and surrender already!" He was trying to sound tough as he got closer gun at the ready. Heh, are you sure you should get so close, buddy?

In a quick movement I throw the woman onto him. This catches him by surprise and he stumbles as he drops his gun to grab her. Sadly for them, he should have aimed his gun at me, like I'm doing now at them. The horror in his eyes is truly beautiful for some reason. He moves the woman behind him as I open fire, it's a shame I was almost out of bullets.

He drops to his knees while holding back a scream of pain. Dropping the now useless machinegun I move swiftly and send the rifle away with a sweep of my feet, I then kick him in the head, sending him into the mud. I keep kicking him all around his body. If he covers his stomach I aim at his head. If he covers his head, I aim at his shoulders. And so, I continue to kick him with all my strength.

"How does that feel, mister chaser?!"

Being blamed for being 'an American', having to endure eating half rations everyday, being insulted for no reason, having Yuuhi send people to murder me. I can deal with that, it's my problem. I can take that.

But, do you think I'll let you harm my squad?! Sure, Chizuru and Kei hate my guts, but Mikoto and Tama were always nice to me, and Meiya seemed to finally be willing to give me a second chance. No one… No one lays a hand on my beloved ones and gets away with it! You were aiming at Meiya when you first shot at us. If I hadn't pushed her away… And you think I'll hold back now?!

"Augh… Sto- Ough! We're not.. Argh!… your ene- Aaagh!" Damn idiot, you think I'll let you off this easi- AAARGHH!

The woman! She slashed at my left shoulder with a knife! AAAGH! It hurts! You fucking bitch! With all the pent up rage I've been holding I punch her in the face with my right hand. Despite the fact that I sent her flying against a tree, she gets up knife ready to attack.

"You're gonna regret that, bitch!" I howl with all my hatred towards this world flowing out of me.

"You monster! You're not even human!" She hisses as she charges at me.

I sidestep and aim at her hand. It may be a knife, but I can still fight using the Mugen Kidou. I do more quick attacks and she can barely dodge me, she doesn't seem to be very good at CQC. I take a step back as a feint and using the opening I kick her hand, sending her knife flying.

"Aaahh… No… No, m-mercy! I… wasn't…" Her wailing gets smaller and smaller as I get closer pointing my knife at her. Doesn't matter who sent you. Because you tried to harm them! As I was about to slash at her I'm tackled by the man. Stubborn bastard!

I plant my feet firmly and resist his struggles. He grabs the hand in which I have the knife to stop me from cutting him. Sadly for you I can also use my legs! I give him a knee to the stomach and his grip on me falters. I punch him with my left hand, making me grimace as the wound in my shoulder spreads pain through me. The cold hands start rubbing my chest as my anger starts to surge from beyond my consciousness.

He tries to get up, but I kick him again in the shoulder. Who the hell do you think you are?! Since when the UN allows Cadets to be shot at?! You all… fucking sons of an eldritch bitch… Just like during Operation Iceberg… You speak of humanity's cause, but all you truly are is a bunch of pigs feeding off the blood of the young soldiers you send to their deaths! You… You chasers are nothing but the dogs of those pigs!

"Stop! Leave the Captain alone!" The woman grabs me from behind. I try to elbow her, but she doesn't let go.

I elbow her more strongly and her grasp weakens. I turn around, grab her by the collar and shove her into a nearby tree.

"I'm so done with you!"

"How about you try me instead, boy?" The man had gotten up and was now on a fighting stance.

"Come on, then! Let's see how much you last!"

I pounce at him, knife at the ready. He moves to the right and tries to strike me with his baton. I dodge and aim at his arm. Blood dirties my blade, a scream is drowned by the rain.

As he moves away from me, I rush after. I do a feint, aiming at his wound. He obviously fell for it, giving me an opening to send a punch to his jaw with my left. A swift uppercut sent the man crashing into the mud.

"You, answer me. How many of you are here?" He spits as he tries in vain to get up.

"Fuck you, American." Oh, so that's how it is? I gather strength on my left leg and give him a kick straight in the face.

"Stop! Leave the Cap- Augh!" The woman tried to jump me, but I punched her on the face, making her drop to the ground grabbing her now bleeding nose.

"So, Captain. How many of you are here?"

"Fuck you, Shirogane."

"I want answers, and I want them now!" Grabbing him by the collar with my right hand after putting my knife on my belt, I start punching the man repeatedly with my left hand, which sends more pain into me which in turn makes me more angry. My knuckles are soon colored crimson.

"Leave the Captain alone!" The woman charged at me with her baton. I let go of the man and used both arms to block her. Damn, this hurts!

"You… I'm so done with you!" I put force into my feet and raise from the ground.

She attacks me again and gets blocked again, sending more pain through my left shoulder to my body. However, I no longer feel any heat from my wound. It's like when I got out of my TSF when I found the Shogun, I feel frozen. Yet I'm completely enraged, I didn't knew I could feel this bloodlust.

As she went for another swing I grabbed the baton and then her right arm. Fear spread through her face as I got close to her. I'm not letting you get in my way anymore! I put pressure on my grip, twisting her arm outwards. Yes, show me your pain. Scream, suffer, wail, cry, and bleed, just like I did when I lost everything. Maybe then you'll understand, maybe then you'll stop attacking your 'comrades' from behind. You did this to yourself, you awoke the wolf. And now you're gonna have to deal with its fangs.

"Aaaauuhg! Stooop! I yield! Forgive me, I surreeeeEEEEAAAAAHH-!" And with a loud enough sound to be heard through the rain, I broke her arm.

She falls to the ground screaming in pain holding her broken limb, that hangs like a piece of cloth off a wire. The wailing continues to drown even the rain, looking at her face, that had one of its sides sinking into the mud as she screamed, only made that cold sensation all over me more strong. Twitching as if she were a kitten hit by a car, she cannot even squirm away. Her mouth moves as if she were munching ice the more her screams seem to vanish. Her tears do not stop though, and she looks at me completely frozen. Unable to look away from my eyes, yet shivering and shaking her head.

I didn't knew breaking a person could be… so easy. Maybe all the shit I've seen has turned me into a coldhearted bastard, after all.

… Did I just break her arm? For real? I… did this to her, didn't I? Right now? She's in so much pain… completely terrified as if I were a BETA.

…

… What did I just do?

I broke her arm.

Why?

I didn't have to.

But she attacked me first.

But I could have just knocked her out.

But I had to incapacitate her.

But she was just trying to stop me from beating the man.

But they wouldn't hesitate to harm me like that.

She screams again, the lower end of her arm hanging limp like wet pasta in a puddle of muck and blood.

She was just ordered to act, she had no choice but to follow her orders.

… She didn't actually shoot at me when she had the chance, when she aimed at my face.

But I couldn't risk it.

Does that even matter?

I broke her arm, she won't stop screaming. She seems to again be munching ice cubes.

She's frozen in place, horrified of my gaze.

…

What did I just do? Why?

"Shiroganeeee!" The man tried to charge at me but I just moved sideways and punched him in the face. I then give him a strong kick in the waist and sent him to drink some mud.

Sigh… Calm down… I gotta do… what I gotta do. They attacked first. I just defended myself.

That's all there is to it.

I have to protect my squad, no matter what. Gotta focus on that, and do what I can.

I wasted too much time already. I want answers, and I want them now. And you're going to comply of course, unless you force me to inject more pain in your system.

"How many are you here? How are you communicating? Tell me, or you'll be in a world of pain!" Holding his neck tightly, I raise his body from the muck.

"We're… Ten… The… Pleiades…" The man says in a barely audible voice.

"What? You've got a Pleiades?"

He signals to his belt kit as I loosen my grip a tiny bit. There I find the thing, which does look like a Game Guy indeed. I see the dots moving some distance from here. Six of them.

"Is this the real deal?"

"Yes, that's what we used to coordinate our movements."

"Really?"

"It's the… truth…"

"… Maybe the girl will tell me if you're lying or not." Fear spreads through his eyes as I glance over to the crying figure of the woman.

"No, leave her alone! It's the truth, we're using the Pleiades!"

"Hmm… And what else do you have?"

"A… c-communicator."

"Is this it?" He nods as I grab the thing from his waist. As I turn it on, the sound of rain and a bunch of insults come out.

"Come here you little bitches! Stop running already!" I turn the thing off and throw it away towards a puddle of water.

"Looks like you weren't lying, Captain."

"Are you going to leave us? Or do you want more Japanese blood on your filthy hands, American?" Heh, your worthless life isn't worth my time. I have to help my squadmates.

"I'm going to leave now. But… if you follow me, I won't answer for what I'll do to you or her. Clear?" He scowls at me but nods all the same. I drop him to the ground with some force, quickly moving out.

I leave the groaning man and wailing woman behind, taking my knife, the woman's baton and the man's rifle and Pleiades with me. He is not following me, good for them.

After some time to make sure he didn't follow me, I take out the Pleiades. I make haste towards their position. Though I don't know what I'll find, I run again through the traps that are spread through the forest. I don't care if they're different, I can't lose my squad. Hate me if you want for this, keep calling me an American all you like, but I need your help to save this damn world. I can't find a way to go back safely to my world if I can't defeat the BETA to bring some semblance of peace to the Empire first. And like hell I'll let you die.

I stop and move to my right to avoid another pitfall and resume my running, I jump over a tripwire, a gun shot a bullet at me but since I'm running it missed entirely. Damn it, I'm getting worn down. My breathing is rugged, my shoulder is killing me and my feet ache with burning pain. C'mon, I've been through worse things!

I'm almost there. They had stopped moving a short while ago, so I suppose they must be restraining them. I gotta hurry or-

"Aaaah!" A scream pierces the rain. It was Chizuru's voice.

I run towards where I thought the scream came from, looking at the Pleiades to figure out from where to approach the group. As I get closer I crouch and crawl on the muddy ground, their voices get louder. As I look up I spot some figures at around thirty meters diagonally to my right. As I slowly get closer I see that there's six of those soldiers in a circle. What the hell are they… No, you gotta be kidding me!

Meiya and Chizuru were collapsed in the mud as they kicked them nonstop.

"How you like that?! You dared to bruise my face, you rich girl! I wonder if the Prime Minister knows how rude his daughter is?!"

"C'mon feisty girl! Where is all your bravery from before?!"

I know those two. They're the usual two that pestered us when the Takemikazuchi arrived. I don't recognize the other four. They kept kicking them, despite the fact that both Meiya and Chizuru were curled without resisting. Despite the fact that the Captain said they were here only to restrain us.

"Please… Sto-Ouhg!" Chizuru's screams fills my ears as I move to a more advantageous position.

They're getting kicked over and over, these guys are not even being subtle. Meiya is also being kicked but she isn't… Wait… Meiya isn't even moving. She… isn't reacting to the kicks, not even the ones to her head.

As the thought of her being dead appears on my mind, a Takemikazuchi comes into my sight as it gets rammed into the XG. A woman looks crying at me, her face tainted with blood and tears.

Chizuru's screams as the Fort's acid dissolved her ring through my ears. The wings of fire come to me again as I was kneeling on the ground, useless as ever.

Those bastards… They're not restraining them. Are they trying to… kill them?

"Aaah.. Please… Augh! Ugh! Stop… I beg- Ough!" Chizuru's screams are getting faint. She… and Meiya might… die.

My fists claw at the handle of the gun. The sound of the rain vanishes and my vision grows narrow, focusing only on those six bastards. My heart's rhythm causes my whole body to overheat in rage, making my lungs to hold a cyclone in my chest, giving me a light pain on the back of my head.

No one… No one lays a hand on my Chizuru… on my Meiya… and gets away with it.

They already died for me many times, they gave me their support when I needed it the most. Now it's my time to dirty my hands for them! You're all gonna pay dearly for this! The cold hands entwine with mine, making me shiver with this duality of feelings. Being completely lost in anger, while also remaining strangely calm.

I aim the rifle towards them. You gray haired bastard… I sure hope you can live without one of your eyes! I shoot at his face, hitting his left eye. The man collapses screaming in pain as the rest of the soldiers look at him in shock. They start looking everywhere, pointing their guns, shooting randomly at the forest. I aim at one of the other men, slowly locking onto him I shoot. Straight to his face, the man drops to a side as he clutches his head in pain.

Two of them start coming towards my position, shooting randomly to try to scout me. Being in prone position behind some bushes, they still haven't seen me. Thanks to the rain they can't really hear well where the bullets come from since they weren't paying attention the first time.

I aim again towards the face of the last man of the team, since he was closer it was easier to get a hit. The other one finally notices me and opens fire but I started firing on her as well. Shit! Out of bullets. The woman was close, so I grab the baton and rush at her. She didn't expect my speed, and as I moved to my left to avoid her gun I drop the baton with my full force into her head. She falls to her knees and just to be sure I hit her head one more time.

A bullet hits the tree that was nearby. I duck and take cover as another one hit the place where I was standing. I peek towards their position but the red haired woman that usually was along the gray haired bastard was nowhere to be seen. No wait, she's hiding behind that tree. Near her was another man, that had brown hair.

Chizuru was still conscious, as she squirmed on the ground. Meiya was still not moving. Don't think this is all I'll do to you bastards, the wolf is in the forest and it wants to eat some rabbits.

I move slowly trying to get a vantage point to finish the ones I knocked out. They're not dead, the others start to stand up despite the pain, except the one hit in the head with the baton. Fuck this, I'll be fast then!

I take out my knife and rush the man that was close, he was still trying to get up as he was holding his face. I had broken his nose and a lot of blood was coming out of it.

My hands shivered as I approached him, but as soon as he saw me he aimed his rifle at me. Biting my lips, I speed up and kick the weapon away. As he hit the mud, I thrusted my knife in his neck. With some force I remove it and blood is spilled around.

Ducking as the red head opened fire, I crawl towards the dead's machinegun and return the fire from the ground. She stopped firing for a second so I use that window to move closer to her, throwing myself behind a tree when the brown haired man opened fire on me.

As I circled to their position, the second man I shot was trying to get up. He had a huge mark on one of his cheeks as he wailed in quiet sobs. I hesitated for a second, remembering the woman from before, but when he tried to grab his rifle I pulled the trigger. A flurry of bullets after, he drops cold as a fountain of blood pours from his now destroyed face. I switch my target to the red head as she also opened fire on me. Neither hit the other.

Sigh… I guess… it's do or die now. Can't hesitate… gotta shoot at 'em… Inhaling sharply through clenched teeth, I focus on their positions once more.

The gray haired bastard seemed to have regained his composure. He crawled behind the woman slowly. I move to the other side of the tree I was behind and shoot at him, he yelps and hurries behind some bushes as the woman and the other man fire at me. I return some heat before going behind the tree again.

I wait some seconds before rushing to another tree to my right. Bullets fly behind me but I made it safely. Now, I have a clear angle towards you.

"I don't know what's your game, but if you don't come out now I'll shoot at the two girls!" Damn bitch!

"Do that, and I'll put you to the worst death you can imagine!" Not even kidding.

"Oh really? What makes you think I'm scared?!" She's losing her cool.

I know for a fact they won't harm… Wait, how can I be sure they won't harm them? The Shogunate has many detractors in the UN, the Prime Minister is seen badly by almost all the 'Shogunist' side of the population according to Sensei. They were beating them senseless when I saw them. Then… if that's the case… I have to… eliminate them.

I peek towards their position. I couldn't see much before she opened fire again, but now I know where she is. The problem is the other dude, if he also fires at me I'll be at a disadvantage. There's also the woman I knocked out in the bushes, if she regains consciousness it'll be a three on one fight and I don't think I have that many bullets left on this thing. And the gray haired dude might also come at me. Alright, here goes nothing! I need to start taking them down!

I aim at the red head as I move from behind the tree to another and open fire. She goes back behind the tree and I use that chance to my favor.

"Chizuru! Grab Meiya and get here!" She looked at me and I saw that she wasn't wearing her glasses. Those bastards! You blinded her?!

"Shirogane?! Is that you? What are you-"

"No time for that! Get closer to me and hide behind some trees already!" Brown opens fire towards me, forcing me to hide again.

Chizuru still tries to grab Meiya's unconscious body despite not being able to see well, and once she has a hold on it she starts moving to my general position. As the woman tried to shoot at her, I opened fire again.

"Hurry up already, goddammit!" While shaking all over, Chizuru drags Meiya over a tree to my left. I open fire again towards the woman, and see that the gray haired bastard was moving from behind another tree. I open fire on him and he retreats.

"Shirogane… What… What are you doing?!" Chizuru sounded terrified, she had bruises all over and her face was a mess.

"Saving your heads, that's what!" I say as I take cover behind the tree again.

"You do know that these are UN soldiers, right?!"

"Doesn't matter! Anyone who raises their gun against you is my enemy!" I think I'm about to run out of bullets dammit, what do I do?!

"You can't harm them! We'll fail the test! We… We should surrender and-"

"And let you two get kicked to death?! Meiya is unconscious for fuck's sake! It doesn't matter where they're from, anyone who harms you is my enemy! We can't get away unless we dispose of them. I rather die than abandon any of you!"

"Dispose of… You can't be thinking about killing them, right?!"

"Killed two of them a few minutes ago, what's another stain for a tiger? And they were kicking you both quite strongly too." I open fire again towards the man. Damn, I'm not going to last much more.

"Are you… serious?" Chizuru fumbled with her belt kit and took out another pair of glasses from it. She stared at me with a stone cold gaze.

"Yes, when I saw you two getting pummeled like that and that Meiya was unconscious and that they didn't stop hitting her… I lost it. Hate me if you want, but we are passing this exam together. These bastards won't get in the way! I'll protect you two even if that gets me expelled from the army." I stare into her eyes as they waver and she starts quivering.

"… You're not kidding? You killed… two soldiers?" She was in shock, hanging her head as her lips trembled.

"I don't have enough bullets. I'll rush and try to off them with the knife and the baton. Can you go and grab the rifle that's lying over there to cover me?" I point towards the man whose face I sicked the gun on. Her eyes went wide at my suggestion.

"You want me… to shoot at our comrades?!"

"Comrades? You can call them that after what they did to you?!"

The woman opens fire again after a while, she must have changed her magazine. Chizuru was wavering as she caressed one bruise on her left shoulder, eyes lost in the ripples of the rain.

"So, what's it gonna be?! If you want to surrender, just say so. I don't want to see any of you getting hurt, so I'm not leaving without you. What are you going to do, Squad Leader?!"

She trembles as she looks into my eyes, then after a short while she gives me a nod.

"Yes, I'll go get the rifle. Can you cover me?" I nod at her and she makes a three with her hand. She counts to three and I open fire towards the two soldiers. At the same time Chizuru rushed from the tree towards the rifle.

The men didn't see this coming and despite trying to fire at her, couldn't land a hit on as I forced him to go back behind the tree.

I swiftly circle behind the tree to the other side as I sick the rest of my ammo upon the red head, that has to back down again.

As the man was getting ready to shoot again, Chizuru took aim at him from behind a tree. Hitting his hand, making him drop his rifle, the man quickly ducks behind a tree.

I use this chance to rush forward with the knife in my left hand and baton in the right, and as I got in range I took my Mugen stance. I flow onto the now scared shitless red head like an unending waterfall, aiming at her vitals. I kick her gun as she tried to fire and do a downwards slash towards her neck, she stumbles backwards to get away from me. I hit her sides with the baton making her fall to the ground. As she tried to stand up and charge at me, to my surprise, Chizuru opened fire on her, two hits to her lower body. The woman fell to the ground wailing in pain. I use this chance to give her a strong kick in the head as she tried to get up, sending her onto a puddle of water and mud.

"Damn you, punks!" Brownie came at me with his baton and one swollen arm.

This guy is good on CQC, goddammit. We trade blows trying to find an opening. Chizuru was shooting at the gray one, to prevent him from sniping me.

I take a step back as the brown haired one rushed at me, moved to his left and smacked my baton against his face. I step on his swollen arm, making him scream.

As I was about to drop my knife into him, a searing pain assaults my back.

"Aaaaauuughhh!" I fall to the mud as well, my back twisting in agony. The gray one must have shot at me…

"Shirogane! Are you alright?!" Chizuru circled behind the trees near me. What the hell… are you doing?

"You. Drop the rifle or I'll fill you with rubber too!" I could see Chizuru shivering from my position. I gotta stand… "You stay on the ground!" I can hear him near.

"Chizuru, shoot!"

"I… I…" Dammit, why are you not shooting?! You were being kicked mercilessly a second ago!

"C'mon! Drop the rifle where I can see it!" The gray one shoots at the tree were Chizuru was hiding. The other man is standing up.

"We're gonna tear you apart Shirogane." He said with a scowl on his face.

Dammit… Is this were I die? All my efforts for this?

"Do you call yourselves soldiers?!" Chizuru started screaming from behind the tree. You idiot, they don't care about words! "Have you no shame, attacking Cadets like this?!"

"Shut up! What do you know? You're just the spoiled little bitch of the Prime Minister. Drop that rifle if you don't want to-"

"None of you deserve to be in the military!" She quickly moved from behind the tree, but then threw herself to the ground in a flash, aiming at them.

Her first shot hit the gray one's leg, making him drop to his knees. The second didn't hit the other one, but forced him to move back.

Seeing an opening, I got up gritting my teeth. Grabbing my knife, I aimed at the brown haired one. Splashing through the puddles, he tried to put some space between us. But it was futile. I rushed after him, pushed forward by the adrenaline of the pain coming from my back, and once I got him in range I slashed at him.

He tried to shield himself, which made me cut one of his palms. Blood and screams came out pouring. Using what little strength I had left, unable to again send my knife at him, I instead kicked him hard in the stomach, making him fall backwards.

"Stay quiet!" Chizuru threatened the gray one, who didn't want to stop moving.

As Brownie tries to get up, I give him a strong kick to the face and he drops cold. Shit… I'm really spent. The pain is coming to me… I don't think I'll be able to stand for long…

"Ogun! Crouch!" A voice I wasn't expecting to hear reverberated through the rain.

The red head got her rifle and aimed at Chizuru. She barely managed to duck to dodge the bullets.

"Damn you bastards!" Fuck being tired! Just one more push!

I throw my knife at her, hitting her arm. I rush at the gray one, grabbing his rifle after kicking him.

"Away with you!" I shoot at the woman's legs as she tried to hide behind a tree. She falls and cries out in pain.

"You bastard!" For a second, I thought the man was coming after me. But he rushed past me, kneeling by the red head's side. "Damn you bastards! Ruri! Open your eyes!" The man sounded broken as he screamed at the woman, begging her to speak.

The woman squirmed in the ground trying to get up, but was met with waves of pain as she falls again onto the muck.

"Ruri! Are you alright? Talk to me, Ruri!" A sad howl came out of his lungs as he gently moved the woman to look at her face. To think they got a bandage on his eye and he went and wasted his chance like this.

He's wide open, what a fool. I gather my strength and give the man a hit with the baton to the back of his neck. He drops to the side of the red head, but slowly he makes an effort to get back up. I kick his head and stomp on it. I'm not going to let you two walk this off. You're also going to-

"Shirogane!" Chizuru yells at me. "That's enough. They can't fight anymore. Please… Don't… D-Don't harm them." She was shaking all over.

"After what they did to you? They could have killed you with one of those kicks to the head, you know? They might come after us again, we have to kill them while we can." I mean, I did let that 'Captain' guy get away. I know what I'm talking about here, he might come back with the other two he said they had. He did said they were ten.

"Even so, please… Let's go. I… know I'm no position to ask anything of you. But please… I'm begging you." She looked pleadingly at me, quivering in place.

She wasn't even trying to threaten me with the rifle, she was just standing there begging me to stop. I just noticed that it had stopped raining at some point, so what was coming down her cheeks were tears.

"… Fine. Treating your wounds is more important, after all. Let's go." The things I do for you girls. I should kill them to avoid getting chased again. We don't have enough bullets to shake them off if they come back after us. I was really lucky to have found that machinegun yesterday.

I put my weapons in my belt, and as I do so I feel the Pleiades on it too. If I take this with me, they will track its signal. After throwing it away, I go towards the girls. I grab Meiya's left shoulder and Chizuru grabs her right. And slowly, we move towards the west. Looking back, the soldiers weren't coming to us. The gray one was cradling the red head on his arms, not even looking at us.

Hopefully the cliff will have a lower point somewhere on the island, we should be able to cross the river at some point. But for now, we have to put some distance between us. At least I saved them. I can still feel warmth from Meiya's body, she isn't dead. We just need to patch them up, rest for a while, until we recover our energy to march again.

We won't fail this. I'll guide you all to victory, even if you end up seeing me as a monster by the end of this. That's one of the few things worth protecting in this world, at least for my own sanity's sake.

Clouded Horizon

Chapter 19: Clouded Horizon

---

November 19th. Third Day of the CCSE.

(Near the river. 0 9:37 PM.)

[Takeru]

---

"….Then I heard you screaming, and after seeing you being kicked so mercilessly I snapped. I won't make any excuses, I let my rage take control of me."

"….I see. I'm amazed you could fight in such a state." Chizuru was treating my shoulder's wound.

We walked a lot after we decided to get away from the soldiers, but luckily we weren't so far from the river. It was too dark to keep moving so we decided to rest for the day, Meiya was still unconscious. I'm completely spent after today, I can't even get up probably.

"So, what happened to you guys?" Her hands suddenly stop and I can sense her tense up.

"Well, we… tried to get away from them. But they quickly catched up to us. At one point I tripped and lost my glasses."

"And what then?"

"We kept running, as Mitsurugi held my hand tightly. They kept shooting at us, saying all kind of insults." She stops for a second and I felt a cold drop on my shoulder as her hands began to shake. "Hic… When they got close I tried fighting back, but I just fumbled around. However… Sniff… when I actually hit one of them a man got really angry and… he pulled my hair so hard, smashed my face against a tree… They threw me to the ground a-and…. Hic…"

Tears flow down her cheeks as she remembers what happened, hands still shaking. She's trembling as if it were snowing, and that only makes me bite my lips. I coil my hands to restrain a howl. Her composure scattered away like pieces of a puzzle, the broken image left on her complexion put more anger in me.

"Then, Mitsurugi assaulted them but they all ganged up on her, a woman kept me pinned on the ground so I couldn't do a thing to help her. They beat her up with their batons until she collapsed, and then… they kicked at us while laughing, saying that we were never gonna graduate. That we would end up as 'comfort corporals' in the base." Wait, what the actual fuck does that even… It can't be what I'm imagining, right?

"And then I showed up, I guess." She nods as she finishes tying the bandage on my left shoulder.

"I can't… say that I approve your methods but…" She wipes her tears and slowly sits to my side. "I felt truly relieved when they stopped kicking me. I thought the Instructor might have come to help us, but even when I heard your voice I felt glad. To be honest, I didn't recognize you at first." She wraps her arms around her knees, the crows in her tone eased up. She looked at me for a moment, then she again digged her gaze into the ground. "After seeing how angry you were for us, how far you were willing to go to help us… I… I'm sorry, Shirogane. We ran away without you, we abandoned you." She bows deeply, almost hitting her head with the mud.

"Don't apologize, you did nothing wrong. The ones at fault are the bastards that ordered this thing."

"No, it's not that. I… Well, I didn't really… trust in you, at all. When we started running…" Her lips twist inwards, she hugs her sides. "I didn't even look back, I didn't even care. And yet you… You stained your hands with blood for me… Sorry, for everything I've said. Forgive me."

"Sakaki, it's alright. I did what I wanted to do. You don't have to force yourself, I know you must hate this, being forced to cooperate with an American that killed your fellow Japanese soldiers."

"Huh? Well… I mean… If you could explain why you… No, I… I was in the wrong. You're not like the Americans! And those soldiers are the ones in the wrong!" Chizuru's eyes narrowed and turned into chainsaws, I've very rarely seen her this honestly angry. She slowly rose and punched the tree.

"H-Hey, calm down! You're still hurt, remember?" I pull at her pants a bit and she again sits down by my side.

"… I was just letting my frustration out. But you're not like the Americans, and those soldiers committed abuse against a defenseless opponent, they will get punished for it. Sure, you might have gone too far… But I don't think… what you did was wrong." She then remains quiet, looking at the ground.

A small smile makes it way into my face. I might have done something horrible in my fit of rage, but… They're safe. That's what matters. I'm too tired to scan her face to see if she's lying, but even if she is I don't care. She's alive. Though I really don't want to go through something like this again, the thought of losing them again tore my heart apart.

And yet it was that pain what gave me the strength to fight. This cold embrace gave me stalagmites far mightier than any sword I ever had.

A gale howls strong through the night, from somewhere on this island shadows are coming for me. The Captain and the other two members of the chasers. To survive these harsh nights, to do the necessary cruelty, to protect my beloved ones, shouldn't I rely on my greatest power? Shouldn't I let these hands freeze me over? If it means being able to kill without remorse…

A cold winds blows, a faint moonlight covers me. My vision grows narrow, distorting the light as the shadows turn into a wall of pure dark. Like hell I'll let harm come to them again. My heart wouldn't endure seeing them die, even if they're not who I remember them as. And yet, the other three might…

I beg of you, frozen hands, give me a pair of ice wings, the strength to become a maverick, to face this mad world. I have to keep fighting, I have to keep tearing. Until the day I find a way to regain my life. Until I can leave this place forever, I'll try to keep them safe. However, Sensei didn't tell me of this. Can I… trust in her if she hid this from me?

Slowly, painfully so, the hands rub my back. I feel strangely better all of a sudden, the world around me recovered it's color. I gaze at the moon, it's so beautiful when it's full like this.

Did I use to look at it so much? Hmm… But from where? My house doesn't have a way to reach the roof, and… this memory feels different than the view at the tree on the hill. Who was I with? For a second I feel lightheaded and everything around me spins slowly but then it reaches my ears, a soft voice piercing through the sounds of the jungle.

"Will you promise to look at it when it's full? That way our gazes will meet under the same sky looking at it. No matter how far away you are, we will always be connected through the moon!"

---

I look around me, scouring every shadow, every tree. I just heard Sumika's voice very clearly, as if she were right by my side. What the… We never had… a conversation like that as far as I know.

"Shirogane? What is it?" Chizuru was looking around too, apparently startled by my actions.

"I… thought I heard something. The nerves seem to have gotten to me."

"Oh yeah, I know what you mean. So… Um… How are you feeling?" Never thought I'd hear this soft, sweet voice from you.

"I'm feeling fine, despite everything. So, now that you know I killed those soldiers, you won't abandon me?" She dislikes me a lot, so I need confirmation on whether or not I can trust her.

"I… I swear I won't. I owe you my safety, even if Mitsurugi objects I'll take your side. I always repay my debts. I swear this on my mother's name, I won't betray you again Shirogane." She looked at me in the eye with a fire glowing in hers.

Wait… Her mother? I don't remember this Chizuru ever mentioning her mother at all. Weird, another difference to the list.

"Are you sure, though? Then, what are you planning to do when we get back? You're reporting my 'killing spree' to the Instructor, right?" She looks down as her hands start shaking.

"T-There was… no warning that we would get chased by armed soldiers. And they didn't… limit themselves to capture us. I think your actions can be explained, not justified, but I do not think you'll be punished. As you said, they kept kicking us when we were defenseless, they could have killed us with a strong enough kick to our heads. You saved our lives Shirogane, at the very least I will testify on your behalf on this matter if anything happens." She stares right at my eyes, with that slow glow Chizuru always has when she's serious. I'm glad to know that you're on my side, for now at least.

"Let's leave it at that then." I lean against a tree as I watch the stars again.

Tomorrow is gonna rain again, we gotta cross fast if we wanna get past this cliff. Otherwise… I feel that blood will be spilled in large quantities. Those soldiers won't let us get away without trying to return the aggression.

"Shirogane… Can I ask you something?" Chizuru gets a bit closer as she slowly adjust her glasses.

"What is it?"

"Are you truly a Cadet?"

"Again with this?"

"Don't misunderstand. It's just… The way you defended us, what you said when I confronted you, it seemed as if you had already been deployed at some point." Ugh, whatever. I guess I can try to explain something to placate her curiosity, even if it'll confirm I come from America, according to the cover.

"I was… stationed at Alaska. I woke up one day in a hospital without any memories of my family or my life, and I got inducted into the UN army."

"Huh? Alaska? Wait, you lost your memories?!" I again explain the situation, according to what the records say.

"And that's the gist of it. This is classified so don't speak a word of it to anyone, but right now I couldn't care less. In my base, there was some program to train Cadets from all around the world. Everyone in my unit was from a different country." Half truth or not, I am an outsider in this world.

"Really? Wait… Could you have been stationed at Yukon Base?" Her voice turns into a whisper, perhaps realizing what I was about to tell her.

"Yeah, I was part of a Cadet Squad of the UN at Yukon. So I didn't belong to another army, I just got transferred to another UN base when my squad got wiped out."

"… During the Yukon Incident?" I try to remember what happened during the XM3 trials last time. Feeling my stomach turning, frowning instinctively as the memories come back to me.

"Yes. It was so sudden, BETA started appearing from the ground. The lasers burned the sky, everybody was screaming, TSFs were exploding left and right. It was… a massacre."

Chizuru has her eyes glued to the ground as she listens to me.

"My whole squad already had permission to pilot, so they were assigned to cover some ground. I was…. In a tank, providing support. But in the end all I could do was watch as the BETA killed them all."

"Shirogane that… wasn't your fault. You couldn't have done anything in such a situation."

"Yes, I could have. I could have killed one of those monsters before it was too late." Fucking Superior, I swear I'll erase you as fast as I can this time. No talking, no negotiations.

"Too late?" Chizuru stares at me, waiting for me to continue.

Meiya's last words come back to me again, I can't hold back the tears this time.

"There was someone… I liked a lot. I relied on her for almost everything I did. She always had the right word of advice for me when I needed it the most. She… got trapped by the BETA… and I had to shoot her TSF down. I killed her." Chizuru's eyes go wide as her lips tremble.

"You… Is this what you meant when you said that you got someone killed?"

"Yes, if I had not being a coward… I could have killed the BETA before she had to sacrifice herself to stop them. I will never forgive myself for that. That's why… when I saw you two being harmed by those motherfuckers… I lost it. I will never let one of my squadmates die in front of me without putting up a fight. Never again!" I hit the ground with my right hand, splashing mud on my pants.

"Um… Shirogane, it wasn't… your fault, you know? I mean, you were…" Chizuru couldn't find words to say and simply remained quiet.

"That's why I trained so hard, to surpass myself. That's why I was so happy to be assigned to your squad. I guess… I just wanted a place to belong to, a place to call home. I didn't want to… be all alone again." Again, I shiver as those cold hands reach my shoulders. "Heh, guess that's just my destiny." I wipe the tears from my eyes. What a great savior you are Shirogane. Can't face your own mistakes without tearing up.

"… Sorry."

"Why are you apologizing? It's cool, I get it. You don't want to mix yourself with a foreigner, I won't get in the squad's way anymore. I'll just shut up from now on and when we get back I'll ask Sensei to take me out of the squad. Assuming I don't get kicked out of the army." Chizuru faces me with a conflicted expression as her mouth opens and closes, as if she didn't knew what to say first.

"No, you don't have… Tamase might have been right. We should… have talked things out with you from the start." I stare at her in disbelief and saw her holding back tears. Why is she… Chizuru never cries, unless she's feeling like shit. And I do not like it when she cries.

"Don't cry, Sakaki." I wipe the few runaway tears that betrayed her efforts, then I run a few fingers over her cheek to calm her down. I smile at her quivering face, leaning back again. "You chose what you thought was best, I'm not trying to make you feel guilty or anything."

"It's not that. It's just… I can relate… to what you went through. I feel awful because I know how horrible it is to have to live while carrying someone's death on your shoulders." She's trying real hard not to cry, she took her glasses off and rubbed her eyes quite strongly as her body quivered for a sec like jelly in front of a fan.

"You can relate? Did you have to fight the BETA at some point?" I don't recall that ever happening, but then again the list of differences grows bigger each day.

"What I meant was that… I also lost someone important without being able to do anything." Her voice cracked at the end there.

"Sorry, I shouldn't have asked. Let's leave it for today." I don't want to make her uncomfortable, last thing I want is to see her cry.

"No, you told me your story despite it being classified intel, all you had to endure to survive alone. It's only fair that I tell you my reason to fight, and it'll also work as an explanation of why I pushed you away." What does that mean?

"It has something to do with the fact everybody got super defensive when they learned I came from an American base?"

"Indeed. And since you've already seen the BETA I can tell you everything in detail." I gulp as she mentions them. So she already had an encounter with the BETA? "You see, my family was rather wealthy. We weren't nobles but we lived really well. My mother was a teacher at an important school in Kyoto, and my father was a member of the Capital's Congress. We never got along very well but…"

"Family is family." I smile wryly as I remember all the times I argued with my parents over the most stupidest things.

"Yeah, family is family." Chizuru smiles too, taking a breath before continuing. "I had always wanted to join a military school but they never allowed me, saying there was no reason for me to fight. All of my friends had enlisted in the IJA Youth Training Program, I was the only one left out. My mother wanted me to follow her footsteps and become a teacher, she always kept reminding me of the importance of that role. In retrospect, she was only trying to keep me away from the horrors of war but I saw it as if she thought I didn't have what it takes to become a soldier. I always… kept saying hurtful words to her, my Father also opposed me quite harshly and pretty much blocked any chance I had to enlist with some contacts he had. I think he was more worried that I would be used as a bargaining tool by his political enemies." Right, her dad is the Prime Minister here so if she was to become a soldier, any decision he might take to favor the IJA could be taken out of context as him favoring his daughter.

"It must have been hard for you, being negated like that. Is that why you're so determined to prove your worth to the army?"

"Well, yes. When I first enlisted I was obsessed with doing everything perfectly, that only made my interactions with Ayamine much more worse." I can already imagine how much you two must have fought. "But that's not the point. Before I got accepted into the UN, we were living in Kyoto. W-When… the fall happened."

I remember the reports I read, the Capital fell in a single night like all the lands to the west. They couldn't put up a fight despite the Shogun's personal unit being out there as well, they still kept fighting for around a month to try to drive off the BETA but the city had already suffered a great harm by the first night after the BETA broke through their defense line.

"I frankly can't believe the capital's defenses fell in a single night. To think they couldn't stop the BETA from entering Kyoto with all the Royal Guard stationed at the frontlines." Well, they didn't have the Takemikazuchi back then so it's understandable. But they should have had many Shiranuis available at that point.

"There were many reasons for that. The most well known one is the retreat of American and UN troops." She frowns as a disgusted tone filled her voice again.

"I read that the Americans and the UN abandoned the mission because they tried to impose some orders to the Shogun."

"That's half the truth. This is secret intel so don't tell it to anyone, but my Father told me that the Americans could tell the mission was going to fail and proposed a tactical retreat to the Shogun to then nuke the BETA with napalms. Obviously, all the nobles refused and that turned into an argument. The Americans called us close-minded retards, the Shogun retorted with cowardly slavers. The discussion spiked and the American General that was stationed in the Empire due to the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation ordered all American and UN troops to retreat. This marked the end of our good relations with the Americans." Ah yes, the grudges and pride of the Empire. Why are they so prideful this time around?

"And that sealed the fate of Kyoto, right? That's why the foreigners are so hated?" She nods quite angrily, brows tensed into a sharp V.

"I can't say that what the prior Shogun did was right given the situation, but the Americans were also in the wrong. And that's not all that went wrong that day."

"You did say that it was only half the truth, what else got wrong?"

"First, you do know how many BETA attacked the Capital right?"

"I did read on it, they were close to 70000 if I'm not mistaken. I think they halted their advance for a week until they broke through and destroyed Kyoto in a single night."

"Correct. The Americans wanted to bomb them before they got too close during that first week, but since that would have killed all the remaining population to the west of the defense line set on Arashiyama, the Shogun vehemently refused. Fighting those numbers without powerful bombs was suicide, but the Shogun was confident that the land mines they had set up would be enough to deal with the smaller strains of BETA and that the new TSF they had would make a difference in battle."

"You mean the Shiranui?"

"Yes. The first part of the invasion went especially bad for us because the BETA decided to attack during a typhoon, so after gathering all the best troops the Empire had in the Capital, I think it's safe to assume that they got overconfident." She makes some circles in the air with her finger as a sad sigh escapes her lips.

"Ugh, this sounds like the best possible train wreck had a child with the best possible natural disaster." I spit on the ground, an awful taste like the one I had when I woke up to a destroyed base last loop again flooding my mouth.

"However, the Empire had little experience fighting the BETA and the Americans didn't want to put up with our goals. While the plan to hold out the larger strains did work, without the American and with the UN's troops caught in the crossfire, the plan fell apart when… w-when…" She starts trembling, unable to finish her sentence.

"Hey… If it's painful you don't have to-"

"When the Warriors pierced the final defense line."

"Huh? The Warriors? Not the Tanks or Destroyers?" I haven't fought a Warrior in any of my loops as far as I recall, not that I want to be close to one of those outside of a TSF cockpit.

"You see, our troops weren't well trained in the use of canister ammo, so they couldn't perform area control or area denial tactics as the situation demanded according to my Father. While the larger strains were more obvious targets, many Warrior-Class slipped through the TSF fighting at the frontlines and reached the last perimeter around the city. From the start we didn't have enough TSFs to fend off the BETA, so when the city requested aid the battle got worse. The defenses were meant as a last effort to save some time, and as far as I know they only had a bunch of tanks and the rest were foot-soldiers with machineguns."

"Wait a second… They didn't leave a single TSF in the rear?!"

"No, that would have been a disgrace to any pilot, noble or not. To be sitting doing nothing while their peers are out there risking their flesh and blood for our nation would have been a punishment worse than death for them. The UN was sent to guard Osaka after the mess with the Americans, so they said they had their hands full. As far as what my Father told me, Arashiyama Base was the official last defense line since no one thought the BETA would reach the perimeter around Kyoto in a single night." That's bullshit, it has nothing to do with honor. Throwing your life away and not consider all possibilities is just madness. That's no honor, that's just blind ego.

"No wonder the mission failed. Nothing could have gone worse." Chizuru grimaces as she lowers her head. "Don't tell me there's more."

"Yes, there is. Considering how well our forces were holding out during that week, the Shogun was so sure of his victory that he didn't order the evacuation of the Capital's citizens, not even after the Americans retreated." Didn't evacuate? So when the Warriors attacked…

As if a hammer had hit my stomach, as if I had tried to swallow too much water and some of it went down my lungs, I could do nothing but grimace at the thought of it. Again feeling cold all over, nothing but tightening my fist could clear this feelings.

"You have got to be kidding me. How could the Shogun decide something like that? Looking at the numbers it would have been obvious that the city would have become a battlefield. To not evacuate the civilians… That's madness."

"There was a broadcast a few days before the fighting began, you see. The Shogun proudly announced that all Battalions from the 3rd to the 18th of the IJA along the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 15th and 16th Battalions of the Royal Guard were stationed at the capital and its surrounding areas, forming a wide defense line from Osaka and the bay to Kyoto's outer rims. He proudly showed in TV the near two thousand TSFs that would take place in the battle. Almost a thousand Type-94, around five hundred Type-89, and the rest were Gekishins and Zuikakus. The Empire brought its best soldiers together to protect the capital at all costs, that's why after we lost we had to retreat all the way to Tokyo. We still haven't recovered from that, we still seem to have a shortage of Type-94 to this day."

"So they were confident that they could win with their aces fighting side by side, but forgot about the infantry types and when they had to send reinforcements to the city they couldn't deal with all the BETA. Sigh…" Chizuru sighs with me.

"Exactly, as far as I know everything started going downhill when the Laser-Class got too close and took out three important field commanders of the IJA that were on the frontlines, and then they teared our vanguard apart. As you can imagine by now, most people in the Empire won't admit that what they did was a mistake because that would be like shaming the pilots that gave their life for us, we wouldn't be honoring their sacrifice if we blamed them for the fall. So instead we placed all the blame on the foreigners, that got easier after Operation Lucifer when they dropped two G-Bombs on us without warning, killing around half of our frontliners in the blast. It was a scandal all over the news, some people were even saying that we had to 'recover' our land from the UN. The attitude of some foreigners I've met hasn't done much to change the prejudices I held towards them. They're always talking about aiming for the result, regardless of the methods they use. They don't doubt to abandon a comrade if it becomes 'dead weight'."

Guess that explains why everybody treated me like shit. It wasn't documented anywhere but that kind of thing was 'common sense' in this place, so a Japanese that joins hands with the foreigners is seen as a traitor because the Empire blames them for all its problems instead of admitting that it did wrong things too. But I suppose criticizing the Shogun is a crime here.

"So when the last defense line got breached around a thousand Warrior-Class swarmed into Kyoto. In the middle of the night, while we were all confident that the Shogun was going to deliver victory, sirens boomed throughout the city." She buries her face into her arms, retracting her legs close to her body. "I remember that my Father came with a soldier and ordered me and my Mother to evacuate. B-But obviously nobody had prepared vehicles to transport the people, so the only transportation available was given to the nobles. The rest of us had to escape on foot."

I love how here they always say that people have to give their life for their nation, but when things get rough the nobles pull an 'F this shit I'm out' card and get themselves to safety without sparing a single thought for their civilians. According to the records, only the Royal Guard managed to survive the Battle of Kyoto with more than half its crew alive. Exhaling through gritted teeth, I hold back on hitting the ground.

"Chizuru, it's fine. I already know why everybody hates my guts, don't force yourself to continue." She might be a different person, but I still don't like to see her face stained with tears.

"Please let me finish."

Raising her face again, she wipes her tears and, after taking a deep breath, she continues. It does look like she wants to let this out, so I'll listen without interrupting her anymore.

"I… We had to escape towards the eastern exit. As we moved, some soldier squads came to escort us to a group. We were many people quickly marching through the streets, I could hear the explosions at the distance, the sound of guns all over the city. We were near the exit, I could see the gates to the highway already. I thought we had made it out safely, but…. Some Warrior-Class appeared from the rear, they got close to the group in the blink of an eye… T-They started rampaging through the people, they tore them apart in mere seconds. The soldiers tried to fight back but ended up getting killed. In just a few seconds… hic… everyone got…"

Imagining how that happened… being chased by those monsters… the city being blown up… More and more hammers strike at my stomach, something seems to be clogging the base of my throat.

I wait in silence, waiting for her to calm down. After rubbing her eyes again, she continues.

"I was trying to get away desperately when one Warrior started charging at me. I froze, I thought I was going to die there. But my Mother pushed me away, and I… I could only see as that m-monster cut her in half."

Neither of us said a word for a long while. Only Chizuru's quiet sobbing could be heard in the night. What the hell is wrong with this world? Why did things turn out like this here? I thought things were bad in my past loops but… Sighing, some tears also leave my eyes. It makes me feel so… empty, so frustrated. Always because of those idiots up above who don't give a shit about lives so long as they're alive after the mission. I just can't understand why something like this had to happen.

A hand quivering, I hit the ground. Leaning back onto the tree, I again look at the stars as I frown and bite my lips, Chizuru keeps sobbing.

"I thought I was going to be next… but then some Zuikakus appeared on the sky. They had no problem killing the Warriors, even if they had to mercy kill some people along them. I was saved by a few seconds, had they arrived half a minute later everybody would have gotten killed."

She takes a second to wipe the waterfalls that dropped from her eyes, and after a short while she keeps talking, this time without tears tainting her face.

"Some days after I got to the shelter and calmed down a bit, I thought of what could have been done to prevent that tragedy. That's when I decided that I wanted to become a surface pilot, to understand about the battle protocols and someday become a General in the IJA. Someone who can guide our soldiers to the best course of action. If we had more experienced or knowledgeable commanders such a failure would never have happened, someone had to bring more options to the Shogun but no one had the valor to do so. We need to get stronger before the BETA strike again, without the help of the foreigners. The Empire needs to regain it's strength before it's too late!" Her devotion was apparent in her tone, and her eyes sparked to life with burning determination.

"But… why did you join the UN and not the IJA?"

"Because that's the only army my Father allowed me to join, I was still a minor back then so I didn't have a say in it. He was not pleased with my decision and it took me months to convince him to let me enlist. Of course, when I saw the UN's logo on the papers he brought me we had a fight over it. I can understand why he did that, but still…"

"Well… I can understand your hate towards the Americans, but why the UN? It's not like all the foreigners are your enemies. The troops that were here back in the '98 weren't all under the American's army, they also fought during the invasion."

"Even so they're the same. The UN didn't come to Kyoto's aid, just like the Americans, and from then on gave very little support to the Empire until Operation Lucifer. I remember the news back then, the UN kept insisting on moving our defense lines more and more, and thanks to that the MDF and the Royal Guard were left alone to protect the lands beyond those imaginary lines they decided without consulting us. I'll never forgive them, they ran away to safety without sparing a thought for us. They could have fought with us to protect the civilians, but they ran to Yokohama and Saitama. They abandoned us, you do what they want you to do or they throw you away. They're despicable, who wants allies like that?! They only fight when it's convenient for them, if it's not they run away like cowards without a care about their allies' situation." Her voice was brimming with venom. I mean, it's not like I don't understand.

If the UN had left some troops on the last defense line of Kyoto the evacuation would have gone without a problem, nobody would have died. Warriors cannot do a thing to a TSF, leaving ten or so would have prevented that accident. Then, the rest of the invasion would have gone differently. Of course, the UN had to protect Alt. IV and its HQ too, so maybe they did help, especially with the STF, but they couldn't risk the project, so they probably were forced to divide their resources between halting the BETA and making a solid defense for Alt. IV, even if it meant retreating all the way back to Tokyo. And obviously, no one could tell the media the real reason behind their actions.

That's why everyone gives the stink eye to the foreigners on the base. But to put everyone on the same bag? They're isolating themselves, the Empire will end up alone if this continues. And with Yuuhi coming after my neck, I can see she probably agrees on these feelings and is only using the UN for her own benefit. But what will she do when she doesn't need them anymore?

… That was a stupid question, I can already imagine it.

"I don't think it's right to put all foreigners in the same bag for the mistake some made in the past, but I can see why you all hate them so much. It's a mess."

"Sorry. I assumed you were like them. I didn't try to hear you out, as a leader and a comrade I'm a failure. I was sure that since you are so much better, when you thought we were bringing you down you would abandon us, like those bastards. But, despite being outnumbered and injured, you didn't run away and fought with all you had for us. I do not have words to describe how grateful I am. Shirogane, w-would you be willing to give me another chance? To prove you I deserve your trust?" She looks so guilty right now, shaking as she holds her elbows softly.

"It's alright, don't feel guilty about it. The rest wouldn't accept me now, after all I did kill those Japanese soldiers." I pretty much shot myself in the foot this time.

"That's… They were the ones who abused their power first. And I saw for myself that our suspicions about you were mistaken. You didn't abandon us, even when I doubted. You could have chosen to save yourself then, and yet because of me… You got hurt once more." Her gaze drops as she hugs her knees. "Yoroi and Tamase were always friendly with you, and I think Mitsurugi will change her mind after we explain to her what happened."

"You think they would want to work alongside a murdered?"

"Even if you did kill them, no one can ignore what you did for us! I'm sure we can explain this to the Instructor. Those soldiers were going to kill us and you saved us." My heart beats a bit more slowly as I relax onto the tree. Even if it's just for today… I'm glad I could see this side of Chizuru once more.

"I hope you're right. So what do think we should do?"

"Go to the evac point as fast as we can. We don't know when the soldiers will come for us, so we need to get out of here ASAP. Like you said before they went too far, something's very wrong here. I don't know if they are actually part of the CCSE, but given our encounters with them we should treat them as enemies. It pains me to say this but… if we encounter them we will have to incapacitate them, and if they resist… We might need to gravely harm them." She nods with her eyes closed and trembling fists.

"I agree. The first two that I fought with went as far as to point a gun to my face. They weren't trying to capture me in one piece, that's for sure." Even if I did went too far back then.

"We have to advance with utmost caution, I don't think I could run at all if we get spotted."

"Same. I think I overdid it today, my legs feel like jelly. And my back is killing me right now."

"In any case, let's rest until dawn. I'll take the first watch, you can sleep for now."

"Got it. Though, I don't know if I'll be able to sleep at all." Not when I still feel this cold all over me.

"I get what you mean. With the threat of the soldiers so close it'll be a miracle if we get any shuteye tonight." She sighs again as she relaxes onto the tree.

We remained quietly watching the night sky as the moon moved over the treetops. What a beautiful night, if it weren't for the looming danger of being found I would have fallen asleep a long time ago.

Now that I've calmed down a bit I should think on what I'll do from tomorrow on.

It seems that these soldiers weren't sent to take care of me specifically since they went after the others, so they aren't men from the Shogunate. There's no reason for Yuuhi to attack Meiya, unless she's paranoid that she'll betray her or something. I can understand some people might want the girls to remain as political hostages, but they went too far. They could have killed them if it weren't for my intervention. Maybe they were ordered to do that? Or were these soldiers caught up in their power over the 'special girls' and got lost in their emotions?

I know that what I did was awful, being generous, and that there will be consequences for my actions, but let's say I told Tsukuyomi-san about this. What would happen? The Empire would definitely lose it, so I have a card to use. If I get threatened to be kicked out of the army, I'll answer by saying I'll talk to the Empire about their 'offense' against Meiya. Maybe this was part of the CCSE but the soldiers were 'convinced' to be more aggressive during their mission. I wonder what they got in return for this? Money, a promotion, a house?

I have to find a way to surpass this hurdle. And I won't let them touch the girls again. Not because I want them to love me, not because of the ones that I met before, but because I want them to live. I don't want to see them suffer, even if they do end up hating me for killing these soldiers. My heart won't be able to take it.

Now then… What was that voice I heard before? It was clearly Sumika, but I don't remember ever talking with her about the moon. Well, my memory regarding my childhood isn't exactly clear. I did mistake Meiya's promise and thought I did it with Sumika instead, so I might be forgetting something here.

I rub my left shoulder slowly. It hurts way less now, I hope it doesn't get infected. I still feel those hands in my back, this feels completely different than how it was when the power plant blew up. Back then, when I turned off the lights of my room I felt a shiver all over me, as if a pair of cold hands were on my shoulders. They were… How to say it? Small? Like, it wasn't like the feeling when your Dad or Uncle grabbed your shoulders when you were little, it was as if a friend tapped my shoulder while joking. Yet the hands now feel more… strong? Unlike before I haven't stopped feeling them at all, as if they didn't want to let go. What is this feeling?

"Uuugh…"

Meiya groans as she slowly moves her arms. Looks like she's regained consciousness, she slowly opens her eyes but she can't raise her head from the ground as she stirs under her blanket.

"Where… am I?"

"Good morning, Meiya."

"Eh? Who… Shirogane?!" Her eyes went from barely open, sleepy and glazed, to fully open and shocked.

"Shh! Don't raise your voice." Chizuru scolded her as she crouched besides the leaf bed.

"Sa… kaki? What happened? Where are- Augh!" She holds her sides as she tried to get up.

"Don't push yourself. You took quite a beating so you have bruises and scars all over. Take it easy and stay lying, yes? You'll need all the energy you can muster for tomorrow." Chizuru put the blanket over her again, Meiya lies down with a pained expression.

"My body is aching all over and my head hurts with intense pain. What happened? How did Shirogane get here?" She throws a soft gaze at me. She looks so weak… I should have killed that gray haired bastard .

"I went and got a red paintjob on my hands." I say jokingly at her which makes her tilt her head in confusion.

"What… does that mean?"

"Let me explain, please stay quiet and let me finish." Chizuru starts telling her of what happened starting at when they got surrounded. Meiya seemed to be feeling horrible about not being able to protect her, but when she told her I disposed of the soldiers she looked horrified. Her expression didn't change when Chizuru told her we both carried her unconscious body to safety.

"You killed… two of them… and harmed the rest? Wait, how did you find us?"

"I struggled against the two soldiers that restrained me when they found us. After I broke free, I escaped towards the west from the hill and tried to lose them, but I had to fight them in the end. So after I finished dealing with them, I grabbed the Pleiades they were using and started running towards the direction of the dots on the map, using my compass as a guide to make sure I didn't get lost. Then, when I got close, I heard Chizuru's screaming and took care of the other soldiers."

"What did you do to the first soldiers? Did you kill them?" Her voice was very small, but her eyes were again full of fire. Really? You'll take those soldiers' side?

"No, I broke one's arm and beat up the other one." She bites her lip. It looks like she's holding a scream.

"Can you tell me… why did you have to kill them?"

"Mitsurugi, Shirogane saved us from them. Those soldiers were-"

"Sakaki, I know that. But he still killed two Japanese soldiers. Do you have an explanation, Shirogane? Why didn't you restrain them?" She's too noble. She isn't even considering that those guys weren't going to just lay down and give up.

"Mitsurugi, you and me know that those men went too far." Chizuru was talking like when she was Class Rep, waving a finger in the air and with that aura of a pissed off mom. "The UN's code is very clear on this, to never abuse your strength in front of a defenseless adversary. Shirogane could have abandoned us when he saw himself outnumbered, yet he risked his life and militar record to save us. He will probably be punished for the deed of saving his comrades from a clear case of abuse."

"It's alright, Sakaki. Meiya, I killed them because I saw how you two were getting beaten up. You in particular weren't moving and they kept kicking you, even on the head. I rather die than watch and do nothing when my squad is in danger." She bites her lip again, clouds covering her face as she squirms in the leaf bad.

"Because of us? You… You did it for- Augh!" She rubs her shoulders as pain assaults her. She shouldn't have tried to get up. "Why did you took their lives? You didn't have to stain your-" I move closer to her putting my face a few inches away from hers. She flinches backwards but doesn't break eye contact.

"Because they were going to kill you both. I don't care if they got sent by the UN, the Shogunate, or another army, anyone who harms my squad is my enemy. If they try to kill you, I'll answer with the same force. I mean, can you put yourself in my shoes for a sec? When I found you there was the possibility that you were already dead. How do you think I felt when I saw you lying still, not reacting to the kicks?" She starts shaking and breaks eye contact. I grab her chin and force her to look at me again. "Tell me Meiya, how do you think I felt?"

"I-I… suppose you were truly adusted. But why did you have to…" She can't continue as her mouth closes shut. She did sympathize with the rebels' cause last loop.

"Look, I know I must look like a monster to you. But they were harming you and Sakaki. I… don't want to lose anyone again. I'm not putting up excuses. I just wanted to protect you two."

"But… Why didn't they stop? Surely they… they wouldn't have…" She's shaking all over and I see tears well up in her eyes. I had tightened my grip on her face without realizing.

"Sorry. Please don't cry, it's alright now. I won't let anyone harm you, so you just rest." I let go of her chin and slowly wipe the tears of her face. She looks so weak right now.

"No, forgive me. You're right, you saved my life. Thank you Shirogane. Truly, I… don't know what could have been of us if not for your help." She bows slowly with an apologetic look on her face.

"That's fine. Now, stay lying. You're hurt all over so don't force yourself." I gently grab her shoulders and push her into the ground slowly. I pet her head as she tries to raise again. "Stay quiet Meiya, you need to rest."

"I am fine. And… I told you not to call me by my name." She looks so cute when she's annoyed like that. I keep petting her slowly.

"Sorry about that. But you need to rest, we need to march at dawn break so don't force yourself." She stops trying to get up, then nods and lets out a sigh.

"I won't. I understand already. I'll rest for tonight, I won't cause you two more problems." She seems honest. She stays in place looking at me in the eye, with a light blush on her face. "Um… Thanks again. Really, I… truly appreciate you looking out for me."

"I told you it's fine. I know that what I did isn't praise worthy, you just rest for now."

"Shirogane… Forgive me, for leaving you behind."

"Don't worry, Sakaki already apologized. It's alright, I don't resent you or anything." She looks at me incredulous.

"Are you serious? You're not upset?"

"Come on, now. What could you have done? If we had stayed in that open area they would have sicked their guns on us, and thanks to you two leaving I could break free."

"Really? You do not resent me? Despite that I ran away?" She must be troubled about her honor since running away is seen as a disgrace, if I remember correctly from what she taught me when we got together on the other world.

"I don't. The question is, can you work with me despite what I did?" I get closer to her again and she moves her head to the side. She gazes at me as her hands fumble with the blanket.

"You won't… kill anyone else, right?"

"Unless they try to harm any of you, no. If it's to protect someone I'll do it, but I don't like harming people." As much as I might hate them, I need them for the Kashgar raid. And as angry as I got, I can't say the taste it left in my mouth is a pleasant one.

"So… You'll work with us? You won't leave us behind?" Why is she being so timid? This isn't like her at all.

"Of course, you're my squadmates after all. Can we work together for these few nights, Meiya?" She pouts slightly at me. Hehe, I know you're not her but I'm so glad to see you're alright Meiya. You're alive and kicking, that's good news.

"Of course, we're in this together. But, why are you using my name again?"

"Because I want to. Don't worry, I'll go back to calling you Mitsurugi once I'm rested up." I move back slowly towards the tree. I wince as my back makes contact with the bark.

"Are you hurt?" Her gaze on me, Meiya spoke softly.

"Yeah, but I'm already patched up. It shouldn't be a problem, I think."

"I see. I don't think I can fight much in my current state." She admits as shame appears in her eyes.

"Mitsurugi, neither me or Shirogane are much better. All three of us are in horrible shape, so we need to work together to pass this." Chizuru reassures her, giving her a smile.

"You heard her, Meiya. So whether you like it or not we're working together." I smile at her and she finally relaxes a bit.

"But… what we did… Are you really okay with this? We abandoned you."

"Come on, I'm to blame for lowering my guard too."

"But…"

"What, you want us to give up?" I teasingly take out one radio and immediately her eyes light up with purple flames.

"Never! But… You know, I thought you would snap at us, since we left you to your misery."

"You couldn't have done anything in that situation. Really, it's fine. So, can I count on you to cover my back?" I stare at her and she nods at me.

"Yes, of course. I don't know what I can do right now, but you can count on me." Chizuru breaths a sigh of relief after hearing her answer.

"Say Shirogane, can't you tell her what you told me?"

"I did kinda tell her parts of it, and honestly I don't think she needs this right now." Meiya seems to have taken offense at my words as she shot inquisitive glares at both of us.

"What are you talking about?"

"Mitsurugi, Shirogane told me about his past and made me realize I was misjudging him. Can you hear what he had to go through?"

"I already know he lost his memory before he joined the UN and that he doesn't know where his family is."

"No, that's not it." Chizuru starts making circles in the air again as she speaks. "I'm talking about how he got inducted into a special squad, and had to endure a horrible incident. Could you please listen to his story?" I'm touched that Chizuru is trying to clear the air between us. I guess… I can finally drop my guard with her. Meiya is glancing at me with fire in her eyes again.

"Inducted into a special squad? Shirogane, why didn't you tell me of this before?"

"Because you didn't ask. Anyways, do you want to hear it?" She nods quickly. She looks like a child waiting for a tale before going to bed. I know she admires my swordsmanship but, is that the only reason she's so curious about me?

I told her what I told Chizuru. How I failed to save someone and had to kill her, how I joined a special squad, how after the Yukon Incident I had nowhere to go since my squad and Instructor died and Yuuko-sensei scouted me to arrive at Yokohama.

"All of this is classified intel, so don't tell this to anyone." Meiya nods as she strokes her bangs slowly.

"You do not need to tell so, I understand. So you were there during the incident… You were part of a special squad… I cannot imagine the severity of the situation you had to go through. So when your unit was wiped out you got a proposal to join our base, and since the authorities at Yukon didn't have a place for you they agreed to transfer you? Is this the truth?" She looks at me intently, a weird glow in her eyes.

"I'm sure Sensei pressured someone to get the deal done. Supposedly, she was interested in having such a promising recruit on her base. I also used the chance to come back here, to see if I could find out who I was." I let out a sigh as I relax onto the tree.

"I see. Now that you mention this… Does this has anything to do with that badge?"

"Badge?" Chizuru tilts her head, looking at me.

"Sigh… Yeah, you can say that."

"Shirogane, what is Mitsurugi talking about?"

"I got a badge when I arrived here, as a formality for having fought on Yukon. I don't think anyone else got it, so please don't mention it again Meiya."

"Sorry… But it did say 'Champion', so I suppose the XO sees you as a great asset." You don't know how right you are. "Is this also related to your special missions, perchance?"

"… Yeah, it is." I close my eyes, putting my hands behind my head.

"Um, Shirogane?" Chizuru's voice softly says. "Why were you assigned as the tester of those machines? Are they truly a Japanese invention?"

"Yes, I said as much before."

"But they're… If they are, why are they being tested in the UN?" Chizuru was folding her arms. Meiya's eyes were fixated onto me. Sigh…

"Well… Can you keep a secret?" Both of them nod. "The machines have so many English terms and are in the UN… because I'm the one who made them."

"Huh?! Is this true?" Meiya was in whatever state comes after shocked, Chizuru was silently staring with her mouth slightly open.

"I came up with the concept back in Yukon and had done a prototype build of them and had a very rough version of some programs we used. They're like a pet project of mine, you could say. When I came here, I mentioned them once to Sensei and she was interested in the idea. That's how those prototypes were made and why I was in charge of testing them. That's what I was doing with Kasumi when she came to look for me, she was helping me out with the tests and fixes the sims needed." Both of them look away for some reason. They remained quiet for a while.

"… But you arrived in late October, were those machines made in… The UN's engineers must be top notch." Chizuru says, tapping her glasses.

"Yeah, they are. But you know, not a word of this to anyone. The sims are Top Secret stuff for now, so keep this to yourselves please." They both nod, I can see in their stares that they won't break this promise. I wonder if I could get to use those things after the CCSE if they can look at them differently…

"Say Shirogane…" Meiya says, gripping the edge of her blanket. "Would you let me assist you in your search of your family? With my resources, I'm sure I could find them." Thanks, but don't. I do not want to imagine what would you do if you find out I'm a 'dead man'.

"It's alright. Sensei tried to look into it, but it seems all my data was wiped out. Without that, you won't be able to find anything." I let out a sigh. Meiya drops her gaze as her hands grip the blanket tightly again.

And anyways, I may actually never see them again. I can't even go back to my home world for more than a day without dooming everybody to a horrible death. So, my parents might be gone from my life forever.

"Um… Forgive me, Shirogane. I shouldn't have brought that up."

"Don't worry. Let's rest, we need all the energy we can get for tomorrow." Both of them nod.

"Well, how do you two wish to take shifts for sleeping?" Straight to business, as usual for our blue haired girl.

"I'll take the first as we agreed before. Shirogane, I'll wake you up in four hours or so. Mitsurugi you just rest, you got it the worst from all of us."

"Understood. Forgive me for pushing this burden onto you two."

"Don't sweat it Meiya, you're the one who needs it the most." She avoids my eyes as she slowly gets under her blanket. She's so cute when she gets all bashful.

"Yes, I will need all the energy I can get for tomorrow. Good night, you two." And she gets completely under her blanket. I do wonder what got into her, to have her be this embarrassed all of a sudden.

"Sakaki, remember to have the gun nearby just in case. If you hear anything wake me up." She nods at my words grabbing the rifle tighter.

I need to sleep. In just a few hours we have to run, once we make it to the first evac point if we are not being tailed… We can escape with the boat. One or two days, that's all I need. Every second counts here, the sooner I get back to the base the sooner I can talk with Sensei about this. About the sword, the soldiers. She better have a good explanation for this. But I'll cross that bridge when I get there, for now… I need to rest.

I put the blanket over me, it smells bad. Considering how much it rained and all I ran it's not surprising. I can only hope everything goes alright. And after taking one last look at the moon, I let sleep's spell take over me.

---

[Musou]

---

My breathing is still rugged. They're getting close. I grab my sword tightly, and feel the weight of the 9mm gun on my waist. I never thought… they would go so far. The smell of burnt wood has long since filled the hallways, the sound of gunshots coming from the gardens have not yet ceased. I can expect no backup.

I look at her frail figure lying on the futon. Forgive me Koubuin-sama, for I have failed you. The gash on her back is drilling at me, one second too late and her life might have faded. No, it still wasn't safe to assume she'll survive.

I heard voices getting closer. I jump onto the wall and climb unto the small air vent. I peek towards the hallway after nudging myself into the small space, I see three black-cladded figures. Enemies.

I return to her room, they will enter from the front door and that'll give me an opening to assault them from above. As the door opens forcefully and the men enter the room I fall from my hiding place on the roof, sword at the ready. I slash one's neck as I fall, launching myself forward as I land driving my sword into another's stomach from behind.

Quickly sending a kick to the last one, I managed to send his gun flying away.

"Damn you bastard!" The last remaining aggressor took out his blade and charged at me.

I side step to my left and slash at his shoulder, he blocks and sends a slash from my right. I move to pressure him from my right, he takes a step back and launches a downward slash from my left. I stay still as I deflect his strike with my blade using all my might, no matter how skilled I might be fighting a bigger opponent is never an easy task. Then putting force into my feet I return the blow. His arms got yanked upwards, leaving his body wide open. I take my chance and take a step forward, slashing at his neck. The man falls to the ground with a groan, he drowns in his own blood.

I can't hear no more footsteps nearby. I'm starting to feel sick, I never thought… that killing could be so intoxicating. It's a horrible taste the one that fills my mouth. For the sake of my duty, I can do anything. Or so I thought.

The sound of footsteps resonate again on the hallway, approaching quite fast. I won't have time to hide, I grab my gun and point it at the door from a blank point. However, the figures I see are not those of the aggressors.

"1st Lt. Tsukuyomi!" I greet her as she arrives with four members of the guard behind her.

"You… what are you doing here?" Her cold eyes through the glasses make me flinch.

"I… I am protecting-"

"Do you call this protecting?! You useless fool!" She grabs me by the collar, almost choking me.

"I… There were…" I cannot form a sentence under their spiteful glares. I know the guards don't exactly like me… but still…

"Ichimonji, take Yuuhi-sama to safety. Fuudo, Juutsuya, Tayama. You three secure the area. Understood?!"

"Yes, Ma'am!" All of them answer in unison and get on her orders immediately.

"You… follow me, we will open a path for Ichimonji to take Yuuhi-sama to safety." She addressed me coldly, and I follow closely behind as we make our way to the right side of the hallway. "Tell me what happened. How many were they?"

"Five. They ambushed us, I'm the only one left of the guards here. I had trouble dealing with one of them, and another knocked Koubuin-sama before trying to kill her. I barely managed to attack him to make him fail on his deadly intent. But…"

"You still failed. Is this all you can do? All the time we spent on you, for this? You disappoint me, where are all those brave words you spoke before?"

"My apologies." I bow as we walk, I have nothing to retort with. Because of my weakness…

"Hmph, that way of speech does not suit you. I hope you're ready to keep fighting, it seems someone leaked our patrol's data and our weaponry to these terrorists."

"You mean… someone of the Regent-"

"Do not utter another word." Her cold eyes stop me from finishing. I sometimes forget how scary she can be.

"But then who-"

"Do not ask. You need not know, you're a blade. A blade asks no questions. Focus on your mission, slaughter all who would harm Yuuhi-sama. I'll say it one more time, lose that little humanity you still have within. Let loose, have no moderation in your strikes. You are a member of the Royal Guard, we do not hold back in front of our enemies. Was I clear?"

"Yes, Ma'am." This intel could only be leaked by someone of the Regent Houses. This Empire is rotten, how dare they point their blades towards their fellows? And sending terrorists to do their dirty work no less.

"Perfect. Now make haste, our comrades won't hold out for long. Let me remind you, being inducted into the Royal Guard is one of the greatest honors a Japanese citizen can ever hope to receive. Maybe my words are falling on deaf ears, but I still have high hopes placed on you."

"I'll do my best to answer to them." I feel so out of place here. I much rather go back to my old station. Working alone suits me best, and all this forced dignity is making me sick.

We're under attack and you bother with the honor speech? I already know what my role is. I already saw the consequences…

The sound of footsteps reverberates nearby. We both ready our guns and open fire at the soldiers that turned the corner. I won't hesitate… I can't hesitate… For her sake, I…

The hallway is painted in red. The 1st Lt. gives me a stern look as my knees started to shake. Can you blame me? I never had to kill anyone… And now…

"Make haste, time is of essence!" I resign myself to my fate as I follow her lead.

---

Some hours after that…

---

Standing guard outside of the room where Yuuhi-sama was brought after the incident was over, it feels as if I had a boombox beating inside my chest. My ears just won't stop ringing, and I can't stop one of my hands from shaking.

The damage we received was too severe. 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi didn't deny the possibility that another Regent House was the one who leaked the intel, but even so, how could they have gotten our data? Does that mean that… there's a traitor in our ranks?

Still… How many did I shoot today? I thought I was going to puke my insides out, yet despite the reflex nothing comes out. My stomach turning and turning, yet this sick sensation doesn't want to leave me for now. I guess that once my tension truly leaves me I'll be able to let it out, whatever it is that's brewing in there.

"Hey, attention!" The other guard that was keeping watch with me stood upright, three fellows in the red dress approached us.

The two different green tones of the Tsukuyomis' hair in the lead, and the boy that's always around them following right behind. They don't seem to be hurt, thankfully.

"Greetings, fellows. We have come to watch over Yuuhi-sama. Is Ichimonji-san within the room?" Grasping a strand of her emerald hair, she asked.

"Yes. Her wounds have already been treated."

"How are her injuries as of now?!" Narrowing her turquoise eyes, I couldn't help but to gulp hard and nod.

"… She is no risk, rest assured. Please, do go inside." Both of us bow to them, opening the door.

The two of them quickly walk inside, yet the boy delays his steps for a moment. Remaining in place as he looks down, he ruffles his chestnut hair as he sighs. Looking back at us, it takes a second for him to find his words.

"Um… How is the rest of house?"

"It has taken serious damage, especially the left wing." My comrade answers. "Thankfully, the inner structure wasn't compromised. Rest easy Shirogane, we have routed all of those terrorists."

"… I see. How are our fellows? Have the other guards… well…"

"… We did lose many comrades, yes." I say, and we both grimace. He seems to be wringing his fists. "However, everything has already been resolved. Please do go to Yuuhi-sama's presence, she should be awaiting you."

"Yeah… Um…"

"Yes?" It is odd, he rarely hesitates this much when asking something.

"… Is this how it is? To be at war?"

…

"… Not always." My comrade answers. "Sometimes it goes better, other times it goes worse. But it rarely comes down to such barbaric acts, for us to face off against other people."

"I agree. No one could have anticipated this turn of events. This is a limit situation, nothing more."

"So… everything will return to normal in a few days right? The others won't… be left as they are in the hall for long, right?" Biting his lips, frowning clearly, we could do nothing but look down as we knew the supplies wouldn't magically appear overnight.

"… It might take some time. The available supplies have been sent to the higher echelons of our ranks, after all." My comrade says, sighing afterwards.

"… Is that so? So they won't receive anything else?" Hanging his head, eyes almost closing, it felt as if a crab was strangling my throat. "They won't send anything from our reserves?"

"Well… They were clear in their orders already."

Biting his lips, he winces. Coiled fists shake, a frown suddenly finds its way to his face.

"H-However, our Lady and the rest are working as hard as possible so that supplies arrive as quickly as possible. I believe Cpt. Amato had gone to the hall a moment ago to survey the situation over there?"

"Yes… Yes, he did." He looks down, seeming dejected at something. How odd. "Sorry to take your time." Giving us a bow that we return, he finally enters the room, and we close the door as he does.

Sighing as I lean on the wall, nothing but powerlessness fills me. Can't do much but to share his feelings, this was something that we weren't ready for. It is dejecting, seeing him so afflicted and worried about us commoners despite his standing. And to hear of how the rest of us inductees are being treated in the Main Hall.

"… I wish more of them were like him."

"Hey, don't say that out loud. I don't want to face a reprisal because of any loose words. Remember what just happened, Fukuha."

"I know… It's just, is it that much to ask for them to look after us commoners properly? He's right, they could have sent something else to the hall."

"Look, I agree with you. But we can't let them hear us complaining, the Tsukuyomis won't let us off the hook like they do with him."

"Sigh… I know."

Still… I would like more of them to follow his example. Shirogane's completely right, sending just a few more supplies isn't out of our reach. Hopefully, he might just convince Amato and the Tsukuyomis with one of his ramblings again.

All I can do for now is stand guard and follow my orders. That's all us inductees are allowed to do in the Royal Guard.

Towards the Downpour

Chapter 20: Towards the Downpour

---

November 20th. Fourth Day of the CCSE.

(Near the river. 0 5:16 AM.)

[Takeru]

---

I stretch my arms towards the sky, the first signs of light beginning to appear up there along some small clouds going nowhere. Nothing but the rustle of the wind can be heard nearby, the humid smell of leaves and mud everywhere around us. I'll let them sleep for a few minutes more, I already found some mushrooms and leaves we can eat. They need their rest.

I think I reached an answer to my doubts, after debating with myself since the start of my shift. This is the BETA world I was in last time. Now, let's go back to the beginning.

After all my loops my original world, let's call it the Alpha world, became too close to the BETA world to the point that the exchange of information between both was much stronger than normal. Because of that I came to this place, to reverse the situation to its original balance. However, at first I thought I had arrived to a different world given the differences of this reality to the ones I experienced in the past. That was a mistake.

Let's talk about Alpha and Beta as trees.

Tree A is now too close to Tree B, their branches are all entangled. I thought that I jumped from A to B at the very beginning, and then I kept returning to B's roots every time I died. Therefore, I was trapped in a loop on Tree B.

Last time I managed to reach the end of a branch in B and I returned to Tree A. However, by that point B's branches were too close to A and got in the way. I tried returning to B to fix that, but I thought I ended up in another tree, Tree C. That is my current location.

I had no idea why I arrived at C, or why I got to C's roots when I wasn't trying to reach a tree's roots. Actually, it should have been impossible to do so. Tree C was similar to B, but it had many differences that made me think I was in another tree. That's what made me doubt.

But I think I figured out why this happened. Well, maybe not why exactly, but where I am and how I got here. There was never a third tree.

Yuuko-sensei referred to the alternate realities as worlds and during that fateful Christmas she said that all worlds are parallel to each other, but what if they're universes instead? Alpha is my home world within the Alpha Universe. That doesn't mean that my world is the only one where there are no BETA, there are many other similar worlds connected as branches to it. There might be a world out there where Yuuhi didn't die and Meiya didn't become the heir of the Mitsurugi Group, a world where I choose someone to be with, a world where I might not exist.

The worlds are the branches of the tree known as reality, and all those alternative realities exist within the forest that is that specific universe. In a similar way, all the different worlds I might have visited during the loops are still there, somewhere in the great forest that is the Beta Universe. A world where I married one of my squadmates, another where I got together with Yuuko-sensei, a world where I didn't survive Operation Iceberg, the world where I joined Operation Babylon, lost everyone, and ended up destroying the JFK Hive. The possibilities are unlimited.

It's kind of like the possible outcomes of Magorea's Mask. The 'big' events might be the same, but depending on how Lonk decides to help the people the lasting ripples will be different. Does he help the monkey? Does the singer recovers her voice? Again, the possible outcomes are many. And in that same sense, this world is just like the other one I was in, part of the same forest I got lost in before, but with its own micro circumstances that are unique to it. So, a connection between me and this place could be made, under the right conditions.

So, how did I arrive to this world? It was actually quite simple when I thought about it without freaking myself out.

Parallel Universes A and B are too close, they start exchanging data between all their possible worlds within them more strongly than they should. My world got affected by this, probably more strongly due to the fact that I was the cause of the chaos.

Then, when I tried to move from A to B, I did so with one thought in my mind: To have the chance to save everyone, or as many people as I could, no matter the consequences. If there is a will, there is a way. The mind is at its peak when it comes to causal matters, so I willed myself to the branch within the Beta Universe where my wish could be granted.

Here in this mad world lies the possibility of a future where my squad survives, if I can turn that into causal data and use Sensei's theory, the one she said that allowed control of what information we leak to other worlds, to transfer it to the rest of the Beta Universe I can save all the branches from the BETA.

If I manage to survive and achieve my desired result and pass that data to the other conductors in the parallel worlds of the Betaverse, I will be saving the versions of everyone that I love so much. Or at the very least, stop the forced shared of data due to the ripples of my past loops to prevent the negative outcomes to screw us over.

I had thought that the 'roots' of the world, its starting point, was my arrival. Of course, from my point of view everything starts on that 22nd of October. But that is not the case, the world exists from much before, and every little difference I made during all my loops takes me to a different branch.

Like for example, perhaps taking the boat or not didn't affect anything in the long run in my last loop, but the data was there. I didn't take two loops last time, I did only one. So I shouldn't remember the two outcomes, and yet when I got the fuel in my hands I doubted as I thought about which path I had taken.

That means that the data is there, just that I didn't take that branch. The same applies to what happens during Christmas, who did I get together with, whether or not I sent my lover in the Alt. V fleet, whether I survive Babylon or not. All those worlds are parallel branches of another branch.

And I believe that in that same sense, this world is another branch of a branch. The first BETA world I was stuck in was also another branch of the Betaverse. The general rules of this reality apply to both branches. BETA exist, humanity is on the brink of total annihilation, TSF are on the 3rd Generation, and the general political landscape is somewhat similar. However, many little differences exist between these branches but they're still part of the same tree.

Which means, if we're not careful, the data from the failed branches might begin to leak into this world, or towards others. Or even worse, towards my home worlds. Hell, that might be happening as of now over there.

Now, how did I time travel? Causal Pull, let's call it. What greater pull could exist in this world than the creation of its conductor? What stronger link to me, the Causality Nucleus, could possibly exist here? I mean, this is actually not the first time this happened to me when I thought about it. When the loop started I also got sent to the past. I had clear memories of a teen version of Meiya, who I hadn't met until that same day in my world and I also had forgotten about when we met as kids. The Takeru from the morning of October 22nd didn't knew who Meiya was, so only a Takeru from after that date could have had memories of her. So when the loop started, I got sent to the past from my world into this universe. And the same happened during last loop as well as this time.

I can only wonder if there's another reason for me to be here. If I arrived here due to my willpower then that's that. But maybe there's something else? No point in overthinking it, when the time comes I will learn whatever that reason is or I may never know.

I need to be extra careful from now on though, regardless of whether my ideas are right or not. I have to try to not create negative data unnecessarily since it might be leaked to other conductors, I might not be able to keep my memories one day and if all the negativity my squad felt towards me and the suspicions I feel now towards the Royal Guard make their way into me that will be bad. I can't do anything about what's beyond my control, so I might have to one day fight against the Shogunate and I have no power over the feelings of the rest.

If both Tsukuyomis, Takamura, Yuuhi and Meiya come at me I'll have to fight them, and that data will exist and be leaked to the other worlds so long as I don't fix the ripples. And even if it doesn't affect me, it might affect the others through their interactions with me. Yuuhi and the Shogunate may become my enemies in all loops from now on, or even in other parallel loops where other Takerus are unknowingly receiving data from me, if I don't try to fix their suspicions.

Hell, I might be receiving data from either the future me of this timeline or from another parallel world. What if this paranoia is a premonition of the things to come? What if these frozen hands are trying to warn me to stay on my guard?

Well, I'll try my best to not interact towards anybody with hostility from now on. Meiya and Chizuru seem to be willing to start over, so that's a nice first step. The negativity already exist within their hearts so I have to be tactful with them. Sensei did say that it's difficult to… to…

Wait one second… Holy shit, how could I have forgotten about that?! So I DID affect them!

How was it? The more you focus on the bad things, the more you'll be affected by the data leaks of the negative futures? Then, when they started to have negative thoughts about me… When they interacted with me, they received negative causal information through the Conductor. Perhaps now that I'm a stronger Nucleus I can also pull more information related to me, making the transfer occur faster. Then… The more time I spent with them when they were suspicious of me, the more negative they got. Maybe that's why they reacted so badly after the Stallion's test. Sensei did say it's really hard to break a link to a data leak. I suppose… Chizuru might revert to how she was being until now if she grows suspicious of me again. Tama and Mikoto might also end up affected by the negativity once they learn I killed the soldiers.

"Hahaha… I fucked up, big time." Placing both of my hands behind my head and leaning back onto a tree, I chuckle as I watch the clouds as they flee.

Now that the data is here… Any and all parallel worlds might be affected by it. I don't want to think what effect I could have on Yuuhi or the Guards if I'm forced to interact with…

… Wait another second…

Oh shit, the coup! There's no way I will be able to avoid them if I let that happen! I gotta do my best to prevent it, especially since everybody is super sensitive about foreigners here. It wouldn't take much effort for Sagiri to rally the people and the army against the UN or Chizuru's dad now. So no making trouble, save the people of the villages yourself during the Mount Tengen incident instead of sending random UN soldiers, and stay out of the Guard's and Meiya's way.

No, wait… I have the Minaru Kamui with me. Goddammit!

When Tsukuyomi-san learns that I have a Minaru Kamui… And if she tells Maya-san… or Yuuhi…

"I'm so dead, aren't I?" I hope I can loop again because it seems I'm headed towards a certain execution at the hands of the Royal Guard. Sigh… Whatever happens, happens.

Just like how some games lock their true ending behind Hard Mode, my desired world lies somewhere in here. I don't care what I have to do, I'll bring that hope to reality. Even if I become an enemy of the Empire and end up dead or somewhere else, so long as my beloved ones live in peace that's fine. Though I don't know if I'll be able to stay near them now, the negative causal leaks might very well turn them into my enemies suddenly.

That will be the biggest hurdle I have to overcome. The same applies to everybody else, if anyone gets suspicious of me that will turn into paranoia and later into blind hatred. I may have to fight alone most of the time, or I'll have to keep my identity hidden like during the Invasion of Niigata.

And I do have to talk this out with Sensei, as well as this matter of the chasers. But no getting depressed! I'll despair after I'm dead!

"Hmm… Yeah, I can do this. I just have to be careful from now on."

I don't know if I can fully trust Meiya and Chizuru, but I want them to live. I want to protect them, even if only to stop the memories from their deaths from resurfacing. Their reactions yesterday seemed honest and I think it's okay to trust in them for now, but the more time I spend with them…

… And I don't want to see them like that again. In the end, all this is my fault so I shouldn't be complaining. This is my cross to bear, no one forced me to come here this time after all, what happened in my world was my fault. And I did kill people, so they have… all the right reasons to grow hostile towards me once the test is over.

Hmm? It looks like Meiya woke up.

"Yaaawn… Uuugh…" She looks like she needs another day of sleep. Rubbing her shoulders slowly, she raises from the ground groaning a bit.

"Good morning Mitsurugi."

"Oh, good morning Ta-… Shirogane. What hour is it?"

"A bit past 0530, how are you feeling?" I did not miss that slight pause, she almost tried to call me Takeru again. This Meiya never called me by my name, is she receiving some memories from another world?

"If I had to say, four out of ten."

"Let me wake up Sakaki, I already gathered some stuff to have breakfast."

"Wait. Can we talk for a while before that?" She looked at me intensely, squarely in the eye as she put her ponytail in place, despite how she was trying to drown another yawn.

"I mean, we can talk while we eat."

"I wish to speak of something without Sakaki listening, it's important. Please?" I nod at her and she smiles as she gets up.

"Alright. What did you wanna talk about?" I sit by a tree that was a bit away from our spot, Meiya comes near and sits in front of me.

"First, allow me to thank you again. Despite how I abandoned you, you still found kindness in you to come to my aid. You were able to make a hard decision during a crisis, I had not the bravery to harm those soldiers even when they all attacked me. Your strong resolve shone through, allowing you to bloody your hands to protect us. Thank you kindly, Shirogane." She tries to bow but I extend a hand to stop her.

"Stop it. We already went through this yesterday, helping your comrades is the obvious thing to do." She nods at my words with a smile. "… And you shouldn't be thanking me for killing people." Grimacing, she nods once more, her hands gripping her pants a bit too tightly.

"… Indeed. I am merely glad that you can still consider me your comrade despite what I did, and that you were there to protect us." Coughing, she straightens up. "Well then, I wanted to ask for your forgiveness. I stained my honor as a samurai by running away, abandoning you, failing to protect Sakaki, and eventually forcing you to do what you did to aid us. Shirogane, could you spare some kindness to forgive me?" She bows to me again. I know how much your honor and traditions mean for you, but you don't have to be like this.

"There's nothing to forgive. You did your best, Mitsurugi. And I told you I acted on my own, my own decisons aren't your fault."

"That's not true. A samurai must never run away from danger. And that's what I did when I left you behind, and even then I couldn't do anything. It was mine own weakness that spawned this whole situation." Her shoulders drop again as her eyes almost close, as if they were filled with smoke, her voice becomes but a sliver of its usual.

"Look, don't punish yourself so much. No one can protect its life alone, right? You did what you could to protect Sakaki. And as I said, I did what I wanted to do on my own ."

"That might be so… However, I cannot leave this stain on me. I'm sorry. Please, Shirogane. Forgive me." She gets on her knees and brings her head to the ground. "As a samurai in training, I cannot live with such dishonor on me. Please, allow me to mend my mistake."

"You don't have to be like this. And I already forgave you." I know she won't take that as an answer. And not a second later, she looks up with purple fire in her eyes once more. Haha, she truly looks like my Meiya now… even with her obnoxious stubbornness.

"That is not enough. I wish to earn your forgiveness. For me, my honor is all I have. Please Shirogane, allow me to mend my mistakes. I cannot simply leave this stain on me."

"There's no stain on you. You did-"

"I abandoned you and failed Sakaki. And that was what forced your hand. Please…" Entwining her fingers as if she were praying, a puppy would be left shocked at her stare. "Please, allow me to earn your forgiveness." And then, she bows again.

She's taking the honor code too seriously, as always for her. I'm not a noble or a fellow here. Actually, I'm your enemy since Yuuhi wants me dead. You'll probably come after me when it's revealed that my sword is a 'fake' one. I still have no idea how I'm going to explain this. Yuuhi must have a list of who have these swords, she will immediately know I shouldn't have this, add that to the fact that she knows I'm not this world's Takeru and you have a giant problem. Sigh…

"… For real, you're taking this too far. You don't have to do anything, it's fine."

"No, it isn't. I want… I have to earn it." She holds my gaze firmly. Always so stubborn.

"But I decided what to do on my own."

"However, my own shortcomings were what forced that scenario. You would not have… resorted to such a solution if an alternative had been available to you, right?" Looking right back at me, she stiffens up. Again, suspicion in her voice. "Surely, such methodology isn't how you prefer to operate."

"… No, I wouldn't have done that if I had the choice." Sighing, I close my eyes. "For real. I fought to kill because… they didn't leave me another choice."

Hunching over like I did during my very first full gear march, the pressure, the weight, the pain bending my back, twisting my stomach. Unlike before, I don't have an excuse.

I killed Meiya because we had no choice. And the situation forced me to fight in the coup. But this time… the choice was all mine. No orders forced me, no external fact pushed me. I broke that woman's arm, I shot to kill even if I hesitated.

"Look, I tried to incapacitate them. But even then, they still tried to fight. So… So I chose to do it. Yes, they were being aggressive, but… I could have shot at their hands or chest. And I didn't. So don't thank me."

"… Are you not regretting this outcome?"

"Sigh… I'm just, I don't know, depleted. I just…" The last looks those men gave me resurface, the horrified gaze of the woman comes back.… Meiya's bloodied face comes back. Gulping down acid, running a hand over my eyes, I lean back. "When the choice was in front me, I decided to protect you two. Do I regret it? Yeah. Would I do it again?… Yeah, probably. It's just… Didn't think doing it on my own would be so… simple. I guess I'm kind of surprised at how cold and ruthless I was when the bullets came knocking at my door."

"Huh? What do you mean by, doing it on your own?" Narrowing her eyes, her tone slowed down.

"I got someone killed before, remember?"

"But that is not the same as-"

"That's why."

"Huh?"

"When I had to…" Biting my lips, can't hold her gaze. "… kill her, I was destroyed. I just kept convincing myself that I just had to do it. I didn't do it right away, I doubted. But now? It took me a second. And, even if it saved our backs, I don't want to run away from what I chose to do on my own. I didn't show mercy, and this isn't how I wanna do things. So that's why… you shouldn't thank me. Pulling the trigger… shouldn't feel so light."

Again, I hunch over. As if my arms were dragging lots of heavy bags from the super, as if the plastic was sawing off at my palms, I can't muster any strength to move.

I don't want to accept that murder is this easy. I should be feeling guilty. But I'm not, it's as if I were resigned. 'Those are the rules we live by', I don't want to accept that it is so easy. Not because of a mission, not because of the situation. To resort to killing as the default isn't how I wanna do things.

… Because if I surrender to that, I feel like I'll just resign myself to the outcome of Ouka. I don't want to… keep spreading pain.

"… Pull the trigger, Takeru."

No, it shouldn't be my first choice. I didn't want to kill you… We can't fix our problems through gun shots. I shouldn't feel so little guilt.

"… Pull the trigger, Takeru."

Guh… I know, the perfect solution doesn't exist. I chose Meiya's and Chizuru's safety over their lives. But… But I don't want to take that road again. I came here… to save people… to not have you all die… If I just resign myself to killing and maiming everyone who is against me… Won't I just be like a BETA? Like the ones who used you as meat shields in Iceberg?

I don't want to be that kind of person. Bloodying my hands… shouldn't be… my first and only choice.

"Pull the trigger, Takeru!"

No! I'm… I can't… I shouldn't be… accepting this so easily.

Killing should have purpose, because you're taking a life, something that's extremely precious. Murdering and hurting others without reason, just as the easy way out…

That's… the last resource. To be such a monster… But if it protect my beloved ones…

I shiver in place, hugging my sides, again feeling that cold blanket over my back. Her cries as I hesitated to shoot the cannon keep repeating in my ears. Screwdrivers dive into my head, my throat closes up, it feels as if the ground were spinning.

"Takeru?" Her voice sounded closer.

Opening my eyes, taking a deep breath, she was looking at me, downcast eyes and a hand hesitating on whether to shake my shoulder or not. Taking a sec to calm my breathing, running a hand over my face, I manage to subdue the pain.

"S-Sorry, I… I'm still in shock, I guess."

"Forgive me. I knew of your burden, yet I still held doubts towards you." She gives me a bow. Her hands are shaking. "I should have known that you were under great duress after having to pull…" Suddenly stopping, she looks down as she clutches her shirt. "… after the ordeal."

"Don't apologize. I murdered them, that won't change."

"That may be so… But, precisely because of how this shall affect you after this, and how it is obvious that you are not even remotely as well as you claim to be, I must ask you to forgive me. Twas mine own folly what has brought this pain to you."

No, that's wrong. I'm suffering for what I myself did, before and yesterday. But I can't keep being like this. I can't push my emotional burdens onto others. This is my problem, I'll deal with it on my own. So, I gotta make you get that you're free of guilt. That's gonna be hard, though.

"Look, I'm thankful that you're still nice to me after all that happened. It… means a lot, for real. But you did nothing wrong, Meiya. So, can you tell me why do you want to earn this instead of just accepting that I forgave you?"

"Because my offense can only be mended by doing something for you. Only you, who I have wronged, can lift the stain on my honor. I cannot move on until I've properly earned your forgiveness."

"Yes, you can. You do not need to do anything to earn my forgiveness. You can still become a samurai, because I was the one that made a mistake." Her gaze again falls to the ground, and she speaks up in a frail, slow tone.

"That's not true. Because I abandoned you and didn't protect Sakaki, you had to spill blood. That is the truth. I was warned to not make any more mistakes, or else she would report my misconduct. I'm sure 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi will learn of this, after all the soldiers are part of the CCSE." She stops for a while as she shivers slightly. "If you inform the 1st Lt. that I've earned your forgiveness, I am convinced she will still reprimand me yet again however, I won't lose my sword and mission. Please… Ask anything you desire of me, anything at all. Please let me clean my honor." She looks up to me with those shiny, puppy dog eyes my world's Meiya did during our last talk back in my world.

Squinting my eyes, I stopped breathing for a sec as my heartbeat began clashing against my chest from within. You can't do this to me… Short of receding, she keeps staring while making those cute little groans she always makes whenever she does this.

Hauu… I can't deal with this… If it makes her happy I can play along, but what can I ask her? I can't ask her to speak with Tsukuyomi-san, since once she learns of this world's me our relation will crumble. So then, what can I… Oh, I think I know what I want.

"I'll forgive you on one condition."

"What would it be? State your terms, you can ask anything of me!" She moves closer quickly, looking at me with bathed breath.

"Anything at all?" I say in a teasing tone while cracking a smile and placing a finger on my cheek, she twitches as it seems her cheeks gain a reddish tint while she purses her lips.

"… Almost anything. So long as it's something I can do without going against my morals. I won't allow you to t-touch me again." She's still hung up on that? She can be so cute sometimes.

"Alright. I think I know what I want." I smirk at my sudden idea.

"Truly? Tell me, I'll do it!" She gets even closer to me, her eyes sparkling.

"You will do it, right?"

"If I can then I will. No matter what kind of task you ask me to perform for you, or what item you ask of me. I will comply to your orders." She is honest to a fault so she isn't lying.

"I want you to let me call you Meiya. No more complaining."

…

"… Shirogane, I seem to not have heard your order very well. What did you ask of me?"

"To let me call you Meiya as much as I want." For some reason her face is getting red, her mouth opens and closes and her eyes dart from me to the ground. She wasn't this easy to tease in the other worlds. And she got used to me calling her that in an instant too.

"Why… Why do you want that? I mean, you could… make me do any other-"

"No. I want you to stop complaining when I call you Meiya."

"But why?… If that's what you desire, I will allow you to call me by my name. However… Isn't there anything else you wish me to do? I could… look for your family or any friends you might have here." She seems to be real nervous, maybe it's a bigger deal in this world?

"I told you Sensei already tried and found nothing. I just want to call you by your name, and now you have no choice but to comply."

And I just like saying it, even if you're a different Meiya. It also might help in you not getting negative again, even if only for a brief time. I don't want to have you keep blaming yourself for my mistakes, and I also can't ask you anything without making the Shogunate suspicious of me. I can… have that, right? Calling you as always, despite what I did. Can I at least… ease up around you?

She folds her arms, groaning a bit. I sigh, hunching over and feeling empty. Of course she won't agree. I'm not someone… she would trust. Then, she coughed, yet averted her gaze when I looked her way.

"I… suppose can allow you to call me Meiya from now on. However, could you explain me why you desire to do so? You were quite adamant against me doing something for you just a second ago."

"It's a beautiful name, that's all. I just think it suits you well, and I rather use that than your surname. And I can tell this is important for you, so that's that. So… let's make peace and work together until the test is over, Meiya. Um… Meiya?" Her eyes and mouth remained wide open as her face reddened, I could practically hear gears screeching within her head. "… Hey Meiya, you in there?" I wave my hand in front of her and she seems to have come to her senses.

"Huh? What is it, Shirogane?" She spoke slowly in a monotone voice with glazed eyes.

"Meiya, you look tilted. You okay?" She slowly nods.

"Til… ted?" She then tilted her head, raising a brow. She's broken, completely.

"Hey, you sure you're okay?" I might have overdone it with the teasing this time. Please tell me you're not mad.

"Eh… Yeah, it was just… shocking to hear you say that my name was…" She blushes and can't finish her sentence. So she was just embarrassed? "A-Anyways! We now have our accord so… Do you truly forgive my actions, Shirogane?"

"Yeah, you have been forgiven Meiya." She smiles widely at me, like the Meiya of my world used to do. As sweetly and shining, it's more than enough to clean all the shit I had clogging my chest.

"Thank you… Truly, you have my utmost gratitude. I swear that I won't give you more trouble. However, I still wish to be there when you hand over your blade."

"Yes, I know. Let's do peace for the remainder of the test. We can talk our problems at the base." She nods at my words, signing our deal.

"I'm glad we could reach an agreement. Now I must ask the same of Sakaki, since I did fail in protecting her." There is no stopping her when she gets like this, so no point in arguing.

After shaking the dirt off her pants, Meiya got up, woke up Chizuru, and, after repeating the same things, she asked Meiya to teach her how to improve with a blade. Thankfully, we're back to normal. We started to eat breakfast as we shook off the stiffness, discussing what we should do from now on. In the middle of that our radios started making noise.

"A transmission?" Chizuru takes one out and presses some buttons. "Here Sakaki, over."

"Squad? Are you all alright?" The Instructor sounded as usual on the other side.

"Instructor! We got separated after we got attacked by some soldiers. What was that about?!" Mikoto's yelps rang through the speaker.

"So that's why I heard two voices. Which of you reached the evac point?"

"Me, Miki-san, and Kei-san did, Instructor." She sounds kinda out of breath, I wonder if they're alright.

"They're already at the evac point?!" Meiya was truly surprised. I mean, last time we did arrive early to it, now that they have better stamina and were probably running in fear of being found it's not so surprising.

"What was it with those two-"

"Silence!" Mikoto's complains were cut short by the Instructor's yell. "If you say a word about this test's trial you'll be disqualified. Sakaki's team still has to arrive at the evac point." Ouch, what got into her? Also two what? Don't tell me they put two gun batteries this time.

"Roger. But anyways, are the others alright?"

"Alive and kicking." I shout as I pack my weapons into my belt.

"Takeru?! Are you alright?! And Meiya-san and Chizuru-san?" Hearing her sound so worried about us is heartwarming, honestly.

Thanks Mikoto.

"We're both here and we're alright." Chizuru replied instantly.

"Yeah, alright is kinda pushing it right about now. But we're safe." I rub my left shoulder, that was now purple and hurt a bit.

"Cadets, you can talk after the test. Yoroi, there are instructions on how to proceed near the place where you found the fire signals. Follow the instructions to reach your new objective. Sakaki, your team must continue to the designated evac point and once you're there look for these new instructions. That is all." And she cut the connection, just like that.

I think Mikoto might have wanted to say something else, but if she tries to talk through the comms she'll get eliminated from the CCSE. Marimo-chan is nowhere to be found.

"Well, our objective hasn't changed. Shirogane, Mitsurugi, let's make haste to the evac point. It seems like we still have a long way to go to finish this CCSE."

"Roger." We both nod and finish the mushrooms and fruit I had gathered.

Obviously that's not the case because I still have the fuel with me. So long as the soldiers are taken care of, we can run away on the boat safely. And so, we start moving south along the cliff. I can only hope we find a bridge or something to be able to cross fast, before the soldiers catch up to us.

---

November 20th. 0 3:10 PM.

(Yuuko's Office.)

[Yuuko]

---

Pouring some coffee on my mug, I reread the paper that had come my way.

This morning I got a report from Marimo about the test on the island, she sounded quite distressed. That's par for the course for her, but this time she had a very good reason to sound so preoccupied.

I cannot believe him! Of all the things he could have done, he had to go and murder some of the soldiers. High Command was under great pressure this time, I couldn't do a thing to prevent them from sending a squad of soldiers as another challenge of the CCSE.

Three injured, two deaths. Not even I will be able to cover you this time, Shirogane. The Captain of the squad sent a very aggravating report on his encounter with him, considering he is seen as a foreigner here… I should take some measures before it's too late. You're too valuable to lose you now, especially after the readings stabilized once more since your departure.

That being said, if he chose to kill them… I suppose he did what he had to do at the time. It's an issue I will have to address later, but Marimo did say the soldiers had a… less than stellar attitude during their encounter. There is still the matter of the last two members of that squadron… I should begin the preparations, as quickly as possible.

A knock on my door snaps me from the distant island's problems.

"Come in." I unlock it and Pyatkh steps into the room, letting the man behind her enter as well, and with a bow she then leaves.

As I ordered, Isumi and Hayase were at the door too in case anything happened. Now that Shirogane is gone this is the most appropriate time for an attack, if he has any intention of doing so.

"Good afternoon, Professor. Beautiful as ever, I see."

"Chief Yoroi, take a seat. We have quite many matters to discuss." He tips his hat and sits down.

"I brought you some nice intel today. Did you know that a new restaurant opened in the golden district in Tokyo? Their sushi is simply marvelous." Why do you always have to do this? I am not falling to your misdirection again.

"Chief Yoroi, could you cut the crap today? I'm expecting important reports from you." This talk just started and I'm already losing my patience.

"Oh? I thought you liked sushi. And here I was thinking that we could have a pleasant talk about food." He fakes a puppy dog look, slowly raising a hand to wipe away a non-existent tear from his dry cheek. Sigh…

"Chief Yoroi…"

"There have been many movements in these weeks that have raised some alarms in my office." Joining his hands together, he takes his serious gaze. What is he talking about? Where are my reports on the deals?

"I thought you came here for the deal on the new parts for the Gekishin and to bring me some intel on Takamura. What is this about?"

"Well, you see…" After a moment of silence where he closed his eyes, he cleared his throat and adjusted his posture a little bit. "Let me start from the beginning. You do remember that you allowed the Blood squad to 'test' some of the new parts you had made? Her Highness was most pleased with the reports she received and would like to form an official joint project to develop new technology with the UN." Yes, I could see this coming from a week ago.

"And? How is that any different from the other projects they tried to do?"

"Because this time it won't be a joint operation between the UN and a branch of the IJA. The proposal is to make a joint project with the Ministry of Defense itself."

"Well, the Shogun does have control over the military matters here after all. But are you sure that the Minister will comply?" He smiles a bit as he relaxes onto the sofa.

"Of course not. She knows the project will be rejected by the Parliament." He raises his hands, his tone shows a hint of disgust at the last word despite the never changing smile.

"Then, why are you mentioning this to me?"

"Because we won't be making a new project. Her Highness' idea is to restart a project that has already been approved but was-"

"The XFJ Project, right?"

"And here I was, trying to make a shocking reveal. These days I seem to have lost my edge." He says with a deadpan tone as he sighs, shaking his head slowly as if he were truly sad.

"Chief Yoroi, you have yet to explain anything. Could you please?" Sheesh, I'm getting so pissed off at him right now. What are they playing at?

"You see, the Shogun wishes to make an accord with you."

"First a joint project, now it's an accord. Could you stop with the wordplay and tell me what is this about?"

"I will get to it in due time. But as it may be, I have heard some… unsightly rumors as of late." You seem determined to ignore me today. "Some people are waiting for a spark, to lit the torch of war once again."

"I see. Does this have anything to do with next year's elections?" Testing my loyalty, perhaps?

"Yes, we have confirmed that some people have been coming and going very secretly from the Diet Building to the IJA's HQ. There seems to be someone important pulling some strings. Today at night a new budget increase for the production of the Shiranui will be passed on the Parliament, and a deal to send some Type-1Cs to certain elite squads of the IJA has been made as well."

"And how does this ties with me? I don't remember asking for this intel." He frowns at my words. Is this all a lie? Show me your cards already.

"Some of these actions have already involved you, Professor. While Takamura-dono's proposal to continue the development of the Type-99X-EML Railgun was accepted thanks to her own efforts, two people directed her towards you. One is Eiji Iwaya, an important man in the Weapon Research Department of the Ministry of Defense. I had a talk with him, he knew that you would be the most fitting person to put in charge of this since it was the intel you gave them what allowed the railgun to even exist." Yes, I remember that. One of the first 'favors' the Empire asked of me to prove my loyalty.

"So the first one was nothing more than good intentions. What about the second?"

"The second one… We still don't know who it was, but all leads me to think this person's influence was used in some sort of deal. Some connections were used to send Takamura-dono here as a UN officer, which gave the UN a nice new toy to play around with, and probably managed to convince the right people to gather the amount of votes needed to pass this new budget. And I think you know already what they asked of the UN."

"To keep Squad 207B as Cadets? Yeah, I know. I already took my measures to get what I want without making problems for the UN." He briefly smiles before continuing.

"Takamura-dono was most joyful when she knew she'd be arriving here, I can assure you she has no harmful intentions. Since she was in charge of the XFJ project since its conception, we were hoping you could restart it if you deemed it worthwhile. The Shogun wishes you to take charge of it to restore the relations of the UN and the Empire." So Takamura is an ally, huh? However, he is hiding something. Yoroi never reveals so much intel without his speech devolving into some jokes along the way. This is way too suspicious.

"Are you sure this is a good idea? To have a noble bow her head to the UN like that?" I cross a leg over my lap, resting my chin onto my palm. I slowly lower my eyelids, he doesn't even react. Instead, he smiles at me.

"Why, yes, of course. She might have been captivated by your beauty, though. I, too, sometimes wish I could work under such a pretty face." Damn you, Yoroi. I press forward and now you start joking. Sigh…

"Chief Yoroi, if you do not take me seriously this conversation will be over. Why is the Shogunate sending a member of the Fudai here?" I play with my bangs as I stare at him, you're pissing me off. Stop with the lies and the false praise already. Damn dog of the Shogunate.

"No need to raise your voice. I told you that these were her own efforts, Takamura-dono insisted on continuing the development of the railgun and the only possible ally that could help was the UN, and there's no better place than this base to assign the project to."

"So this is all just a coincidence?"

"A favorable coincidence, yes. Regardless of the strings that were pulled and the deals behind our backs, both you and Her Highness need allies to brave the storms that will come. Which is the reason she desires your help in this rekindling of the XFJ Project. I'm sure you know that her influence is dwindling every day in the MDF, and the Diet is taking more and more liberties with every law they pass to shoulder the burdens of the war, even if that comes with its fair share of drawbacks." More things that are not my problem, does he think I care about all this? I can't allow myself to be so deeply involved in these ploys, or else Alt. IV might suffer the consequences.

"And yet she sends someone who was at Yukon, immediately after the favor I asked you, and is putting more pressure on me to take even more projects under my wing? Why can't she send this project to the Imperial Research Department?"

"You know that Japan does not have the funds necessary to restart the project by itself. The Shogun knows that all the politicians and members of the Guard would rather lock the project down than hand it over to anyone again, but she knows that we as a nation need to start contributing to the UN. America is close to finishing the F-35, Europe has developed many quality crafts and weaponry under Prominence and is holding the BETA alongside the African Union, even COSEAN is developing a new type of ammunition despite all their setbacks. The Empire needs to appeal to the world or it will be secluded." I know that, that's why I'm trying to develop the Yellow Dust to gain me more support. All the data Shirogane has given me has produced quite the useful tools to that end, too.

"And what do I get in return?"

"The monopoly on the project. You can use it in any mission or side project you wish, so long as the Empire gets part of the royalties of it when the final products eventually get licensed by the UN. Also, the Empire would be more than willing to be the producer of the new tech you made, so that you don't have to wait until America passes the project through their Senate."

"You're telling me the Shogun will give me control of the railgun and the Shiranui Second? Isn't that really nice of her! But why would she go so far?"

"Well, you're the one and only Professor Kouzuki. Who wouldn't want to be on your good side? Hahaha." Sigh… I swear to God…
"Ahem… I did mention that Her Highness needs an ally in these dire times. We need to renovate our military forces before the BETA attack again with their full force like in 1998. We won't be able to resist another invasion when more than half of our MDF units use Gekishins or Kagerous. The Shiranuis are still not as widespread as we want them to due to the continued casualties our men at the frontlines suffer, and only the best squadrons have them. If the BETA were to attack from Cheorwon and Sadogashima at the same time, we won't be able to hold the line if they break into the mainland."

"But didn't you say a new budget was already approved? With that they could get almost all the MDF to use Shiranuis and replace all the older models in the rear." They could do it faster if they allow the Fubuki to be deployed in battle too, like Shirogane mentioned once in passing while we tested the XM3.

"This will come at the cost of the civilians' quality of life. Her Highness is not pleased with this turn of events. If you aid her she will be in your debt, I'm sure you can use her influence to gain more time for your research. She does not want to keep pushing more burdens onto the people. Her Highness knows that the power struggle won't end soon and decided to ask for your aid. You both need a strong ally, and the Empire has risked much in its support to Alt. IV since the '98. I do not need to remind you of all that had to-"

"No, I remember very vividly what had to be done. The Empire alone didn't shoulder the burden of the war during those years. I was the one calling the shots back then, don't forget."

"… My apologies, I didn't mean-"

"It's fine. So you're saying that my wishes and those of Her Highness are still in alignment?"

"As aligned as the hearts of two lovebirds in spring. Speaking of birds, I found another dodo plushie that-"

"Then, let me be frank with you." I raise my voice a bit, before he starts to go into another rambling of those damn birds. "The UN doesn't need to take the XFJ Project to have an upgrade for our TSFs, with my recent tests and the results I've obtained the Empire only needs to buy the license to mass produce the parts. And we may have another surprise ready for all of you." He won't be able to contain his curiosity, I know he'll ask.

"Oh? What could it be? Is this related to Takeru Shirogane in any way?" Finally got you to talk about him.… But it is surprising that he would mention it. Was all the rest just a lead-in to this?

"I don't know. But now that you mention it, did you find anything about him? You did say before that you found nothing, are you losing your touch Chief?" I try to taunt him into talking.

But then his expression grows tense as if he had a gun pointed at him, as if he had drank coffee mixed with milk instead of black. Yoroi never gets this serious unless he absolutely has to. After clearing this throat once, he answers in a slow, dry as ice tone.

"I did find something… unexpected." He crosses one leg over the other, joining his hands as he leans back comfortably.

"What, exactly?"

"You see, I did a through investigation. I went to all the databases and registries I could while not arising suspicion. I couldn't find a trace of his life in Japan, but what I did find was rather interesting. I believe Takeru Shirogane was involved in some… unsavory matters. I think it would be for the best that you handed him over to the Empire."

"… Chief, what is the meaning of this?" Is this a threat? Handing him over… They want Shirogane. I squinted my eyes at him, he remained as he was.

"Do not take this as a threat, consider it a warning from a friend. You should tread carefully around Takeru Shirogane, assuming that's his real name of course." What on earth is he talking about? What did he find? Or, is this all a ploy to execute the 'fake Guard'?

"Explain yourself." He nods as he slowly strokes his chin.

"Haha, please don't look so angry. You'll ruin your beauty."

"Chief, you have ten seconds to explain yourself before I call for the Valkyries."

"Please don't shoot the messenger, I am merely doing my best to protect you."

Protect me? This time he wasn't lying or playing around, his eyes didn't wander and his smile vanished. He's… being serious?

"You see, I couldn't find why, how, or when he lost his memory, there were no records of anything regarding his life. I also couldn't find any data on when or why he left the Empire. There is the chance that he was a traitor, otherwise I cannot explain why the online databases of the Ministry of Information were wiped clean. However, since we lack so much intel, there is a possibility that this Cadet is merely impersonating Takeru Shirogane. In any case, I believe it would be in your best interests to either hand over Shirogane to the authorities or send him to the Capital to resolve this matter of the missing info in the databases."

All the while he spoke with the same quiet but harsh voice, his complexion unfaltering like a wall of ice or the results of my failed equations. He's not lying, to make Yoroi look like this… What did he find?

"You make it sound as if his presence here could somehow work against me. What did you find?"

"I am merely saying it would be for the best if he were questioned about his iden-"

"As his current legal tutor, I wish to know about these matters that might trouble the life of my protegee." He squinted his eyes for a second, plucking his lips as if his code had ran into a large snowballing pile of errors.

"I suppose I could tell you, if you insist so much." Taking a second to shift in his seat, he delayed his answer as he exhaled and crossed his arms. "During my search in a certain archive, I found some papers with details of Shirogane's… works. It seems he started working for the Shogunate at some point between the terrorist attack on the old Capital and the Battle of Kyoto, during the rule of Hidekatsu Saionji-sama, as a bodyguard of sorts. He later was officially recruited into the Royal Guard, and continued to serve even after the late Shogun's death, and was assigned to a Royal Guard squadron as a permanent member after the coronation of Koubuin-sama as the next Shogun."

He took a moment to gauge my reaction, seeing that I remained unfazed he slowly continued.

"However, all leads me to believe he was already working as a soldier or as an escort since an early age, he was merely sixteen at the time. To be recruited by the Shogunate despite his age, there is no way he was a rookie in his line of work." Makes sense, the Shogunate wouldn't recruit a complete beginner when it has access to all workers in the Empire at its disposal.

This is just what I wanted to hear. But it's not what I expected to hear. What exactly did he do? Of course, Yoroi might think Shirogane is an infiltrator because he's supposed to be dead, yet he's here working for the UN. He also said he could have been a traitor since his data was wiped out like when someone is exiled from the Empire. But this world's Shirogane probably died during Lucifer, so that isn't the case. However, he did say that I should hand him over. I suppose this is the Shogun's way of dealing with Shirogane without clashing with me. While this proves I do have her support, this doesn't explain why his data is gone or who this world's Shirogane truly was, however.

What if… he was a heretic Royal Guard? If that is the case… I might need to prepare a different set of measures. I need that intel.

"What kind of works did he do?" Yoroi, to my surprise, shakes his head as an answer.

"I think I'm not allowed to say."

"You think? Can you stop being cryptic for once?"

"Well, this comes from a… hard to approach source. I fear my neck might be snapped if I talk too much." So this came from the Guards' archive… Probably one I cannot hack into. The only place where records of Shirogane still exists, where he supposedly engaged in 'unsavory' matters.

"Nothing you say here will leave these four walls. Are you implying you don't trust in me, Chief?"

"No, of course not. I am just saying knowing of this might put you in a difficult position. I believe the best course of action is to send Shirogane to the Capital so that he can solve this situation of the databases."

"As I said before, as his legal tutor I will be handling this matter personally until he returns from the CCSE, and will continue to assist him afterwards. And if it is such a delicate matter, as the leader of Alt. IV I must know of whatever this is. Chief Yoroi, as his tutor, I ask for the details. And don't worry, not a word leaves this office." I narrow my eyes and cross my hands, letting a cobra dwell in my words.

Yoroi, however, doesn't return his usual smile. He closes his eyes, pondering his move. This whole conversation has been off, I suppose he either found something truly serious in the Guard's archive or the Shogun sent him with certain orders regarding the 'dead' Royal Guard stationed here.

And I won't allow them to take Shirogane away from me.

"Hmm… I'll tell you the most basic info, but do not tell him anything of this. He may be a spy in disguise, after all. Let's see then…" Entwining his fingers, he leans closer and speaks up in an almost inaudible voice. "Takeru Shirogane was officially inducted into the Royal Guard during the mass recruitment after the Battle of Kyoto, however it seems he took part of it in a Zuikaku Type-C as a member of the Wolf Squad led by the, at the time, Colonel Daizaburou Guren. The fact that he piloted a TSF and survived the fall at age sixteen is already a great feat in and of itself. There wasn't much data about his duties or missions, but what I think you should know is that he was assigned to a squad serving directly under the Koubuin House's command."

"The Koubuin House? He served the Shogun?"

"Yes, before she was chosen as the next Shogun. He was later transferred to the Imperial Palace when Her Highness took her new role, so he served the Shogun until he left the Empire, whenever that was. I cannot tell you of his missions, I'm sure you know why." I nod as I entwine my fingers.

So he was a direct servant of the Shogun, no wonder they got suspicious of him in no time at all. Then, why is his data gone? It makes no sense. If he was a close fellow of them, what made them erase so much of his data? What are these 'unsavory' matters he was involved with?

"… I suppose you won't tell me anything else regarding his missions?"

"As far as the records go, his last known deployment was during Lucifer. He was part of the rear working under express orders of General Guren, and that's the last mission he did for the Shogunate as far as I know. If I may, what do his records say about his past?"

"… That's classified. I'll deal with that myself, Chief."

"… Is that so? Well, there was next to no data about him where I looked. I think he may have had an accident during Lucifer or he may have committed many offenses up until that point, and after the mission someone decided to send him away to the UN in hopes of him never returning, in a form of payment for his efforts in the capture of the Yokohama Hive." He stops, entwines his fingers, smiles again, and looks back at me as he squints his eyes ever so slightly. "That is, if he didn't die that day. Someone might be replacing him, trying to impair your relations with the Empire. He cannot be trusted until this has been clarified. I do not know how he approached you nor what his records say of his past, but you should send him to the Capital as soon as you can, so that we can confirm whether or not he truly is who he claims to be."

"Have you forgotten I have Yashiro with me? She already has confirmed he is no threat to me."

"Well, he might be under hypnosis or mind control. He might not even be aware of it himself, like the people the cyborg took care of during his time here."

So now you're saying Shirogane works for those bastards… Going so far, all to have me send him to the Capital… I inhale deeply, meeting his gaze as he continues.

"Even if he is indeed Takeru Shirogane, the works he did for the Shogunate… were not your usual tasks. Again, I believe sending him back to the Royal Guard would be the best for both of you. If he truly is who he says, he might even recall some memories of his past. It would be most troublesome for you if any relatives were to press charges against you for 'keeping him' from the truth, don't you agree?"

So he came here to pressure me with this. A Royal Guard who worked for the current General of the Royal Guard and the Shogun, who was involved in 'unsavory missions'… And obviously, the Empire wants to know whether this man is their Shirogane, who somehow is alive after two years, or a spy that came from abroad.

Great, this just had to come out when he went and killed two people. Worst timing, even worse situation. If word of this reaches the wrong ears… The Shogun already knows he's here. That's why she's sending Yoroi to tell me all of this intel. She's testing my loyalty again, with her support on the line. But I can't lose Shirogane, I won't let them lay a finger on him. If they take him to the Capital, they'll assume he's a spy. The fate he'll suffer then… and considering those readings… I'll have to take some hits, but I won't allow them to take him away from me.

"Shirogane is too valuable to lose, I did scout him as my personal bodyguard after all. And don't worry, I have him under control. I can assure you he is who he says he is, and even if he might have been a dangerous person in the past, Shirogane now follows my orders to the letter." A brow twitched for a second. "Considering his recent experience in Yukon, I believe forcing him to return to the Guard is not advisable. If he ever remembers anything, I will tell him the truth. However, until that day comes, I will have him continue living here while assisting him in clearing this matter of the databases."

"… Is he truly Takeru Shirogane? Or is he merely bidding his time? I was notified he had many discussions with Meiya Mitsurugi-sama. Do you know happen to know why?"

"No, they were arguing like they usually do. She does challenge him to many fights, due to how good his swordplay is. And I told you Yashiro already confirmed he is not a dangerous element."

"Even so, this error in the databases has to be addressed." He deadpans me as he closes his eyes.

"When the time comes, I will be monitoring this matter closely. Or, what is it? Are you implying you do not trust in my judgment?"

"No, of course not. If he really is Takeru Shirogane, then it would be for the better that he learns of his real identity sooner rather than later."

"You do know you could just tell me something about who he was, right? What kind of works did Shirogane do while he was in the Guard?"

"Sorry, but my lips must remain sealed. I cannot risk my standing to be compromised, I only delved into that archive because of the risks that come with a spy being so close to you. If you are sure he truly is Takeru Shirogane, then I suggest you don't take too much time before dealing with this matter, in whichever way you deem appropriate."

He won't talk. And he already insisted on sending him to the Capital, to either clear this 'error' in the data or to officially return him to the Guard. Of course, with some concern towards whether he's really Shirogane or not. He already made his part crystal clear, so let's see how you react to my answer.

"Then, I suppose I want to keep him away from the Guard and under my control at all times, just in case any painful memories resurface. Don't worry, he won't do anything against the Shogun or the Empire. I don't know who he was, but as of now he's working for me. And you know my pawns don't ever disobey me."

For a mere second, his lips plucked again.

"Then, let me give you my answer towards the proposal you mentioned before." His hands tensed up as he meets my eyes. "I won't continue the XFJ Project, I already have too many projects on my hands. The railgun is one thing, but to develop a new TSF from the ground up? That's not happening, I still need to finish my research and my many other projects. Also, I will order Takamura to be demoted to 1st Lieutenant and I will restrict her clearance level to S2. I do not trust her as much as I trust Isumi for her to be a Captain in my base. I'll keep the deal with the current tech, the Empire will have priority for the licensing but that's all. I don't need more political problems on my head."

"Professor, if I may, I think you're making a mistake. Her Highness would be more than willing to send one Type-94-1C for testing. There's also no reason to distrust Takamura-dono, her experience in Yukon seems to have changed her. She isn't like the rest of the nobility. I ask you to reconsider." That's nice, you being serious. So let's keep pushing, to get as much intel as I can from your reactions.

"There is nothing to reconsider. The UN cannot shoulder all the burdens the Empire can't deal with. Otherwise, the other nations will start to ask for the same treatment. If Her Highness wants my support then Takamura better be ready to serve me well. Even if she is a noble I expect her to obey the UN's code and to perform as if she were just another grunt. If nothing out of the ordinary happens, I might change my mind." He narrow his eyes at me.

"It sounds as if you suspected the Empire of something, Professor." He sharpens his gaze and tone as I see his breathing slightly change.

"Well… Let's just ponder the following questions. What's going to happen when I do complete the railgun? Or the parts? These will be recognized as Japanese inventions, but will belong to the UN. If you give me the XFJ Project, the Second will become a patent of the UN too. Do you think the nobles or the loyalists within the IJA will be happy about that?"

"I'm sure you could pull some strings to make them a shared property."

Oh, the nerve! I cannot stand them! Do you even know how difficult it is to draw so many diagrams? To check so many different pieces and programs? Yashiro has been sleeping six hours for weeks now. I spend hours, literal hours, just checking reports and mails to make sure no mistakes are made in any of all the projects we are tackling here. And you want half of the royalties?

"Why should I? I'll have to rebuild the railgun entirely using my funds and resources, a weapon that wouldn't exist if not for the intel I gave you. You want royalties from the parts I made with funds from the UN? What did the Empire do to help in their development, other than two weeks of low intensity testing?"

He closes his eyes and rubs his chin. I wait for a while but he doesn't respond.

"Tell me, Yoroi. What do I gain from this? You already know I can upgrade all 2nd Gen and lower TSFs on base and give them stealth capabilities, right? What do I get from this deal?" I speak bluntly to force him to talk, with how loyal he is to the Shogun he'll either snap and show me his true intentions or will give me the real prize for this favors the Shogun is asking of me.

"You seem to be unnecessarily wary of us. The Shogun does not bear ill will towards you, Professor."

"But she might towards my guardian. It feels really weird, having you insist so much on how I should send Shirogane to the Capital. You should know better than to aim your gun at my pawns. Angering me is not something you want to do, Chief." I narrow my eyes at him, smirking as poison drips away from every letter I uttered. He closes his eyes and after a deep breath he finally replies, tipping his hat.

"I see, forgive me for not expressing myself well enough. You should know I am on your side, despite my position." He says as he looks at me with a smile. I return to my poker face as I put a hand on my chin, leaning back into my seat. "I do not know how the Royal Guard will react to Shirogane, given the missions he performed while he worked there, but I believe you shouldn't worry about a lone soldier when you can obtain many other bodyguards. Surely you don't plan on getting into a fight with the Royal Guard over a single soldier?" He says, the small smile still painted in his face. When I didn't melt my poker face, his smile did. "However, do let me tell you Her Highness has some interesting projects she-"

"If this is about more projects we would have to take care of and end up receiving half of the royalties don't bother. If all the Empire is going to do is ask for favors without actually contributing anything and demand to get around half of the profits you can consider this talk over. Should I call Pyatkh now?" He returns a glare and takes a folder out of his coat.

"I do not know why you're on your guard, however, Her Highness does see you as her ally. Perhaps this matter with Shirogane has put you in a bad mood? It isn't like you to be sour at these things, hahaha." I couldn't help but to frown, he raised both of his hand in apology. "However, let me tell you that if you're interested in this, Her Highness is ready to sign this transfer at a moment's notice." He then hands me the folder.

Let's see… Authorization for testing of export models? I won't even bother to read this. She just wants to use the UN to test some new tech to profit with it. Nobles, they never change. I press the button of the comms.

"2nd Lt. Pyatkh, please come escort Chief Yoroi back to the entrance."

"Professor, you're not interested in the Takemikazuchi?"

"Why would I… What did you just say?" I heard it clearly. He said Takemikazuchi.

"Then, next time I visit I shall bring you some Takesushi instead, I think that will surely please you. Hmm… I hope I can get some octopus ones or a golden roll, otherwise you'll get mad at me ahaha!" He takes the folder and gets up with a smile, and starts walking towards the door.

"Hold it! What is this about the Type-00?"

"Oh? Did you not read the papers? The Shogun is willing to give this base around ten Type-00C for your personal use, under the excuse that they're being used for an export trial. I believe that Squad A-01 would greatly benefit from this upgrade in performance. But if you're not interested in-"

"Sit down, it seems we still have a lot to talk about. But first, are the Royal Guards on board with this decision?" He raises his hands in a comical fashion.

"Hahaha, of course not. The machines and their maintenance crew, as well as any needed spare parts, will come straight from the Koubuin House. You could say it's a personal offering from the Shogun, to show how much she wants you on her side." If this is true… Ten Type-00C, all for me?

"Then, I suppose nobody will try to harm Shirogane or to forcefully take credit for my developments?"

"… I cannot guarantee that Takeru Shirogane will be left alone for much longer, it's a matter of time until Her Highness decides to act on his circumstances. However, all of your inventions will be yours and nobody will lay a hand on them. You know that these are turbulent times, I'm sure that as a fellow Japanese you do not wish to return to those days of 1999." Ugh, please no. Anything but that, we don't need more political problems.

"Fine, I'll hear you out earnestly from now on. But I expect this deal to go as you're saying. If Takamura does anything to harm my research or personnel, the deal is canceled. Same goes for the unit stationed here." Let's see how you react to this.

"But… The reports about him from the Guards here were mostly positive. He was reported as a gifted individual with a good conduct. Were they just lying in case the data got leaked? Are they aware of who he is?" I can't read him. Is he going along to hide his real intentions? Or, is he truly surprised?

"That's what I want to know. Can I really trust you when the Guards here are prying for his info and watching over his movements all day long? Let me remind you that I called him here, Shirogane is here to protect me. If the Shogun wants him gone, should I take that as an offense against my person?" I don't know if it's wise to treat him like this, but I need to somehow make them reluctant to harm him. I can't lose Shirogane, as risky as this is for both of us. There will be little I could do if Her Purpleness truly asks for his head.

"Do you truly want to keep him by your side?"

"Obviously. He is my bodyguard, regardless of what he did in the past he's useful to me now. Shirogane won't be making a move without me knowing of it." He shakes his head as he adjust his position on the chair.

"I don't think that's a wise decision. But I am no one to comment on your judgment. It is possible that these years without his memory have changed him, after all." He doesn't sound convinced of it.

"If anyone from the Empire harms him, I'll cancel the deal for the parts and I'll stop working on the railgun. I might reconsider taking the XFJ project if you can confirm to me that he isn't being targeted by the Royal Guard." Even if this is a trap, they already have their sights on us.

Probably this is the Empire's last ditch effort, they either get the support of the UN for this or they go maverick. Might as well try to probe for intel before they come against us. I don't believe one bit this thing about the Type-00C, but if I can actually get my hands on those…

"Give and take, huh? Shirogane's safety in exchange of taking the project? I'll try, but I promise no results. It will take some time, and I'll need to be careful since I've been coming here quite frequently as of late. I also don't know if Her Highness already has plans for him, and I fear I might be overstepping my boundaries if I ask her about it. Give me some weeks, I'll get you an answer."

"Fair enough. I assume you could forward my plan for an eventual strike at Sadogashima to Her Highness, so that everything can be arranged ahead of time?"

"Oho… So you're preparing for that already?"

"Of course I am. This Christmas will be a good one for us, if you all cooperate with me."

"… Very well, I'll do my part. I assure you Her Highness will be more than pleased to speak with the right people to prepare the board you desire, if nothing odd happens."

I suppose she won't stop insisting on taking Shirogane away from here. While I can use their need to restart the XFJ Project to make sure Sadogashima goes perfectly, I doubt many will like that. Add that to their insistence to survey the possible spy, and I'm left with little choice but to clash with them until we get demolishing results. Her Purpleness won't be placated easily if she wants Shirogane out of commission, but she underestimates me if she thinks I'll bend so easily. Neither she nor the Guard can be so foolish to try to spark up a political conflict at this stage of the game.

"Alright, let's hear what this document is about."

"Sure enough, should I tell you all about that delicious Takesushi?"

"Chief Yoroi, for the last time, be serious!"

"Do not frown so, your face is one of the Empire's seven wonders. What would we do without such beauty?" Again with that smile. Dealing with you is so exasperating.

"Sigh… Just talk already."

Isolated Rains

Chapter 21: Isolated Rains

---

November 20th. 0 9:27 AM. Fourth Day of the CCSE.

(Near the Evacuation Point.)

[Captain Nanase]

---

"How are Ogun and Ito, Tachibana?"

"Stable. We could prevent an infection, thankfully. Ogun needs surgery and one of those expensive cyborg eyes, but he sustained no further injuries. Ito's hand is fine, but he won't be able to move for a while. Shirogane did harm his eye too with one of his kicks."

"Thank God. I'm more surprised you got out of there without no injuries to speak of. Which of the girls was the one who stopped him?"

"I think it was the one with glasses. I was kinda out of it so I might be wrong, but she was the one that shot me, so…"

"Captain, what are going to do now?" Yanuo looks terribly distressed, her small figure trembles despite the unbearable heat. "I.. I don't think we can win against that monster. The look in his eyes… H-He's not human."

"He is human. We drove him into a corner and he fought with all he had, that doesn't mean that what he did was right. Shirogane went too far. Zanama's arm is broken, the medics here can't determine whether she will heal or not. She might have to undergo surgery." Both of them wince as fear and hatred fill their eyes.

"What the hell is even that boy?" Tachibana says, ruffling her red hair as she grits her teeth. "This was supposed to be an easy job. Scare the kids with some shots, capture them, mission complete. We got a whole load of offers here. The Diet, the Shogunate, even the UN! This was some life changing opportunity, with how much money they put on the table. Why didn't they tell us the boy was like that?!"

I can understand you very well. It's true that accepting bribes is a crime, but we have a responsibility to our families here. I couldn't care less about the political struggles or who is the current Shogun. This chance was a one in a lifetime deal, the amount of money we will be paid if we succeed looks more like a telephone number than a payment check.

All of us frontliners know that eventually we will die, so we must leave as much as we can behind for those we abandon. Rin, I know you wouldn't forgive me if you knew of this, but I wanted to buy you a draft exemption. If I could save you from this living hell, I don't care how I'm called or if lose my 'honor'.

"Captain, I ask of you to continue the pursuit!" Ruri Tachibana, you're completely crazy.

"We barely got to you in the jungle before you collapsed, Ogun, Ito and Zanama can't join us, we lost both Nikaido and Shijima already. What exactly do you want to do with just the three of us?"

"Huh? Three? Where is the pair the Shogunate sent?" Yanuo looked around and was surprised that they weren't anywhere nearby.

"I don't know honestly. As soon as they heard of Shirogane, they asked about his whereabouts and then departed without a word."

"So they're after the bounty that's placed on his head too?"

"I don't know, Yanuo. What I know is that we should steer clear of them. Tachibana, can you tell me how you plan to keep pursuing the Cadets?"

"We can intercept the ones that ran away first, then we can move to the first evac point with a boat, and ambush the other three before those dogs of the Shogun get them. It's the least we can do for our partners!"

"I agree with Tachibana. If we let them get away, that Shirogane will be allowed to ride a TSF. Who knows what horrible things a monster like that will do with such a weapon? He killed them when they couldn't even fight back."

"You say that, but why exactly did he do that? You both have been very vague on your encounter with him. He didn't kill me when he had me completely defeated, and he looked absolutely livid then. I don't think he would have killed them without a good reason. What were you doing when he found you?"

Both of them fall silent. I think I already know what happened, Ogun must have gotten pissed off for some reason and you all went along with him. Why do you always listen to him?

"And? What did you do?"

"We defended ourselves from the girls… And we had to rough them up a bit." Tachibana is looking slightly to my left, not meeting my eyes.

"A bit? How so?"

"Captain… what will happen to us if… if we kinda were beating them up?"

"Yanuo, you traitor!"

"Tachibana, the kids will talk. Think of who they are, of who they can talk to, of who will come after us. Captain, what do you think?"

"Hmm… How bad of a beating are we talking about here?"

"… Kicking them over and over as they were collapsed?"

"Oh… Oh, that's… You're both getting kicked out of the army, at the least. That's abuse of power against defenseless adversaries, the UN does not tolerate that kind of conduct." I wish the IJA did so too.

"We… also left the Mitsurugi girl unconscious." Tachibana finally admits with a bow.

"Sigh… Well, if you didn't overdid it then one could make a case of-"

"No, we kept kicking her. We… didn't even realize she was unconscious." She… isn't lying this time.

"… This isn't a lie?" They shake their heads. "Well, I think you're… No, we all are going to be in some deep shit after this. You must have seen her face, this offense won't be overlooked."

"Then, if that's the case… Shouldn't we focus on bringing down the other three and then go off Shirogane?" She lowers her tone as a dangerous look appears in her face.

"… So, since we're already deep in this there's no point in turning or holding back. That's what you're saying?" Both of them nod. Yanuo speaks up with a serious tone.

"I really don't care about politics or the nobles, but I need that money. My boyfriend suffered a grave injury in the battle of Niigata. The Shogunate said he should be glad to have had the honor of losing his flesh for the Empire, that there was no greater proof of his loyalty. Easy for them to say that, they're not the ones stuck in a wheelchair. Those mechanized legs are too expensive, there's no way we could pay for them with our wages. But if I got this payment… The Empire has driven my family into smaller and smaller houses every year. Those little cramped rooms cannot even be called homes anymore. I don't care if I have to kill a cousin of the Shogun, my family is what's most important to me."

Yanuo's long orange hair swayed in the air. She's usually reserved, but can occasionally say very serious words when she feels strongly about something. The one reason I'm glad to be the Captain of this squad is not because of how skilled they are, but because we all agree on that feeling.

Only those with money can keep studying to have a better job and have the hope to someday own a house. Only those that can buy the draft exemption to keep living normally, go to college or get a job on the media. Of course, on the media they said that's given to 'gifted individuals' but that couldn't be further from the truth.

So… who cares if they brand us as traitors? We get nothing in return, more than a few little, empty words of praise. But a raise? Better housing conditions? More food tickets? Hell no, that's too much for us commoners to have.

Sigh… But even so…

"I do so too, Captain." Tachibana speaks up before I could muster an answer. "Me and Ogun wanted to buy a big apartment for our families, to get them out of the slums. But now we also need money to treat his eye, otherwise he might not be allowed to pilot anymore. He'll be demoted to a mere MP, and you know how much lower their wages are." Sigh… I know. I know all of us saw this as our chance to obtain what we wanted the most.

"We all need the money. So, if you two promise me to not harm the Mitsurugi girl, we'll go deal with the other three, and get the big reward for killing Shirogane if we're swift. He did us a great harm, let's return the favor." Both of them doubt for a second, and then they give me a nod.

---

Same Day. 12:14 AM.

(Somewhere in the jungle.)

[Kei]

---

And another pitfall over there. Really, how many traps are they going to put in this damn island?

At least Yoroi is taking care of the tough ones. While I keep the rear safe, Tamase helps by checking the sides for any cables Yoroi might have missed.

I almost got shot by those two gun batteries they put near the evac point, damn chopper ran away, and now they want us to go behind the batteries. We barely slept yesterday since we wanted to put as much distance as we could between us and those soldiers, so we're destroyed today. Between running in the rain, disabling all those traps and not being able to sleep much we're now in a horrible state.

Things don't look good, neither here nor there. I might stay quiet most of the time but I'm always looking at everyone. I can tell these two are in no condition to fight. Yoroi is trying to not use her left foot much as she walks, she strained herself as we ran yesterday. Tamase is already agitated, she never had much stamina to begin with. We've been slightly slowing down for the last half an hour.

And what the hell happened there? They joined forces with Shirogane? How did he find them? He's suspicious.

You can't fool me, Special-kun. The others might need an excuse like you being from overseas to suspect you, but you can't hide your game from me. I know you aren't a Cadet since the start of November.

All people have flaws and, no matter how much they train, they always have things that can be exploited. Habits, signs, patterns. By watching your opponent carefully, one can pinpoint their strengths and weaknesses. Then it's a choice on whether you can exploit that weakness or nullify their strength.

But you didn't let anything show. You keep switching your pace, you mix movements randomly, you even fake your glares. There's no way a Cadet learned to do that, it's terribly complicated to achieve something like this. Even if you were a genius, you would show something. If I had a hat, I'd be tipping it to you. As a soldier, I hold nothing but respect for you.

Sadly, as a person it is a completely different thing. He's involved in the development of foreign technology, he's faking his rank, he has a lot of knowledge only someone that was throughly trained by foreigners could have. Bad Special-kun. I'd like to see his face when his cover gets blown up. It's so obvious his a soldier sent to keep us in check, acting all friendly and never complaining.

But why did those two agree to be with him? Weren't they also suspicious of him? Doesn't matter, I need to pass this thing. I won't let a foreigner screw with me, and I won't fall to that false friendship you propose. I can deal with this myself, not like I can rely on these two right now. Tamase is now barely walking, Yoroi is on her limit. We should rest here for a while.

"Hey, I'm hungry. Let's rest." They look at me and, without answering, they throw themselves onto the ground.

"Haah… Haaa… I don't think I can keep this up." Tamase said weakly as she chewed some mushroom Yoroi got for us last night.

"There's too many traps. Pitfalls, wires, hidden stuff on the trees, guns. This is insane…" Yoroi wiped the sweat off her face as she sat on the ground.

"Agree. Too much stuff in here."

We all then fall silent as we eat. Not that I mind, but those two surely do. Neither is a leader, so they follow whoever is the strongest. So far we managed because we had a clear goal but now both look worn down. Their minds might give up before their bodies do at this rate.

I can't really do much myself. I have no idea what's ahead and I'm not good at giving speeches. I'll have to lead them with my actions.

But if we run into more soldiers… I doubt I'll be enough to protect them if they enter into shock.

"Say guys, what do you think we'll see near the new evac point? Tamase asks barely raising her voice.

"Traps. Lots of." That's why I recommended to rest now.

"Yeah… Say Miki-san, what do you think happened with Takeru?"

"I don't know, he was being restrained when we abandoned him. I hope they can get to finish the test."

"That's assuming he's helping them." Both of them glare at me. "What?" Tamase held my gaze for a second before speaking.

"Ayamine-san, why do you always treat Shirogane-san so badly?"

"He's too suspicious. Can't risk it."

"But Kei-san… He's not a bad person. You have all been horrible with him."

"What about the sims then?" I can't believe someone so young could help in the development of those things. Why was he chosen as the tester out of all the people in the base?

But even if that could be explained, there's many other little things that make no sense about him. His records are locked, he's too close to the XO, and he is almost always on a special mission, his fighting quirks are all hidden, he fights like a pro in CQC, he's terribly skilled with a gun, and he has never missed a question wrong and all his assignments are always getting good scores. He is no mere Cadet, he has experience in this field. Why is he lying? Is he an undercover agent? How can we know he isn't on those soldiers' side? What a coincidence that he joined right before the CCSE, isn't it.

"… If it's suspicious people we are talking about, how about you?" Huh? I didn't expect Yoroi of all people to talk back.

"I'm suspicious?"

"You're always quiet, and you're always doing your own thing without a care. You're not thinking of getting rid of us later, aren't you?"

"I wouldn't do that." Foreigners are one thing, but I wouldn't betray my comrades!

They're… looking at me with those eyes again. The same eyes they made when they heard my surname for the first time.

Daughter of a pair of traitors, how many times have I been called that? And many more insulting and degrading names as well. I think Special-kun has been the only one who hasn't looked at me like that when he first met me, which is very weird. At the least, he must have heard about my Father's betrayal.

"Ayamine-san, you won't just storm off on your own?" Tamase moved away from me slowly on the ground.

"I can't pass the test alone. I wouldn't harm you, you're my squadmate."

"Takeru and Chizuru-san are part of your squad too, and you always treat them badly." Yoroi said, looking away from me.

"He's too weird. And the Leader is unbearable." I'll never rely on a foreigner, or anyone who I can't get a read on. I can't screw this up, if people get suspicious of me that's it. My life depends on whether or not I get commissioned, I can't involve myself with possible traitors or idiots.

"Oh, is that how this is? You don't like them so you're willing to leave them behind? Ayamine-san, I thought you were different."

"What's that supposed to mean?" She looks away before replying.

"… That you are how the rumors said you were."

… That hurt. A lot.

It's always the same, no matter where I go. Why even bother talking? Why bother trying to be nice? In the end, that's all they can see in me. The rumors are more important than my actions for them.

…

"I see."

"Is that all you have to say?" Tamase looked at me as if waiting for me to react somehow.

"Yeah, sure."

"Kei-san, you won't even try to explain yourself?" Yoroi didn't seem to agree with Tamase. She was looking really nervous now as she gripped her canteen.

"Why should I? I don't trust Special-kun or the Leader, that's it." I need no complex reason.

If he wasn't a foreigner and I saw that I could trust in him, I would do so. Even if everybody told me he was a criminal. Because I know that people say ugly lies when they want to bring down people they don't like, I know that very well. I can tell when someone's honest or not.

"Please, Kei-san you have to talk to us. How can we work together if you don't tell us what you're thinking?" Yoroi, it's all up to you two. If you don't believe me, nothing I say will convince you.

"We can just do the same we've been doing so far, right?"

"… What are we even going to do?" Tamase's worry was obvious from a mile away. Yoroi also looked in bad shape.

"Go to the evac point. I can disable the guns, we just gotta get there." I have to lead them, even if they don't trust in me. I can't do this alone.

"… I guess. We're still quite far away from it though." Yoroi said as she looked at the map while also taking glances towards the coast.

"We have been walking quite fast since dawn. We have a bit more stamina, so what do you guys think? Yoroi-san, think we can make it tonight?" Tamase asked as she rubbed her legs.

"Hmm… Maybe. We already covered more ground than I thought we did. But… well, if we encounter the soldiers, what should we do?"

"Fight, obviously."

"Ayamine-san, how are we even supposed to?!"

"We knock 'em out. We also have knives if they don't give up." She starts shaking.

"I can see what you mean. But Kei-san, do you really think things will be so easy?"

"Doesn't matter. We gotta pass. So, you coming with me?"

Yoroi looks at Tamase, who returned a troubled look. She stayed on the ground, shaking. I don't know what I even expected, it's always like this. I will never find people that accept me for who I am, as soon as they hear the rumors and learn of my parents…

"I'm rested. I'll be going in five." I get up and start stretching.

"Kei-san, there's no need to rush. We still have two days, right?"

"Better sooner than later."

"I mean, yeah… But with all the traps that are laid out, we could use just a bit more rest? We can then decide what we-"

"We're going to the evac point, and we're clearing anything in the way. Traps or people. That's my plan. You two coming?" I cannot falter. Even if I'm doubting, I must not show weakness. They need a leader and I'm the only one who can be that for them right now, regardless of how they see me.

"And… you won't abandon us? You won't ditch us?"

"It's up to you Tamase. You believe in me or not?" She's trembling again.

"I do want to believe you. So if you say you'll lead us, I'll believe in you."

"Fine by me."

Retreating is not an option, relying on them is also out of the question. I did like this squad quite a lot, despite Sakaki's presence. Mitsurugi was always calm, and was a serious person who we could rely on. She never lies and is always straightforward with everything. I can't say I agree with her most of the time, but I don't hate people like that.

Yoroi and Tamase were always the pacifists of the group. Yoroi's quirkiness made her be the only one I could joke around with without getting Sakaki's evil stare. As a fellow free spirit, I wish I could have her selective hearing. Silencing Sakaki would be a godsend. Tamase's kindness was a relief to have, I thought… I thought she would be the one I could call friend the fastest. She was always making conversation with me, always trying to stop Sakaki from annoying me. Looking so innocent yet being such a good comrade, she reminded me of myself when I first enlisted in the IJA's Training Program.

I really wanted to fit in this squad, that's the only reason I put up with the princess. Always so righteous, she always has a retort for everything. And she has to always be right, because she's the Squad Leader. Mitsurugi would make a better leader than you, you have the position only because of your Father. She never listens, is always forcing her views on us, and can't lose an argument without picking a fight. As if she had a right to be here, she's no soldier. She's only Daddy's little girl trying to get to a position of power as soon as she can. What does she know of sacrifice? What does she know of the hollowness that follows you everywhere when you lose someone irreplaceable?

Unlike all of you, I have nowhere to go back to. Mitsurugi has a title of being a noble samurai, even if one didn't knew that the Mitsurugi are a family of samurai just by looking at her you could tell she's a noble. Tamase and Yoroi did talk sometimes about their houses so they have a lot of money, to own a house in this day and age you have to be rich. And the princess can run away to the safety of a mansion in the Capital whenever she wants. They can stop fighting whenever they want, they have people looking out for them. Someone out there is waiting for them to return safe, someone out there is thinking about them with a hole of worry in their chest.

But me? I have nothing. No home, no friends, no family. I can only fight, try to clean my name, and maybe hope I can at least afford an apartment for when I get my vacations from the army. Nobody would lend a hand to the daughter of a pair of traitors, nobody would even show some sympathy.

I'm no stranger to betrayal. How many times was I approached by some lecherous dude who just wanted to take advantage of me? How many times was I blamed for things I didn't do? Why bother talking if no one will listen? That's why I must have a perfect record. I can't put into words how thankful I am to our Instructor, she has never reported my fights with Sakaki. She only gave me lectures about it, no matter how many times we fought. That's why I can't get close to foreigners, who knows what kind of weird rumors people would start? I already have a lot of shit to deal with, I don't need more.

Even so, it makes me wonder. How did Special-kun got away? How did he find them? Why are they working with him? Or is he threatening them? 'Do what I say or I kill you' kind of thing? I see Sakaki helping him though, results are all she cares about. Even if her plan involves sacrificing people, she would stick to it no matter what anyone says. I can see her backstabbing Mitsurugi if it meant reaching her desired result. Like a politician, today's your friend but tomorrow your enemy.

"Kei-san, we're ready. Should we go?" Yoroi broke my inner monologue as she tapped my shoulder.

"Sure."

The good thing of having her around is that I can follow her without thinking, she takes care of the traps with utmost effort. If only I could find a commander like that, someone who valued my efforts as much as I value their leadership. They say I treat the Leader badly, but she's looking for it. It's not like I always fought with Sakaki, I gave her many opportunities to prove to me that she had what it takes to be the one to lead me. But she disappointed me time and again. Sigh… Is wishing for one trustworthy person such a sin?

It's not like I enjoy being quiet and only answering with jokes and witty remarks all the time, I also have worries and need advice in a lot of things. But I have no one. Not yesterday, not today, and probably not tomorrow. Who could want to get close to someone like me?

To make matters worse, I'll have to keep dealing with Shirogane if he passes the test. And if he got dirt on Sakaki, I expect her to start covering him. If he takes her to the result she wants… She just might fall for him. She only cares about awards, numbers and reports. She lives for the opinion others have of her. She is thirsty for recognition and high ranks. And the money that comes with those, probably. I mean, she is the daughter of the Prime Minister that's leeching all the power from the Shogun.

I hate her. She gets praised for everything she does, everyone is nice and respectful to her. Yet I work twice as hard, my plans are better than hers, I get better results in our trainings and all I get is side glances. I'm the only one that can keep up with Shirogane, I'm the only one that gives him trouble, and yet Sakaki is the one that gets praise and words of encouragement in the hallways and the PX. Only Kyouzuka-san can see all the effort I put everyday. And Shirogane, since he still gives me advice from time to time.

Sigh… Why did he have to be an American trainee? I was hoping we could be friends. Just remembering our first sparring sessions is enough to send shivers down my spine.

So talented, so calm, and yet so humble. To be praised by someone so skilled, I think my heart skipped a few beats the first time he complimented me, I could tell he was being honest by his body language. He wasn't trying to woo me and he wasn't lying either. He does… look really handsome when he's all sweaty. Sigh… All the people I put my sights on end up being liars or judging me by my parent's actions.

If he just was Americanized… I guess I could overlook it if he were willing to fight for the Empire alongside us, he is Japanese. And I deal with Sakaki on a daily basis, who's much more annoying than him. But he's too suspicious.

Shirogane is someone I cannot get close to. As much as I don't care about other's opinions, I have to lower my head and take their insults. Otherwise, I'll end up either on the street or serving as a common laborer, living in the slums. I rather give my life for my land than waste my days in those dirty buildings again. And moreover, no one would bat an eye if an 'unfortunate accident' were to happen to the daughter of a traitor. If rumors spread about me being friendly with him… people might assume I'm an American sympathizer.

Sakaki, if you're helping him… I'll never forgive you. You two better not lay a hand on Mitsurugi, she may not say it but she is a relative of the Shogun, not matter how distant. I'll kill you two myself, or I'll report it as soon as I can to the Guards stationed at the base.

The Royal Guard… Dad, if you adored them so much, why did you betray them? Why did you went along the plans of the Americans? Mom, if you always told me how important the Shogun was for us, how it was the only person with power who would spare a thought for the common people, why did you help the terrorists? Why did you treat their wounds?

Were they lying to me? Was all just an act so that I wouldn't talk? Why? Why did you abandon me? You two knew what you were doing, did you not care about my future? Why…

"Ayamine-san! Quiet! There's a cable in front of you!"

Oh… I always zone out when I think about my parents. I should know better by now.

Everyone I ever liked ends up abandoning me. Even you Naoya, I thought I could trust you. Yet when I was blamed at the IJA Training Program you negated knowing me. You knew I would never break gear or do anything against our army. And yet… It's thanks to that accident that I got kicked out of the IJA and had to go back to the slums. Because of that I had no choice but to join the UN to someday be able to fight for my country. And yet, you dare to send letters to me?! You damn liar, you also were nothing more than a power hungry son of a…

No, focus Kei. You have to pass this test, to be able to someday have my own house. To clean my name and be able to uphold the values I was raised with, even if the ones who raised me were just lying.

I cut the cable and rejoin the other two. I trust in you two, I know I can space out and you would still look after me. I… I'm… not very good at expressing myself without getting really nervous. That's why I'll protect them, I'll make sure we pass this thing. Even if it's only us three taking the piloting test, I'll… try to become someone you can trust. I'll be that someone that was never there for me. I'll be that soldier who protects Japanese lives, instead of obeying comfy orders to suck up to High Command.

---

(Near the wooden bridge. 19:17 PM.)

[Miki]

---

"Hauu… What are we gonna do?" We reached a bridge to cross to the other island where the evac point is, but it's completely tattered. There is another bridge made out of steel on the other side, but we would have to cross the jungle again.

"We should repair the thing and cross." Ayamine-san was pretty adamant in her idea, to have her and Yoroi use the rope we had to fix the bridge. However, that would leave me here alone, and after both of them made it to the other way she can knock Yoroi-san unconscious and leave us here.

No, I shouldn't think like that. I… I'm no one to bear a grudge against her, I also didn't do anything to help Shirogane-san. I abandoned him as well. So much for helping your fellows, Miki. Papa would be disappointed in me.

"Hmm… I do think you're right Kei-san, but we should wait until tomorrow. There's barely any light right now."

"We could get ambushed by the soldiers in the night. We gotta get outta here yesterday."

"I do agree in that. But Ayamine-san, what if you have an accident?"

"Don't worry. I'll be fine." She says that but… Look at the state the bridge is in. Some of those logs might be rotten.

Sigh… I have no idea what is the better choice. We do need to make haste, but if we hurry too much the others won't be able to finish in time. Hauu… What should we do?

"Even if we crossed right now, you won't be able to rig the batteries. It's too dark to risk it." Yoroi-san brought a counter.

"It's better to be there than here, in case the soldiers come at us. And no way we're going back to the jungle."

"I agree with Ayamine-san on the last part. I don't think I could walk much more with all the traps that are around here." I did get a bit more fit, but my feet are killing me. We are also short on water, we only have a few sips enough for one day more. Hauu…

Ayamine-san and Yoroi-san went to check the wooden bridge, seeing if we could use the rope and the tools they had brought to fix it. If only I could help with something…

Rustle Rustle

Hmm? What was that? I think I heard something… Nothing looks out of the ordinary. Was I just imagining it? Hmm? What the…

On the corner of my eye, some sixty meters into the forest, I saw something weird. A tree… was twitching. And moving towards us. And it has a gun. That's… no tree.

Wait a moment… EH?! T-They're here!

"Ayamine-san! Yoroi-san! T-The soldiers are here! Take cover!"

I hide behind a rock as I hear the sound of bullets boom through the night. Ayamine-san and Yoroi-san ducked and got behind another rock to my right. W-What are we gonna do?!

"You three! You have been found, come out with your arms raised or we will have to pacify you." A man's voice addressed us.

Ayamine-san makes a gesture with her hands. To… get near and attack them?! Are you crazy?! Why are you nodding?!

"I won't repeat myself. Come out on you own or we will shoot at you."

Ayamine-san looks at me again, first me, then her and finally Yoroi. Awawa, this is… No, I gotta trust in her. I'm no one to go doubting people when I'm the weakest link here.

I slowly come out of the rock I was hiding behind, the man had a rifle but I can't see if there are… No, there were other two soldiers hiding near the trees. They… don't have guns, going by their positions?

"Tamase, can you see them?" Ayamine-san had come out behind me and whispered to me.

"Two, behind the trees. They don't seem to have guns."

"Stop whispering! Come right here, no sudden movements or we'll shoot." We'll shoot. Yet he's the only one near with a gun, if they had guns they wouldn't be hiding.

On Ayamine-san's cue, we start getting closer. The man has his eyes locked onto us, the other two on the woods are not moving. Are they snipers? I don't think they have guns going by their silhouettes, but I might be wrong.

Then as we got to the place he told us to be, he got a bit closer. The other two were coming towards us. What are we-

In the blink of an eye, Ayamine-san moved forward and hit the man with a sudden kick. Doing a short hop back, the soldier dodged it but then she got closer in a flash and took the rifle from him, tossing it towards me, as she started to wrestle with the man.

"Quiet! Stop moving or I'll s-shoot!"

The man didn't stop, he didn't seem to care. He punched Ayamine-san in the stomach quite strongly, making her fall to her knees. I fire once to the air.

"That was your only warning, leave us o-or I'll shoot!" But then, he crouched and grabbed Ayamine-san. He was hiding behind her. With one hand pulling her hair and another bending her left arm backwards, Ayamine-san couldn't struggle.

"Go ahead, little girl. Shoot me. What is it?" He was grinning from ear to ear. Is this what a sadist looks like?

"Miki-san… You can do it, you can shoot at him without harming Kei-san." Yoroi-san was standing near me while she was looking at the other two soldiers.

Shoot? At another person? Kill… No, that's… That's not why I joined the army… I don't want… to be like them…

"Augh!" I lost my focus and before I could realize it the man had kicked the gun out of my hands. As I stumble backwards to not fall he punches me in the face.

"Heh, seems like he was the only one with guts in this squad!" What is he saying?

"Captain, we got this one too!" Ayamine-san was being pinned by two women, is this… the end for us?

"You three. Leave them alone." Yoroi-san's voice was… weird. Cold and angry, unlike anything I've heard of her. She had picked up the gun and was aiming it at the women.

"C'mon, you too? Stop resisting or-" The man's words were drowned by the sound of the rifle.

RATATATATATA!

She opened fire?! Both soldiers had to roll onto the ground to not be hit by the bullets. The man tried to assault her, but she tossed the rifle above him. It landed near me.

"Miki-san, shoot him!" She was grabbing the man as hard as she could, but obviously… she was no match for the him.

"I… I…" But… shooting at people… I'm not like… But if I don't…

I grab the rifle and, while remaining on the ground, aim it at his legs and shoot once to each. He screams in pain as he buckled down.

"Captain! You bitch, you won't get away in one piece!" One of the women screamed at me. Ayamine-san was having quite some trouble with both of them.

"Miki-san, shoot at them. We gotta cross the bridge now!" Yoroi-san's nose was bleeding, she swiped her hand to clean the red line from her face.

"I… They're moving too much. If I end up hitting their vitals…" The two women were moving quite fast around Ayamine-san, trying to hit her with some sort of baton.

"This has rubber bullets, they won't get killed by them!"

"But…"

Ayamine-san lost her balance as one of the women hit her shoulder from behind. The other used that opening to strike her face with the baton, sending her to the ground. I… I gotta…

I aim at them and open fire. The red haired one dove into the ground, but I hit the other one and she fell to the ground. I heard another noise close by, looking to my left I saw Yoroi-san hit the man in the head with a rock when he tried to get up. I didn't knew she could be so… aggressive.

"I'll go get Kei-san, you cover my back."

"… Y-Yes." Who are you and what did you do to our Yoroi-san?!

We get near them as I aim the gun at the soldier. The red head was leering at us so hard that returning her gaze was like having to swallow a bunch of thorny leaves. Ayamine-san was slowly getting up, one of her eyes was purple and blood was dripping from her mouth. She grabs one baton from the ground as she makes her way to us, wobbling as she gasps for air.

"Kei-san, lean on me. Let's get outta here."

"You bitches… Don't think we'll let you go like-"

"Quiet! If you don't leave I'll shoot you!" I know I can't do it. My knees are shaking, and I can barely hold her gaze.

"Miki-san, let's move towards the bridge again. I'll fix it while you cover us with the gun."

"Okay, let's- Augh!" My hand! That hurt!

The other soldier threw her baton at me, I thought she was collapsed. Yoroi-san! The red head had leaped as soon as I screamed, knocking Ayamine-san to the ground again. She was now choking Yoroi-san on the ground.

"You all… What do you know?! We gotta get this done, I don't care about the regulations or the honor. You're all going to come quietly with us!"

I tried to get up but found myself kissing the ground. The orange haired one kicked me as I was trying to get up, and started pulling my hair as I struggled to get up.

"It hurts! Stop!" She's scalping my hair! It hurts! I'm sorry, I'm sorry! Please stop!

"It hurts? Ooh, poor little girl. Those two bullets I got on the shoulder hurt much more! And he is in even more pain than you on that wheelchair!" What is she talking about? She punches me in the face, and then throws me to the ground again.

"Hauu… Please… Sto- Augh!" My face burns with pain as she kicked me straight on the nose when I tried to get up. I can't see anything, there's a weird taste in my mouth.

"We gotta pacify you, you know? I don't know if you'll try to do something like that Shirogane did." Shirogane? Did he run into them?

Augh! She starts kicking me, really hard. Stop, please… Augh! Ough! Anyone… Help…

"Leave her alone." I couldn't see very well from the ground, but Ayamine-san assaulted the woman. She stopped kicking me as she moved away.

"What's this? They won't give up?!"

"Tamase, get up. We gotta fight."

"I can't…" I slowly raise from the ground. Yoroi-san was coughing some meters away, looks like Ayamine-san helped her too. The women were ready to pounce at us.

Ayamine-san sent a glare at me, pointing with her chin to something that was between us and the women, the rifle. Whoever got that was going to have the advantage. But… can I shoot it?

"Haah… Haah…" I can't even stand upright, my knees feel like jelly.

"You two think you can step up against real soldiers? You lot are a bunch of problem kids!" The red head was really mad, her words filled to the brim with venom.

"We can't mess this up, I don't care who you are. Surrender now or face the consequences!" The orange haired one's face twisted, it looked like one of those animals called lions when they open their mouths.

"Tamase, on three." Huh?! You can't be… We can't win… We're gonna…

And after three seconds, Ayamine-san moved forward. The soldiers did so too. The red head threw herself onto Ayamine, trying to block her from messing with the other one. I'm not gonna make it, she's faster than me! If only I could…

And as the woman reached the rifle, I saw a stone big enough on the ground. Doubting for a second, I grabbed it and threw it towards the… Oh, that must have hurt a lot. As she raised after picking up the rifle, the stone impacted in the middle of her face. Blood splashed out of her nose as she collapsed.

Did I… just knock her out? I harmed… I… W-What did I just do?! I acted on impulse as the fear of them getting the rifle took hold of me! Awawawa…

"Tamase!" Ayamine-san screamed at me. She was having some trouble restraining the woman, who kept going for her left side. Right, with her eye like that she can't fight as well as she normally could.

I rush to the rifle, and see that the woman I hit with the rock was wailing on the ground. There was… a lot of blood coming out from her nose. She held it with both hands as she sobbed and quivered. I did this… This is my fault…

I slowly grab the rifle and put some distance between me and the woman with heavy steps, feeling as if I was trudging through mud, and take aim at the other soldier, that was parrying Ayamine-san's attacks with a knife.

"Stop that! I… I will…" I can't even finish my sentence. The soldier freezes for a second as she hears me, then her face contorts, her brows arch up, it's as if she had become a monster when she sees her comrade.

"Yanuo! What happe- Ugh!" Ayamine-san used her distraction to hit her head with the baton, she quickly grabbed her and threw her into the ground hard enough to make an uncomfortable noise.

"Tamase, give me the gun. Go bring Yoroi."

"Eh? Oh… Yes, here." I get close to her and give her the rifle.

Yoroi-san was hunched just some meters away from us. She was holding her neck in pain with rivers of tears in her face.

"Yoroi-san, can you stand?"

"… Yeah, I'm fine." I lend her my hand and shoulder as she slowly gets up.

"Alright. You two, no more struggling. Move and I'll shoot you down." Ayamine-san threatened the soldiers with not an inch of doubt in her voice, walking backwards towards us while aiming the barrel at the women.

"Oho, really now?" Huh? Awawawa! I suddenly was lifted from the ground, a strong arm wrapped itself around my neck.

The man… was holding both me and Yoroi-san from behind. How did he get so close? I can't… breathe…

"Let them go!" Ayamine-san sounded enraged.

"Or what? Are you going to harm your fellow Japanese soldiers? But of course, what can I expect from the daughter of a traitor? Isn't that right, Cadet Ayamine?" They know of us? Uugh…

"Let them go now."

"You're free to shoot at me if you want. But I'd like you to stop this futile resistance. I don't wish to harm any of you further, I don't enjoy hurting my fellows like your pig of a father did." His grip on my neck gets softer, I try to let out a scream but I can't even… As his grips slightly loosens, I gasp for air. No more… please…

Looking at her, Ayamine-san was standing still. Which made the slight trembling of her hands all the more obvious.

"Look at you now, cowgirl." The other soldier was circling behind Ayamine-san. "Drop the rifle, do as the Captain says or you'll be in a world of pain. We gotta pay you for what you did to Yanuo." She didn't listen and remained in position, aiming at the man. Stop fighting, we already lost.

But then, in my blurry vision I could see it clearly. Ayamine-san was smiling, not a smile of joy but it's as if she were… resigned? She quickly took aim and-

POW! BANG!

Suddenly, the man released me. I could hear a scream, I don't know who or why. I gasp for air as I squirmed in the ground, trying to get up.

"Miki-san… Are you alright?"

"Yoroi-san… What…"

"We gotta move, c'mon!" She took my hand and moved me away. As I looked back, I saw a big figure with eyes full of fury coming at us. The man was limping, I guess Ayamine-san shot at his feet? He couldn't walk fast, tripped with a rock as he tried to make haste and fell.

"Where is Ayamine-san?"

"She's fighting with that other woman over there." Yoroi-san's breath was irregular like a kitty that got chased by a horde of dogs, she massaged her neck slowly.

I take a deep breath leaving my mouth open, and as I recover my calmness I look around trying to find her. She was still trying to fend off the soldiers, but she was being overwhelmed. Her swings were getting more slow, it seems she dropped the rifle at some point. What happened?

"Yoroi-san, what should we do?"

"We have to deal with that man, I don't like this any more than you do but we have no choice. If… If they're willing to harm us, then…" She takes out her knife with shaking hands. She closed her eyes shut, biting her lips.

"Yoroi-san… You don't mean…"

"I thought we could… You know, calm them down if we showed them how we fight. This is a test, so I thought that if we proved them that we have good teamwork… But they don't want to let us go, so we gotta… we gotta…" Of course, I'm not the only one conflicted right now. This is as hard for them too.

"Yoroi-san, let's… let's knock them down. One of us can distract them while the other hits their head with a rock or something."

"Yeah… Anyways, take out your knife. First, we have to deal with that man."

We both take our knives out and try to go towards Ayamine-san. The man had stood up and was coming towards us with his baton ready to attack us.

"You two… Surrender now or I'll have to hurt you." He was still keeping his cool, despite the pain he must be feeling. I'm sorry, for what we did and for what we'll do.

Yoroi-san moves quickly and tried to attack him from his left, I follow closely and try to attack his right. He dodged both attacks, and hit Yoroi-san with his baton. I tried to slash at him as he hit her, but he quickly sent his baton towards me. I almost got hit on the head, I stumble backwards to dodge his attack.

He directs his attention towards me and sends strike after strike. I can't even get close, with his size and weapon there's no way I'll be able to counter him!

"And what can you do when you can't hit your opponent?" Then, as if by chance, I remembered one conversation I had with Shirogane-san when I asked him for advice.

"If you can't hit your enemy, then you just gotta wait until they attack you and hit their hands or something. They have to get close to attack you after all. So try to knock off their weapons from their hands if you can't retaliate normally. If you can only get one hit in, you have to win with that strike!"

He told me this during our second match. I always had problems at CQC so I was always trying to improve. But Sakaki-san, Mitsurugi-san and Ayamine-san were always so far ahead, I could barely keep up with them. But… if I can knock their weapons off… I did improve my fights against Sakaki-san thanks to his advice…

The man swings are getting slower as he frowns when he comes after me. His feet must be wringing in pain, I can… I can use that to make him stop fighting!

Then, Yoroi-san moved from behind him and made him stumble forward as she slashed at him from behind, seeing him lose focus I put force into my feet, raising my knife at his hand as I moved. I feel the contact with his flesh as I stumble forward.

"A-Aaaahh!" The man falls backwards, holding his hand as blood poured from within his glove.

I move quickly and kick his feet, another scream leaves his mouth and he falls to the ground. Yoroi-san was just about to pounce on the man, but her eyes became wide as a cat's after smelling fish. Is she alright?

"Yoroi-san? Are you hurt?"

"No… I mean, Miki-san what was that?! Are… Are you possessed by Meiya-san's spirit or something?"

"Huh?"

"I mean… You knocked the guy's hand so gracefully… You just moved so swiftly…"

"Oh… I just… Oh, his hand! I…"

"Miki-san, let's leave that be. Go grab the rifle, I'll watch over him." She grabs the baton that the man dropped and…

THWACK!

Oh, she hit him on the head with all her might. Yoroi-san, you're scaring me.

"Okay, I'll go get the rifle!" Focus Miki! You have to help, I can do it! I won't be dead weight, and we can leave without harming them any more.

I look around and spot the rifle to my right, I run to it and after picking it up I look towards Ayamine-san, who was now barely dodging the soldier's attacks.

"What's up?! Is this all you have? Huh?!" The soldier barked, she looked completely insane.

"Don't move! We… We defeated your Captain! Desist or… or I'll shoot!" I felt my breath become irregular, my hands are shaking again.

"You… Captain?! What the…" In that instant where she looked at the man and froze, Ayamine hit her jaw with the baton and the soldier fell backwards.

Ayamine-san looked completely spent. She had bruises on her hands, most of them was purple. Her eyes looked dazed and she was wobbling as she slowly walked towards me.

"Good job… Tamase… Haah… Haaa…"

"Don't worry, Ayamine-san. We're safe, everything is over now. Let's move towards the bridge."

The red headed soldier seemed to have given up on us as she looked at me pointing the rifle at her, she then moved towards the one I hit on the face.

Yoroi-san comes up to us to help Ayamine-san walk as we retreat to the rocks where we hid when they appeared, the sky was now pitch black. But even so, we have to cross the bridge.

"Well, I'll go and fix the thing with the rope. You two wait here." Yoroi-san grabbed the rope and started to nimbly fix the bridge.

"Um… Ayamine-san?"

"Stay… on guard." Her voice was faint, she must be in a lot of pain.

"Um… I'm sorry, for what I said earlier. I shouldn't… have talked to you like that. I should have known how hard it's for you to deal with the rumors. Forgive me."

"… Fine."

"Huh?"

"You saved… me today, so you're forgiven." She was looking downwards so I don't know what kind of face she was making, but I could feel some emotion in her voice, which is rare for her.

Hauu… I'm so lucky to have squadmates like you all. If it were for me, we would have been captured. In the end… Maybe they were right… I don't have what it takes… to perform my duties.

After some minutes, Yoroi-san comes back to us.

"Okay, Kei-san you grab me tightly. We'll cross first. Miki-san, you stay on your guard with the rifle, and as we finish crossing you come too."

"Okay!" Ayamine-san pets my head before crossing.

"Don't… worry… You'll cross just fine." Hauu… Despite all the mean things I said to her, she still worries about me. If you can be so kind, why do you antagonize Sakaki-san so much? Why can't you trust Shirogane-san?

They slowly begin to cross, minding their steps on the wood. I take my spot near a rock, but none of them seem to want to get close to us. The man had made his way near the two women and they seemed to be talking, I can't see them well in this darkness at this distance but I don't think they'll come after us.

What felt like an eternity eventually passed and Yoroi-san gave me the okay to cross. I take a deep breath, I just don't have to look down.

Taking a first step, the whole bridge begins to sway from side to side. Awawawa, this is so wobbly! If I fall from here I'll be shark's food. No, don't say that. Slowly, don't panic… One step at a time.

Sigh… I made it. Oh God, I feel my heart pounding in my neck.

"Well, what do we do now?" I said, taking some distance from the bridge.

"Hmm…" Yoroi-san looked worriedly at logs, then at the other side of the cliff. "Should we take the bridge down? The soldier are still over there."

"If we leave it like this, they may come after us. But then the rest will have to take a detour to the other one." I don't want to take the bridge down, but…

"Let's rest… for tonight. Once I'm feeling better, I'll go take care of the gun batteries. You two… take turns keeping watch with the rifle." Ayamine-san proposed her idea as she threw herself on the grass.

"Hmm… If we do that, then the others will still have a way to cross. Otherwise we would have to take down the bridge." And I don't want to do that.

"Sigh… Well, Miki-san do you want to take the first shift? Or should I?"

"No, let me do it. I… don't think I could go to sleep now."

"Okay, I'll take you up on that offer. But damn… We don't have much fruits left." She takes a yellow one and starts munching on it.

I also lay on the ground and aim my rifle to the other side of the bridge, I can't believe what just happened. It all happened so quickly, I was so scared through all of it. I can't believe… I hurt them so badly. I ended up burdening my comrades again too. If only I was better…

---

At the following dawn.

---

"Uuugh…"

"Good morning, Miki-san. How are you feeling?"

"Yoroi-san? Yaaaawn… I'm fine. How's Ayamine-san?"

"She already went to destroy the batteries. I want to sleep for a while, can you keep watch?" She rubbed her eyes as she left her position near a rock.

"Sure, don't worry." I drink the last drips of my water and eat some leaves I had left. I get up and look to the other side, the soldiers were nowhere to be found. Well, they could be hiding behind some rocks or something. I can't let my guard down, I gotta do my part here!

…

Yet, there's nothing going on. It's so… quiet, almost as if yesterday's battle was nothing but a nightmare we had under the sky. A nice wind blows, refreshing me as I was starting to sweat under the sun. I wonder… How are those three? Will they be alright?

…

"Tamase." Ayamine-san calls out to me as I was yawning from boredom.

"Oh, good morning Ayamine-san." Her face looked like a mess. Her hands were all full of bruises, her left eye was swollen and she still looked weak.

"Batteries… Broken. Let's go."

"Yes, let me wake up Yoroi-san. Hey, Yoroi-san!"

" Snore… Mmgh… Yaaawn… Whut ish-"

"Yoroi, let's go."

"… Oh, Kei-san? Okay… Uuugh, let's go then." She slowly raises from the ground and we make our way to the evacuation point.

"Um, Ayamine-san? Thanks for… everything."

"No problem." Her tone was more like a whimper and she's still walking wobbly, she must be feeling horrible after the beating she took.

We slowly made our way up the hill, but there was no helicopter in sight. What is the meaning of this?

"Where is the helicopter?"

"I dunno… Wait, don't tell me we gotta go somewhere else now?!" Yoroi-san freaked out and started to shake as her eyes widened again, but what she said is totally possible. Knowing our Instructor, she might just say that there's actually a third evac point.

We reach the place on top of the hill, no sign of a helicopter.

"Congratulations, you three." That voice! The Instructor came over to us from the other side of the hill.

"Instructor, did we…"

"Yes, you three have reached the end of your CCSE."

"Oooh! Yes, we did it!" Yoroi-san jumped in happiness. Ayamine-san was also grinning faintly.

"Now, it's time for you to know your score."

"Huh?" Oh right, we do get a score. Just reaching the end doesn't guarantee passing the test after all.

"Well, you three dealt with your objectives quite fast. All of you did it at dawn break, so you got a perfect score on that. However…" I don't like her tone change right now. "Could you explain to me what happened when you first encountered the chasers?" Her eyes narrowed, sounding like an army of bees ready to swarm us, a hand playing with her hair slowly.

"Instructor… We… I told Tamase to shoot down the tree when she was doubting, and told them we should run." Ayamine stepped forward, ready to take the blame. "We had decided to give Mitsurugi and Sakaki a chance to escape, since Shirogane was being restrained."

"Oho… And what about you two?" She looks at us without changing her glare or tone.

"I… I didn't object. I was… too scared." I also abandoned Shirogane-san. I didn't have it in me to propose something else or to do another thing with the rifle.

"I… I prioritized my test, and also decided to run away."

"Do you all think that's enough to justify abandoning your comrades?"

"Eh? No, I don't-"

"But that matters not. There is no rule that says you can't abandon a member of the squad, for whatever reason it is." Huh? What is she saying? "That gave you plenty of time to lose your pursuers and reach the evac point in time. I did have a talk with the squad you faced yesterday, I was watching you from a vantage point here. They went too far and will be punished for their acts accordingly, but you all got passing grades. Swiftly dealt with your targets, managed to get away from your pursuers by leaving your teammates behind as bait, fought with bravery to finish off the last pursuers, broke both batteries efficiently and finished with one full day left of time. You all got a Ninety on your CCSE. The only reason I'm not giving you a hundred is because you did the stupid thing of using the anti-materiel rifle too early. You could have cut the rope and escaped on your own while keeping the weapon, and because you resorted to leaving your Leader behind. That is all."

"Eh? We got… a ninety?" Huh? Eh? Awhawhawha! She's kidding, right?

"Miki-san, you heard that too right?"

"Yeah."

"Me too." Ayamine was also shocked, she stood still with her mouth half open.

"Hm? What is it, you three?"

"We're sorta… uuhh…" I can't find the words. We scored a ninety? A nine with a zero behind it?

"Yoroi-san we… aren't dreaming, right?" She pinches her cheeks quite strongly, at least she isn't dreaming.

"Squad I don't know what got into you, but you've passed the CCSE with flying colors. Come along, we have set up a mobile command post near the shore, we have food and warm water ready for you."

We… We did it! We passed the- Oh, wait. Not yet, the others…

"Instructor, what will happen to the rest?"

"Oh? I'll contact them in a short while. They have twenty four hours to reach this place, otherwise they will fail the test." She says it in a matter of fact way as she continues walking towards the mobile post.

"I hope those three make it in time."

"Me too, Yoroi-san."

"… They're tough. Don't think they'll give up." Ayamine-san is right, those three are really stubborn. Plus, they have Shirogane-san with them.

I'm sure that by tomorrow we all will… But, what are we going to do? Will Shirogane-san resent us for abandoning him? Will we get punished for harming the soldiers? The Instructor said that they went too far, but we did so too.

Haau… Deep breaths Miki, for now just relax. I did it, I passed the CCSE. No matter what comes from now on, I have to improve. I just hope things don't get worse with the squad. And… I hope I get the chance to apologize to those soldiers, I know I hurt them very gravely.

Sigh… Let's leave that for when it happens. For now, I'm so hungry I could eat a fridge whole by myself.

Rekindling Point

Chapter 22: Rekindling Point

---

November 20th. Fourth Day of the CCSE.

(Within the Jungle. 04:52 PM.)

[Takeru]

---

"Done." I wave to the girls after cutting the wire.

Traps. Traps everywhere. The sheer amount of them is staggering, and with this rain we're having trouble spotting them all. We also have been walking really slow, to not trip with the mud and get more bruises.

As we slowly advance through the flora I take a peek backwards. We did use most of Meiya's and Chizuru's med kits to patch ourselves up, but it seems to not have been enough. Meiya is to my left, and she's been constantly slowing down. I have found her holding her sides with a pained expression a lot of times. Chizuru is to my right and her right leg seems to be troubling her, she's stopping every once in a while to rub it softly. My left shoulder and back are also hurting quite a bit.

The only good news here is that at our current pace we might end up reaching the evac point by dusk, which means that we could use the cover of the night to escape on the boat, so long as the soldiers don't have flashlights or a sniping rifle. Hopefully, we won't see any more sol-

Click

RATATATATATATATA!

We all dove to the ground as we heard the machinegun's roar. This is the third one today, I ended up triggering one by accident and the other was a well hidden trap.

"Sorry, I didn't see the cable." Meiya apologizes weakly as the bullets fly above us.

"Don't sweat it, Meiya. I did the same a while ago." As the barrage stops we slowly get up. We're now all covered in mud. Oh well, at least the rain will wash off most of it.

But… these two look to be in really bad shape, especially Meiya. We've been walking non-stop since we woke up after all. We had to walk for an hour until we found an old bridge to cross the cliff, but we ended up on the southernmost part of the island, and while continuing to march along the cliff would have been easier, if we were spotted by the soldiers they could snipe us from a distance. So we have been powering through the jungle for… around eight hours? Nine?

"Hey… Wanna take five to rest? We're already drenched, and we could all use a breather." Chizuru looked like she wanted to protest, but I signaled Meiya with my chin and she gave a nod.

"Yeah, let's take five. This… is harder than I thought it would be." She takes off her glasses and fixes her hair, breathing a sigh.

"Same. I did not expect so many traps to be here." I drink what little is left of my water.

"Umm… Thanks for taking care of most of the traps, Shirogane." Chizuru says bashfully as she munches a fruit, unable to look me in the eye.

"Don't mention it. How are you holding?"

"Fine, don't worry. Mitsurugi, how about you?"

"Don't worry. Haaa… I'm just a bit stiff, is all." Dude, why do you have to be like that? If it hurts, just say so.

"You sure you're okay Meiya?"

"Yes, thanks for worrying. But I am fine, no need to keep asking. And do not think of giving me another of those massages." She sends a firm glare my way as she takes out her canteen to drink.

"If you say so." I start eating a fruit I picked up on our march as I look up.

"Massages? What are you talking about?" Neither me nor Meiya wanted to answer Chizuru's question.

The rain should end in about an hour, I think. At least that will give us some relief, even if the mud remains. I wonder how are the other three… Hopefully they don't have to face off against the soldiers too. Tama and Mikoto would be at a severe disadvantage against them, unless they also managed to disable one of the machineguns on the jungle and got it for themselves like I did before. We still have one machinegun with most of its bullets, since one we had brought with us was already empty. If the soldiers appear we are not defenseless, but in our current state we cannot run away for long if we are faced with many of them.

"Well, let's go." Chizuru moves away from the tree and gets ready to move out.

"Alright, let's keep moving." I check my compass to confirm we're going in the right direction and we resume our march.

…

Sigh… And another trip wire here. That pitfall looks really dangerous, with all the water that must be at the bottom getting out of it would be an impossible ordeal.

"Let's tread carefully, this part seems to be full of pitfalls." Chizuru points to another spot to my left, where some sticks looked to be sinking into the ground.

"Yeah, we don't want to fall into one of those."

Hugging the trees, we move by jumping from one root to another. Rain is still coming down as hard as my history grades so this isn't exactly safe, but with how muddy the ground is we shouldn't get closer to the pitfalls.

And one last jump… I made it past all those pitfalls, Chizuru had already got through it. Meiya jumped behind me with rugged breath. Damn, this is wearing us down more than I thought.

Luckily, this next part doesn't seem to have many traps, as we advance I found only a few nets and some wires. Thank God, we can finally move a bit faster. If we can keep moving like this then… Wait a sec…

There's some wires to the side… that are all cut. Not by the wind, but with clear cuts. Someone cut this wires. And it shouldn't have been the others. Even if they were running away like mad they shouldn't have been here walking from their position, since they crossed at the northern part of the island.

"Shirogane? What is it?" Meiya seems to have noticed me being quiet and came near me.

"Meiya this wires all are cut."

"Oh, so that's what you were doing. Impressive as always, I didn't even-"

"No, I didn't do this. They were already cut."

"Huh?" Confusion apparent of her eyes she stood there looking at me, then at the wires, then back at me.

"You two, what are you doing?"

"Sakaki, I found some wires that were already cut cleanly with a knife." I move away to let her see them clearly.

"Huh? What the… I mean, the others could have-" Meiya interrupts her.

"No, Sakaki. We're marching through the jungle from the south, there's no way they would have been here. We're still around halfway to the evac point, coming from where they crossed would have meant a great detour for them." She slowly caressed her chin as she looked around.

As I did the same I could spot a number of nets hanging from some trees in the distance, someone passed through here and disabled all the traps. Me and Meiya nod at each other as we realize this, her face tensed up as she keeps looking around.

"Mitsurugi, Shirogane. If the others did not do this, there's only one other party that could have done this. Let's make haste. And silence." We both nod to her. The soldiers are close by. With some luck, we may have missed them for a few minutes and they're now marching south.

We keep marching, trying to make as little noise as possible. Since we have all those pitfalls behind us we can't really go back without putting us in danger of falling into one. There are next to no traps on our way, we change our direction but the traps are still all taken care off. I have a bad feeling about this, I began feeling the cold hands all over my back again.

As I get past a big bush, I spot another net that was disabled, and some more wires that were all cut. No matter where we go, it seems as if the traps have all been taken care of. Are we following their path by sheer coincidence? Under the rain, in such a wide area?

We change directions to our left again. We pass some trees that had their nets disabled, there were some trip wires cut and some pitfalls that were exposed. Maybe… we should turn back while we still can? Is there a path where there are still traps intact?

And as I was looking around for any traps that were not disabled… I saw them, in between some trees wearing the same gray uniform. In the distance, some thirty meters to the east of our current position. Despite the space between us I could feel something in their eyes, like a hawk glancing over prey. And as they moved from behind the trees and we made eye contact, the blizzard returned to my lungs.

"You two, run." Meiya looked surprised as she tried to speak up.

"Huh? Shirogane, what are you-"

"I said RUN! They're there and they have-"

BANG! BANG!

As I pushed them backwards the wood of the nearby tree was splintered. We run away as more gunshots chase after us. Damn it, since they disabled the traps all around here they have no problem chasing us.

"Shirogane, how many are they?" Chizuru asked as we ran.

"I saw two, dunno if there's more." I take out my rifle and shot at them, bastards hid behind the trees. If we are surrounded, that's it. Even if we are at our limits, we can't afford to fight them head on.

I shoot two more times as I saw them trying to shoot back and after that I ran again. Meiya is barely running, she won't be able to keep this up. As I thought that, a gunshot that hit a tree close to her made her trip. She hit her head against a root.

"Mitsurugi, give me your hand!" Chizuru helps her up and both start running again.

I stand my ground to return the fire towards the soldiers. However, they quickly duck behind some trees, making my attack pointless and a waste of bullets. Damn, this isn't going-

"A-Aaaaaahh!" W-What? What happened?!

As I look behind me I see Chizuru got trapped by a net. Oh those sons of an eldritch bitch! They left some traps to get us, once we got the feeling of being 'safe' in this area we started running without checking for traps. Meiya was trying to get her out, but without much success.

Gotta go help her break that net. Damn, we don't have time for-

"Quiet!" A female voice yells at us.

Both soldiers were getting closer, guns pointed at us. Reacting quickly, I was also pointing my rifle at them, so we were at an impasse. As they got closer slowly, I could see their faces clea…

Wait… What? Is that… Tsukuyomi-san? No, she isn't that young. But…

The two female soldiers in front of me looked really similar to Tsukuyomi-san and Maya-san. One with green, long hair with a high ponytail, emerald eyes, a firm, tense, and menacing glare, the other with turquoise eyes and hair, that was long and cascading to her waist, this one's eyes were as piercing as Maya-san's. But they looked to be around my age, perhaps just a year older.

"You, drop your rifle." Ponytail addresses me.

"How about no?" I maintain my posture aiming my gun at them.

"Oho, you're outnumbered yet you still wish to fight?" Turquoise says in a mocking tone. They should have taken their chance to shoot me when they could.

BANG! BANG!

Damn bitches, they're quick. They threw themselves behind some trees. If they're apart from each other I'm at a disadvantage.

"Meiya, how's the net?"

"Almost, just buy me a minute."

"Guys, it's okay. Run away, leave me here." Chizuru's voice was almost a wail.

"Sakaki, shut up and let Meiya take care of the-"

BANG! BANG!

I ducked as I saw them move from behind a tree, Meiya was hidden in a blind spot so she could keep cutting the net. I return some fire and make one of them hides again, but the other is still firing at me. I can't even move now, dammit.

I keep sending some volleys irregularly towards the one that keeps shooting at me, until I heard the sound of the net being ripped. Chizuru came out of it and with Meiya's help she got up and both were ready to run. However…

One of the females soldiers, the one with the ponytail that I could not see from where I was, had circled around to our position and was pointing her barrel at Chizuru's face.

"You, Shirogane. Drop the rifle or the girl gets hurt." You fucking bitch. "Mitsurugi, you get slowly away too. Any sudden movement and I fill her eyes with rubber." Meiya glared at the woman with fury, and biting her lips she slowly crawled away from Chizuru.

BANG!

A gunshot reminded me of the other soldier, that was now getting closer pointing her gun at me.

"Are you deaf, Shirogane? Drop the gun, now." She said with a wicked grin on her face. The other one teasingly poked Chizuru's glasses with the tip of her rifle. Dammit, dammit, dammit!

Sigh… I'm surrounded, and I can't turn around without them shooting at me and Chizuru. Meiya stared at me, begging me to drop the rifle. She's obviously in no condition to struggle against an opponent with a gun.

… I throw the rifle away, and the other woman gets closer now that she's safe. Looking at her closely, she really does remind me of Maya-san, except for the smile. Her eyes have this deep piercing feeling to them. Who are these people?

"Alright, you three." Ponytail said, "You shall follow us closely, without resisting. You, Sakaki. You'll walk with me, if any of you two do anything stupid I fill her with rubber. Mitsurugi, Shirogane, you will walk behind me and in front of the other soldier. We'll move to a clearing that's west of here. Resist and we will take you to a world of pain. Are we clear?" We all nod. Dammit, am I going to fail this?

"Look at them, being all obedient! Think we can make them walk on all fours?" The one near me talks as if she were messing with some friends.

"Hahaha, they might. But that would be a waste of time. Let's get this done already."

"Tch, Mion you're no fun." Mion?

"Shut it. Now you three, walk. No talking, no whispering, no signaling, no nothing." This Mion talks with a sense of authority and composure that reminds me of Tsukuyomi-san. Her ponytail is almost as long as Meiya's.

Shit… What can I do? Are we being taken to some sort of losers' prison, or are these girls here to harm us? I take a glance at Meiya, who was gazing sharply at the woman in front of us. Does she know her? Are these two actually related to Tsukuyomi-san?

After a few minutes of walking, we reach a clearing in the jungle. There were some big puddles of muddy water, the base of a tree that was long gone and nothing else. Unlike the rest of the jungle, we had quite some free space here to move around. But the weird thing is… That's all there is here. No other soldiers, no building or anything of the sort. What are these two planning?

"Alright, you three. On your knees by the remains of that tree. C'mon, move along." Mion pushed our back with her rifle.

We all knee by the base of the tree facing our green captors. Both of them were still, gunning at us under the rain.

"We're going to ask you some questions, and we would like you to answer them quickly and honestly. If you take too long we'll shoot someone else, maybe their shrieks of pain will motivate you to speak." Mion made her terms clear, and we all gave a nod.

"Then, first question." The other one asks, pointing a finger upwards. "Who was the one that broke the arm of a soldier?"

"Me." I answer looking at them in the eye. The yet nameless woman returns my gaze and smirks evilly, then continues to ask me questions.

"Were you the one who killed the other two soldiers?"

"Yes, that's right."

"And you also took the eye of the gray haired one?" Her grin gets wider with each question, as her eyes curve upwards as she stares at me.

"Yes."

"Hmm… What could have driven you to such actions, I wonder?"

"Because they were maiming my comrades." Her face twitches at my answer.

"What do you mean by that, Shirogane?" This time Mion addresses me.

"I broke the woman's arm because she kept resisting and trying to harm my shoulder." I move my bandaged shoulder upwards as I said it. "As for the others, they were kicking these two mercilessly on the ground, one of them was unconscious, so I snapped and retaliated with all my strength."

"Who was the unconscious one?"

"I was. They kept harming me despite being knocked out." Meiya answers before me.

"Hmm… Is that so? Then, do you believe his actions to be justified, Mitsurugi?" Mion stares into Meiya's eyes, undaunted and inexpressive as the rain continues to fall.

"While I think he used excessive force, he stopped them from harming me further. They were the ones who committed a fault first, and considering that they were kicking my head one could say Shirogane saved my life. I believe… he did the right thing." Meiya took a brief side glance at me before looking towards the ground.

All we had to go through, to end up captured by these two. Dammit…

"Then, Sakaki. Could you tell us of how you saw the incident?" Chizuru tells them what she told me, and when she reached the part of my involvement she also took my side, saying that I saved them from a clear case of abuse.

"I also think Shirogane did the right thing. I know you are upset about him harming your partners, however they were the ones in the wrong."

"Partners? Sorry, but we have nothing to do with those men." Mion answers as she frowns, her voice harsh as she quietly lashed out to Chizuru.

"Wait… If you're not with them, then-" The other woman cuts me as she answers.

"We are also part of the Wasp Squad that was assigned to be your chasers in the CCSE, but we come from somewhere else, and we have our own set of orders." Somewhere… Their look, their methods… Are they…

"Regardless, we took it upon ourselves to give you a proper test. So, here's what we'll do. You all will fight against us in CQC, if you win you can continue your test."

"Huh?! Are… Are you serious?!" Meiya voiced our surprise. They can't be serious, this has got to be a trap.

"Of course we are. In the name of the Tsukuyomi family I, Mion Tsukuyomi, swear to uphold these words." So she is a relative of Tsukuyomi-san. So they are from the Shogunate… Meaning… They're my enemies… No, don't think like that. No negativity.

"I, Shion Tsukuyomi, vow to do the same." So this one's name is… Wait a second. Mana and Maya, Mion and Shion. Do the Tsukuyomis always name their children with similar names?

"Uuhhh… Why are you two here?" Meiya seemed distressed about them revealing their identity as she hid her eyes behind her fringe. Chizuru was surprised, I'm sure she knows who they are by their surname.

"We are here as part of the CCSE, didn't we say so just a while ago Meiya-sama?" Shion retorts playfully with a wide smile at Meiya, who just sighs in clear exasperation.

"You do not seem surprised, Takeru Shirogane. Do you not know who the Tsukuyomi Family are?" Mion glares at me with a carnivorous stare.

"I do, and I don't care. Doesn't matter if the Shogunate sent you, if you're my enemy I'll take you down."

"Shirogane! Don't talk like that to-" However, Meiya's scolding was stopped as she looked at Mion.

She was slowly inching closer to me, she crouched near me and our eyes met. Unlike both Tsukuyomis I know in this world, I could feel the killing intent in her eyes devoid of light. As the rain fell on us and she continued to stare at me, a wicked grin formed on her face.

"Heh heh heh heh heh heh, aren't you something? You look almost like the real deal." What does she… Ooooh, shit. She knows this world's Takeru, doesn't she?

"What do you mean by that?" She cackles at my question.

"I wonder. Who were you again?"

"Takeru Shirogane, it's a pleasure." I smile at her, making her tense up and her eyes lose even more light. Her face twists itself, letting the inner anger show for a second.

"… I don't like liars."

We keep staring at each other. I feel the cold hands reaching my own, they're beckoning me to punch this woman. Yet again, I feel the bloodlust seep from within. I start inhaling deeply from my nose to stop those thoughts. I'm not like that, I'm not so aggressive.

"Mion, isn't that enough? Staring at him won't solve things, you know."

"I suppose. Well you three, I think you do have knives and some batons on you? We'll fight using those." Her demeanor changed as she rose, she spun around and dropped her gun to the ground with a splash.

"Mion, what… what was the meaning of your words to Shirogane?"

"Apologies, Meiya-sama. But we cannot answer, we are in the middle of a test after all. If you wish to know, please ask Sister for information. I'm sure she knows of… him." She throws a hateful glare at me. But what did she mean by sister? Is she… Tsukuyomi-san's younger sister?

"I have already asked Tsukuyomi about it but she-"

"Then that's that, right? Let's not waste more time and start this test." Shion replied playfully at Meiya again, she also dropped her gun and took out a baton.

What the hell? No, this just confirms my suspicions. Tsukuyomi-san did know of me not being this world's Takeru and was playing dumb, and if I had to guess maybe Takamura was used as a smoke screen. I was so focused on her being our next threat that I didn't think Yuuhi would send people after me during the CCSE. And if they're related to the Tsukuyomis… These two must be Royal Guards. Sensei, did you knew of this?

I stand up and take out my baton, last thing I want is to get angry again and end up harming them with the knife, I don't need more blood on my hands. It's not like I can't harm them with the baton, but at least I won't end up cutting their arms or neck with it.

Chizuru also gets up and takes out her knife. She quickly brushes her hair off her face, she stomps on the ground as she takes her stance, but I can see her hands twitching slightly. She's completely tensed up, clearly intimidated by the two soldiers in front of us. Meiya, however, stands upright with a knife pointed to her back. Her eyes look sharp, and even if her hands are also shaking a bit one could see in her face a lion about to pounce onto prey. I suppose that's the fruit of all her mental training as a samurai.

"Alright, you can come at us whenever you're ready. These shall be the rules, if one is pinned on the ground unable to move, loses its weapon or falls unconscious and doesn't get up by the count of ten, loses. Any of you who lose will fail the CCSE, even if we are later defeated by any other of you. If we lose, we will let any of you remaining to keep going and won't chase after you. Clear?" Mion looks at us for confirmation, we all acknowledge her terms with a nod.

We stand looking at one another under the rain as the wind swirls around us. Then, as a thunder lighted up the sky… We all stepped forward.

I quickly went after Mion, who was also charging at me, and taking my Mugen rhythm I started attacking her with a flurry of blows. First a mid-blow to her right side, she dodges doing a sidestep and tries to hit me in my shoulder. I block her attack and take a step forward, splashing mud and water around us, and try a downward blow at her.

She parries it and tries to kick me in my privates, I quickly move to my left and throw a punch at her from the side. I hit her cheek, sending her away and also giving me more pain on my left shoulder. Yet again, I feel the anger welling up in me. She returns a wicked grin at me and charges at me, she… She's also using the Mugen Kidou, I can barely keep up with her steps and attacks. This is… like when I trained with Maya-sensei. I recognize her patterns, she is using Mana's style. She might be more well-versed in the art of the sword, but all my battle experience and superior strength should put me on even ground with her, I hope.

As she takes a few but well placed swings at me, I keep moving backwards. Taking one long step back, feeling ground that was not too muddy on my feet, I spring forward and clash my baton with hers. I have more strength so she flinches backwards, I use this chance to press her. One swing to her left shoulder, one towards her left leg, an upwards swing towards her right hand, but it's a feint to try to hit her face. She stops my feint, and since I got too close I took a punch to my shoulder. The pain spreads again as I bite back a scream. These bitches… fucking Royal Guards…

She is now on the offensive, she seems to have changed her approach. She's being reactive despite being the one pressuring me, she gets close quickly forcing me to attack her to keep my distance, only for her to either parry me or dodge me gracefully and then land a hit on me. This bitch… she's hitting my left shoulder exclusively… Calm down, gotta focus.

She comes again from my right, running through puddles of muck and liquid, looking like a hyena. I move fast as I try to attack her, but then I take a step back as I was about to attack. She fell for it and lost her balance when her parry was met with the air. Now, grabbing the baton with both hands, with the back of my feet firmly planted on the ground and tensing my back, I hit her face as if it were the winning ball of a baseball game.

THWACK!

Blood is splashed onto the baton as she's sent towards a puddle, that also gets dirty with her blood. Payback is a bitter treat, Mion Tsukuyomi.

However, she gets up and doesn't even try to clean the blood that's coming out from her nose. And she starts cackling again.

"Heheheh and sanity.

"… You think you can take his face and name? You think you can soil his memory?! Oooh, how I'm going to enjoy killing you. The UN might have to pay a great price for this, but we can't lose their support yet. So I'll have you disappear in the mud today, faker."

"Come at me then!" Shit, she's moving even faster. Her swings are also much more stronger.

"C'mon! Whatever is the matter, Takeru?! Why are you not attacking?!" She's… She's crazy. What the hell is wrong with her?! I keep parrying her attacks but… They're getting stronger with every swing.

She makes a feint, I fell for it and with a step forward she got a clear swing to my right side and follows it with a hit to my right shoulder. I throw a kick at her, forcing her to stop her assault and try to regain the upper hand with some quick swings as I zigzag to throw her off.

"Die already! You damn pest, you'll pay for this offense!" She's keeping up with my speed, no problem. Dammit, I'm at my limits here. I can't parry all her attacks, she dodges my swing and in a fluid downwards swing- Ough, my left shoulder again! It hurts! Oh, shi-

THWACK!

Oooouuughh… She got a clear hit to my jaw. I still have my baton on my hand, but… Ugh, it's so hard to stand up.

" Wheeze… Haaah… Haaah…"

"Oooh… Poor you, you must be wanting to return home to your friends and family, do you not? It is truly such a shame, you even copied our techniques quite well, truth be told. However… We do not take kindly to those like you… So, could you please die without making a mess?"

As I looked up at her, a thunder rang through the sky. It covered her face with a deep shadow, highlighting her eyes. Those emerald, angry, and void of light eyes. Staring at me coldly, those sharpened eyes told me all I needed to know. She was not kidding, and she wanted to end this quick.

I can't lose here. I have to… I have to fix the negativity… I gotta… at the least… See the results the second theory can bring about… Just a few more days…

"It's time to die, pest. Don't worry, even if you're a monster I'll show you some mercy. I won't kill you while you're conscious, you did fight quite well. You earned a tiny speck of respect from me for that."

Pest… Monster… How dare you… It's not like I wanted… I just wished… To save as many as I…

I try to get up but she kicks me in the head. She then steps on it and grinds her foot on me, I can't even breathe now.

Uuugh… My head… hurts… It's going to be split apart… Aaaaugh! Stop… This… hurts too much. Gotta stand up…

"Hmm? What is it, faker? Did I not hit you with enough strength, perhaps? Oh, whatever. Might as well!"

Ough! She kicked me in the stomach quite hard. My lungs burn as I gasp for air. But then she steps on my back, preventing me from getting up, making my wound flare up in pain. She keeps stomping on my back with much force. Ouuuuh…

"You took his face and name, for what reason I don't know or care. We will investigate this throughly, but you… You must die. A monster like you, who impersonates others and ploys against Yuuhi-sama, should-"

The rain fades away, Mion's voice fades away. The smell of mud fades away. My sight gets blurry and my ears stop ringing. The coldness envelops me whole, and I feel no more nothing.

…

What is this? Where am I? Why do I feel no more pain?

"Hmph. Royal Guards, nobles or not, deep down you're all the same."

Who… Who said that?

"Despite your graceful act in front of the people, you're all nothing but hypocrites."

Who is speaking to me? It sounds… familiar, for some reason.

"And you still have the gall to insult me?! You call me a monster? You all made me like this!"

That energetic shout… That's… my voice. It's so weird hearing your voice from somewhere that isn't from within yourself. But I can tell… that's my voice.

What is he, or rather me, saying? What is he doing? To who am I saying these things?

I feel… a great deal of sadness. Someone took something from me, someone hurt me gravely. Who?

I can't see anything, I can no longer hear anything. But… I can feel the frozen hands pulling at me, trying to get me up. This feeling… This is… Like when I recovered my memories during the Valgern-On test, like when the power plant blew up and I clearly remembered all the deaths and even some things that happened on the world after Babylon.

Wait… Sensei did say that when I recovered my memories… Since I hadn't experienced anything as traumatic as that I went into shock.

Then, are these hands that I feel my nervous system going out of whack right now?

Is that voice… This world's Takeru's voice? But…

I feel a deep sadness. Similar to how I felt after Babylon, to the moments after Ouka. Despair, dread, hopelessness. But there's also hatred, not towards the BETA… But… Towards the Royal Guard.

Figments of words come to me. You… saw yourself as a lone wolf, alone in the Guard. No one shared your views? You… felt betrayed? What did they do to you? What did they took from you?

Did you went through something similar to what happened to me during your life here? Did you… lost all of your friends? Anger. Hatred. Fury. I think he wanted… his peace back. I can't see or hear anything, but I can feel it. This animosity I've been feeling towards the Shogunate, this wrath that took over me when I fought those soldiers and now too. This was your heaviest data flowing into me.

Because… You also wanted to live in peace, like I do? A clear image appears to me. It's the view from the hill with the tree. But this isn't my Hiiragi district, it's a more old fashioned one. With only a few big, 'western' buildings, the commercial part was filled with some green apartments I think, it looks more 'traditional' than my world's Hiiragi, that's for sure. Was this your home too? He did live until he was twelve here, if I remember correctly.

You, just like me when I triggered the transfer, wanted to save people. As many as you could. But what happened? Why do you resent the Shogunate so much?

I can't feel nothing no more. But just before returning to the island, I could hear him one last time…

"I will become the wolf that lurks in the night, watching over all of you. I will become the sword that smites evil!"

With such youthful passion, just like when I thought I could be a hero. Before Marimo-chan died twice because of me. Yeah, you were younger than me. And they made you go through so much more shit than me, all alone. Man… You're making me cry, goddammit.

Don't worry, my parallel twin brother. Your feelings… have not fallen on deaf ears. I might not hold the same love you had for this Japan, but at least… I'll try to do my part in your stead. Give me some strength, lend me some of that passion I've lost somewhere along the way.

Let's flow onto our enemies… with the might of an unending waterfall! To save as many as we can!

Light returns to my eyes and I rise from the ground. Despite the resistance I was feeling on top of me, I manage to get Mion off me. She staggers backwards as she sends a glare my way.

"Tch, I thought you had fainted for a second. You think you can deceive me? Who do think you are, huh?!"

Her hateful tone was now leaking madness. Her eyes looked at me full of wrath, brows furrowed and her upper face with visible wrinkles. She looked like a wolf just about to attack. A wolf, huh?

"I am… the wolf that lurks in the night." Slowly, the hands melt. I feel a bit better for some weird reason.

"… Huh?"

"I am the sword that smites all evil." The cold fades within me as I take a deep breath. For my Hiiragi… For your Hiiragi… To bring some peace to both worlds.

"What… did you just say?"

"I am… Takeru Shirogane. And you… You're going down!" I rush at her with unleashed vigor.

I take a swing at her right hand, she dodges me but I keep pressuring her. Keeping up the offense, taking a step back occasionally, I can't pierce her defense. Gotta knock her out before I collapse, in no way can I go for a long fight.

"M-Mion?! Are you alright?!" Shion shouted from somewhere.

"Shut up! He's… He's mine! I will take- Ough!"

Maybe you should focus on your opponent instead of looking somewhere else. I got a nice punch to her face. My right hand is dirty with her blood, ew.

I take a step back, to avoid her flailing as she tried to regain her footing, and after she seemed to have stopped I resume my attack. We rush through the puddles as the thunders roar above us, I try to make her trip or to force an opening but it's futile. She tries to counter my moves but doesn't find enough space to do so without exposing herself.

Throwing a left swing towards her torso, she blocks it and tries to hit my hands. I follow up my swing with a downwards strike at her, our batons are parried again. Ugh… Fucking Royal Guard… No, don't lose it. I throw a kick at her as our batons remained locked, making her bounce backwards. She comes at me again, I retreat circling around a puddle and try to go for her hands after hitting the ground strongly with my heels.

Mion spins on herself, dodging me as I charged at her. She hits my left shoulder again, but this time I bite down the pain and throw a punch at her. Landing another hit to her face again, she almost fell to the ground but rolled to a side as I was about to smack her head with the baton. I take a step backwards to avoid Mion's incoming rush as she gets up. She's coming at me blindly, this is my chance to knock her out!

I lower my stance and pounce at her from below, seeing the fear in her eyes as my baton clashes with hers. I'm stronger than her, so she ends up falling backwards into the mud. I get on top of her, landing with my right knee in her stomach with all of my weight.

"A-Aaaauughhh!"

Quickly grabbing her baton, I throw it into the trees. As she tried to grab me I smacked her head with my baton. Grabbing one of her hands with my right hand, I bring my baton to her chin.

"I think this is my win, don't you agree?"

"… Who are you? Why do know those words?!" She looks enraged as she howls, squirming under me. She keeps trying to grab me with her free hand, I move her body to a side to prevent her from struggling.

"I told you already, I'm Takeru Shirogane. Now, give up. Or I'll have to knock you out."

"Takeru? No… You're lying! He… Takeru is dead!"

"Do I look like a corpse to you?"

"LIES!" She almost broke free from my grasp as she struggled violently. Her free hand reaches my face in a swift motion, and before I could react she starts pulling and clawing at me.

"Ouch! Stop that- Dammit!" I hit the back of her head with the baton, forcing her to ease her grip on my face.

"Aauuhh! You… You don't… have a mask…"

"Of course I don't! Let go of me! According to your words I won the du-" She starts struggling again, but this time her hand does not harm me.

Her sudden change left me in shock for a second. Her face stared at me in wonder as her hand slowly caressed my cheek. What the hell… is she… No, don't fall for it! I knock her hand away, aiming my baton upwards.

"Surrender now or I'll have to knock you down. What are you going to do?!"

"But… You… Then… How… When…" She doesn't seem to be listening to me, she's just staring at me with wide eyes.

"Hey. Do you surrender or not?"

"No… This… This is a lie! Takeru… Takeru is gone! You're not… You can't be…" She starts struggling again, I bend the arm I had grabbed with some force and change my position on top of her to restrain her legs.

"I don't care about what you're saying. But I am Takeru Shirogane, for real. I'm no dead man." I stare into her eyes as she stops resisting. Light returned to her eyes, all killing intent gone from her body.

"But… Those eyes… This can't…"

"Mion Tsukuyomi, I won our duel. Give up or be knocked unconscious. It's your choice." I grab her hand a bit more strongly but… Why is she looking at me like that?

"Takeru? Is that… You're alive?"

"No more wasting time. Choose." I raise my baton and she makes a panicked expression.

"WAIT! Wait, wait, time out!"

"Now what? If you're buying time for the other to attack me…" I look for the others…

Meiya seems to be distracting Shion as Chizuru tries to strike at her, but the turquoise head dodges without much trouble. I know those two are in bad shape but… She's holding up quite well against them. Meiya seems to be having trouble with her. Chizuru is trying to jump on her from a blind spot, but then Shion dances away.

"… Takeru? Is it really you?" Mion's voice lost all anger and tension, now being more of a sweet whisper. Nice try, jackass. I'm not lowering my guard for some simple trick like that.

"I said no more of that attitude. You're not going to uphold your word?"

"Oh, screw that! Are… Are you really you?! You're alive, you're not… some sort of spy?"

"I'm so done with you. Go to sleep already, good night." I tense my grip on the baton as I raise it. This world's me saw you Royal Guards as his enemies, he was alone. All of you…

"Wait! I surrender! You win!" Her face panicked and she brought her free hand to the back of her head.

"… For real?"

"Yes, truly."

"You're not tripping me, are you?"

"N-No! I surrender. No more struggles. L-Like when we played in the gardens, remember? Takeru?" Why is she making that weak voice?

"You better not be lying." I slowly get off her. Watching her carefully, she slowly rises from the ground. But her body language is totally different, was she… a friend of yours?

"So… Um…" Mion cleans the mud off her arms, avoiding my eyes, her tone as relaxed as a cat eating fish. "Forgive me for… jumping to conclusions. We heard your name, and we… Well, I kinda…

snapped." Grabbing one of her elbows, she sways a bit as she shivers a bit under the rain. "I didn't knew what to think, and when I saw you I… assumed you were a spy using a mask. Can I… Um… make sure you're not using a mask?" She makes a low bow as she gazes at me timidly, slowly tapping the tip of her index fingers together as she stares at me. Who… Who are you? Where did the menacing Tsukuyomi in you go?

"You just want to get close to attack me, don't you?" I take a defensive stance, but she fumbles her hands in the air.

"No! If it is really you, then… Um…" Who were you for this world's me? I never met her, not even in my world, so I have no idea what kind of person she is. Going by her reactions when we fought… Hmm…

"Do anything suspicious and I'll knock you down, no sudden movements. Got it?" She nods and slowly gets closer, I feel no hostility from her gaze now.

She gently touches my cheeks and neck, tapping and poking me. Her hands run through my face, down to my neck and chest softly, her emerald eyes staring right into mine. She pinches me and tries to pull my neck's skin, but her eyes widen as she seems to realize I have no mask on.

"You're not a cyborg going by the feel of the skin, you don't have a mask. Are you… really you, Takeru?"

"I do not remember when I allowed you to call me by my name, Tsukuyomi." She pouts at me as she grabs my clothes.

"What? You… You really are you! Why must you be this contrarian whenever you get upset?! I… I already apologized! Can you blame me? It's been two years! Two fucking years! You didn't say anything when you left, Yuuhi-sama forbid us from speaking about you, Mana-nee and Maya-nee also refused to say anything! And then suddenly you appear out of nowhere! Whatever did you want me to do?! I thought you were dead!" And you were right, until a month ago.

I can feel her anger as she spoke fast and complained at me, but not an 'I'm gonna kill you' angry, more like a… sibling kind of anger? Kinda like how Sumika used to get angry at me?

"Uuhh… I'm afraid I have no idea what you're talking about. If you're done, get off me please." She blushes for some reason, her eyes dart around as she releases her grip on my clothes.

"I… But… Yeah, I mean… Are you… No, of course you're on a mission. Forgive me." She nods to herself as she moves away.

"Just to clarify, I still have no idea what you're talking about." Sincerity first, just so they don't say I'm trying to deceive them.

"Of course you don't. Yes, you don't. We… never saw each other, no sir. Um… Don't tell Mana-nee about this, please? I don't want to get scolded again." Mana-nee, huh?

"So… I am free to continue with the CCSE? You won't come after me?" I doubt she's being serious, she's trying to deceive me. But instead her shoulders drop, her head lowers slightly as her eyelids almost close.

"Hey, there is no need for such words, Takeru. I am sorry, truly. I… Please understand, I trulylost it when I thought someone could be impersonating you. I didn't… mean what I said. We haven't seen each other since two years ago, surely you know how shocked we were when we heard about you? But I'm truly sorry, Takeru. Forgive me for hurting you." She keeps calling me by my name and she looks really sorry. Who are you really, Mion?

"Whatever. I have no idea what you're talking about, or who you are actually. So you better leave me alone or I'll knock you out." I'm not, I'm so tired I could faint right here if I wasn't high on adrenaline.

"Huh? You… Wait, Takeru. Do you… not remember me?" I turn around, moving a shoulder up and down, wiping the mud off my arms with the falling rain. "Takeru? Takeru! Hey, what happened in these two years? What happened to you?"

"… None of your business." You Royal Guards probably had a hand in his death, and the actions of the Shogun have proved me that she also wants me dead. You might have seen him as a friend but, what about the rest of the Shogunate?

"… What? Hey… Hey, Takeru… Wait…" She tried to grab my shoulder but I shake her hand off, which makes her twitch.

"I have a test to pass, soldier. Please do not go back on your word." I turn my back to her and look for the others.

I see Meiya knocking Shion's baton away, as Chizuru had… Did she threw a mudball at her face? Shion's hair and upper body were full of mud as Chizuru struck her with another mudball. Holy shit, Chizuru you're such a savage this time arou… That roundhouse kick was totally not necessary. Shion was already staggering, Chizuru that right there was overkill. The mud-stained one laid on the ground covered in mud as Chizuru restrained her, Meiya then pointed her knife at her face. I approach them as I rub my sides.

"Yo, looks like you're done too."

"Shirogane, are you alright? Forgive me for leaving you alone with Mion. I… I tried to go to your aid when I saw you on the ground but Shion did not let up." She then did a small bow in apology.

"It's alright. We won, that's what matters. She will uphold her part too, right?"

"Yeah, yeah. I will, no worries. It is truly surprising to see you in one piece, however. Aren't you lucky, Takeru Shirogane?" Her voice is full of the venom I'm so used to hearing since some weeks ago.

"Well, shall we go? Or do you two want to rest?"

"I rather rest away from these soldiers." Chizuru said as she got off the muddy one. Meiya nodded as she spoke up.

"I agree. We also took quite a detour from our path. It will take some time until we reach the evac point now." Remembering that I check my waist, luckily I had put the oil inside my beltkit so it didn't get opened or anything, going by it's feel to the touch.

"Congratulations, you three. Good luck reaching the evacuation point in one piece!" Shion gave us a mean grin as she waved at us weirdly once she got up. What the hell is wrong with these two Tsukuyomis?

"Shion, don't be like that. We lost, fair and square." Mion walks up to us, wiping the blood on her face with a cloth.

"I lost against two opponents and they played dirty. And by dirty I mean it, look at me. I'm full of mud and grass. You just had to deal with Takeru Shirogane, what's up with that? You couldn't win." Midway through her speech, her eyes turned into those of a hawk, light vanished from them. Her tone also got malicious as she shot a glance at me.

"Shion, come here for a second and keep quiet. Whisper… Whisper… " Mion put one hand over Shion's shoulders as she whispered on her ear. Shion's eyes looked conflicted, then they turn into fried eggs, and finally as Mion finished speaking to her she looked like a goldfish.

"Um… Mion, we will take our leave. I hope you uphold your-"

"Meiya-sama, please. We live for our honor, it was a pleasure to be able to cross strikes with all of you. Do be careful, and best of luck in your last push." She gives us a salute that we return before going our way.

Meiya and Mion share a nod, she then briefly looks at me and seems to hold back on waving at me and just gives me a smile. What were you for this world's me? We turn our backs to them and, after looking at our compasses, move into the jungle. After walking some steps, we could hear Shion screaming something at the top of her lungs despite the rain.

"What are those two arguing about now?" Meiya looks worriedly at them. Mion was grabbing Shion from behind as she was trying to shake her off for some reason. Let's get the F out of here.

"Meiya, let's move it."

"Shirogane is right, better safe than sorry."

We then resumed our march into the jungle, leaving the two new Tsukuyomis behind.

---

Some minutes after that.

---

As the rain stopped we crashed onto the trees. All of us were completely spent, no one could take another step.

"Uuugh… I'm so hungry" Chizuru fumbled with her belt kit to take out the last fruit she had.

"I did not… expect to run into those two. Haah… Twas a nice challenge, but… Haah…" Meiya looked exhausted as she gasped with her mouth wide open for air.

"Meiya, do you know them?"

"Hm? Yes, they're… members of the Royal Guard. They're relatives of the 1st Lt. that's in our base. But what about you? They seemed to know you as well." She stares at me with sharp eyes as she strokes her hair. A little light waved behind her eyes, awaiting my answer.

"No, they were probably paranoid about the foreigner that was too close to Meiya-sama."

"Hmm… You have a point. That was probably it. Sigh… However, you never cease to amaze me. Despite your exhaustion, you managed to hold out against Mion. You're truly impressive." She's praising me honestly as she smiles at me. But… that's weird, coming from you Meiya.

"Why do you say that? You can't win against her?"

"I always have problems with them. You see, they already were trained by the Master of my style, so they have an edge over me. Even so, today I think I broke my limits. Despite how much my muscles ached, I couldn't stop fighting." She then rubs her forearms slowly, wincing a bit.

"Yeah, we had a lot of trouble with that Shion." Looking insulted to no end, she munched on her fruit."She was just playing around with us. She was shouting 'Dodge!' every time she dodged my attacks. She wasn't attacking us seriously either, it looked like she just wanted to wear us down."

"That's why you spammed Mudslap?"

"Huh? Oh, yeah. Something like that. I did kinda let the anger get hold of me for a second." She scratches her head in embarrassment.

"Nonsense. That roundhouse kick was marvelous, Sakaki!" Meiya beams at her, which only makes Chizuru blush. I still think it was overkill.

"Ugh… Well, we made it out of that. Let's hope we don't run into anybody else." They nod as we all sit on some roots.

I enjoy the cold raindrops that fall on me from the trees. I take a deep breath as I relax my muscles. My head does hurt a bit and I can't even find the strength to get up, but I gotta. I have to find some fruits or something to eat, because I'm starving.

"Shirogane? Where are you going?" Chizuru speaks to me as I got up after resting some minutes.

"Looking for food, all of us are starving."

"Then let me go with you." She gets up, while putting her glasses on again.

"Wait, shouldn't we all-"

"Meiya, you're completely spent. Take it easy, will you?" I smile at her and she nods timidly with a soft gaze, relaxing while rubbing her shoulders.

Well, let's look for something to eat. We move into the nearby trees, minding our steps and with our eyes peeled. Hmm… Nothing over there… Nothing here…

"Say, Shirogane."

"Hm? What's up?"

"Are you alright?" Her serious tone startled me.

"Huh?"

"I saw how that Mion was stomping on your back. Are you alright? Does it hurt?" She stopped looking for food and faced me, taking a few steps towards me.

"Yeah, I'm fine. It does hurt a bit but it's not that big of a deal."

"Is that so?" She doesn't seem to believe me, I am bluffing right now after all.

"Yeah, I'm okay. But it hurt a lot at the time, she was really fierce when she faced me. She thought I was an American trying to take advantage of Meiya, so she fought seriously against me. Boy, did those swings hurt." I rub my sides slowly as I look around for food.

"I see. That must have been hard. Are you really okay?"

"Don't worry, I'm fine. I won't do anything to get in your way, I'll be careful."

"That's not it, I'm really worried, you know? When Shion threw me to the ground once, I could see how that Mion was pressuring you. It was truly a horrible sight, I didn't think you could lose so badly." She looks genuinely worried, going by those glances she's taking at me. Thanks Chizuru.

"Well, I'm not invincible. Someone out there is better than me at something, I have been telling you all that I'm not perfect for a while now."

"Yeah, and you were right."

"So, how are you holding?"

"I'm fine. Mitsurugi was the one who took most of the hits, to be honest. Oh, aren't those the brown mushrooms we can eat?" She points to her left. Lucky us, we found quite some mushrooms for tonight.

"Nice catch, we'll roast them before nightfall and rest early to recover as much strength as we can." We pick them up together, and while making small talk about our fights we made our way back to Meiya.

---

The next day. Around 8 AM.

---

"Shirogane… Shirogane, wake up." Meiya's voice casts me away from sleep as I open my eyes.

" Yaaaawn… Good morning, Meiya." I rub my eyes as I look around.

"Morning. Sakaki is already up, eat some mushrooms so that we can start marching as soon as we can. We all ended up sleeping quite more time than we should have." I look at my watch, we're already on the fifth day. So, it's around eight in the morning.

"Wait… Wasn't your shift the last one? Why didn't you wake us up earlier?"

She fumbles with her hair as she curves her lips and looks away, hiding her sight behind her fringe.

"… I fell asleep."

"Pfft! Ahahaha!"

"What? Mmgh, do not laugh!" Can't help it, you looked so cute right now. Just like the other Meiya used to be.

"Sorry, sorry. I'll get up now, let's eat."

I stretch and go sit with them on the ground. We used the last of my curry powder on the mushrooms and they ended up quite nice, if I say so myself. Luckily, the Tsukuyomis kept their promise and didn't chase after us. My shift went by without nothing happening, and the girls' one seem to have also ended without a problem.

A noise from the radios startle us as we were finishing our breakfast. Chizuru grabs one and answers it.

"Sakaki here. Over."

"Oh, good morning Sakaki. I'm informing you that you all have less than twenty four hours remaining to clear the test, just a few minutes ago the other three reached the evac point. I expect you all to arrive here as soon as possible. That is all. Over and out."

"Huh, neat. So they already finished." I munch the last mushroom I had. So those three made it, that's one problem less to worry about.

"Those three are amazing. We must also get going, Shirogane, Sakaki." She quickly got up and extinguished the fire.

"Yes, let's. We still don't know how far away we are from the final evac point." Tapping her glasses as she got up, she then checked her beltkit was in place.

"Alright. You two are ready?"

They nod and we begin our march again. Time to bust more traps, dammit.

…

"So… What do you think happened here?" Meiya asked us as she glanced at the helipad that was completely destroyed.

"Gun battery, maybe?" That's what happened last time, even if it was nowhere near this level of damage.

"You think so?" She cocks her head sideways while poking one of her cheeks with a finger.

"I dunno, it was just a thought."

I slowly approach the helipad, but nothing happens. I move around it, but nothing. Meiya goes to the opposite side of it, but nothing happened.

"Whatever it was, it was disabled I think." I know they did, otherwise they wouldn't have been able to reach the evac point.

"So those three neutralized it? This will play in our favor for sure." We share a smirk as we move away from the helipad.

"Guys, I found the directions." Chizuru called to us. She had found another box with a paper hidden near the box with the smoke signals.

It was a map that showed our current location, the location of both gun batteries, the evac point, both bridges and the boat. Thank God, now I don't have to go looking suspicious to ride the boat.

"So there's a boat nearby, huh?" Now all we gotta do is fill it with the fuel and-"Shirogane, using a boat during daylight would cost us several points." Meiya you can't be serious.

"What if we run into more soldiers?"

"Ah… That is true, we may not be able to fight off more pursuers. Sakaki, what do you think?"

"Hmm… While normally using the boat would be a bad call, given our current situation it's the best method we have. Shirogane does still have the fuel with him if the boat has not enough of it, we need to get away as soon as possible to avoid being ambushed and to reach the evac point in time. Since the batteries have been taken care of by our allies we won't lose so many points, I think. We also might not have enough time to reach the bridges, going by how many traps are in the jungle waiting for us and how exhausted we all are. I approve of it." Thanks Chizuru!

"So, what do you think Meiya?"

"I also approve the idea then. I probably cannot fight in my current state, so if we did encounter more enemies I would be a sitting duck. However, I propose to wait until nightfall. Let's hide here between the rocks, and after the sun has set we can safely travel with the cover of the night on our side. We still have a full day to finish this and we need all the points we can get since we're already behind schedule."

That's true. We no longer have guns with us, so if any other soldier finds us we are so done for. But we need to get enough points to pass the test, and this time us three are technically holding our team back. And, if this memory isn't wrong, we would have to climb a cliff to reach the evac point. I almost forgot about that.

"Yeah, you're right. Let's lay low until the night."

"Alright, if you agree with her then let's look for a good hiding spot." Chizuru moved towards the rocks with us following her closely.

There was a small platform of rocks under the cliff, we hid there and after I went back up and tried to scout our location from above we concluded we were safe. Now we just have to wait until night. Meiya had taken out her blanket and laid on the floor while Chizuru was sitting close to the sea.

"We've been through a lot these days. Can't believe everything will end in just a few hours." Chizuru said as she stared at the waves.

"Yeah, this test was nuts. Was your last one like this?"

"Of course not." Meiya answered without even moving from her spot, someone is comfy there. "There were many traps, but not as many as the ones here. And there were no pursuers obviously."

"So we got screwed this time." Chizuru tries to hold the laughter, but gives up eventually.

"Ahahaha, you're right. Well, it's still around four in the afternoon. We should rest too, do you want me to keep watch?"

"Nah, I'm good. If you're still tired you can rest."

"No, I'm fine. I do want to just lie down, my feet are killing me today." Chizuru stretches her arms upwards as she sighs.

"We all did went through some tough battles these days." Meiya brought her blanket closer and laid on her belly, looking at the sea.

I did the same, staring at the rocking waves as the sea breeze came our way. It is odd to see something so peaceful in this world. If only a time could come where most people could get a chance to experience something as soothing as this. At least this mad CCSE is done with.

"Say, Shirogane."

"What is it, Sakaki?"

"Thanks. For being with us, for not abandoning me when I got caught on the net." She then gives me a small bow.

"Don't mention it, that's what comrades do, right?"

"Yes, but… with how I've been treating you…"Her gaze gets shot down as she hugs her elbows.

"That's on the past now. We did promise to get along for the test."

"And… what about after it?" Meiya asks me with an intense stare.

"Huh?"

"Would you consider… starting over with us?" She looks at me pleadingly as she sits up.

"Are you sure the rest won't mind? I am a murdered now, remember?" Both of them make a pained expression. Chizuru clears her throat and speaks up.

"Well, maybe Ayamine will. But I believe the rest won't. You have made it clear you are nothing like the Americans. You've done more than enough to gain our trust. So… Can we start over, Shirogane?"

"Sure, if you don't mind."

"Really?!" Their eyes sparked up.

"Yeah, it's not like… I enjoy being alone." I don't. So even if we might end up as enemies… Just for a few days, let me remember my old friends through you.

"Oh, of course. Well… Let's keep doing our best from now on together. Yes?" Meiya extends her hand and we share a handshake. Chizuru puts her hand above ours.

"So… Thanks, Shirogane. Let's clear this last push, and do our best in our piloting training. I'll do my best as a Leader to recover your trust, so please keep supporting all of us like you did these days." She gives me a smile, the same warm smile my Chizuru always gave me back in my world. Uuuhhh… Don't make me remember them when I'm so tired. I don't wanna cry in front of you two.

"Thanks, let's leave all that behind us." Both of them nod at me as the release my hand.

Even if it's only for a few days, I'm glad I could get past all that negativity in them. Sadly, they might revert once they get suspicious of my piloting skills or when Yuuhi comes after me.

We then threw ourselves to the ground, and just laid there looking at the sea. No need to rush, Takeru. In just a few hours, this hellish CCSE will be over. I don't know how but I did it.

But from now on… I will have to speak with Tsukuyomi-san about my sword, these new Tsukuyomis might also become a problem for me, and now that I know how this world's Takeru felt about the Empire I can understand why Yuuhi wants my head. Maybe he really was a traitor after all. Though, maybe that Mion was someone who saw his good intentions? And that's why she was friendly with me when she saw that I am Takeru Shirogane?

Sigh… I'll deal with that starting tomorrow. I also need to have a talk with Sensei about the chasers. I need to stop the negativity from spreading even more, but with the Shogunate coming after me that will be a tough ordeal. Restarting the loop might be my best choice here. Oh well, no point in complicating myself. Just for a few hours, let's rest. I'll have my fair share of shit to deal with starting tomorrow.

---

A/N: Mion and Shion are physically the same as the characters I based them on from the VN Higurashi When They Cry, only with muscle because training. So that you all can have an accurate mental image of them. Their personalities will be different, as I'll make them into their own thing even if I give them some traits the originals have, so people that have read Higurashi rest assured, no nails will be present in this fic.

The End of the Storm

Chapter 23: The End of the Storm, The Start of the Tempest

---

November 20th. Fourth Day of the CCSE.

(A boat near the shore. Around 10 PM.)

[Mion]

---

How pretty is the sky tonight. It is truly saddening to think the moon is completely overrun by BETA, despite such pristine, beautiful brightness coming to us now. As I finish typing the command, the computer starts preparing the encryption. Leaving my empty glass on the table near the laptop, I descend from the boat and throw myself on the sand, continuing to stare at the night sky.

Sigh… I simply am at an absolute lack of words to describe my feelings after the events of the fight. What would I have done had I killed him? What excuse would I… No, forget about that. How could I have lived with it?

Takeru is alive. We were never given answers about his whereabouts, we didn't even knew he was sent to participate in Lucifer. It was only natural we would assume he was dead, after we were forbidden of speaking his name.

Yet, he's somewhere on this island watching over Meiya-sama. Why were we not informed of this?! Did they think we were going to maintain our composure when meeting up with him, after not seeing each other for two years?

He has improved much, that's for sure. I could tell he was exhausted yet he kept up with me in that crazed state for quite some time. I rub my nose, it still hurts. He must have been truly adusted at me, I almost blew his cover in front of Meiya-sama, I treated him like I would a traitor, I harmed his back severely. And yet, he chose to restrain me instead of knocking me out or worse. Despite everything that has happened, despite all this time… You're still kind to a fault deep down, hehehe.

"What could you be smiling about, my dear cousin?" Shion speaks to me as she placed her face above mine, twirling her hair. With a small grin and rising one eyebrow, she stares at me from above.

"Nothing. I was just remembering our encounter with Takeru, that's all."

"Oh, yes. You do like it when he gets on top of you. Must have missed that a lot these two years." Her grin gets wider, letting me see her teeth.

"Shion! That's not it at all! W-We were never like that!" Summoning a little strength I raise from the ground. Shion just laughs at me as she sits down.

"Hahaha, sorry, sorry! Couldn't resist. But it is odd, you know." Her grin disappears as she hugs her knees.

"What is?"

"Takeru. Why were we not notified of his presence?"

"To avoid a leak, of course."

"Are you absolutely certain that person is truly Takeru?" Meeting my gaze, she falls silent. She slowly narrows her eyes and caresses her hair before continuing. "We have been trained to recognize a cyborg when we see one. We were forbidden from speaking about him, all his information got deleted again. Are you sure that it was truly him?"

"Shion, there was no mask. And cyborgs are not so advanced to be able to perform like a human without being controlled. Even if one could be trained in the Mugen Kidou, the words he said… Only Takeru could have known them. That, and no robot could replicate a person's mannerisms perfectly. His tone, his eyes, his annoyed face. That was him, no doubts."

"However, if that is true then… Why did Yuuhi-sama kept that intel from us when she assigned us this mission?! It's one thing to be sent to keep tabs on the UN and watch over Meiya-sama, but it's a completely different matter if he is here as well. What was the need to send us if he was with her?" She raises one finger at me before relaxing again.

She does bring up a good point. When Her Highness was notified of the new training regime that was implemented at the start of October, she asked of us to start investigating the reasoning behind the sudden change. We found out that the UN was planning to send a squad as a hazard during the CCSE, along other details about the new regime through Mana-nee. Then, Yuuhi-sama used her influence to propose us as members of said chaser squad, under the guise of cooperation.

Of course, the real reason was to watch over Meiya-sama in case these chasers tried anything suspicious. Thankfully, the UN accepted the proposal without much resistance and we were allowed to be here. Thanks to this arrangement we could also test how much Meiya-sama has improved during the time she has been in the UN. But to think Takeru would be here watching over her as well. However, in light of what transpired behind our backs…

"Look at what happened today, Shion. Do you think it was truly pointless for us to be here? They got scattered by those dastards, they even tried to hurt Meiya-sama. He alone was not enough, and yet… I know it is futile to fret over it now, however our leniency could have costed us much." Never did we ponder the idea that they could dare to harm Meiya-sama with deadly intent.

The plan was for some soldiers to appear during their travel to the first evac point, two or three at a time, to force them to not take the shortest route. Then, after they triggered the gun batteries and were preparing to leave, we would appear from the jungle and confront them. A frontal duel is the only way we can properly test their resolve, after all. Will they run away? Or, will they face us? Meiya-sama's training is still not finished, she still needs to face Master as we did before being admitted into the Royal Guard. If she ever hopes to join us and take her rightful place by the Shogun's side, she had to cleave through us.

We were supposed to be your last test in this CCSE, but the soldiers truly fooled us by acting so unassuming during the briefing that Sergeant gave us. And if Takeru hadn't been here, they might have severely… No, they certainly could have killed Meiya-sama. This offense will not be overlooked, we'll have a long talk with that Sergeant when we get back to the command post. In that light, Takeru's actions are perfectly justified. He protected Meiya-sama from those traitors, by any means necessary. However, if he hadn't been here we would have stained our honor by letting harm befall her person. We should have gone to keep watch on her as soon as we reached the island, we were too foolish to trust in that Sergeant's words. Something is wrong here, all that's left to confirm is whether this was an accident or if someone staged this.

Shion brushes her hair and, after drinking some water from her canteen, continues the conversation.

"I understand that well enough. But when we got the notice at the end of October that we would be loaned to the UN for this mission, that's when we should have been informed of Takeru's position. I can't believe Yuuhi-sama kept us in the dark like that! Are we so unreliable? Do we seem like the type that would slip up vital intel so easily? She knows how much he-"

"That's enough. We'll get our explanation when we report this to Her Highness. And I guarantee you, he really is him. Though, I cannot fathom why she sent both Takeru and Meiya-sama to the UN."

I understand having him watching over her, but if she wanted to train Meiya-sama, shouldn't she have been trained by him in the Capital? Considering her mission, she is being trained to eventually be the Kagemusha of the Shogun, so she and him will have to work in the same squad, so to say.

"That's the worst of it!" She frowns, her tone rising in annoyance as fast as leaves after a gale. "We were supposed to be his partners, yet they separate us, don't tell us a thing about him for two years, and send him to be Meiya-sama's retainer? Since when was he with her and why didn't Yuuhi-sama sent us alongside him? Why is Mana-nee's squad in that base then? If we can't trust the UN, to the point we need so many bodyguards to keep her safe, why did she sent Meiya-sama there in the first place?!" Shion hits the sand with her feet, after dropping her canteen she holds her elbows in each palm and throws herself onto the sand. Letting the moonlight shower her face, her wrinkles relax slowly as she finally breathes a long sigh.

"You know of it already, we're in no position to demand anything." She groans, frowning. "Japan is in life support right now, it's getting worse by the day. We both saw how much damage the BETA did during the Niigata Invasion, despite the support the UN sent. Meiya-sama is there as a hostage, even if officially she's a trainee loaned to the UN." She closes her eyes as she purses her lips, still groaning in rejection.

While the last invasion was repelled, we are being attacked by one or two Regiment-sized herds each week. Their landing points are all scattered, so we have no idea where they could go next. We had to sortie quite some times, it truly is surprising that we're still managing to keep them at bay. That's thanks to the UN's support, as much as we may have disagreements with their ways from time to time, they're the only ones actually helping us now.

COSEAN cannot send much support to us, the TUF and the rest of Asia gave their backs to us, the Soviets isolated themselves, and America only fights when it's convenient for them. Australia and Canada might support us on the media, but I have yet to see a single Australian or Canadian pilot on the frontlines here under their own colors instead of being sent as UN fodder. Yet, we can't ignore all that the UN does against our interests and independence. They tried to keep Meiya-sama as a hostage during the last CCSE, today they acted against her life, they keep asking to move the 2nd Defense Line even more. And that's despite the importance of the Empire, of Yokohama Base, in the board that is the war.

I believe that Yuuhi-sama wants to know who is her ally in the UN, since the tensions with those who would rather have the Americans take the reins within the UN seem to be at an all-time high, from what little we can infer. That was one of the reasons why she agreed to have Meiya-sama join the UN as a political gesture.

If Meiya-sama returns after serving in the UN, she will have ample knowledge of their methods and will have forged connections with many pilots and personnel. It's a shame that she has to do this to prove her loyalty, to clean a stain she never had. Only if she returns to serve after being in the UN, those old crooks will accept her.

Taboos be damned, Meiya-sama is more loyal than any of you! Nobody, except Takeru and the Grand Chamberlain, is more devoted than her to Yuuhi-sama. I'm convinced she will find out whether there are worthy people in the UN or if they have all become nothing more than a bunch of leeches.

Though if it's the latter, I suppose Takeru is going to bloody his sword again. Or not, he did seem more calm today than how he used to be. Shion's groaning snaps me out of my inner monologue as she continued to speak, frown getting bigger and with her nose full of wrinkles.

"I know that. I know we're here as a safety measure, to see whether we can trust them or not, and to report anything we see or hear. But I think that what happened was more than what we expected, they actually tried to harm Meiya-sama. That right there is enough of an offense to break relations with-" I look at her and she stops flailing her arms in the air. Biting her lip, she punches the sand.

"We both know it, Shion. Nothing will happen, because Meiya-sama is not officially recognized as who she really is. The Mitsurugi Family is of Tozama rank after all, until Meiya-sama has proven her value she will not be recognized as a samurai and will be treated as another civilian. To file a claim against the UN for this would be like admitting that Meiya-sama is not who she says she is. That's why we are here, to be Yuuhi-sama's eyes and ears. Also, due to his position, Takeru probably has no contact with Her Highness either so we need to report his status to her as well." She nods at my words, but keeps punching the sands with her eyes half open.

"This is the worst. I didn't even get to talk with him, how are we going to report his status if we can't approach him?"

"We can leave the details to Mana-nee, we just need to report those two passed the CCSE and how Takeru performed his duties in protecting Meiya-sama."

"Do you think that's his mission?" She stops punching the ground and looks at me. "I mean, shouldn't he remain by Yuuhi-sama's side at all times?"

"Meiya-sama is truly important for Her Highness, I don't doubt she would take any measures to ensure she is safe at all times. Takeru did refer to her by her name so I suppose they're on good terms." Shion pouts, not satisfied with my answer, and throws herself onto the sand again.

"Still… You sure that was him? No doubts?"

"If you want to know so badly, go and hug him before he takes the helicopter." I tease her back, but…

"Oh! You're right! I just have to confirm it myself!" Shion raised fists to the sky, convincing herself with a deep tone.

"Shion, are you serious?"

"Hmm? Yeah, we do have to make sure you didn't get caught up in the moment. And I have a duty to confirm whether it's him or not. Since you already screwed up." She raises one eyebrow and flashes me an evil grin. Ugh, I hate you.

"Well, the ambush was not my idea at the least." I smile back at her, bringing one finger to my chin.

"What, are you saying it was my fault we lost?" I raise a hand to pacify her, we do not need to start arguing again now.

"Come on, after we heard from that soldier that there was someone going by the name of Takeru Shirogane I didn't knew what to do either, but setting such a large ambush only for it to fail was nothing short of a crude astonishment. To think we weren't able to trap or separate him from those two…" My shoulders drop as I sigh. Shion does the same.

"Yeah, that was a surprise. It was like we were really fighting against Takeru, he would never abandon a comrade. Though he did mature a bit, his old self would have started shooting instead of dropping the rifle."

"That's true, it was time he matured." We share a small laugh as we both look at the sky. "He did seem… calmer than before, you know. He did try to restrain me instead of knocking me out."

"Well… Maybe now that he's had a respite from the war he left those… views behind him?" She asks, almost as if edging me to agree. I sigh, hugging my knees.

"I do not know. He left being truly cold as he used to do before, so I have no idea how he took our presence."

"… Do you think he's upset?"

"Was that even in question? Even if he was calmer, he said nothing to me even when we were alone and away. Sigh…" She sighs as well, and we both throw ourselves to the sands once more. "Also… he did use those odd eccentric words when we were talking."

"… Really?" She grimaces, I nod.

"I know our plan was perhaps too much, yet he didn't ease up even after I repeatedly apologized. I think he's truly mad at us." She looks down, biting her lips and falling completely silent. I look up, sighing.

We had planned the ambush to capture him at all costs, even if it meant to let Meiya-sama get away from us. We had to ascertain who this Shirogane was, was the name just a coincidence? Was he impersonating Takeru? Yet his voice and face, his body and eyes, everything was the same. If we couldn't capture him… We couldn't risk the UN coming after us with a claim of abuse against a defenseless opponent, since there could be microphones hidden anywhere on the island, so we had decided to use our duel idea to have an unfortunate accident happen. We couldn't let someone like that live, the damage a foreigner passing as Takeru could do is gigantic. I had no doubts Yuuhi-sama would break down if she saw him, who knows what did he want to make her do?

But that was all needless worry, it was no faker. It was him, the one and only Takeru. Though, pondering our fight, I can't help but to think his swordplay was… How to say it? A little bit different than how I remember. Less aggressive but more faster, he also used his fists and feet more. But in any case, where were you all this time?

Also, I can't believe I snapped like that. When he kept saying he was Takeru I could feel my blood boil, he acted truly similarly to how he was so I thought the spy was mocking us. I completely lost it during our fight.

I look up, drawing circles on the sand, arching my brows. I mean, he could have said something about it when he saw me like that. Why didn't he stop me? What would I have done if I had hurt him? How am I going to face Yuuhi-sama now? I bet Shion will say that I went berserk on Takeru, I can already hear her snickering. Yet… You didn't harm me, not even when I was clawing at your throat. But… Those words you said at the end… Was that an act, in case there were mics near?

"Shion, why do you think he's been away these two years?"

"Who said he was away?" Huh? What is… Does she know something?! "Don't look at me like that, I'm just saying that we were never told anything. He could have been coming and going around without nobody noticing him. Do you truly think he would stay away from Yuuhi-sama for two years?"

"Point taken. Maybe they were being careful, since the political landscape changed after Lucifer?"

"Your guess is as good as mine. We'll get our answers when we give our report."

"Yeah, you're right."

A sound from the PC reaches my ears, going back to the boat I see that the encryption has been done. The data is ready… Should we send the report now or wait until tomorrow? Thanks to our comms we know the soldiers have been taken out by the other members of the squad so there should be no worries about Meiya-sama's safety.

"Mion, is the data ready?"

"Yeah, just got done a few seconds ago. Should we report what we know now?" Shion flashes me a wide evil grin as she gets close to the computer.

"Of course we do! I want my answers about Takeru, and we should report the behavior of the soldiers as soon as possible. So, if the data is ready let's prepare the private channel."

"Sigh… One day won't make such a difference, and we still need to have a talk with that Sergeant again. But if you wish to do so, this will be on you."

"Yeah, lay the blame on me. I'm still not convinced he is Takeru so Yuuhi-sama better be ready to give me an explanation!" She sits near the PC and starts up the video call program.

"You do know she may just say it's confidential intel, right?" She freezes in place. Slowly, her head turns to me as she stares at me with hawkish eyes.

"… Mion, I swear, if she says that I'll cut that ponytail of yours with my teeth." I raise one eyebrow and smile at her lightless eyes.

"So scary. Don't forget to speak formally, though. Yuuhi-sama might not want to reveal any intel unless we are on her private room back in the palace, so don't get your hopes up. That's all I'm saying." I wave at her to calm her down, she must be a mess trying to sort out her feelings in this matter. Not that I'm any different.

"Whatever. I'll start the preparations, can you bring a lantern?"

"Sure, sure."

---

Same Day. 09:14 PM.

(Yokohama Base. Briefing Room N° 4.)

[Yui]

---

"Here are all the reports regarding the development, Ma'am." I hand the folders to Professor Kouzuki, she makes a noise to acknowledge them as she starts reading.

I arrived here just an hour ago, I already finished signing the preliminary papers and got a small tour around the base. It's just been ten minutes since this talk started but I'm feeling most anxious. Not only she has a striking gaze, firm enough to crack a rock with just a blink, but she also has a very frightening way of speaking. Not that I was trying to deceive her, but I suppose she is still suspicious of me since I'm a member of the fudai.

"A truly amazing piece of weaponry, he was right it was worth it." Huh? He?

"Excuse me Vice Commander, who are you referring to?"

"I was merely talking to myself. I'd like it if you only replied when addressed, 1st Lt. Takamura." I nod at her while gulping.

A true alpha woman, it is no wonder to me why no one wants to make her upset. I honestly do not mind the demotion, I do not desire to have others thinking I have privileges for being a noble.

She has been truly cold towards me during my introduction and cut to the chase in no time when this talk started. I now understand why you disliked me so much Yuuya, it is hard to have a conversation when one side is doing an iceberg impression. However, going by her squinted eyes and how much time she spends reading each page, I believe she took a serious interest on the railgun. That's a good start, even if I am not allowed access to the floor it will be built to oversee that until I gain her approval.

"This data is more impressing than I thought it would be, to be perfectly honest. However, some parts will be hard to procure. Even some of the replacement and second options are very expensive materials, it will cost at least double of what I thought originally."

"Huh? Is that so? I… When we were at Yukon the engineers did mention that it used valuable materials, but I never expected them to be so expensive. The budget I proposed is already quite high, after all."

"Yes, but you have to look at it from a different point of view." With half closed eyes, looking at nowhere in particular, she spoke as if she were bored. "Materials and parts that are made in America will be cheaper in America. Here we have to import them, and, since we can't import large quantities of them, their price in our market is much higher since the demand is high, and ordering them through the UN comes with the added cost of the logistics required for the delivery. Of course, we cannot use third grade materials on such a project. Its maintenance will be quite the problem too, according to the data here. You only used it twice, but it was estimated it would take weeks to get it in working condition again, due to how worn down the barrel was thanks to the heat it generates when firing." She hits the papers laid on the table with two fingers, resting her chin in the palm of her other hand.

This is bad, I can't deny that the railgun does take quite some time to be ready for use after a mission, even if we only used it twice. Add how much funds are needed to build it… If I can't get them past the planning stage all my efforts will be for nothing.

"It's true, I won't deny that. However, if you compare how much it costs to repair, resupply, and recalibrate a fleet of TSF after an encounter with a Regiment of BETA, without mentioning the damage they do to other facilities, I think you'll see that the railgun is a much cheaper alternative. And one that does not involve any risk whatsoever, we can destroy the BETA as soon as they appear on the shore before they do anything. Our encounter with them proved that as much, a railgun can eliminate around three thousand BETA with a single shot and a full backpack. How much more money will one have to spend to fix the damage those same BETA would cause us after the battle? And that's without considering the irreplaceable value the lives of our pilots have, any life lost in the fight carries a much heavier weight than a bag full of gold ingots." I spoke slowly, pointing to the pages that had the relevant information and comparisons I prepared for this. I know the railgun is not perfect, I know it goes against our honor code to fight in this way. But Yuuya proved to the world how useful it can be, and it's up to me to bring it back to life.

"All of your points are valid, so long as it doesn't fail. Here says that a third barrage was supposed to be fired, but it overheated. If that is the case, the railgun will require quite some time in R&D before we can actually use it, and if it explodes we will have to face the costs of the fight with the BETA as well as those of the destroyed railgun." She ruffles her hair as she leans back on her chair, again staring right into my eyes.

"It was only its first test, now that we have that data we can make a more efficient cooling mechanism for it. While it will need time to reach its full potential, I believe it will bring more plusses than negatives. The presence of the railgun could give the Empire the breath of relief it so desperately needs, a single of this could take care of any of the Regiment or lower herds that assault our shores weekly. That will eventually pay for itself, letting us conserve resources and prepare our surface pilots without a need for an unfortunate accident to take their lives." I relax my face as I look into her eyes. Violet, just like mine, but as she narrows them I feel a cold shiver down my back.

"Again, that's only if it works. So 1st Lt. Takamura, did you plan anything in case we had to cut our budget? Or were you expecting to have the same resources as you did in Yukon?" I did not intend to upset her. She entwines her fingers as her gaze drills into me, sizing me up as she waits for my answer.

"I do have some adjustments if such a case presented itself, they're on the twenty ninth page of the report. Basically, we lower the amount of bullets it can fire and make the sub-arm more similar to one of the add-on pylons we already had. Of course, this would lower its performance quite a bit but it would be preferable to not having the railgun at all." I brush my hair off my face as I watch with bated breath as she reads through the report.

"Most interesting. Say, do you mind if I… modify the project a bit?"

"Modify? What would you be liking to do?" She grins widely and something stirs in her eyes.

"I would like to make it bigger."

"What? B-But… You just said it would be impractical due to its cost, making it bigger would only-"

"That's only if you look at our current configuration. Given its current form, the railgun makes any TSF that uses it into nothing more than a turret, due to the weight and the backpack one must carry with it. It's also a BETA magnet, due to its black box and computing systems. However, let's say that those problems are solved if we can make this thing bigger."

"Excuse me, but I do not understand how. That would only make the TSF using it even more slower, also, wouldn't that have a much bigger cost than what I proposed as well?"

"Yes, but this would be worth it. So, here's my deal. I want to make a small and big version of it. The small will be tested on a TSF like it's meant to, the other will be tested by my Research Team. Is that alright for you?"

"If those are your terms, I'll agree to them. I thank you for this chance Vice Commander, I swear I'll do my best to bring you the results you desire!" I bow at her, but going by her frown it only made her more uncomfortable.

"No need for formalities. You will be assigned under my command in the Research Team, I want a daily report at 7 PM. Tomorrow I'll introduce you to the engineers and the floor where you'll spend most of your time."

"Yes, Ma'am. I do have a request to make, if it's alright with you." Her bored gaze became firm as she focused on me. Lightly brushing her bangs to a side, she straightened her posture and gestured me to speak.

"What is it you want?"

"I would like you to consider my permanent transfer to this base, as we discussed before."

"Why? After the railgun is finished, do you have any other business here? Out with it, don't be shy!" Her childish tone startled me, however after looking at her narrowed eyes I could tell she's merely testing me.

"Well, if you deem the railgun worthwhile I would like to request you to consider taking the XFJ Project under you. I know resources are scarce, but the railgun and the Shiranui Second complement each other quite well. While the railgun can take care of many enemies from long range, the Second is a great machine when it comes to mid and close range. I believe it would be a great addition to our military force."

"I know of it already. While I admit the Second is an amazing machine, we do not have anything to pick up their development and would need to make an engine according to its specs. That's without mentioning the fact that the Type-94-1C is an exclusive unit of the Shogunate. I believe that we're better off upgrading all our 2nd Gen TSFs, instead of spend our funds trying to build from scratch a completely new TSF." She briskly disregarded my proposal as she looked into me again with those fierce eyes. It almost feels as if I were once again clashing against Mother when she opposed me joining the training program to become a surface pilot, cold and unwavering as a a horde of BETA.

Closing my eyes, I inhale slowly as I ponder my next words. Again facing her gaze, that oh so piercing gaze, I rub my ankles together as I speak up.

"I understand that it would put a truly large dent in your budget, and that it also would be a large time eater. But its performance cannot be compared to that of any 2nd Gen TSF, even if they are upgraded. I know that the relations between the UN and the Empire are more tense than they ever were before now, but if you provided them with such a powerful 3rd Gen machine the waters would surely return to how they were at the start of the year. While its initial cost will be quite high, once we manage to iron out its specs it should become a very easy to mass produce TSF. If you would be wishing to see them, I have the reports with me." She raises a hand, signaling me to give her the report, which I do without delay.

"Let's see here… Hmm…" She again slowly reads the papers.

I can't believe how nervous I am. My palms are all covered by a faint sweat and I can't keep my feet quiet. I move my eyes from her to the walls, but I can't calm down. No matter how many deep breaths I take, my heart is beating quite strongly near my neck. Peace, I still have time to convince her.

"1st Lt. Takamura, compared to a Takemikazuchi, how does the Second fare?"

"To a Type-00? It depends on the model. The Second is still not as powerful as the Type-00C since it has a better engine on both its jump units and inner structure, however the Second could have a comparable performance for a much lower cost. However, the types A, F and R are without a doubt superior to it in every way. Of course, in the end it's up to the pilot to bring the full potential of the machine to life, but going by the cold numbers the Second could achieve a similar performance to the Type-00C in general. The Takemikazuchi will always be better in close range and long lasting missions, but for a more generalist approach, improved maneuverability, and for its lower cost of fabrication and maintenance, the Second is the superior choice in my opinion." With how easy it would be to produce and upgrade we could replace all of our old TSF while not forcing the Guard to develop another machine out of pride, like when the Shiranui was deployed.

"I see, makes perfect sense. Question, did you bring your Type-00 with you to the base?"

"Huh? Yes, I did. But I do not have authorization to allow you to tinker with it or to borrow its components." She brings a hand to her forehead as she sighs audibly, then she ruffles her hair again.

"I wasn't going to ask you that. You said we couldn't make 2nd Gen TSFs as strong as the Second, and that your Type-00F is better than it. Could you do me a favor and perform a test run for me?" She asks me as she curves her lips, handing me a paper. A dark blue TSF's data, what is… This has got to be a joke.

"Vice Commander, if you forgive my rudeness, there is no way a Kagerou could achieve these numbers."

"Are you calling me a liar, by any chance?"

"N-No, Ma'am. But these statistics, these results… Can you tell me more of this?" She looks to the wall, hiding her mouth with her entwined hands.

"Only if you agree to do this test for me. What do you say? Your Type-00F against this Kagerou. I'll give you a hint, it's based on the Active Eagle design of Prominence. I believe you are familiar with it."

"Yes, one member of my past squad used one actually. Its performance was nowhere near this good, however." Is this the result of the accord with the Shogun to make new TSF tech? First we rake in funds with these new little upgrades, and once we fill our box we start the development of our big guns? So there was no need for me to worry, she is just being careful and timing her projects.

"So, what do you say?"

"I accept your orders, Ma'am. I'll gladly spar against this TSF if that is your wish."

"Obedient one, aren't you? Alright, I'll arrange the test for a few days in the future. Here are some more papers on it, so that you know what to expect. Even if this is a test, I'd like you to take it seriously.

… Not like you have a chance against him anyways. " Her tone got lower at the end and I couldn't hear her well, but going by her wide smile she is expecting me to deliver good results to her. And that I will.

"Understood, Ma'am."

"Now then. Your room is on the third hallway of the right side in the barracks. Just to avoid any misunderstanding, I'd like you to not involve yourself with the Cadets that are still being trained here."

"Huh? Um… Alright, however could I… Ahem, could you allow me to watch over Cadet Mitsurugi, if it's possible?"

"Mitsurugi? Oh, are you here as another bodyguard?"

"Sort of. This isn't an official arrangement so I would watch over her until she's done with her service in the UN or until I receive further orders regarding her safety, so if you allow me to keep tabs on her activities and can send me along her squad when she is deployed to a mission I would be truly thankful. And she will too." I hand her a small paper, with the symbol of the Koubuin House in a strong shade of purple. She frowns at the sight of it, tightening her grip on the paper. "I know that imposing more things onto you is quite rude, since we are only asking without giving. But I'm allowed to move out in my Takemikazuchi, I'm sure I will be useful to you. Please, think of me as another soldier under your command."

"That was the plan, however let me ask you one question. I want a serious, honest answer. Is that the only reason you wish to be near Mitsurugi's squad?" Again she narrows her eyes, entwines her hands and stares into me.

"Yes, that's all there is to this." I can't say I didn't expect her to doubt me.

"Really? Then… Do you not know of someone called Shirogane?" Huh? I didn't expect her to mention him at all.

"Err… Yes, I do."

"Oh?" She opens her eyes wide as she smiles. Why is she so surprised? "So you know of Shirogane, can you tell me what you know of him?"

"Um… He's a cadet in Mitsurugi's squad, he was stationed at Yukon during the Incident, I think he was transferred here by your orders, and he's something like your protegee, I believe?"

"Yes, all that is true. But why do you know of him?" Her eyes light up as she leans forward. Her piercing gaze fills my view, I didn't have any reason to lie but anyone would be left struggling under such a strong glare.

"I was told his records were very good, so if he were commissioned I… I'll be honest, I would like him to be the test pilot of the Second."

"Huh? The test pilot?"

"Yes, I was told his efforts were marvelous. So, if he also produces similar results in his training course as a surface pilot I wanted to ask you to make him into the test pilot of the Second, if he also agreed of course." There is no point in lying, honesty is the best policy. If I want them to accept me as their ally I must reveal my hand to them first, I do want to meet him if I could.

"Hmm… That… Well, it's not impossible. But is that all there is to it?"

"Yes, that's all. I would like to speak with him, to see what kind of person he is, but that can wait until you allow me to do so."

"So you hold no grudges towards him for being a Japanese that was trained abroad?" So that's what she wanted to ask. I know that my old reputation is still haunting me, but still…

"I am no longer who I used to be. I realized that holding onto such grudges and prejudices is nothing more than a waste of time. I no longer have animosity towards foreigners in me, I will judge people for how they are and not by their birth place. He is my comrade first and foremost." I speak firmly, staring right at her eyes. Crossing my arms, I await her answer. She gives me back a small smile.

"Alright. Then I'll see what I can do. However, please refrain from approaching him for the time being, he is my protegee and he has a… very short temper for people of the Royal Guard."

"Eh? Why?"

"Let's just say that… He had a few bad experiences with them. By the way, I've heard you were the Leader of your squad back in Yukon and that you fought quite bravely to protect the base and city from the BETA. Aside from the test I proposed you before, would you be willing to assist me in some tests and mock battles?"

"Of course, it will be a pleasure to serve you. If there's anything you need of me, do not hesitate to ask and I will do my best to deliver."

I truly want to be here, if I can help you finish these new parts and use them to revive the Second that will bring a swift end to the tension between the Empire and the UN. If I can watch over Mitsurugi while getting closer to Shirogane, I'd be killing two BETAs with one slash. I'll do any and all the tests and battles you order me to, and I'll help as much as I can during the development of the railgun. I'm prepared to sleep only four hours a day to finally bring the XFJ Project back to life.

"Good answer. Now, let's go over some details of your enlistment here. You'll have S2 level of clearance, and aside from the railgun documents you won't have access to any other documents above your rank."

"Understood."

"Let's move back to the railgun, there are some questions I want to ask regarding its cooling system and the backpack."

---

November 21st. Fifth Day of the CCSE.

(Evacuation Point. 09:48 PM.)

[Marimo]

---

Almost 2200 hours, huh? They're still not here, what happened to them? All the members of the Wasp Squad are already here so they should have no more problems to reach this place. Are they so hurt that they can't get past the traps? After all that happened, that would be an awful ending to this CCSE.

Captain Nanase admitted that he was bribed after I put him on the phone with Yuuko, I don't know the details but Yuuko confirmed that she will start pulling some strings to find out who did it and why, even if she probably already has an inkling. The three of them got really beaten up, honestly I expected as much from Ayamine, but Tamase's and Yoroi's performance that night surprised me.

Their figures as they ate after coming back filled me with happiness. Their small, creaking voices could barely hold back the tears once the realization came to them. Tamase started crying in the middle of lunch, Yoroi bit her tongue twice trying to not cry, and Ayamine didn't say anything but the fact that she was openly smiling is proof enough that she was overjoyed.

Yet, not everything is good news. Those two Royal Guards that came back today are seriously giving me the creeps. Their eyes are completely void of light, they kept asking about the soldiers' actions and about Shirogane. They've come every hour to check whether he arrived. I could understand if they were asking about Mitsurugi, but Shirogane? What did you do this time to upset the Guards?

I can tell they have no good intentions, I've seen those eyes before. The eyes of a murderer, cold, wide open, void of life and mercy. Do they think Shirogane is involved with Nanase? No matter what I said to them, they would give me this big, wide grin showing me their teeth, and then they would go away laughing quietly. That laughter sent chills down my spine, I've met plenty of Royal Guards that had quite a few screws loose, or rather missing altogether.

Sigh… In any case, they did went above my expectations, all of them. Maybe… For once, I can have a squad that doesn't die after their first two missions.

When I was assigned as the Instructor of the 207th Cadet Training School in Hakuryo Base, I thought it was weird. People coming from all over the country to join our program, soon I learned of the real purpose of the Base. To prepare Cadets to serve as part of our elite force, the A-01 Special Task Force, that would become the backbone for a top secret project. Little did I know that Yuuko was behind it, that she had asked for me to be the Instructor. Back then I couldn't see straight, I kept running away from my pain. The pain of losing my crush after he confessed to me he was in love with someone else, the pain of losing all my comrades time and again no matter what tactics I employed. I was not strong enough, I was still clinging to the idea of nobility, of a war where we could all survive, I was so naive. I kept charging ahead, only to return alone.

When did I snap? When did I become Marimo 'Reaper' Jinguuji? I no longer remember.

What I do remember is that I was one of the few survivors of the troops that were sent in the first collaboration of the Empire with COSEAN to defend mainland Asia. That's why I went double hard on all my Cadets, I wanted them to experience just a tiny bit of the hell that would befall Japan, so that those who had the guts to fight would come out stronger, and those who didn't could avoid wasting their or their comrades' lives.

Looking back on it, I was a monster. How many children did I break during those days? Just remembering what I did to Isumi is enough to make me wanna hit myself. But… It was all pointless. My freshly commissioned students would soon die on the missions Yuuko sent them to on Korea, but we still managed to 'offset' our losses with the fresh officers coming out of the 207th Training School. Until that fateful year that was 1998.

Half of the STF was then killed during the first days of the Invasion of the '98, more died during the Battles of Kyoto, Yokohama and Honshu. After we got relocated, the numbers just kept going down and down, after Lucifer only two squads with ten members each remained.

Back in the day, I trained squads until the letter M a year, with four members each. From all of those only three are still alive. All of the rest are dead. From the ones I trained on the '99 and 2000, only one from each generation remains. I thought that… Maybe I had the wrong idea. Maybe we didn't need a calm Marimo, maybe we needed the Reaper to come back. That's why this year I returned to how I used to be. We need more Isumis, more Hayases. I can't… I don't want to keep seeing my squads get decimated only a few months after being commissioned. The BETA probably can spawn thousands of them a day, but we need so much more time and resources to bring a couple of people to the basic level of aptitude. I can't keep being so lenient. My goal is to make them survive, not to turn them into blind killing machines.

That's why I was so glad when Shirogane arrived, someone who could take my training regiments, someone who could keep up with the Reaper. He's the best, he's my star Cadet. No one could ever compare, not Narumi, not Hayase, not Sakuma, not Isumi. If he could show the rest that he could do it, all of them would start trying their hardest to keep up. If only he had arrived at the start of the year…

This generation of Cadets is much more skilled than the last ones. Mitsurugi, Ayamine, Tamase, Suzumiya, Takahara. All of you have the making of great pilots, so long as you survive long enough to leave a mark. And yet, I had to bear with these stupid political ploys. All of them should have graduated already, but if that's how you wanna play fine by me. I gave them the hardest training I could ever come up with, and they endured it. Sure, they weren't doing it like Shirogane but he's an outlier, I can't even see where his limits may lie. But all of you should be proud, I gave you hell and you braved through it. The fact that you fought against commissioned soldiers and won is enough to prove my point. We don't need a gentle Marimo, we need the Reaper.

However, to think you'll leave him behind. Abandoning Shirogane, despite how much he tried to fit in, despite how much he ignored your insults and kept smiling through the trainings, despite the fact that he shielded Mitsurugi from their first shot? If he had failed because of this, I would have made you all fail as well. I thought that, just like me and Arai became better after clashing with each other for so long, letting you all clash and flare up a rivalry between you and him would make you all grow more. But it seems that when push came to shove, you forgot all about what I taught you about teamwork and fighting in adverse situations. And yet going by the mics Shirogane forgave them and is traveling with alongside those two. That boy is too kind for his own good, though it's hard to blame him. Going by what little I could see of his records, he lost everything he had twice and is just looking for a place to be.

He had the bravery to fatally wound the soldiers, it's true that he overdid it but, if we go by the book, he fulfilled his mission perfectly. He took care of his enemies without giving them a chance to retaliate. Honestly, I cringe just to think how these people got trained. To abuse their power against those girls, when I confronted them they started blabbering about how poor they are, how they deserve better, and a lot of crap. Hmph, they made a grave mistake and paid for it. If Mitsurugi and Sakaki had chosen to fight back during their first encounter, we could have avoided this whole mess.

I yawn, rubbing my eyes. For a moment, my heads sways backwards, wishing to meet a soft surface. Inhaling sharply, I shudder the cold away and blink fast in quick succession. I truly would like to just lay down for a moment…

Sigh… Still, I can't go to sleep yet. Where are you three?! The others are already sleeping after a good dinner, we won't have enough time to properly heal your wounds if you take too long. Stop making me worry and get here already!

… Hm? What's that?

I heard a sound, then it happened again. And then I heard it clearly, a voice through the night.

"C'mon guys, it's… just… right… there!" Shirogane's voice echoed through the air as I saw him climbing his way into the island.

Instead of throwing himself into the grass, he went back near the edge and helped Mitsurugi up as Sakaki finished climbing her way as well. So they used the boat, huh?

"Congratulations you three, you have finished your CCSE." I say as I approach them.

Mitsurugi looks like she just took a dip in the sea, she slowly wipes the sweat of her face. Sakaki's eyes look dim as she rubs her right leg with a frown on her face. Shirogane is bending forward holding his knees.

"Instructor… We have arrived." Sakaki gives me a salute as she regained her composure. Mitsurugi does the same, meanwhile Shirogane is still hunched over.

"What is it, Shirogane? Ran out of energy?" I try to taunt him but he remains in the same position, breathing heavily.

"I think… I'm gonna keel over and faint any minute now. Fucking cliff…" Mitsurugi and Sakaki nod to his words instead of scolding him. They must be exhausted, let's get this over with so that they can get their well earned rest.

"Alright, I'll announce your score." Shirogane slowly stands upright in attention as he hears my words. "All of you dealt with your first targets quite admirably, wasted no time and got to the point immediately. However, from then on you have different scores for what you did." All of them grimace. Sakaki holds one elbow with her palm, Mitsurugi grabs the edge of her pants quite strongly, and Shirogane is biting his lips. "Mitsurugi, Sakaki. You abandoned one of your squadmates when you met the chasers. While there is no rule that states that this can't be done, I'd like to tell you something. When I enlisted, no more than ten years ago, to pass the CCSE all members of the squad had to survive. However your bet didn't work and you got captured, you should have had to pay the ultimate price for it. Ironically, you were saved by the one you abandoned, you couldn't even protect yourselves. We don't need soldiers like you in our army, you're just dead weight." Their faces twist upon hearing my words, their eyes are open wide, their mouths open and close as their lips tremble.

"Instructor, if I may, at the time we-"

"Sakaki, I already heard enough pitiful excuses from Ayamine. That is not the worst of it at all, not only Shirogane had to go save your sorry asses but he also had to take care of everything himself. We have mics on the island scattered around and we know he got in charge of the fight with your captors and took care of most of the traps afterwards. What were you two doing exactly? Were you too busy staring at his abs to do jack shit?!"

Their faces contort again, lips twisted and eyes almost closing. They look to the ground, Shirogane is staring right back at me with hints of a frown in his face. He's holding a retort for now, it seems.

"Then, during the second chase he was the one who noticed the ambush, the one who told you to run and the one who fought back. Honestly, what did you do? Did you do anything? At all? So much time and resources wasted on two useless fucktards that can't even save their own asses when it counts. You only brought Shirogane down in this test, but I suppose that's an achievement in and of itself." Despite the low light I can tell their faces are growing pale, Mitsurugi can't even look up from the ground as she quivers in place, Sakaki is trying to stare back but keeps looking elsewhere as soon as we make eye contact.

"Instructor, they did help me. I did not do all the work."

"Shirogane, I do not remember giving you permission to-"

"And I don't remember when trash talking my squad became part of our evaluation, with due respect. They were not useless, they helped me with many traps that I couldn't have dealt with, they shared their medical supplies with me to heal my wounds, and most importantly kept one of our chasers at bay when we had to fight them. There was no way I could have dealt with both at the same time. You also shouldn't leave out of your judgment that fact that we did not know of the chasers presence, nor that four of them assaulted my squadmates, while I had the advantage of ambushing them while they were distracted. So, even if I totally understand your anger, could you please stop badmouthing them?"

You got balls, Shirogane. You're the first that talks back when I'm the Reaper with actual arguments since Isumi, without faltering as well. It's not like I didn't knew what you just said, I was going to mention it, but let's roll with it. I can see why Yuuko holds you in such high regard.

"Alright, let's move on then. You caused more trouble than you're worth, but one could say that you mended it by regrouping with Shirogane and cooperating with him from then on. Sakaki, Mitsurugi, you both get a Seventy in your CCSE." Their eyes light up, they got a passing grade. Mitsurugi's knees betray her and she falls to the ground. Sakaki hugs her sides as she struggles to not cry. "Now then, Shirogane…"

"Yes?"

"You killed two of your pursuers, gravely harmed another three. We lost five pilots because of you. You also made the foolish choice of trusting in those that had abandoned you once." He frowns at me but doesn't retort. "They could have abandoned you while you were asleep and you would have failed the test, you also should have prioritized your own security during the chase instead of staying back with them, since they were nothing but a hindrance to you at that point. That could have costed you the CCSE. However, you defended yourself admirably, dealt with most traps by yourself, neutralized your enemies with fast and lethal force, and guided your team to victory. It's clear that you're the biggest reason you three are here right now. However, you did get captured when you first encountered the chasers and barely managed to escape. You also had luck on your side, you escaped by a hair from your first pursuers without serious injuries, you got lucky that the girls didn't betray you twice, you also got lucky that the second chasers didn't immediately capture you and forced you to use your radios to give up. You made many mistakes, add that to the blood you spilled… And you can imagine what your score is, right?"

"Instructor, if we passed the test then he should-"

"Silence, Mitsurugi."

"But he saved our lives! I was unconscious when he found me, they could-"

"Do you have any proof of that?"

"Eh?" Eyes wide open she struggles to retort. You're so naive, do you really think people will believe your words all the time?

"Where is the proof that you were unconscious? Or in any danger?" I know she's telling the truth, but I have to pressure them. So that they know what will happen when they screw up once they get commissioned.

"Proof? I… My scars would-"

"That only implies there was a fight, nothing about some bruises says mortal danger." She sharpens her eyes and takes a step forward.

"However, if you had microphones all over you should-"

"Meiya, it's fine. Let it go. Please continue, Instructor." I thought he would be the most angry one, yet he calmed Mitsurugi down with only a gaze. She stares at him for a second, lowers her gaze while wringing her hands, and takes a step back.

"Cadet Shirogane, you have scored a Sixty Five on your CCSE. That is the lowest score one can get while also passing the test, you managed to arrive here before dawn so that worked in your favor. You avoided climbing the cliff during daylight, that was your saving grace. Congratulations, you all barely passed the CCSE maggots!"

I thought he would scream in joy, drop to his knees or something, but he kept standing in place with his ice stare. Only then I noticed he was not staring at me, but rather at the two green haired figures that were some meters behind me. They were staring at him with those hawkish eyes. After I noticed them, they turned around and made their way to the command post.

"Instructor… About those two soldiers…"

"Mitsurugi, there will be a time to discuss that. For now, let us go to the command post. You all have earned a long shower and a plentiful dinner. Tomorrow at two in the afternoon we're leaving, just so you know. That is all." I march towards the command post, but I take a glance at them after some steps.

The girls were trying to cheer Shirogane up, smiling at him and probably saying some cheesy lines since he did pass the test. Whatever happened in these days seems to have changed the opinion they had of him, or they're just pretending.

However, Shirogane does not smile. I don't know if he's tired but he looks dead inside. His eyes are unfocused as he walks, his lips are pursed tightly into a bitter expression. I suppose it has to do with those two Guards.

During dinner he did not change his attitude and went to sleep without uttering a word, more than a few thanks towards the girls when they spoke to him. They seemed worried about him, and Mitsurugi went to talk with the Guards but they didn't even answer the door.

Now that I finally got this squad to pass their CCSE I won't allow anyone to harm them, I should call Yuuko for advice on how to deal with these Guards.

Conflict

3 rd Arc: His Chains

Chapter 24: Conflict

---

(Koubuin House. Head's Room.)

[Raiko]

---

One could not imagine the dire situation we were facing by merely looking at what was within this room.

Yohime-sama and her Chamberlain were in the customary position, behind the scrolls and tapestry of our House, candle lighting their surroundings. Standing by the door, Mana diligently remained on guard.

The rest of us, sitting on the tatami, merely awaited her words as we drank some tea, her decision regarding the coming peril.

To her right, Daizaburou-sama, Seiten-sama, and Gekka-sama, all of our warriors from the Guren House, and to the left me and Masahide in representation of the Amato House, as well as my fellow Kaori-san, who hails from the Kisaragi House. All of those present here being those of the highest echelons within the Koubuin faction, all of us shared a singular wish.

However…

"I shan't leave. Not until our fellows have done so." Yohime-sama answered, bringing forth an ailing taste to my mouth, as well as to those of my fellows.

"Milady, please reconsider." Daizaburou-sama, the only one old enough to speak out of turn, couldn't muster enough composure to hide the frown that soared high into his face. "Should the worst case scenario come to pass, we cannot guarantee your safety."

"And should I leave, most of our guards would do so with me. So long as I am here, my servants shall be safer. I shan't leave until an evacuation is called for. That shall be final."

"Even so… For the future of our faction, you should-" His words drowned by her frown, he bowed down in silence.

"The one who holds the future of this House is Yuuhi, not me. Therefore, you all should only concern yourselves with her wellbeing."

I look down, unable to counter these asphyxiating feelings on my throat. Yohime-sama's safety is of paramount importance for us, however we cannot go against her wishes. Those outside the succession branch have taken preemptive measures and moved out to a secure location already. Were something to occur… I do not doubt they may try something against Yuuhi-sama.

Trusting in His Highness' plan is all we can do at the moment, however. As enraging a state of affairs this is, reiterating the matter will do us no good.

"Masahide, have the preparations for the trainees been finished?" She inquires.

"Yes, milady." He gives a short bow, a hand on his shoulder. "Should the worst come to pass, all young noble heirs shall be sent to Tokyo. We are cooperating with the Kujo House in this endeavor to also accommodate those that survived the invasion. Worry not milady, our fellows have their safety guaranteed."

"Sigh… That is good to hear."

"Milady, if I may," With a bow, I look at her awaiting her approval. Once she nods, I cough and continue, "On that note, has Yuuhi-sama agreed to remain in the Castle?"

"Yes, thanks to Takeru's insistence." She smiles with clear cheer, however, for as a great relief it is to learn that Yuuhi-sama shall not be fighting, to hear it was due to that baseborn's meddling makes my insides be riveted by most foul acids. "She should be preparing her belongings as of now. Mana, how would that be coming along?"

Upon hearing the inquiry, she took a step forward and stood in attention, then bowing to our Lady before answering her query.

"Yuuhi-sama should be almost done with the selection of which items she would be wishing to take with her, milady. I estimate that in less than an hour our fellows will be done with the task."

"… And she hasn't risen any further objections?" She inquired, Mana shook her head.

"No, milady. Had she done so, I would have been notified of it by now."

"I see… Well, that is one burden off our shoulders." Smiling yet again, she nodded and allowed Mana to return to her prior position. "Now then, have we received confirmation from the UN regarding their plans?"

"Ahem…" Gekka-sama bowed, Yohime-sama nodded her way, and she then sighed before speaking up. "After the last meeting where the Americans disclosed the termination of the treaty, it seems they have not received the authorization to mobilize near the Capital. We have received a petition from His Highness for us to cooperate with the UN forces, to allow them to participate in the defense of Osaka actively."

"Hmm… What are the opinions of the other Regents? Why have they refused the aid for the Capital?" She asked, taking a strand of her lily hair on her hands.

I cough, nodding her way before speaking up.

"We've received their answers moments ago, they were partly negative, milady." She gestures me to continue. "It seems they have only refused the TSFs participation, milady." Taking a moment to breathe in, as she focused on me and those kind eyes turned most abrasive, I gulped to avoid any stuttering to clog my report. "Artillery and infantry units have been allowed to guard the last defense line in the perimeter of the Capital, to avoid a debacle with their HC Council. Of course, their own chain of command is in an uproar after those traitorous Americans decided to run away." Accursed viles rising through my throat, I cough as I place a hand on my chest to dispel such bindings from my report. "As such, while they are restructuring their own organization, there is still ample pressure coming from them to take over the operation."

"Have they not realized their words holds no weight in this land no more?" Seiten-sama asked, a hand in those coffee colored horns on the side of his head.

"Be as it may, the UN can, and most assuredly will, punish the Empire should we refuse their deployment." Kaori-san says, nodding my way. "Despite the agreements with some men from the IJA, the UN does not seem to believe our armies to be able to halt this invasion on their own."

"Which is a valid concern." Masahide said, as the only one who could maintain his habitual tone, seeming unaffected by this tension. "Should the Capital fall, no one knows the damage that would inflict in our people. And should we triumph… those who are against their intervention might spread wings towards their bases."

"That is something we cannot allow." Yohime-sama agreed, subduing a frown. "Raiko, Kaori, I assume some sort of proposition for shared command has been issued?"

"Indeed, milady." Kaori-san answered, her brows arching down. "As Yuuhi-sama desired, we have proceeded with the negotiations with a peaceful outcome in mind. However, many are those who do not wish to cooperate with the UN. Also, their insistence in taking over the operation, despite their clear desire to employ nuclear warheads, has been doing us no favors."

"As sickening as it is, we are left with no choice but to continue with this farce of cooperation despite their now obvious intent. And in turn, that clear stance has only worsened the atmosphere surrounding the other Regent Houses' forces." For if we call them out in their true intentions, they shall use their laws to take over our nation. With the excuse of 'safeguarding' the wishes of humanity.

Pah! The wishes of the Americans, they should say. I know it is futile to remain in such obstinacy, yet I cannot simply entrust those foreigners with the duty that is guarding our Capital.

"Raiko, please. I believe Yuuhi made her wishes clear already-" Yohime-sama narrowed her eyes, I bowed in apology. "If His Highness requires our aid, then we should allow the UN's TSF units to be part of the Defense of Osaka. That being said, we shall not allow them to take control of our units, not unless they desist in their desire to employ the warheads. Daizaburou-sama, may I ask you to handle the discussions with their representatives?"

"But of course, milady." He bows down, quickly returning himself upright. "I assume Yuuhi-sama shall be relaying the order before dusk?"

"Yes, I shall inform her so that she can form her own report. Please keep your comms open, she might require your assistance to reach a final conclusion." He nods, she smiles. "Now then, to ascertain nothing is out of order. Daizaburou-sama and Gekka shall be handling the UN in these days." Both of them nod. "Seiten and Kaori will be in charge of the joint preparations with the IJA." They also nod. "And finally, Masahide and Raiko shall be overseeing our own fellows' preparations." We nod, and so, she sighs. "Very well, I shan't take more time from you. Should you require anything, please waste no time in contacting me. May the tailwinds remain in your backs, my fellows." She stands up, we also do and bow to her as she leaves with Mana to attend to the House's defenses and preemptive evacuation efforts.

And once she does, all of us sigh in unison.

"I cannot believe she refuses to evacuate…"

"It is how she is, Raiko." Daizaburou-sama says, folding his arms and nodding. "Our Lady wouldn't abandon her servants, no matter how dire the future seems to be."

"However, should we surrender so easily to these orders, Father?" Gekka asked, a clear trail of hesitation left in her words.

"It is what it is. His Highness has accepted the proposition of the Ikaruga House for this mission, and as such, we should contribute our share to defend our Capital." He then put his hands behind his back and rose his chin, staring down at all of us. As imposing, as stalwart as the tallest mountain. "And I expect you all to keep any sparks quite away from the surface. This is a turning point in the invasion, we cannot risk our disagreements to bring forth failure to this operation."

"Are we truly left with no other choice, Daizaburou-sama?" I ask, twinges of pain reaching my palms as I coiled my hands.

"… We shall gain valuable time once this horde is repelled. For now, we must all come together for this fight. Else…" He breathes in deeply, giving his back to us. "Now, we are all busy. Let us waste no more time." And with no further words, he leaves.

…

I am appalled. Is this all we can do? Bow down to the Ikarugas, cooperate with the UN after what the US has done… Repining of this is futile, I know. And yet, I cannot seem to be able to rein in my breathing nor my fists.

"Well, we should all be on our way." Seiten-san says, "Let's all remain with our comms open, in case any sudden developments occur."

"Indeed, so should we do." We all nod in agreement to one another. "Well then, godspeed my fellows."

We all salute each other, departing for where we are needed in.

Exiting the meeting room, the ensuing chaos in the hallways was but a cicada's cry in comparison to what bile I had to restrain on myself. Now that I no longer am in Yohime-sama's presence, I am free to bite my lips with gusto, to release the combustion that my eyes had to drown before.

To demand to take over the operation… To wish to make us genuflect in such a way… And for us to be left with no choice but to follow the plans of the Ikaruga House, all thanks to the ineptitude of the Shogun… Such arrogance… Unacceptable!

"Sister, please do not frown so. There is much yet to be done today."

"I am clearly astonished that you aren't displaying any signs of anger, Masahide. Those vermin just ran away, plunging a colossal gash into our strategy, and yet they dare to demand control over our forces!"

"Sigh… Remember that the UN and the US are not one and the same. Also, we weren't present in the meeting where the discussion occurred, and Yohime-sama did say both parties were to blame." He smiles, placing a hand on my shoulder. "Our duty hasn't changed, has it? Be it with the UN or the US, we have only one goal ahead of us."

"I know, I know you speak the truth, however… Why has His Highness decided to not alter the plans, then? Why not evacuate the people?" He closes his eyes and begins to walk again, I follow closely. He rearranges his red dress' neck as his steps began to slow down.

"… It would seem Ikaruga-sama's proposal fed into his pride. And, since they had the backing of the Takatsukasa House, that makes three to two. Considering the Kujo House lost their lands to this invasion, and the damage that is ongoing to the lands of the Saionji House, I do not doubt the Shogun is most anxious to halt this invasion."

"… And is that an excuse for placing the people at risk? They're only shaming their station by displaying such a fragile veneer. To cling onto, to glorify a last stand when we have vast options at hand… Such uselessness, to think we have to cooperate with these sniveling fools…"

"Sigh… Sister, please. After the sacrifice General Makabe did to buy us time to prepare, it was obvious Saionji-sama would favor Ikaruga-sama's views." He then looks back, smiling as he sends a hand to that spike in his forehead. "However, I do not recall ever saying we were submitting to his orders."

"Then, what are you planning to do? Time is against us as of now."

"Well, you heard her wishes. Yohime-sama desires to maintain the peace in the Royal Guard, until the threat is nullified. And we shall abide by her orders."

"However, that would-"

"Yes, we cannot simply remain idly by. Yet, we cannot show our fangs either." He stops, looking out the window.

As I do, seeing the incoming sunshine peering through the clouds, almost timidly so, as if it were painful for it to see the state our House was in.

Out there, beyond the walls of the Main House, soldiers are assuredly scurrying about, forming trenches and arranging supplies. Support Vehicles filling the roads, preparing our machines, both TSFs, artillery units, and infantry backup for the coming attack. The serenity of our beautiful Kyoto, the peace of our Osaka, tarnished by the stench of oil, the smoke overflowing on the streets as if it were snow during the harshest winter in Hokkaido, no vestige of our beloved peace is left on the streets.

"I heard His Highness was planning to make a grand announcement out of this operation tomorrow, is it true?" I look at him, he nods as he sighs.

"Indeed. Regardless, we have our own set of goals to achieve."

"And… what would your orders be, milord?"

"… There isn't much to do." He smiles, chuckling for a moment. "Nothing more than to go sightseeing."

"Huh? Are you planning on patrolling the city?"

"No, that won't be necessary. We shall simply lay low for now, and prepare for the battle as best as time allows. I require to make some calls, can I leave our fellows in your hands for a moment?"

"Of course! However, are you truly certain you wish us to remain quiet? Why are you resigning yourself to following Ikaruga's lead?"

"… You simply trust in me." He again smiles as he leaves the window, going towards a set of stairs to our left. "Do make sure everybody is ready before I return, in case anything comes up."

"Yes, sir!" I salute him, he sighs when he sees me, and then proceeds to ascend the stairs.

… Sigh. Why would you wish to remain still, Masahide? To go sightseeing… Whatever could you be thinking, and why won't you speak of it with me. Moreover, what has compelled Yohime-sama to remain quiet?

Perhaps is the need to remain united after the news that America has broken the treaty, and they do not wish to instigate any further discussions in the Regency Council. Yet…

… No, if Masahide has chosen this path, I shall trust in him. Focusing on my orders should be my priority.

Returning to our offices, everyone seemed to be, understandably, most preoccupied with our situation. Relaying the orders, our fellows returned to their machines to double check them, making sure they were readied if the need arose shortly.

Sending the batches of deliveries, checking the reports that confirmed the distribution of our supplies and the positions of our men, the clock tickled the minutes away. Sharing mails and directives with my Fudai fellows, it seems the queue of orders has been done already. Now, all I have to do is await the reports in case anything out of order occurs.

Taking a moment to make me some coffee, surveying the mails we had received, I prepared the agenda for the remainder of the day, adjusting it to fit the progress done so far. It does seem as if our true adversary was time as of now. And yet, to not send evacuation orders? Hmph, Ikaruga-dono is far more prideful and arrogant than I was led to believe. I simply cannot understand how Maya manages to serve under him.

The door to the office opens, Masahide enters with a few folders under his arm and his assistant following right behind him.

"How are the preparations coming along, Sister?"

"As fast as we're able. Do I have your agreement to rearrange the patrols and infantry positions?"

"Haha, you would know better than me." He sits down, I hand him a cup filled with coffee. "Saki-san, could you detail the reports to Sister?"

"Yes, Masahide-sama." She gives him a bow, opening the folders. Placing some of her brown hair behind her ear, those yellow amber eyes looked my way as she straightened her black dress.

I nodded at her, slightly narrowing my eyes. I certainly appreciate her devotion to my lord brother, however, by goodness do I not understand why he chose you as his personal assistant. A mere baseborn, being in our personal office as we discuss such grave matters… What have you done to deserve such an honor? Standing stiff, she bows down before speaking up.

"It seems that Daizaburou-sama shall be commanding the troops in the HQ. He won't be deployed to the field during the mission."

"What? Why not send our most experienced leader?"

"Well, there are concerns over his age, after all." Masahide says, placing the cup on the table. "Also, it seems His Highness wishes to promote him, to fill in the spots left by the losses we suffered before."

"I see… Nothing we should concern ourselves over, then." If Daizaburou-sama is chosen as a General, then we shall reap many benefits from that. Even if Yuuhi-sama's relatives aren't in agreement with her wishes. "What else, Saki?"

She nods, turns the page, coughs and yet again plays with her hair, and finally sends a gaze my way as she continues.

"Seiten-sama will take care of the Wolves on the field, Masahide-sama shall lead the Lupines as usual, and it seems that you have been chosen as the leader of the Chains for the time being, Raiko-sama."

"Eh?! However… I believed the Chains had been wiped out during the last defense operation."

"… Indeed." He takes a sip, his eyes crashing down as shooting stars. "We're just adopting the name. Some of our men that have lost their units shall form a new squadron under you. Precarious as it may be, it is all we could muster in such short notice."

"Please do not burden yourself so. However, how did you convince our superiors to allow me to lead a squadron so suddenly?" No matter what we did, we never managed to convince those hardheaded men to give me a promotion. Truth be told, I was resigned to such achievements.

"Well… The situation has forced their hands."

"So, if I'm not with you, who shall be your second-in-command? Kaori-san will be returning to Arashiyama by dusk, if I'm not wrong."

"Indeed, she won't stay with us. However you should not worry Sister, for Kobayashi and Onda are still with me."

Ugh… Tozamas. Both low ones, even. Why is it that we cannot procure trustworthy Fudais in this faction? To leave our backs to the Tozamas and inductees… What has the Guard come to be?

"So, who will my fellows be?"

"Um, here are the details, Ma'am." Saki hands me the folder, bowing down. I take it from her, giving her the thanks she earned, then handing her a cup so that she can serve herself some coffee.

I open the folder… and feel what fragile veil remained holding my frown melting away.

Picking up the pages, the emblem of the Koubuin House engraved on all pieces, the new formation of the Chain Squadron under the Wolf Battalion with me as the leader, even when they still refuse to promote me.

Sigh… What foolhardy way of being. Had I been married, they would have presented the promotion without delay, I am sure. No matter, focus on what's important.

The marks in the report… I pass over the first pages in quick succession… only to see the majority of the members of the squadron are nothing but inductees. Grr… It is no surprise those fools allowed me to lead this cavalcade of peasants. It is as if I were a peasant leading a squadron of the IJA. Such humiliation…

No. Focus, I have to protect our House. My pride matters not. They shall regret making me a leader, for I shall use this chance to further climb my way to them. And it is a good chance to reform these inductees, to make sure they become loyal to our faction.

"… Are you displeased, Sister?" He asks, leaning forward.

"… I suppose I cannot deny it. Yet, I shan't complain. I won't let this hamper our efforts."

"You still won't recognize the inductees as your fellows?"

"… Forgive me, but I cannot see how you would." I know it has been a long time, and I know some have proved their loyalty to you, as they should, however… I cannot bring myself to place my whole trust in the commoners as you do.

"Sigh… Fine, it shall suffice. I suppose Ichimonji shall be working as your second-in-command, all things considered."

"… Well, at least there is a known face in the squadron."

Reading the profiles, I am pleased to see that at least I recognize most of them. It is disheartening to see only Amanohara has noble blood in the whole squadron, yet I suppose that shall suffice so long as they obey. And Ichimonji is a competent man, despite his origins. In any case, I know all of them are truly skilled, and loyal to us, so I've no reason to repine about-

… Huh?

"… Masahide, who was the one who suggested the members for the formation of this squadron?"

"I was, I chose the members that I believed you would be most comfortable with, that would also convince HQ to assign you as their leader. Whatever is the matter, Sister?" He tilts his head, smiling. Saki seems to quiver as she sees our exchange, choosing to go sit in a corner, as she should. "Surely you are not going to repine about why I placed Takeru-kun under you, are you?"

"But of course I am!" I slam a hand onto the table, unable to rein in my frown. "Whatever are you thinking, placing that baseborn in my-"

"Sister, you do know of his standing, and I won't allow you to speak ill of him." Frowning much, his vocal sheathe began to be emptied.

"W-What? Even if he's recognized as a fellow… he still is-"

"Sigh… He has been doing all he can to be of use to us. What is the problem with having him working with you?"

"Just about everything."

"Oh, please Sister. I assume you have not forgotten the debt we owe him for his aid. He did convince Yuuhi-sama to stay away from the battlefield, and that is something no one other than him could do." Leaning on his palm, he gives me a small smile, that, sadly, I cannot return.

"Utter no further balderdash, you cannot be serious. Why do you continue to support him? What do you even see in that… kid?"

"Well, he surpassed Daizaburou-sama's training along both Mion and Shion, after that incident no less, and he has displayed an excellent aptitude in his piloting training course. And he has been a good fellow to me, more so than many of our noble peers. Clipping his wings is not wise, not when leaving him behind would do no good to anyone."

"… Sigh. I cannot convince you to remove him from the formation?"

"I am the Head of our House, so no, you can't." He chuckles, I groan as I ruffle my hair, the spikes that lay on my sides. "Please don't take it so hard, Sister. I merely believe… he needs to be on the field."

"… Needs to?"

"Yes. And I believe you to be the best limiter to his usual… recklessness. You are the one who knows best how to restrain one's inner wrath, after all. And he, just as you, faces much disdain from our peers."

"… How many times must I tell you that we are not similar? I am a Shinpan, he is a commoner."

"Sister, if Yohime-sama hears you, even I won't be able to shield you from her wrath." Placing a hand on his chin, he stares squarely at me. The low rumbling in his voice allowed me to see it, even if he used our Lady as the deterrent he is truly adusted at me.

"… Why must you insist in comparing me to that baseborn?" I look down, feeling as if under that frozen waterfall in the mountain where Daizaburou-sama trained us.

All I've done… All my efforts… And you always compare me with him. I do admit my initial views were… mistaken at the time. I recognize he has talent, for he also triumphed in that mountain. And

I do see his loyalty to us, to you more importantly, however… it is an insult to our traditions to simply accept Shirogane as he is now.

"… To accept the way in which he mingles with Yuuhi-sama, to treat him as a fellow despite his lacking manners and meager rrsults, what example will we be setting?"

"… And yet, he has always come with good suggestions to us. And, despite how you treat him, he still finds it in him to be polite to you."

"I am a noble, I deserve the reverence. However, my views of him aside, why send a young child to fight? He has not finished his training as of now, has he?"

I may not favor Shirogane, that is true. That does not equal not seeing his good points. For he truly has aided my lord brother many times, and it is thanks to him that Yuuhi-sama has agreed to not fight. A negative view I may have of him, yet I see no point in sending the boy to his death in this way.

"You see, I merely believe that…" He closes his eyes, leaning back. "For what shall come after this, it is necessary that he fights during this coming battle." No signs of hesitation, his frontal conviction would leave the incoming sunshine in shambles. As usual for him, he grips tightly onto his line, never wavering even when faced with a closed curve. "So, can I leave him in your hands?"

"Sigh… So you say he's necessary? To what end?"

"Please, Sister. You know who he truly is."

"A mere baseborn." I refuse to acknowledge him as anything else. He hasn't done anything to be deserving of the privileges he enjoys.

"… 1st Lieutenant, please do look after your fellows. No matter their origins." He frowns, leaning back.

"… My apologies, milord." I bow to him, yet again feeling a dagger on my neck. "I did not meant to clash against your wishes."

"Then, you'll accept him as your fellow?"

"… Only if he begins to behave."

"… You do know you're being as stubborn as he is, right?" He chuckles as I groan, widening my eyes at the atrocious comparison. "Haha, peace. I was merely jesting."

"Mmgh… I shall try to remain composed. However, if he challenges my authority, I shall remove him from the mission. Is that alright with you?"

"… Yes, that is acceptable. Do try to not spark up a conflict with him."

"I shall not. You made your wishes clear enough, milord. If you deem him necessary… I will make sure he answers to your expectations." He grimaces as he sighs, shaking his head slightly.

"Please do not go overboard with Takeru-kun. Now, I believe you should head to meet your squadron, time is of essence after all. We shall handle the office work from now on."

"Yes, so I shall. Um… Thanks for letting me lead a squadron on my own, milord."

"Please, you always were the most suited for the role. And, for what shall come, it is necessary you gain the recognition." He smiled, yet this time he showed me his teeth as he did.

Something laid buried in his words, that most odd melody that echoes whenever he… asks me to crush someone's fangs.

"… I see. Well then, I'll take my leave here."

Standing up, I salute him. Smiling, he simply waves at me as I leave, as relaxed as always. I nod towards Saki, who stands up and bows to me before going to Masahide's side.

Walking through the hallways, the Tozamas and Fudais making way for me to pass through once they clearly see the burgundy tint of my dress, I begin to ponder his words, a hand on my chin.

He requires me to finally lead. Despite how reticent he always was to allow me to move on my own. And yet, he placed that accursed boy on my squad. What is the need to further test me so? I have already devoted myself to you, all these years… are they not enough to please you, brother? Why do you harbor such doubts towards me? I only desire to aid you…

Yet, why do you hold him in such high regards? Why must you insist in treating inductees and commoners as fellows? They're already a majority in our force, how many more privileges do you wish to give them? Why should we, members of the Shinpan, have to bow down to…

Sigh… Peace. My wishes matters not. I exist to serve my lord, and his wishes are what I should be focusing on, for they are what shall bring us victory. We have a critical battle coming our way. Precarious and rushed as it might be, there is a vital role for me to play now. The through briefing with the rest of the Koubuin Fellowship is yet to come, however, my very first role as a leader, after losing my project all those years ago… And at such an important time, to boot. Even if most of our army is made out of commoners now, I am still the leader of this squadron.

Relax, and remember the code. There is nothing to fear. Simply trust in your Lady and fellows. Sigh… Within the warrior, fear must not make nest…

"Oh? Good afternoon, Raiko-san!" A voice snaps me out from my inner meditation. Immediately recognizing the unkempt chestnut hair, I could only grimace at his greetings.

"Shirogane, it is Raiko- sama to you."

"… Why are you always pissed off at me?" He narrows his eyes, ballooning one cheek. He shakes his head, making his brown and orange trainee dress sway as he does.

"Because your manners are as lacking as always. A Royal Guard should not act as crass as you do."

"Mmgh… My apologies." You do not look apologetic, in the slightest. "So… I was told I could join your squadron, right?"

"Sigh… First, yes, that is the case. Second, where are your manners? Surely you would not be planning to continue to address me in such way."

"Huh? What did I do wrong now?" Widening his eyes, he truly seems flabbergasted.

"You have yet to address me properly, for one."

"… I did use an honorific this time." The nerve! What do they see in you?! "So, um, how can I help out?"

… Well, at least he now seems willing to listen. Stiffly standing before me, he awaits my orders. However… His usual cheer is lacking from his complexion. Abnormally tense, his brows seem to be lowering more and more. How odd. No, on the contrary, it is good to see him react accordingly to the situation.

"Um, Raiko-san?"

"… I was merely pondering something. Also, I said it was Raiko-sama." He groans, I shake my head. "In any case, weren't you ordered to go to the briefing room?"

"No, I was pesteri- I mean, cough, offering my help to Seiten-san, and then Masahide-san told me that I could join your team. Yohime-san also gave me her permission a while ago." And you also must tarnish our Lady with your vulgar manners… "So, after I finished helping out in the kitchen, I came looking for you."

"… So you took valuable time out of his schedule to force yourself into the fight? You even went as far as to inconvenience Yohime-sama? Do you even know what we have on our hands here?!"

"O-Of course I do! But I only wish to help out. Even the Pickles are getting out to fight…" Wringing his hands and locking his gaze with mine, he manages to hold it for a moment.

"I believe you should not refer to them with such a term." I cannot believe it… Why do the Tsukuyomi allow you to do so? After all this time… I am reiterating myself but, what lies within you that they hold so dearly?

"Guh… A-Anyways, I know that… we are in danger. I know that everyone is on edge. But especially because of that I want to lend a hand. So please, let me fight with you." And then, he gives me a deep bow, and remains in that posture.

Hmm… There is a thin line separating bravery from idiocy, that is true. Yet, it seems he isn't blunt enough to not see what's around him.

"So, I take it you shall obey my orders in the field?"

"… Yes, Ma'am."

"Hmm… I assume you shall address me as you should, then?"

"Guh… Can I just use the rank instead?"

"Why must you refuse to use the proper honorific?" I cover my eyes with a hand, unable to restrain a frown from forming.

"… I'm just being friendly with you since we're fellows, but you're always mad at me." Looking slightly to the left, he plucks his lips while folding his arms. "Also, Masahide-san did tell me to be patient with you."

"Siiigh… Firstly, I assume you do know what you have become part of? This won't be a mere fight. The Capital is at risk here." He looks down, arching his brows, seeming to be biting the inner side of his lips.

"… I know. I want to defend our home, with everyone else. I don't know what I can do… But I believe I can at least be of use with my speed, even if only to deliver supplies to the rest." Hmm… Point taken, that is a simple role he could fulfill.

"I suppose, you have finished your piloting training?"

"Well… Technically, I'm still a trainee…"

"Yet it seems Masahide and Yohime-sama allowed you to deploy with the main force, unlike most other trainees in our faction. Why have you not accepted to be sent with the rest?"

Slowly, he returns my gaze. The fixation, the arching brows, the small quivering in his lips… It is odd, unlike anything I've seen from him all these years.

"… I don't want to run away. I want to help in protecting our home, whatever it is I can do. I don't want to… stand around like during the attack last year."

Losing his smile, a frown began to surface. Yet, what surprised me the most were his eyes. I had believed Masahide to be merely jesting, and yet… that same hollow crest, that same copse collapsing into a sea of smoke, that same all-encompassing tidal wave I see in my reflection after my courting meetings, all that fire… was now within him as well.… It seems Daizaburou-sama trained you well.

"… I want to be there for my fellows. Please, would you accept me in your team?"

He then remains silently awaiting my words, his hands ever so slightly shaking like a humming bird's wings. And yet, there is no hesitation, not a single speck of doubt in his eyes. However… I wonder if his veneer shall endure the flames of a real battle.

"… You do know you might be marching to your death, right?"

"… Y-Yes."

"People will perish, assuredly. We shall be going to the frontlines."

"I-I know."

"And furthermore, all the Royal Guard's best men shall be present. The reputation of the Koubuin House rides on our shoulders."

"Yes, Masahide-san told me that too."

"… Do you still desire to accompany us? I am sure Yuuhi-sama would prefer for you to stay by her side." As much as it makes me sick, to see you mingling with her.

"… I know that… those monsters are coming here. I know what that means." Closing his eyes, biting his lips, his voice was filled to the brim with ripples. "But, precisely because of that is that I wish to fight. I want to prove myself useful, to protect our home together." He looks at me, unfaltering. And even when I narrow my eyes, as if I were seeing something left to rot, he does not flinch. "Inexperienced as I am, I wish to help. Please, would you allow me to be part of your team?" He then bows down again, enduring the silence.

And, no matter how much I wait, he doesn't return himself upright. Could it be that he has finally learned his place? Hmm…

"Hmm. I shall allow you to join me, on one condition."

"Really?!" He immediately bolts up, getting closer, far closer than I'd like, his eyes wide as he smiles, both yet again as shining as the sun. At least motivation isn't something he lacks.

"Shirogane, kindly give me some space."

"Eh? Oh, sorry." He takes a singular step back. Just that. Urgh…

"Sigh… I expect you to follow any and all orders I issue, no matter what they entail. I will not tolerate you speaking out of turn. And you are to address me respectfully, as you should always have done. Now, do you believe yourself able to perform as I require you to?"

"Yeah, I got this Raiko-sama!" Smiling and doing something I believe he refers to as a 'fist pump', he nods twice at me.

"… Sigh. Why must you… No, matters not. You give me your word that you'll do as you're told?"

"Yes, I'll do my best!" He stands upright, giving me a salute. After looking into his eyes for a moment, I return the gesture.

"So, did Masahide mention anything regarding your placement in my squadron?"

"Hm? No, he only told me that he would ask you to let me be part of the fight." Ask me, huh. "He said you would decide if I could fight, and that I had to do what you said."

"Is that so? Why do you think he asked such of me?"

"… Well, since Yuuhi can't fight, you need someone to take her place, right?"

"… That is true." I hadn't pondered that. I wonder, did you force her to stay back so that you could have your chance to shine? How much of your motives are truly honorable? "By the by… I heard you convinced her to remain behind. What compelled such insistence from you?"

…

He didn't answer.

Looking down, he winced as if in pain.

"Shirogane?"

"… I don't want to see her in danger. So… I think she shouldn't fight."

"… Do you think yourself better than her, perchance?" The insolence… How dare he…

"… No, it's not that. It's just…" He scratches his head, looking upwards as his lips twist.

"… And? Whatever is the matter?"

"… Shouldn't we protect her wellbeing? She shouldn't fight, she's too important." Looking away, he furrows his brows.

Is he doubting our capabilities to protect her? The gall… How dare he… Wait, could it be that… Scratching his head and looking up… I see, he was being sincere. He truly does not wish to see harm befall her. I do welcome how she agreed to not participate, yet… It is clear, in those quivering hands, in how his words were swayed into a low tone as he spoke just now. Fear has made nest within him.

"Are you certain you are in the right mindset to partake in this battle? If fear resides in you, it would be for the best that you abstain from joining us."

"Wha… I-I'm not scared!" An instant reaction, an unnatural arching of his shoulders, hands coiled and an abundance of falsehood in his frowning complexion. "I am ready to fight for our House, and protect all of our fellows."

Nothing but a wounded animal's wail, showing his fangs to deter possible hunters from advancing. Yet, the cub has not learned how to properly manage intimidation.

"… Do not be thinking yourself capable of beguiling me. Do you think yourself able of standing by the side of tried and tested Royal Guards? You, a mere baseborn?"

"Ah… W-Well, I just want to-"

"Speak louder! Do you think yourself worthy of such an honor? To hold the wellbeing of our fellows on your shoulders?"

Closing his eyes, his posture lowering like a flower under a downpour, he bites his lips. Without even hiding his inner turmoil, without even hesitating. Such weakness… Do you not see that such gestures will only make others look down on you? Be resolute, lift your face, and rebuke my words! Let your resolve ignite your passion, and prove to me your devotion to our House! Otherwise… What has them placing such hopes onto your so small shoulders?

"Answer me. Why do you think yourself able enough to stand with us?"

"… I know I'm not the best trainee." Still looking down, his voice sounding as if it were coming from underwater. "Compared to the rest, I'm always lagging behind, and my manners aren't as proper as they should. I barely passed the test at the mountain, too. But… But even so…"

Finally looking my way, his eyes didn't waver. In image of a blade just polished, an armor in complete luster under the sun, he held my gaze as he inhaled through his nose, once more standing in attention.

"I do not wish to lose anything else, simply resigning myself to not being able to do more than just stand back at the last line. It is true, I am not fit to stand by you or Masahide-san now… But I rather be here, for anything you might need me for. So, I once again ask to you Raiko-sama… Would you allow me the honor of joining your squadron?"

"… And why would I prefer to have you instead of someone as well trained as Yuuhi-sama?"

"Because if she dies our House will face a lot of hardships. But if you lose me… well, you just lose a… baseborn trainee." It seems as if he were biting the inner side of his lower lip once more, yet again looking down in a futile attempt to hide his grimacing. "And thanks to, well, my place here… I can fill her slot without much trouble for anyone. I know I'll probably just get in the way… But… this is all I can do help now."

… I see. He merely desires to safeguard Yuuhi-sama, despite his limits. If we had to call for any reinforcements, with how short staffed we already are, that would indeed be a setback to our plans, no matter how small. It is true that, by using someone who is already in the fellowship, we save that valuable time that would have been sorely wasted negotiating a last minute transfer by merely granting him the opportunity to deploy under an emergency procedure. Furthermore… It is true the rest of the Koubuin family wouldn't mind to send him to his death, so it also would be easy to gain the permission to have him fight.

By placing himself in danger, he protects Yuuhi-sama and saves us the need to look for someone to take the slot she would have to fill. Using himself as a shield, knowing the odds he would have to face.

… I suppose such feelings would be welcomed. If he keeps her so closely in his heart… And, he never was one to lie much. While having a commoner so close to her isn't something I support, if he venerates her as he should… I find no further reason to object.

"… I see." I place a hand on his shoulder, he looks up. "I suppose, you are prepared to work to prove you're worthy of being here in her stead?"

"Of course, Ma'am. I… I truly want to help, I'm ready to fight."

"Then, you claim to be a warrior?" I squint my eyes, bringing my face closer to his. "Are you saying you're resolute enough to allow me to wield you as a blade? To cleave through the adversity until our Empire's enemies lay wasted on the soil?"

"Yes, Ma'am!"

A small, minuscule shiver on his frame. Petrified as if he had gazed right into a medusa. Holding his breath as if under a harsh waterfall. And yet, despite my frown, my unrestrained combustion, he remains still, returning my gaze.

I suppose I could give him the benefit of the doubt. At the very least, his presence shall spare Yuuhi-sama from this battlefield.

"… Very well. I shan't object further." I release him, restoring the much needed space between us. "We are halting the BETA's advance. No one shall breach our city, Shirogane"

"Yes!" He nods, vigor replenished in his stare.

"Good enough. You may join my squad." Smiling widely, he seems to catch himself before he raises a fist towards the ceiling. "We're wasting time. Come, our fellows are waiting."

"Um…" He looks down for a moment, before offering me a handshake. "I know we haven't gotten along well, but let's do our best together, Raiko-sama!"

"… Indeed, for a fruitful battle." I tightly shake his hand, he closes one eye as I do. "Now, let us go."

"… Y-Yes."

"Hm? Is something the matter?"

"No… It's just, Masahide-san wasn't kidding when he said you were stronger than him." He rubs the palm of the hand I shook, brows furrowed.

"… Hmph. It is on you for thinking me weak." And Masahide as well. Both of you should redouble your kendo efforts. Especially you, I still cannot not believe you passed Daizaburou-sama's test to become a Mugen Kidou user. "Now, come along." I hastily walk down the hallway. He follows closely behind.

He seems to be have enough drive, enough to not react against me as he used to do. Yet, I still am opposed to having him sortie. He hasn't finished his training, it is outrageous to send him to battle. Regardless of his own safety… he would compromise my formation, it would be akin to marching with a tickling bomb. He could put us at risk, even after medication is applied to him.

… I wonder how was he even allowed to take part of the mission. Merely insisting wouldn't have been enough. Frustrating and shaming as it is, Yohime-sama cherishes him much and so does Yuuhi-sama. Masahide did say that he thought he was necessary. I look back at him, he raises a brow when I remain staring.

What could you have to do to make him give you his blessing? A commoner you may be, yet you have endured our ways of life. I shan't ignore the efforts you've done, nor the sincere adherence to our faction you harbor, however, why would they allow you to go to the frontlines? And for milord to have chosen me as your limiter, when he would assuredly fare better in the role.

I continue walking, he no longer is stiff or tense. Crude he might be, yet he truly is loyal to us. I suppose… that if he mends his manners, I could begin to consider accepting him as a fellow. However, that leaves a question open. Masahide said Shirogane 'needs to' fight now. In the same way I am required to lead, and while being his very first commander as well. Whatever could be your plan…

Sightseeing, he said. The Capital might be in true peril, yet Masahide is the only one in our faction who hasn't submitted to the dread that is so palpable in the, he wouldn't agree to send the boy to his death only to protect Yuuhi-sama. I cannot see what he is planning.

In any case… I suppose it is up to me to bring out his best potential. Hands are required, and he won't be the only trainee sent to fight, if Kaori-san's report is to be believed.

… Sigh. Well, there isn't much I can infer for now. Let us focus on my first briefing, and then I shall go to meet with my Shinpan fellows.

All I hope is that he truly remains obedient and doesn't give me trouble… or gets himself or another killed.

---

November 22nd. 06:39 AM.

(Command Post. Girls' Room.)

[Chizuru]

---

I slowly open my eyes, sunlight is coming into our room from the window. It's so rare, how long has it been since I could enjoy the sunlight as I woke up? Sleeping in the top bunk is really nice. I stretch slowly within the sheets. My untied hair is all messy, my back is still stiff from all the things we had to go through.

As I raise from my bunk I see Mitsurugi sitting near the window, looking at the ocean as she stroked her hair that was not done in the usual ponytail yet. I get out of bed and approach her.

"Good morning, Mitsurugi."

"Uwa! Sakaki… Do not surprise me like that." She caressed the top of her head as she looked at me, she clearly just woke up too.

"Sorry, I wasn't trying to scare you. Are you okay? You don't look so good." Considering all we went through I think it possible she could be in much pain, especially after climbing that cliff.

"I am fine. There is no need for you to worry." She brushes her hair to a side, since she always has it on a ponytail she must not be used to having it so close to her face.

"Are you sure? After how much we had to climb yesterday it wouldn't be weird that-"

"Sakaki, I am fine. Please do not worry, I was just… lost in thought." She returns her gaze to the sea. It really looks beautiful.

"It's a really nice sight, right?"

"Indeed. It would be nice if one day all the people of the Empire could enjoy such a beautiful sunrise like this."

"Yes. With some luck we can make it to that day and enjoy a peaceful life too." Like how it was before the BETA, before most of our budget was reallocated to the army. When… I still had you by my side, Mom.

"Peaceful…" Mitsurugi repeated the word a few times as she rested her chin on both palms as she continued to look at the ocean.

I grab my fatigues and start changing. Hopefully we can talk things out with the girls before going for breakfast, I only hope they're willing to listen. I know that convincing them that Shirogane isn't a cold blooded murdered is a tall ordeal, but I must try. I'm sure they'll understand once I tell them he did it to save us.

" Yaaaawn… Uuugh… Huh? Chizuru-san?!" Yoroi woke up, and since I was standing next to her bed she saw me as soon as she opened her eyes. Her messy hair pointing in all directions, she sprung upwards in her bed in shock.

"Good morning Yoroi, we made it back yesterday at night."

"Oh, so that's what that was. That's a relief, I thought you wouldn't… Eh? Who are you?" Yoroi's eyes turned wide as she gazed at Mitsurugi. She rubbed them for a while and looked at her again, mouth hanging open.

"Hm? Oh, forgive me. I was lost in thought again. Good morning Yoroi." She smiled at her, but that only made Yoroi's mouth and eyes to widen even further.

"Meiya-san?! But… You look completely different!"

"Yes, it is me. Do I look so different without my hair tied?" Mitsurugi seemed puzzled, resting her face on one of her palms.

"Yeah, you look… more normal, I guess? Your face also looks more relaxed than usual."

"I see. More relaxed, huh?"

"So… You three passed the test?" Yoroi got out of her bed, fixing her hair.

"Yes, it was a hard ordeal but we managed to arrive just in time." I say as I fix my glasses.

"And are you all alright? Did you get hurt?" Her tone shifted as she got into her pants, cracks painted in her complexion.

"Don't worry, we're alright. Mitsurugi got treated when we got back so her bruises should heal up soon. Shirogane also got treated, he's the one that got it the worst but he should be alright."

"What happened to Takeru?"

"He got hit by rubber bullets, twice. And after that he got in a tight fight with one of the chasers. He was the one that spent the longest time on the infirmary."

"Will he be alright?" Yoroi says as she finished getting in her fatigues.

"Of course. He is in no danger." Mitsurugi answers as I put my pants on. "Do not worry Yoroi, he just needs some rest."

"Well, if you say so. Did you know? The food here is delicious! I hope we can eat some more before leaving!" I'm envious of how easily she recovers her smile.

"So quick to change moods as always. Did you three have any troubles during the last part of the test?"

"Man, lemme tell you about the sushi here, it's just the best! Those octopus rolls were like nothing I've ever eaten!" She completely ignored me. Ugh, she never changes.

"Yoroi, please listen to us. We wish to know how-" Mitsurugi also got ignored.

"But the orange juice is totally the highlight here, it's so refreshing! I wish we could have real food back on the base too." Her shoulders drop as she sighs.

"We also ate a bit when we arrived, so did you all have any-" Ignored again, Yoroi listen for once!

"I'm gonna miss the food, really. So anyways, the Instructor gave us a ninety. Can you believe it?!"

"Huh? You all got… Of course, you arrived much earlier than us."

"Tis only natural that you would get such a score. Congratulations, Yoroi. Me and Sakaki scored a seventy." Mitsurugi gives a nod, but then looks down as she rests one hand on the back of her head. Right, we really didn't deserve to score more than him at all.

"Oh, not a bad score! And Takeru?"

"Shirogane scored a sixty five." Mitsurugi folds her arms and answers her. "He took the blame for many mistakes we made, I believe it was quite unfair."

"Eh?! He almost failed it! Why? Hey, why was he blamed?!" I raise my hand at her to calm her down before speaking.

"Don't raise your voice, the Instructor just did what she wanted as usual. Mitsurugi did try to speak up but she didn't listen. The important part is that we all passed." At some point I had started to make circles in the air with one finger. When did I get this weird habit?

"Hmmm… And what about now?"

"Hm? What do you mean?"

"About Takeru. Are you going to keep leaving him out of everything?" I can't blame her. I deserve that evil stare since I was very harsh to him all this time.

"Yoroi, do not look at Sakaki like that. We both had a talk with Shirogane and cleared many misunderstandings we had about him. We no longer see him as an outsider. He's one of us."

"Huh, really now? So, no more hostility? Can we all start, you know, being friendly with him? You're not lying, right?" Mitsurugi sighs as she looks down again.

"Yoroi, as your Squad Leader, it was my fault that things got like this, so don't look at Mitsurugi like that. I won't exclude Shirogane anymore, not because of his skills but because I saw that he is not who I thought he was." Or more like I got my head out of the ground and started to see him and not the whole mess of prejudices that was inside of me.

I knew from the first day that he got someone killed, that he was just like me. But I forgot about… No, I ignored that. I justified myself saying that he was just a foreigner, that he got involved in that terrorist attack, that the one who died was also a dirty foreigner, that he was going to abandon us like those Americans abandoned Kyoto and all its people. Yet, I was the once who acted like the Americans. I acted like a piece of shit, and I deserve all the blame they throw at me.

Because Shirogane didn't, he had the mental strength to not snap at me. I'm sure he must have felt horrible when he saw us running away, leaving him behind. And yet, he came to our rescue and didn't abandon us, not when I doubted to fight back or when I got stuck in that net. I do not deserve his kindness. I may not be made to lead, I'm sure Mitsurugi would make a better leader than me, Ayamine might have been right all along. Shirogane-kun is too kind for his own good, to forgive me without even screaming at me or punching me once.

… Wait, Shirogane-kun? When did I… Why am I calling him… Huh, I feel like I'm forgetting something here. Did we… No, I never called him like that. Ugh, maybe the food here is making me feel bad. Well, I am exhausted. I'll go back to normal once we're back at the base, I'm sure.

"Yoroi, Sakaki speaks the truth. We do not wish to keep splitting the squad apart. My conduct towards him was most unproper as well, please forgive me for making both you and Tamase uncomfortable all these days." She gets off the chair she was in and bowed to Yoroi, making her flinch and start waving her hands in the air.

"Meiya-san, please don't! You don't have to do that. I mean I'm just… You're… Someone like you shouldn't…"

"I am nothing more than your squadmate. And I troubled you and could have caused the squad to fall apart because of my jealousy. It was my weakness that caused all this, if you must blame someone let me shoulder all of it. Please Yoroi, forgive me."

Mitsurugi's righteousness and sense of honor are met with a shivering Yoroi, whose eyes are back to be white dots as she fumbles her arms in the air.

"Don't say that! You don't have to be like that, just… You promise you won't do that anymore? You won't assume things without speaking with him first? Chizuru-san, you promise too?"

"Of course, as a leader I will use this failure to learn from it. I won't make the same mistake twice."

"I also bow to never judge Ta-… Ahem, Shirogane again." Did Mitsurugi just stutter when she tried to say Shirogane's name?

"Then let's leave this whole thing behind us! Phew, I'm so glad we can all finally-"

" Groooooaaaannn… Screeeeeech… "

An otherworldly sound startled us, Ayamine raised from the top bunk she was in. Eyes still closed she opened her mouth wide, letting out another of those howls. Her hair was a mess, it looked like one of those hedgehogs I've seen on some books.

"Kei-san, good morning!"

"… Bad morning." She swayed from side to side as she slowly opened her eyes. Or one actually, her left eye is swollen and she can't open it well. "… Oh, you're here?" She gazed at me, twisting her lips downwards.

I won't react to it. No, I won't. I have to start acting like a leader should, no more of that childish attitude.

"Good morning Ayamine, we arrived yesterday. We managed to pass the CCSE as well."

"… Oh goddammit." What?! What's her problem now?!

"Ayamine, what do you mean by that?"

"What do I mean by… YAAAAWN ."

"Cover your mouth when you yawn like that. It's rude."

"Shut it, you're too loud." The nerve! Why do you have to be like this?!

"And what did you mean? Are you dissatisfied that we passed the test?"

"… Kinda." She gives me side glance as she gets out of bed.

"Sakaki, do not start a fight please. We do not need another scolding." Mitsurugi spoke in a soft voice as she was in the middle of doing her ponytail.

"I know, Mitsurugi. I know that I shouldn't. It's just…"

"You okay, Mitsurugi?"

"Hm? Yes, thanks for asking Ayamine. We all made it in one piece. We all got beaten up by the soldiers we had to face, but we are fine. How are you? That eye of yours… Are you alright?"

"I'm good. And Special-kun?"

"He passed as well. He protected me when I was in danger, he's nothing like the Americans. So please don't treat him coldly anymore, he is the reason we made it here. He was there for us when we needed him the most."

"What do you mean, Meiya-san?"

"Eh? Special-kun protected you? But…" Ayamine always listens to Mitsurugi with quite some attention, but when I speak she reverts to her usual self so I'll remain quiet for now and let Mitsurugi do the explaining.

She tells them about how the soldiers chased us, about how Shirogane saved us, about how he had to kill them to stop them from harming her when she was unconscious, how he kept helping us after that and how he didn't abandon us during the second chase when he had the chance.

"All Shirogane did, he did it with us in his mind. He took care of most traps himself, he even helped me many times as we were climbing, he lent me his strength so that I wouldn't fall when I thought I could no longer move. I'm not telling you to change your mind overnight but could you give him another chance?"

"… If you say so." She closes her eyes as she strokes her chin.

"I'm so glad you agreed Kei-san! Miki-san will be very happy to hear these news!" Yoroi beamed at her as Ayamine finished changing into her fatigues.

"Oh right, shouldn't we wake up Tamase?" Mitsurugi said, looking at the bed where the last one was still sleeping as she purred.

"You're right Mitsurugi. Tamase… Tamase wake up." I got to the side of her bed and spoke to her, shaking her shoulder slowly.

"Hmmm… Uughh… Yaaawn… W-Whu… Huh?" Her half asleep eyes looked around, her hair was more of a mess than Ayamine's. How does she even get this thing in place every morning?

"Miki-san good morning!" Yoroi also came to her side and greeted her with a charming smile.

" Yaaaawn… Uwawha… Morning… Snore… Snore… Zzz…"

"Is she… still asleep?" Mitsurugi stared at her as she tilted her head.

Tamase looked to be awake, but was still in the bed and her upper body was swaying back and forth slowly with her eyes half open.

"Tamase, are you awake?" I grab and move her shoulder which makes her twitch.

"Huh? Eh? What… Sakaki-san?"

"Yes, that's me. Good morning, are you finally awake?"

"Huh? Yeah, I'm… Eh? Eh? Sakaki-san?! When did you- Mitsurugi-san too?!" Her eyes became white dots too as she made small squeaky sounds as she saw us.

"Good morning Tamase. We arrived yesterday night, we managed to pass the CCSE too."

"Oh, is that so? And… Um… Are you all alright?"

"Yes, Mitsurugi and Shirogane got roughed up quite badly, but we're fine now."

"So you did nothing." Ugh, Ayamine smirks at me as she fixes her hair.

"Ayamine, what was that?"

"You two, stop it. Don't ruin our day of victory. Tamase, we owe you an apology." Mitsurugi bows to her and I follow suit.

"Eh? What's this about?"

"Due to my weakness, I ended up causing you and Yoroi quite some trouble. I didn't meant to make you feel bad, I apologize for how I uncomfortable you must have felt these last weeks. I do not ask you to forgive me now, but please give me a chance to mend my mistakes."

"I also ask you the same. I know I said many harmful things to you, but please give me another chance to prove you that I am worthy of being your leader. Forgive me, Tamase."

"Eh?! Awhawha… No, I mean, yes, no wait… I mean, don't bow like that! So… Um… Can you tell me what happened? Why are you apologizing?"

This time I tell Tamase what happened. Her face resembled that of a cat after hearing lightning roar in the sky, her eyes shrinking and clouding over as if she had seen a ghost behind me as I told her that Shirogane killed some soldiers, and even more when I told her how we were chased.

"It was all thanks to him, really. Without his help we would have failed the test, but we also would have gotten harmed quite gravely." Mitsurugi nods at my words.

"So you're no longer suspicious of him? And what about Shirogane-san? Does he… resent us for leaving him behind?" Ayamine, who was gazing at the ocean, turned to look at us as she heard Tamase's question. Yoroi also had her eyes light up in interest.

"He did say he didn't want to be alone but… If charges are pressed against him we have no proof to prove his innocence. Shirogane will surely be blamed for killing those two soldiers, despite doing so to protect us." I should do something as his Squad Leader, but what can I do? Can I convince them to come with me to speak with the Instructor? I don't know what they think of him now that he killed two soldiers. What if-

"What's up with that shit?!" Ayamine talked suddenly making me jump a little. Her frown was growing by the second.

"What Sakaki meant was that we have no proof to prove we were in danger. The Instructor didn't believe me when I said I was knocked out unconscious, and my words are just that. Empty words without backbone. So even if he is willing to let this offense slide, he… he might be kicked out of the army. Or executed." Mitsurugi closed her eyes as she held her elbows tightly.

"Eh? But… But that's not fair! He… He saved you, and yet he's gonna…" Yoroi trembled as she grabbed her sides quite strongly.

"Of course it's not fair, but it is what it is. We have no proof, so there's not much we can do."

"Hmph, of course you'd say that."

"Ayamine, what do you mean?" I do not like her tone or that side glance she's giving me.

"What else would you say? You used him to get the result you wanted and now you're putting the blame on him to save yourself. Wasn't it your fault that happened? Why didn't you help Mitsurugi fight?"

"Ayamine, stop. Sakaki was-"

"I was also getting beaten up, didn't you hear us?" She raises one hand with her palm facing the upwards before resting it on her chin, looking at me with sharpened eyes.

"And where's the proof? You said she got knocked badly while you were just restrained, isn't that weird?"

"Huh? What do you mean?"

"She was unconscious, how do we know you weren't cooperating with the soldiers? Where's your proof?" Her eyes drill into me as she takes a step towards me.

"Ayamine, that's rude. Sakaki was also-"

"I was there, I know they don't prove anything but I still have all the bruises I got. Or perhaps you would like to see the cut I got on my right leg when I did try to fight back? Or maybe you could ask Shirogane, since he was the one who saved us? C'mon speak up, what is it now?!"

"… You got a cut on your leg?" Ugh, I'm so done with her! I raise my pants a bit and show her the large cut I got, almost up to the knee.

"Sakaki, when did you… No, why did you say nothing?!" Mitsurugi was outraged.

"I did treat it, but we didn't have enough bandages. Had I used them on my leg we wouldn't have been able to patch you up. Shirogane got harmed on his shoulder and his back so I used most of my bandages on him."

"Huh? Special-kun… on his shoulder…" Ayamine repeated my words with her eyes closed.

"Sakaki, we must go get this treated at once!"

"Mitsurugi, calm down. I already got treated yesterday when we arrived here, after eating. Don't worry, I'm fine now. So, is this proof enough for you Ayamine?"

I know it isn't, I know you were right. I'm a failure as a leader. Dad was right, I'm too emotional to be a soldier. No matter how much I try to hide under a shell, I'm just… I'll never…

"… Sorry."

"Eh?"

"Sorry. I take it back." Ayamine gave me a very small bow, eyes down looking to a side.

Did she just apologize? To me? After I screamed at her?

"Ahem… Then, did that explain all we went through?" Mitsurugi asks them, they all nod.

"So… Ayamine, what happened to your eye?" She pouts and looks away. Hey, I'm just worried you know? We may not get along but you're still my squadmate.

"… I took a hard one to the face."

"Huh?"

"Yeah, that was hard to watch. I never thought you would drop to your knees so easily." Yoroi nodded at her words. Tamase shivered while giving Ayamine a sad look.

"Um… You three, what does that mean?" Mitsurugi asked as a light blush appeared on her face.

"What I said. I got hit by a baton when I was wrestling with those damn soldiers. They could have aimed at my shoulder or the top of my head, but fuck no, they had to go for the eye. It didn't help that the thing was hard and thick as hell. Fucking assholes, shame I couldn't pay them back." It's so weird to see her so openly emotional, cursing like that.

"Luckily Miki-san returned the favor later. She totally saved us back then. You should have seen that slash! Man, just remembering that is making me shiver!" Yoroi hugs her sides as she shakes comically a little, making Tamase blush as she hides part of her face under her blanket.

"Yoroi-san! You promised you wouldn't talk about that!"

"Tamase, can you explain to me exactly what did you do?" Mitsurugi got interested in this and approached them.

"Meiya-san, don't let Miki-san deceive you! When he was grabbing us from behind she was the one who endured the most, she's a real wild one despite her cute looks. And then she went on him so fast. Really, you did him in so hard I thought you were actually Meiya-san for a sec there!"

"Yoroi-san stop it! You're making me feel bad!" She covers her whole face with her sheet.

"Tamase, what did you do? Please, do tell me about this fight." Mitsurugi asked her with stars on her eyes. Tamase gets out from her bed, fidgeting a bit.

"It wasn't so amazing really. I mean yeah, I roughed him up quite badly but just because they wanted to harm us. The women that fought with that man were really rough on me and Yoroi-san, so Ayamine-san had to step in and take both of them at the same time. I just wanted to do something to help." Ayamine got close and petted Tamase softly.

"Those two bitches were too rowdy for my taste. But I got to see the man on his knees, so I'm satisfied. And Tamase here was the one who spotted them and got shit done. Good girl." She gave us a thumbs up as she kept petting her. What… What did these three do?

"So… Exactly what happened?" Mitsurugi asked with clear stars in her eyes.

They tell us of how they got to a bridge and took some time deciding what to do, and then the soldiers found them. Then they struggled, but the soldiers didn't want to just let them go and got aggressive against them. So it wasn't just us, they wanted to harm us. Dad… Did you have anything to do with this?

"That fight with that man was really scary, I was shaking in my boots the whole time. Right, Miki-san?"

"Yeah, I could barely hold my knife at the time. Ayamine-san got really hurt, and it was so scary, I thought we were gonna get so hurt." Tamase hugs her sides as she quivers.

"Damn soldiers." Ayamine threw a punch to the air while frowning.

"So, how was your fight with the soldiers?" Tamase asks us as she also gets out of bed, looking for her uniform.

We tell her of all that happened, with Mitsurugi telling her of what occurred yesterday.

"And after they captured us, they forced us to fight against them. Sakaki was helping me and even then we took quite some time to defeat our opponent. Despite her support, we had to rely on underhanded tactics to defeat her." All of them go 'Whoa' at her words.

"Even with you two fighting together… What about Takeru?" I fix my hair into my usual ponytails as I answer her.

"He dealt with his fight quite nicely if I say so myself. I did saw him get kicked to the ground once, but he seemed to have regained the upper hand at some point."

"Ooh… That's our Shirogane-san for sure." Tamase smiles as she changes into her fatigues.

"Stubborn bastard, that he is." Ayamine, are you insulting or complimenting him?

"Anyways, Shirogane got the worst beating in that fight. And yet he finished before us." We might start our piloting tests, but after taking such a beating I've seen that I need to polish my CQC skill in case it ever becomes necessary. Thankfully, Mitsurugi agreed to lend me a hand with that.

"Hm? Sakaki, how do you know that? Did he not approach us as soon as we finished restraining our opponent? Did he not finish his fight at the same time as us?"

"No, just a while before that I got thrown to the ground, remember? And then I saw him restraining the other one. She surrendered apparently. Though I still don't know why she had to go and stomp on his back like that before, even if she suspected him of having a mask."

"They… Sakaki, what do you mean?" Mitsurugi stares firmly at me. I tell her of what I saw and what Shirogane told me when I asked him about it.

"Maybe they suspected him of being a spy since he came from abroad?" Tamase said timidly as she fixed her hair in place.

"He said the same and insisted that he was fine. Those two girls are really weird that's for sure." I can't stand them. Maybe because they were playing with us?

"Special-kun is suspicious. But what you said is even more, you think they had a story with him?" Ayamine said as she put a patch over her swollen eye.

"We really don't know much about him." And he lost his memory, too. "We should just ask him about it, but yesterday he was really tired. Maybe we should just let this be?" I need to think of his mental health. Shirogane was under a great deal of stress and he will have to face a trial now, we should give him some space.

"Yeah, let's give Takeru a rest for today. We gotta go talk with the Instructor to stop him from being kicked out!" Yoroi proposed with glee. I'm so glad to see you all still think of him as your partner.

"Shirogane-san was always trying to help us, so we have to make it clear that he didn't do anything wrong. Those soldiers did treat us really badly too, so we should talk too!"

"True that. Those three were really weird, and they hurt us badly." Even Ayamine?!

"Good to know we all agree on this, right Mitsurugi?… Mitsurugi?" Her eyes were closed as she was clawing at her elbows for some reason.

"… A story with him? What does that…"

"Meiya-san?"

"Eh? What is it?"

"Mitsurugi, are you alright? You've been lost in thought a lot since you woke up." She brushes her hair off her face and straightens her posture on the chair, crossing her legs.

"Yes, I was just… debating with myself."

"Well, we should all go have a talk with the Instructor. It might be useless, but we gotta try. Wanna go now or after breakfast?"

"I say we go now!" Tamase said as she finished tying her hair.

"Same." Ayamine gave a nod as she put on her boots.

"Me too. The sooner the better." Yoroi said as she also finished putting on her boots.

"Alright, let me put on my boots too and we can be on our way."

---

Same Day. 06:03 AM.

(Near the Shore.)

[Takeru]

---

And here's another one. With this I have the two seashells I wanted to give them, one for Kasumi and one for Sumika.

I couldn't sleep at all. Worst part is, I know I had kind of a bad dream, but I can't clearly remember what it was. It felt like… I was lost in some sort of hallway, and something real bad was about to happen. Nobody was letting me out for some reason, but then I saw something kinda… sharp. Like some… I dunno, as if someone were scolding me. And then I woke up, drenched in sweat and groggy as hell.

"Is that all, Shirogane?"

"Yes. Please give these two to Kasumi when you get back to the base. And thanks for everything you've done for me, Instructor." I salute her and she returns the gesture.

"Do not mention it. Forgive me for giving you the news on such a short notice, I got the orders as soon as I woke up. Well, you're ready?"

"As ready as I'll ever be. Let's go." We make our way to the helicopter that had just arrived.

I'll be going back to the base alone to be interrogated, and probably punished, for the murders I committed. I may end up getting kicked out of the army, Sensei might not be able to cover me this time. All I give her is trouble, no matter what I do. Why do I always screw things up? No, I can't have one loop in peace without some horrible accident sending everything to hell.

Takamura must be on the base already, so Tsukuyomi-san will start being hostile to me if I make it out from this. Those two Tsukuyomis must have surely reported my killing spree to Maya-san, or worse, to Yuuhi, so I can kiss my safety goodbye. Just when I started getting along with the girls. Universal middle fingering at it's best, this is one big mess. Well, what did I expect? You can't spell wreckage without AGE.

I had a brief talk with Sensei a few minutes ago. Apparently she got a call yesterday from someone important, she didn't mention who, that requested her to take me off the army. She was cold and went straight to business, so I'm sure she's under quite a lot of pressure. Considering my encounter with the Tsukuyomis I bet that someone was Yuuhi. That purple bitch, I'm sure she's threatening Sensei. Do as I say or I'll stop supporting Alt. IV or something along those lines.

But I got into this mess and I'll deal with it alone. Worst case I kill myself and see if I get another chance. If I don't, at least I'll stop creating negative causal data.

All because I got caught by those two… Fucking Royal Guards, not only you ruined this world's Takeru's life, you also want mine as well. This is a clear case of Takerucide, not that anyone cares about it here. As soon as the Shogun brands me as a traitor the girls will again start treating me like shit. Or worse. Even if I live, what can I do in this situation? I can't save this world alone. I'm no hero.

This is all Yuuhi's fault. She's the head of the Empire, she's the head of the Royal Guard and going by the words of the Tsukuyomis she's the one that wants me dead. I know that this world's me wasn't a bad guy, his feelings are similar to mine. He just wanted to live in peace, but you all didn't let him. He also was probably branded a traitor before dying. That was two years ago, just when Yuuhi became the Shogun. She's clearly the biggest enemy I have in this world no matter how many times I loop. As soon as she learns about me she'll come for my head no matter what I do.

If only I hadn't met those damn overgrown pickles… Pickles? Who am I talking about? The Tsukuyomis? I mean, if they let their hair loose… Since it's green one could call them pickles.

"Pfft!" Ahahaha… Is this one of his memories? So he also had a weird taste for lame jokes, just like me. The Pickle Cousins, huh? That sounds so fitting for some reason.

The door to the helicopter opens, two MP come down from it and restrain my hands. I do not resist, I don't want to make more enemies. I'm here to help, even if I'm spit on the face. My world is on the line here, I have to endure this.

I still don't know if I can trust in Sensei. First she doesn't tell me of the chasers, now she sends for me to be interrogated without giving me any sort of reassurance. I know she can't let anything get in the way of her plan, but I thought we could trust each other. She better have a good explanation for this. I need to get a clear answer from her about this, either to devise a new path forward or as key intel for when I have to loop back.

I don't care what is coming after me, be it the UN or the Shogunate, I'll cleave through you. I have my world and his world to protect, as the sword that smites evil. Because he was alone, just like me. And nobody heard his screams for help.

I'll do all I can. Even if I'm met with another disaster. I ride the copter, the Instructor gives me one last salute before the door is closed. The chopper takes off.

I close my eyes. There is nothing to be done now. No hard feelings, no regrets. All I can do is stop being so negative, to cut my losses as best as I can. I never thought that marching to a sure death would feel so hollow, so meaningless.

Just when we had got to understand each other… Just when I thought I could have just a few days in peace… I want to rest. I want my peace back.

But I need allies if I want to reach my goal. And without Sensei, there's no way my plan will work. I may be kicked out of the UN, the Shogunate is after my head…

I do have some cards left to play… But if Sensei doesn't want me on her side because I'm more trouble than I'm worth… I may need to start looking for a new ally when I get the chance. But first, I gotta make sure I stay on the base, or alive for that matter, until I can see the 00 Unit being activated and how the second theory works in action.

I don't think that threatening them will do me much good in this situation. What can I do to convince them to not kick me out?

Into the Undercurrents

Chapter 25: Into the Undercurrents

---

November 22nd. 0 7:23 PM.

(Yokohama Base. Interrogation Room.)

[Takeru]

---

"Please take a seat, Cadet Shirogane."

I'll be damned. I can't believe this is happening. Kawazoe-san, my old PE teacher, is apparently a Major in the IJA and Mooroka-san, the headmaster of Hakuryo High, is some sort of secretary in the UN. Ugh, this does not look good. I know how these two do things, I still remember how many times I got called to the detention office back in school.

Zoe-san… No, Major Kawazoe stares at me with knives in his eyes, crossing his arms on his chest. Unlike the Zoe-san of my world he has a really big scar on the right side of his face going from his eye to his forehead.

"Sit down already!" Sigh, his attitude hasn't changed though.

I sit down slowly, my hands are still restrained.

I didn't get a chance to speak with anyone when I arrived here, they brought me to this room immediately. Sensei and Kasumi were nowhere to be found when I got back, though that's for the best maybe. Last thing they need is to get involved with me right now. C'mon Takeru, let's roll that dice. No intimidating them, no blackmailing them. I know I won't be able to dodge the blame but I gotta stay here. And I have an idea of how I can do that. Even if they throw the 'no proof' card like the Instructor did. I need to make them say it outright and clearly, that I'm getting kicked out. Only then my plan will work. Or so I hope.

"I suppose you already know the reason why you have been brought here, Cadet?" Mooroka-san speaks in his usual slow, uninterested tone as he takes a sip from his tea.

"Yes, sir. Because of my actions against members of the chaser squad that took part of the CCSE, correct?"

"Indeed. But before that let us ask you a few questions, is that alright?"

"Of course, sir."

"Well then, Cadet Shirogane, is it true that you were stationed at Yukon for two years?"

"Yes, sir." So they don't believe my cover… Go figure.

"Can you tell us the name of the squad you were part of?"

"It was the Daedalus Squad, sir. My callsign was Daedalus Seven." Major Zoe seems displeased about my answer. I don't know if they knew anyone from Yukon, but at this point I just gotta keep faking it.

"Oh? So you were part of the Daedalus Squad, huh? Give us some details on your training regime."

"That's classified, Major." And here it comes, Zoe-san's patented loud screams from hell. He gets up from his chair, moves to the side of the table and slams it with his palm. So he's the same here, huh? He has no chill.

"Huh?! What was that?! Classified my ass, you're being questioned here! You don't need to talk about confidential stuff, you retarded piece of shit! We're asking you for some routines, schedules, tangible things that are commonplace in a training program." My ears hurt just from hearing him, can't we send him to scream at the BETA? I'm sure they'll get so scared they'll fly off the planet. Or the solar system.

"I was forbidden from speaking about my time in Yukon by Vice Commander Kouzuki, so I cannot comply to your order, sir."

"If that's the case then, take a look at this." Mooroka-san put a paper in front of me. A declaration from High Command?

"What is this?"

"Ugh, this is why I hate dealing with idiots like you. This is an order from High Command, to you Cadet Shirogane, ordering you to answer all our questions truthfully. If you are found lying… Not only you'll be kicked out of the army, you'll also be taken to have a more… through questioning session." The Major licks his lips as he makes his knuckles crack.

"Please Major, there is no need for such hostility. Cadet Shirogane, can you tell us about your training regime now?"

Shit, I did not see this coming. I did read up a bit on the Blue Flag and what Prominence did… But will it be enough? Heh, whatever. At this point I'm so done all I can do is smile through it and wait for my chance to strike.

"Well, we did around the same amount of physical training I did here during November. The schedules were more tight, we barely had free time. Our shooting and sparring sessions were mixed with different fighting methods from all around the world. The lectures were the same as here."

"Aren't you being very vague, Cadet. What is it? Thinking up some excuses? Huh?!" Sigh… God, what are your vocal chords made of? Steel? Are you related to a certain red haired attorney, by any chance?

"Major, please. Let's move on to the next question, you could not take part of the CCSE with your squad, why was that?" Mooroka-san's ears must also be made of steel or diamond. He's just there sipping his tea like nothing's wrong here.

"I got into an accident with someone from the Russian side of Yukon. That got me a penalty, and my punishment was to not be part of the CCSE."

"Hmm… Yes, there were many incidents with the Soviets during this year. When did this happen? What did you do?"

… Think, anything will do. What did I… Wait, I did get into an 'accident' during my past loops. Let's use that to spew more half truths. But…

"Speak up! What did you do?! When did this 'accident' happen?!"

They're onto me, I think they know I'm lying. I'm screwed, doesn't matter how I lie, if they have a database about these incidents… Deep breaths, I can do this. I'll just spell more half truths and keep going. After all… I'll probably have to reset this loop anyways.

"I hit a 2nd Lieutenant, some of us got lost as we were walking around and then some Soviet soldiers spotted us as we were trying to go back to base. We tried to speak with them in English, to ask for directions, but they started screaming at us, trying to detain us." I got punched by the gray haired soldier during the past loops, so let's just reverse that and say that I did it. That should work. "I couldn't stand seeing that, so I punched one guy so hard I knocked him out, and we ran away. After we got back to base and notified this to my Instructor, I was sent to the detention barracks. I was told the incident didn't escalate because it happened in the border of both camps. However, since I did something very stupid I was punished accordingly. Is that clear enough for you?"

"Don't talk back, you bastard!"

"Major." Mooroka-san glares at the him as he takes another sip of tea. "That was clear enough, Cadet. Now let's move onto the main topic." Gulping what clogged my mouth, feeling again a cold shiver down my back at the slow narrowing of his eyes, my stomach coated itself for the coming cross examination. "You assaulted 2nd Lt. Sora Zanama, breaking her arm. She will need surgery to cure the wound you inflicted on her. Care to explain what happened?"

"I was under a great deal of stress during-"

"Don't put any excuses! Say what you did!" And of course, he keeps shouting, veins pouring into his widening eyes as if someone just found an oil reserve, seeming to be just about to pop from his face.

"Major, stop interrupting him. Please, continue." He's completely chill, though. As if the screams didn't affect him at all.

"I was under a lot of pressure, they had aimed at my face with a gun when they chased after me. We were not notified of their involvement, so I doubted their words. That woman kept trying to harm me gravely, she kept aiming at my wounded shoulder. During one of those struggles, when she tried to smack my head with her baton, I grabbed her arm and bent it, to make sure she would stop attacking me."

Grimacing, all the plating in my stomach begins to melt from inside, again feeling as if I had acid eating me up from within. Gulping again to try to ease up the burning sensation on the back of my throat, I veer my eyes from theirs for a sec.

… Actually, to be perfectly honest, I don't know what came over me at the time. Saying that I was enraged is an understatement. I never… thought myself able to do something like that, to trespass that limit of violence. The same for what came after that. I know that, when shit hits the fan, I will be forced to retaliate with full force, and yet… Licking the inner side of my teeth, I can't really say my hand was forced to that extreme. I could have incapacitated them, as I did to the red head at the end.

But I didn't. I killed them, barely hesitating. And at the end… All I could think of was that I had to kill them all, just to make sure nothing went wrong. I wasn't even thinking on the consequences after the CCSE.

I wonder, was that his fury? Did this world's me go through something similar, perhaps? And that triggered a leak of his heaviest info into me due to my strong negative emotions at the time?

If so… and considering what I heard before… of how they made him a monster…

"So you consciously tried to break her arm?" He takes out a small notepad and starts writing something on it.

Taking a second to cough and refocus on the matter at hand, returning their stares, my mind burrows a poker face from Sensei, to hide the disquiet that came from what I was thinking about.

"… As I said, I was under stress. I probably was affected by a strong violent emotion when she attacked me. I… I truly don't know what came over me." If I admit I did it consciously it's all over.

"Hmm… Why did you not knock out Captain Ryoutarou Nanase?"

"I had no need to do so, he had already surrendered. He was not a threat to me anymore." That is not a lie.

"Fair enough. Then let's move on, when you found the rest of the Wasp Squad, what motivated you to kill them?"

"… When I spotted them they were kicking my squadmates vigorously. I thought about scaring them or shooting at their feet, but then I noticed one of them was unconscious. When I saw that-"

"Wait, unconscious?" Their expressions get tense, alert, hostile as if the 991 had just blasted on the speakers. Mooroka-san is narrowing his eyes as he takes some more notes, the Major's hands are tightening onto his forearms.

"Yes, sir. Cadet Mitsurugi was unconscious when I found them. She was not reacting to the kicks, not even those that were aimed at her head."

BAM!

Pain spreads through my face as Major Zoe punched me, way too fast in his motion for me to even brace for the attack. Damn bastard… so this was their plan all along. They have no intention of listening to me. Well, as expected.

"Shut your fucking mouth, you son of a bitch! There's no way that's true!"

"Major! I will not tolerate another outburst."

"However, sir, he's clearly lying. I knew those guys, they were good people. They would never harm anyone like that. This damn foreigner is lying through his teeth, soiling the honor of my comrades!"

Heh… No wonder those bastards did what they did, with you backing them up from the shadows. This place… The UN… This Empire… is rotten.

"Even so, you have no right to harm him. This is an interrogation, do not take actions that will bring shame to the IJA." Zoe-san grimaces and, after sending another glare my way, returns to his chair.

"… Sir, I am not lying. They were kicking her while she was unconscious."

"Then, where is your proof Cadet?" Leaning forward while readying his notepad, he stared back at me, right in the eye.

Oh shit, here we go. Can't say I didn't see this coming. Half way there, just some more words and I'll have 'em where I want 'em.

"How am I supposed to prove something like that?"

"The burden of proof lies with you, you claimed that they were harming Cadet Mitsurugi. I now am asking you to present proof to back such a statement." He you sound just like Yuuko-sensei.

He also ruffles his hair, that uninterested gaze and tone are really similar. I think he was Sensei's Sensei back in my world so maybe they have a similar relation here as well.

Regardless, he's a son of a bitch. What can I say to prove that?! How am I even-… No, don't lose it. There is something I can do to keep the flow going.

"While I have no proof myself, you can question the gray haired soldier and the woman named Ruri. They were the ones that were kicking them more strongly." Major Zoe stared blades at me again, but managed to stop himself before he shouted.

"I see. So you have no proof, huh? Then, you just killed them because you felt like it?"

"I never said that, sir. Why don't you interrogate them about this?"

"Because you cannot prove that your squadmates were in any danger and we already received the Wasps' report, and in it they painted a very different situation to the one you describe. Your actions have no justification, it looks like you're trying to shift the blame onto someone else. And before you ask, your squadmates cannot testify on this matter since they're involved in this too. We can't count on their impartiality." And then, he drinks some more tea.

Of course, they can't admit that they actually harmed Meiya. That would be getting in a fight with the Shogun, so they have to keep that from reaching the light. I thought this would happen, so I'm on the right track for now.

"Then, if there were no witnesses, how can you determine what happened?"

"Because you killed two people unnecessarily and harmed gravely three another three, while the Wasps did no such harm to the people you say they harmed. We received no report about these injuries Cadet Mitsurugi should have sustained according to you, and Cadet Sakaki was also unscathed according to the report Instructor Jinguuji sent us."

… So Marimo-chan really took their side, huh?… No, don't be an idiot. She's not Marimo-chan. She's someone else. Just like during my first loop, I know nothing about these people. Chances are, she's also another mad loyalist who hates foreigners.… She did push me around a lot during the trainings, and not even once did she try to stop the girls when they were being pricks to me. Yeah… I should have seen this coming.

… I already knew they were different. They're not my comrades. I'm an outsider from their point of view. Sigh… I'll just… focus on my own goals, and try to make peace with them. That's all… all I can do. They're… gone. They're different… and with all that has happened thus far, it's obvious how they see me.

Mooroka-san coughs after noting something down, then taps his glasses as he speaks up again.

"Also, our soldiers have more credibility than you. They have served our nation for years while you were in America. In this situation, who do you think we will believe?"

So basically I'm screwed because I acted first? I had to wait until they got a broken bone? Until they died? What the hell is wrong with this shit?! The UN really is a shithole, if this is how they operate.

"… It was not an unnecessary action, they still committed abuse against-"

"Cadet Shirogane, you have no proof to back up your claims. Since we need to ascertain whether this outburst is an exception or something you do regularly, can you tell us of your life before enlisting? About your friends or family?"

Ugh, this is going how they want it to go. And I can't speak up without Zoe snapping at me again. Gotta find an opening somehow. But so far so good, if this keeps up I'll be kicked out. Just a little more…

"I do not remember any of it, sir. I don't know where my parents are, or even if they're still alive." He again notes that down in his little notepad.

"Oh, really? So… We don't know who you are, and you have no one to vouch for you. That's such a shame." Your bored tone hints otherwise. "Well then, do you have any contacts left in America?"

"No, sir."

"Hmm… Alright, let's leave that topic behind. Next question, why did you force your squad to separate?" He entwines his fingers and narrows his eyes at me.

"Huh? I did no such thing, sir."

"Then why was your squad split during the CCSE?"

"We had to separate when the chasers appeared. Three had crossed the river and shot down the tree that we had tied the rope to. Mitsurugi and Sakaki ran away after that, leaving me behind."

"Isn't that most odd, right Major?"

"Indeed, why would they abandon one of their comrades?" They narrow their eyes at me, they have already decided how this is gonna end.

"They probably didn't see me as their comrade at the time, for them I was a foreigner that was going to betray them at some point. That's why they left me behind." Despite telling the truth this time they don't seem to believe me. Mooroka-san shakes his head slowly while Zoe-san is tightening his fists.

"Hmph, to think you'd try to taint the honor of your squadmates. Makes me sick." Major Zoe looked like he was smelling a corpse.

"Cadet Shirogane, let me be frank with you. As soon as the report from Captain Nanase reached High Command, your punishment had already been decided. The possibility of executing you was what was being debated on."

Well shit, that escalated quickly. If they do want me dead I'm screwed.

"However, the fact that you then teamed up with your comrades and somehow managed to finish the CCSE in time was a very impressive feat. The short but concise report from the volunteers from the Guard showed us that your talents were perhaps more impressive than we thought."

The report from the Pickles, huh? Going by how they were glaring at me I was sure their words would have been hostile towards me. Mion was back to the lightless, hawkish eyes after all. They must have reported my identity somehow and then confirmed that 'I' am dead. But then, why did they give a good report on me instead of contacting the authorities? Or maybe…

"However, we lost five surface pilots because of you." He drinks some tea, taking a breath before continuing. "There is no feasible way in which you can make amends for such an offense, no matter what punishment is given to you. And you have no proof to back up your claims, you have no one to vouch for your conduct. Given the answers you've given us, and the answers we received from the Wasp Squad, I have reached the conclusion that you were conscious of your actions and decided to kill knowing what that entailed. You could have harmed their legs, but instead you chose to kill. We also could find no one who knew about you in Yukon, though it is possible they all died during the Incident. Sadly, we have no idea who you are or what was your conduct like before, so we must act with our safety in mind. I'm sorry, but we have decided to take you off the UN army. You will be deported to America shortly."

Yes, F-ing finally. Let's push some more buttons, just to make sure.

"… And there is no way for me to prove that I'm not some psychotic murderer as you seem to think? Seems to me like you're just rushing the verdict in favor of the chasers, for some reason."

"I told you to not talk back!" In a flash he gets up from his chair and comes at me, fists tightened. I tense up, bracing for the coming hits.

THWACK!

BAM!

POW!

" Cough… Cough… " That son of a bitch… There was no need… to beat me up like that… Damn corrupt bastard, even the IJA is full of shit, it seems.

"Major, that is more than enough. Cadet Shirogane, during your short stay in this base you had numerous fights with your squad. I was told you were seen twice arguing with Cadet Mitsurugi on the days after the Niigata Invasion, is that true?"

"How… Yes sir, that's true." Shit, that's coming out now of all times?!

"After you kept fighting with her, despite her strong resemblance to Her Highness, you want me to believe you went to her rescue like some sort of hero?" He frowns as he adjust his glasses. Sigh… Hero, huh?

"I'm no hero. If I see a comrade in danger, even if they're someone I don't get along with, I'll do all I can to help them." Returning their glare head on, holding it without doubt, since this is not a lie. But my gaze is lost as he closes his eyes and shakes his head again.

"All I care about is the truth, and all I see in you is someone with no credibility whatsoever. Cadet Shirogane, your skills might be truly something else but your attitude leaves much to be desired. You may find greener pastures in the US Army, I do not wish to see such a promising soldier either dead or in prison for the rest of his life. Be grateful you will get out alive, many were asking to make an example out of you."… Checkmate.

"… So that's how it is, huh? If you had already made the decision you should have said so from the start, would have saved us all half an hour of our lives."

I see them tense up, Major Zoe was about to snap at me again but Mooroka-san waved at him. He entwines his fingers like Yuuko-sensei does and leans forward.

"I simply wanted to make sure we were making the right choice. You have many great skills, if we could find someone who could vouch for you and prove to us that you are not a violent element, I would have considered speaking with HC to revise their decision. Alas, that ship seems to have sailed."

"If that's what you wanted, why do you refuse to ask about what happened to my squad?"

"I said no backtalk! You son of bitch, who do you think you're talking to?!"

"Major Kawazoe, for the last time, remain quiet. You're here as a security measure, I am the one that makes the questions here.

Cadet, I believe I already told you why we won't talk with your squad." Alright, that bridge is burned. Just some more pushes, I'm almost there…

"I'm just telling you that if you do not listen to all the involved parties you cannot make a fair judgment. Why do you listen to the Wasp Squad but do not try to hear what my squad has to say? Our words as are important as theirs, and you also can't be sure that they're not lying and covering each other's backs." Zoe-san's eyes flare up, storming up from his chair, slowly stomping his way towards me. If I gotta endure some more punches, let 'em come.

"You little shit… You haven't even got into a cockpit yet and you're so cocky?! You're nothing more than a proud American trainee! You'll pay for insulting my-"

"Major Kawazoe, please step outside." Tapping his glasses, he sends a firm, unwavering stare towards him, which makes him grimace, twisting the scar on his face.

"Huh? Secretary… I didn't…"

"Step outside, now." Mooroka-san glares at him, and slowly and with heavy steps Zoe-san gets out of the room, sending a fire blast at me when our gazes met.

Then, after the door was slammed shut, he finishes his tea slowly and without hurry, as if unaffected by what just happened. After setting the cup back at the table, he returns another bored gaze at me.

"Cadet Shirogane, I don't know what you think being a soldier entails, but I can tell you won't be a very good surface pilot."

"What?!" That was rude. I'm better than half of the crew here, at least.

"You have no sense of responsibility, continuously act on emotion, remain constantly creating discord on your squad. Your answers are full of defiance, despite what you did. I don't see you being remorseful about your acts at all. Even if you managed to pass the test, even if you became an average pilot, you would never be able to fulfill your role with that attitude. You need to mature much before you can back up your words."

What do you know about me, anyways? All I've gone through… All I've had to endure… You're just a fucking old wormbag. What the fuck do you know about me, about all I had to do until now?!

… No, calm down. Can't snap here. Filling my lungs and exhaling the acid through my nose, leaning back on the chair, my eyes again clash against his.

"We still don't know that. And I did cooperate with my squadmates when we got together again. I'm not-"

"You have no idea what piloting is like, you've never been inside a cockpit, you may have fought against the BETA but doing so in a tank is completely different than piloting a TSF. And I don't believe a single bit that excuse you blurted out a while ago. Someone as noble as Cadet Mitsurugi would never stain her honor running away from a fight, Cadet Sakaki is such a dedicated leader I don't see her leaving a comrade to his misery. But you, a foreigner that only brings problems to his squad with his inflated ego? I can see you easily sparking a discussion before that made them resent you."

This is going nowhere. Nothing I say is getting through him. If he doesn't listen to me, to my squad, and doesn't want anything to do with me anymore…

That means I have him where I wanted him. And I even got Zoe-san out of the picture. Well, let's see if my gamble works.

I know the UN is in dire need for some help, if the situation continues going down like this, the relations with the Empire will most certainly crumble, especially if word gets out about how they harmed Meiya. And I just happen to have a pair of things that can help them with that.

You want me to show you results? That I'm not just a know-it-all teenager that actually doesn't know anything? You want me to show you how I can contribute to the UN? Oh, I'mma do it. And then I'm gonna turn around, follow your orders, let you deport me, and I'll see your face as you lose this one-in-a-lifetime chance. Let's see if you let me leave. Let's see how you react when you see that you don't have the back to refuse my terms, old wormbag.

"… There is one thing I want to confirm before we end this questioning, sir."

"What is it?" He was already stuffing his notepad inside his suit, hurrying to get our of here.

"Since I'm leaving this base, I can take with me all of my possessions, right?"

"Of course, we are not so petty to keep your belongings from you."

"Does that include the patents of my inventions?"

"… What are you talking about?" He brings one finger to his glasses. Hehehe, gotcha. I'll have to thank Sensei for her gesture later. Assuming she wants me here after all this, that is.

"During my stay here I mentioned to the XO about a pet project I had. They're two training terminals that I designed to help Cadets all over the world. The MMTS and the WMTS, those are their names. Since I'm the inventor the patent belongs to me, but we still haven't applied for a trial for mass production, so if I leave-"

"The machines leave with you? Yes, I'm aware of the laws for such developments. Let me see what the database says." He takes out a PDA and starts searching. Stroking his chin, he remains silent for a few minutes.

I can see his eyes twitch, no way in hell they would let these things leave their grasp, they're too valuable. So they will either reconsider my punishment in exchange of me selling the patent to the UN, or they'll kill me to leave no one to claim ownership of the consoles. Either way I win, the second option is actually the better one right now, ironically. Resetting this mad world would be so much easier than to keep bashing my head against the wall trying to make things right with all of you. Sadly, I cannot simply resign myself to die at this stage. I lost far too many things to simply allow you all to do as you please with my life as if I were but another pawn. So, even if it means giving myself a concussion and a gaping wound, I'm gonna keep headbutting myself against this wall, until the day where I collapse comes.

"This is… How did you come up with these concepts?" Wow, he seems surprised for real. Dropping the poker face and neutral tone, he couldn't stop blinking fast as he tapped his glasses, as if he couldn't believe what he was seeing.

"That's my secret. So, even if the UN helped in their development, since there was never an official offer to buy the patent or the production rights from me, if I leave the simulators leave with me. Then I'll take them to America and finish them there. That means that they'll be known as an American invention and shall be distributed first to American Training Schools and then to the rest of the world, assuming they even want to give them away that is." Leaning back on the chair, I stare at him and cross my legs.

"But if you stay, the Empire will get their hands on them first and they will be recognized as a Japanese invention?"

"Yeah, I'm sure we could arrange a trial run or something to give the Empire some exclusivity for a year or two, with the excuse that we are gathering data. The UN will profit from having control of these things, the Empire can have an edge on their trainings and will get some recognition from it. Hell, if the Empire wants to help in their mass production I'm willing to give them a small cut from the profits. And I get to stay here. Not only you get another surface pilot, but another inventor that catched Vice Commander Kouzuki's attention."

He keeps stroking his chin as he looks at the data that was in his PDA. I honestly have no idea what's in there since I never needed to check the databases to know what they are and do.

"This is surprising, such small devices… And yet, this one's screen is better than that of a Pleiades? This other one can output such clear 3D images? And yet, they seem to be simple in design. Their cost isn't so high, considering what they can do. If we mass produced these simulators and gave them to all training schools in the IJA and the UN that are stationed here… The recognition from these inventions, the profits, the improvements they could bring to our Cadets… And you are willing to share it with us? Is this one of the reasons the Vice Commander scouted you?" You took the bait. Time to feel the hook slice your cheeks apart.

"Yes, that's right. I could have stayed in America, but I chose to come back home. I wanted to find out who I was, and even if I didn't, I wanted to help my nation in any way I could. But alas," I give him my most wicked grin, "that ship has already sailed long ago according to your words." He seems to be at a loss as he looks at me.

"But Cadet Shirogane, did you not want to stay here? If you're willing to share these devices with the Empire, I believe HC could-" I don't give him pause and continue to speak on my own.

"I don't want to waste your time anymore, I'm sure you're fed up by now, having to deal with a dirty foreigner like me. I acknowledge my punishment, I'll go immediately to get ready for my departure. Thanks for your honesty Secretary Mooroka. It was a pleasure to serve in the UN's Japanese branch, if only for a month." I stand up and move towards the door. Three… Two…

"Wait. Sit down, Cadet." Heheheh available for the role they perform at their best, those are some of the teachings this program can convey."

Unlimited Bullshit Works is on fire today, I can't believe the sheer amount of it I'm spewing right now. This is just a game but I'm selling it as this super useful and deep training software. Maybe I should have dedicated myself to be an advertiser or a salesman…

"I never… I never thought such deep teachings could be explained in such a way. And you're telling me you did this on your own?" And he's believing all of it.

Well, last loop everyone kept thinking I was some superhero that was awesome, special, and what not after we announced the XM3. I still remember how crazy Meiya sounded when she confronted me after Marimo-chan's death, saying that I was the squad's pillar of strength.

Yeah right, me of all people. I'm no one's strength pillar, you're all just gullible idiots. I had nothing similar to your resolve, and even now I think I still don't. I'm just fighting for myself, the fight for humanity comes second for me. I mean, I know how pointless most of this is, with how many BETA are out there. Killing one Superior fixes nothing if they can send one or two more a few months after that, or if we start to kill each other again after we deal with the BETA.

… Though, would be better to have them here, even if I had to again carry those expectations around. Beats having to share the air with all these pricks. What wouldn't I give to see you again, to hear your honest sermons and philosophical advice once more.

"I had the idea, some sketches and a very rough alpha version of the programs. The XO and all the team that helped me are the real muscle behind these babies." They deserve all the praises and then some, those engineers are godly.

"Even so, you came up with these concepts, these maps, these missions… And the TSF simulators as well, they sound very interesting indeed. To think one could have the same training in such a small machine…"

"… Such a shame the Americans will get their hands on these first, right?" I raise an eyebrow at him while smirking again, he squints his eyes and sighs.

"… It would be a shame indeed. Cadet Shirogane, please stay here. I'll go have a talk with the Vice Commander, I want to see the machines myself. The door will be locked, to avoid the Major from doing anything foolish. I'll be back shortly."

"What about the punishment that was already decided?"

"… If you're deemed worthy we might be able to overlook your offense. There will be consequences, be sure of that. But at the least you'll be able to stay here. I'll be going now."

"Understood." And there he goes.

Yes! Take that! Critical hit, baby!

I ended up bothering Sensei again but it was all I could do. There is one problem with this though, they might kick me out of the army and enlist me as an engineer or something else here. That would be hilarious, honestly.

Sigh… Almost. Too close for comfort. If Sensei hadn't insisted on letting the consoles be under my name I would have been screwed. She told me that she couldn't give me any recognition from the TSF parts or the stealth tech so I should take credit for the consoles. That was honestly a life saver right now, even if I don't understand why she was so pushy about that. Pretty much didn't leave me a say in the matter, classical Sensei style.

Even if I can't fight anymore I only need some more time, just a bit more. At the least enough time to save my world, and after that… I'll cross that bridge when I get there. Here's hoping everything goes well enough. Depending on who the 'someone' that wants me off the army is, I may actually not have a chance. But at least I did all I could with what little I had at hand. Now… I gotta pray the world didn't roll me a one.

…

After a long while the door opens and Mooroka-san enters again. He sits down and, after arranging his glasses, looks at me with quite a bit of his poker mask melted away, speaking now in a slow but clear tone without any lingering spikes.

"Before anything, allow to say that I am throughly impressed by your inventions. They're truly revolutionary machines. However…" I don't like that change in tone a single bit. "I have not the authority to change your sentence. In light of these new discoveries, I'll go have a talk with High Command right now. You'll be escorted to the detention barracks where you'll stay the night. Tomorrow at noon, at the latest, I'll bring you a clear answer regarding your sentence. Allow me to thank you for mentioning these inventions of yours, if you had wanted it you could have stayed quiet and we would have been none the wiser, yet you chose to speak up. I don't know why you wish to stay in this base, but it plays in our favor. I have a ride ready to take me to our HQ near Tokyo, so forgive the fast notification."

"No, it is alright. Thank you for considering revising my situation, sir." I give him a small bow, he taps his glasses making another bored face.

"There is no need, I am only acting on what I think is best for the UN's Japanese branch. Well then, I'll see you tomorrow." He nods at me, I give him another bow, and he leaves.

Once he exited the room, two MP enter the room and get closer.

"Cadet Shirogane, we shall now take you to your cell."

"Roger." And so, with me walking in between them, I leave the room too.

Nothing was said on the way. People kept throwing side glances at me, looking like Sumika when she found Meiya sleeping with me for the first time. Others, though, looked like Tsukuyomi-san during the coup, completely repulsed by my presence.

Getting to the restricted area on B5F, entering the place after the guard opens the gate to the cell, we arrive at where I'll be sleeping. One of them takes my cuffs off while the other the opens my cell. As I turned towards the door, without even giving me a warning, one of them shoves me inside. Quickly catching myself, I manage to not fall down. Closing the door a bit too forcefully, sending me those same overheated gazes of scorn, frowning as if they had found spoiled food in the fridge, they then left without saying anything.

Sigh… What did I expect? Bastards, all of them. Sons of an eldritch bitch.

"Back here in the detention barracks, huh?"

Well, I delayed my fate for one day at the least. I can only pray now.

But what if I went to America for real? I wouldn't have to deal with Yuuhi, it would be a completely new experience here. I mean, the Empire hates me, there's no way they would be willing to receive my inventions. They might even go against Sensei if I stay. Sensei did say during our talk this morning that someone asked her to kick me off the army. It was either someone in HC or Yuuhi. And I do need some allies besides Sensei here, in case she betrays me. She could have vouched for me, but didn't. I wonder why…

Guess I should begin to think of possible ways out of here in case the Empire doesn't stop coming after me if I'm left with no choice but to stay in this world to save mine. Wonder what the hell could I do…

How could I do what I gotta do, without screwing Alt. IV but also without making trouble with the Empire?

Well, too hungry to think about that right now. I did what I could against hard odds. They did not care about anything I said just as I expected. I wonder what would happen if I actually talked with Tsukuyomi-san… She would kill me before I get a chance to say hello.

What are the girls doing right now? Heh, they must be glad I disappeared, now that I'm a murderer. Enjoying a good nap on the way here after playing on the beach and eating some quality dinner.

By the way, am I going to get some food? I had something on the way here just as we boarded but I haven't had anything since then. Ugh, I'm hungry. Luckily my hands are free again, having them restrained for so long hurt a lot.

I throw myself on what's supposed to be a bed and close my eyes. How did Sensei take what happened? Is she glad I managed to avoid the worst case? Or was she planning on me being deported? Why didn't she vouch for me? Was she using me as some sort of bait? If I look at it from her cold point of view… I'm just getting in the way. I'm a hazard to Alt. IV at this point, given how much trouble I'm causing.

I hear someone walking in the distance, is someone coming to see me? Who could it be? Oh, maybe Kasumi is coming to-

The person I see is one I was not expecting, one I did not want to see.

"Good evening, Cadet."

"Good evening, 1st Lieutenant." Tsukuyomi-san was here, with her old scornful gaze back. I'm so dead, aren't I.

"You seem to be in quite the conundrum. It appears you have done a very horrible act." She moves her hair out of her forehead as she approaches the cell I'm in.

"… Well, yeah. To what do I owe this visit?"

"I came to ask you a few questions, surely you do not mind?"

"Not like I have anything better to do. What did you want of me?" I sit on the bed facing her.

"First, could you remind me what was your name?"

"Takeru Shirogane." Frown, sharp eyes. Yep, she's been informed.

"… Well then, can you tell me a bit about yourself? Most of your information seems to be locked."

"Sigh… I'm just a simple guy trying to find a place to belong."

"I was referring to your life. Where did you live, why did you leave the Empire…"

"I don't know. I don't remember much from my life here. I do remember living in the Hiiragi district though." Or more like I remembered what he lived through. Oh, screw it. Too hungry to care.

"Why do you say that? If you don't remember much then-"

"I remember the view from atop a hill near this base."

"… Is that so? Then, what do you think of the Empire?"

"You're too prideful and judgmental people." Not lying here.

"Hmm… And what of the Shogun?"

"I have no opinion on her, I haven't paid much attention to the political matters since I arrived. I had a CCSE to pass. And as a soldier it's for the best if I don't involve myself too much with them." She closes her eyes for some seconds. Not like I can tell her I want Yuuhi to eat shit and fall off a horse.

"Alright. Then allow me to cut to the chase, why are you in possession of a sword?"

"What about it being an honor, receiving a sword from its holder?" Her frown gets bigger, she takes a step forward.

"Much has changed since then, Cadet. Why do you have a sword?" Sincerity is a virtue, let's keep my promise with Meiya.

"I think you're misunderstanding something, 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi." She flinches when I call her by her name.

"What is there to misunderstand?"

"I don't have a generic sword, I have a Minaru Kamui." First opening her eyes wide, then gritting her teeth, her glare comes at me like it a laser would after a TSF.

"You claim to possess a… Minaru Kamui? Are you aware of what weight is attached to that particular blade, I wonder?"

"Yes, now I do. Cadet Mitsurugi told me how truly precious it is during the CCSE. I suppose that it's the Koubuin House's blue katana, right?" She nods at my words, slowly taking a step closer while running a hand over her hair.

"Indeed. Now, what would you be planning to do with it?"

"I'll give it to you." And she got tilted.

"… Huh? What do you mean?" I did promise to Meiya that I would give it back, and I want no more problems with Yuuhi.

"I didn't know how important the blade was, and going by your reaction I think I'm not recognized as a legitimate holder of it. I want no problems with the Empire and the blade could cause a great harm in the wrong hands, so I'd like to ask you to take custody of it and return it to the Shogun."

"You… want me to… Why? Do you think we won't be suspicious of you with this gesture?"

"No, I want no trouble that's all. You can hate me all you want, but I don't hate you."

For now. Tsukuyomi-san is still someone I like a lot, but if she keeps antagonizing me I miiiight have to harm her. In the head. With a gun. As much as that makes my heart hurt, as much as that makes me want to bite my tongue off… If she becomes my enemy… Guh…

"So… could you please go to my room whenever you have the time? The Minaru Kamui is hidden in my closet." I can see her hands tensing into fists, her chest moving slowly up and down as she tries to calm down.

"Understood. I'll take the blade with me, thanks for being honest about this matter."

"Don't thank me, I just promised Cadet Mitsurugi that I would return the blade when I had the chance."

"I see. Might I ask… Could you tell me how did Cadet Mitsurugi fare in her CCSE?" She's trying to hide it, but those clenched fists give her away. Of course she would be worried.

"She scored a seventy, she passed it." A sigh of relief comes out of her as her eyes relax, but she quickly catches herself and goes back to her stoic persona. I better shut up about the whole 'Meiya got knocked out' thing, I don't want Yuuhi breaking relations with the UN.

"Thanks for the intel. If I may, can I ask you something else? Did you encounter my relatives during the CCSE, perchance?" She should know by now if they reported it so no point in lying.

"The Pickle Cousins? Yeah, I had to-… 1st Lt.?" Tsukuyomi-san's mouth was hanging wide open as her eyes froze. Did she got tilted again? "1st Lt.? Is something the matter?"

"How… How did you call them?"

"Huh? The Pickle Cousins? Oh, right. I wasn't trying to make fun of them, sorry." I give her a small bow, but her eyes are still full of sparks.

"Why did you refer to them in such a way? Where did you hear that nickname?!" Howling, she stomped her way real close to the iron bars.

"I just thought it was fitting really, if they let their hair loose since they have it so long and it's green one could say they're a pair of overgrown pickles. I tend to make lame jokes like this all the time. Forgive me, I wasn't trying to insult your family." I bow at her again, but she doesn't let the frown go. Fists shaking and gritting her teeth, she stares blades at me.

I just had to go and screw things up. Goddammit, myself! You have ONE job! Stop making everybody angry at you!

"You thought… it was fitting?" One brows of hers twitches. "Cadet Shirogane, can you tell me what is your blood type?"

"… What? Why?" That was not what I was expecting to hear.

"Answer me, or I'll report to the authorities you have a Minaru Kamui in your possession illegally."

"Hey, I didn't try to do anything with it! There's no need to be so hostile with me." I really need to stop making everybody angry at me.

"Then, could you please answer the question?"

"Uhh… It was B positive, I think."

"When is your birthday?"

"December 16th."

"What is your favorite food?"

"Why do you want to know that?!"

"Answer the question!"

What is wrong with her?! If she thinks I'm a spy, why is she asking me all of this? Talking about food, when I'm so hungry…

"Tch, it's steamed doubin without a doubt! The king of the mountains, the matsutake mushroom, alongside the treasures of the seas, breams and shrimps, steamed together with some nice seasoning. Add fried rice, eggs, and maybe some bacon alongside it, and you have a total delicacy! Best food ever created!" Shit, now that I started thinking about food…

I'M HUNGRY GODDAMMIT! Where is my dinner?! Even if they're half rations again, give me food! Hauu… What wouldn't I do for some fried chicken with rice…

"Those words… That expression… No… This… She said… Her Highness said…" Hm? Tsukuyomi-san was looking at me as if I were a ghost, hands shaking, her eyes watering. Taking some step backs from the iron bars, yet not looking away from me despite the slight tremble of her lips.

"1st Lt.? What's the problem?"

"You… Who are you?!" Fear and anger seemed to be mixed in her tone as she howls at me. I just smile back.

"Takeru Shirogane, it's a pleasure." And, again, she got tilted.

Did she also know this world's me? I mean, Mion did and she's her older sister. No wonder she's so enraged. However… He must have been close to her, because it's rare to see this Tsukuyomi-san being so shocked.

"… You said you had a Minaru Kamui in your possession, did you not?" She caresses her hair as she regains her composure.

"Yes."

"Who gave it to you?"

"Someone back at Yukon, as a memento of someone important to me that had died."

"Someone at… No, no one was… But then…" Her lips quiver real fast for a sec there, but then she takes a deep breath as calms down. "I'll go take hold of your sword. I hope you are not lying, Cadet. Well then, I shall take my leave. Goodnight." She practically jogged out of here.

I'm sure I must have reminded her of him, considering how she ran away. If he also had the same taste in food then I'm glad to know I was a man of culture in this world too. Though, I shouldn't have said that about those two pickles. What if this only worsens the misunderstandings? I think I just fucked up, badly. Well, I do get careless when I'm hungry and tired.

Hopefully she'll lay off me for a while. If she came with a gun I'd be dead on the spot, I need to get out of here before she comes back with killing intent. She did mention Yuuhi, so now I'm convinced she's the one pulling the strings on this whole 'kicked out of the army' affair. I wonder how she'd react if Tsukuyomi-san tells… Nah, that's a new level of stupid even for myself. Nothing will change, they will come after my life regardless of what I do. Especially if he was someone close to the Tsukuyomis. Maybe he was in the same squad as them?

I can only hope I can avoid them from now on, I don't want to fight with them but given the situation I don't doubt they will be the ones picking a fight.

Ugh, where is my dinner?! I'm so hungry right now…

However, no matter how much I waited, how many times I looked out into the hallway, no one came.

Grabbing my rumbling stomach, letting my clothes hit the floor, the cold water of the shower made me immediately regret my decision. Enduring it for a little while, to at least get this awful feeling off my back, I kept my ears peeled in case anyone came.

But no one did.

As I was getting resigned, I heard some footsteps in the distance. The leader of the volunteer crew came with a small tray, again with half rations.

However, instead of carefully passing the tray over the open space for that, he dropped it forcefully and pushed it in, making some of the food end up on the floor.

"… That was a dick move, man. There was no need for that."

"Heh… Serves you right, damn American." Spitting into the cell, he leaves with hurried steps, as if he couldn't bear to breathe the same air as me.

Picking up the tray and eating what little was left in it, couldn't help but frown. First Kyouzuka-san, now the rest of the base… Really, fuck you all. What's the point in fighting for these fools if this is how they'll repay me?

Rinsing my mouth, both to clean it and rid myself of this awful taste that refuses to leave me, again feeling a cold shiver on my back, I begin to clean the tray and the plates, feeling a cold shiver on my back and not because of the water.

"Sigh… Hopefully tomorrow will be a better day." Please let me stay here, I don't need more trouble. Or maybe… Sensei really doesn't want me here…

Maybe… this is it for me in this world. Well, I did what I could. The ball is on their court.

Sighing with a vengeance, I lay on the sorry excuse of a bed that's on the cell. Both hands behind my head, yawning the tension away, my eyelids decide their shift is over and begin to close shop. I curl under the thin sheets, rubbing my feet together to keep the cold away.

Damn… I'm beat… Yawn…

Here's hoping… I can stay here… Sigh…

… until I can find a way back to my peaceful life.

…

Zzz…

---

Evening.

(Hida Mountain. Daizaburou Dojo.)

[Mana]

---

The rumbling of the helicopter's flight reverberates on my ears as I stare down at the scenery, at the expansive lands covered in snow despite the fact that we're still nowhere near winter.

A completely clear sky, filled with stars that can be easily appreciated due to the absolute lack of man-made lights in the area, simply complements this mountain perfectly.

In the distance, the rather humble structure comes into view. A traditional dojo, lighted up by dangling lights from pillar to pillar. My ride descends onto the landing pad, shortly after receiving confirmation that we can disembark.

"Welcome to the dojo, Mana!" Guren Daizaburou, my former master in the art of the sword, comes up to the pad as I was descending, his unmistakable voice far louder than anything one could ever hear in this place.

As tall as I remembered him being, with that same sharp haircut on his sides yet now without much of it on top. As imposing as a bear, and yet, with those same small eyes that could be called as nothing but fatherly. A smile coming my way once he finally sees me, I return it after straightening up my dress.

"Salutations, Daizaburou-sama. It is an honor to be visiting." Giving him a bow only elicits a laughter from him, loud and heartily as always.

"No need for such stiffness, grasshopper. It is good to see you faring well, and for your complexion to shine as beautifully as our moon as well." He nods, smiling my way.

"Likewise, sir."

"Well, come on, let us enter. It is quite frosting outside." Turning back, making his own crimson dress sway momentarily, he leads us into the dojo.

The members of the Guard that were stationed here, the vast majority of them Tozamas in gray or white attires, saluted us as we made our way to the building. A few Fudais were awaiting at the doors, bowing down as they opened them.

The few decorations on the way were covered in snow yet again, the attendants were clearing them slowly. Within the dojo, not only it was quite warm but oddly silent. A dojo might be in name, but this building could very well be called a small estate of the Guren family.

"Daizaburou-sama, what has made this night to be so quiet?"

"Oh? It is merely that the younglings have exhausted themselves earlier. Many are the ones who have not yet bested the preliminary testings, therefore, they have been made to clean the place. And so, they are now lacking any vigor to display."

Sigh… It is odd. Despite the hour it is, I expected them to still be trading slashes at the sparring room within here.

"Is that so? Is everything proceeding well enough?"

"Indeed, there is no need to repine about nothing. This generation has been filled with hardworking younglings, despite their slow learning curve." Lucky we are to be in new moon, for his smile is shining enough for the night to endure as is.

"That is good to hear."

Quickly arriving at a private room, we enter by ourselves. Leaving the suitcase I had on me on the sofa as I sat down, he went to prepare some tea for the both of us.

"So… How is everything in the Main House?" He inquired as he prepared the herbs, sheathing his glee.

"It seems that everything is still rather hectic. Nothing has turned up regarding the mastermind behind the attack."

"Is that so? I suppose, those outside the succession branch have been questioned by now?" His tone lowering as did his brows, almost as if chained to an anchor.

"Yes. And yet, they were free of any and all guilt."

"However, someone had to leak the intel of our patrols, and allow those terrorists to operate so close to our Main House as well… Has the US…"

"No, they cooperated throughly with us in this occasion alongside the UN. If fingers have to be pointed… it had to be a fellow who conspired against us."

"… From our fellowship, or another Regent House?" Handing me my cup, he sits in front of me.

"That we don't yet know. Both Maya and Masahide-san are working hard on the investigation. He came to visit a few days ago, to inquire about what was going on near our location. He seems to believe… someone was wishing to get rid of Yohime-sama, in a ploy to use her against Yuuhi-sama." I drink, choosing not to say more, gauging his own reaction.

"… And I assume, she is safe with Raiden?"

"… Yes."

"Sigh… That is a relief. Were you requiring our aid in securing his home?"

"… It would be most welcomed. I know I am not supposed to ask, considering who she is and-"

"Waste no more words. Even if they refused it, Takahisa-sama's wish was clear enough. Worry not Mana, I shall contact Seiten so that he sends some of our fellows to Raiden. Meiya-sama's wellbeing is of utmost importance for all of us, regardless of her brand as a twin." Hesitation shining for its absence, he nodded my way. It is a relief, to know he does not view her as do the rest.

"Thank you kindly, Daizaburou-sama."

"Haha, such words aren't required anymore in my presence, grasshopper. Now then, whatever is awaiting within that suitcase?"

"Oh, the reports from those who have already been sent back from the dojo, as well as other bureaucratic documents your sign is required for."

"Sigh… I would be wishing for Seiten to quickly become used to tackling these matters on his own." He laughs dryly as I pass him the suitcase. "So, besides my own House's matters, I suppose Yuuhi-sama must be wishing to hear about the progress those three have been making?"

"Indeed, so she does. Have they been faring well?"

"Mion and Shion have been… stagnant for some time." Reading the papers while drinking some tea, his tone slows down into nothing but the wind's gentle rustling. I also drink the tea as I await his words. "… You see, they seem to not yet comprehend the core teaching I try to impart them with, that they themselves are who shall cleave a path to the future."

"I see… Are they still progressing in their mastery of the blade?"

"Oh, yes, but of course. I have nothing left to teach them in that regard, however, their own hastiness is ruining their composure and resolve, dulling any and all advancements they have attained since coming here."

"Sigh… I suppose it will take them some more weeks, perhaps."

Me and Maya were the same, pushed by our rivalry and the pressure to excel we kept justifying our answers relying on what our ancestors had done, on what had been ingrained into our brains. Not understanding what else we lacked, becoming most adusted at his continuous disapproval. In our own hurry to prove ourselves worthy, failing to calm those raging waves we hoisted deep within our hearts, we were rendered unable to see that our own hands were what would bring auspicious times to our nation. And that, if we kept clinging to our own little rivalry, if we kept second guessing each other, dreading the thought of 'losing' to the other, our minds would be molded into a truly jagged, cyclopean depth, corrupted by such reservations and self-doubts.

The inherent fear that comes when measuring up to one's elders, when it is finally time to spread wings and be judged by all… it is not easy on no one's shoulders, much less with all that comes with the Tsukuyomi name.

One most tightly hold onto one's own beliefs, never failing to adapt to the developing situation of the world. Should we kept clinging onto the code as tightly as we used to, we would have been crushed under the weight of our own ego. For following our teachings and adapting to them are completely different answers, and one must remain resolute when faced with the duty of safeguarding the future of our fellows. If only the code was required, us retainers would not be necessary.

A leader, and the individuals who support it, never learns through example nor has the luxury to possess footsteps to follow upon. The path traversed by the elders was one that won't reiterate itself. As the saying goes, a man never enters the same river twice. Therefore, those at the vanguard must not be swayed by other's words, not be driven by what dangers surround them. For if they are to be a beacon for their fellows, they must hold the bravery required to tread into unknown land. Becoming one's own tailwind, without ever losing sight of whatever it was that compelled the direction of our feet, whether we saw hope, victory, peace, or further conflicts beyond the horizon.

For us to be truly accepted as trusted fellows, we first had to learn to hold onto our own core beliefs even if it meant clashing with our elders. We were no longer supposed to be children, but adults whose voice had to be heard, whose convictions they had to protect. I suppose those two will need some more introspection to reach that answer. Thankfully, they have Takeru by their side, so I am sure he shall aid them as he did with us before when we yet again were lost in our own doubts.

"So… How has Takeru been doing?" He then groans, his brows arching. "… Daizaburou-sama?" I am not liking such expression.

"… I frankly do not know."

"Huh? How do you mean?"

"Well, he is calm enough to still notice the beauty of the skies during the trainings, and he already has reached the right answer. Ignorant he is of the ways of the world, yet he does not allow fear to make nest within. However… I fear that he is perhaps too relaxed for his own good."

"… Whatever has happened?" Leaning forward, my lips tensed on their own.

"You see, I sent the trio to meditate on their own a few days ago. However, only Mion and Shion returned as they were scheduled to. Despite how much we waited, he did not return in time for dinner, so I feared that he had grown upset and left on his own."

"What?! I do not recall being told of-"

"Worry not, no such thing happened." Waving a hand in the air, my readiness and compulsion were also sliced in half and I returned my back to the sofa. "As I went to look for him, I did indeed find him. However, it turns out that… he had fallen asleep."

"… Excuse me?"

"I believe he enjoys stargazing much, does he not?" I nod, curving a brow. "Well, it seems he stayed looking at the skies, pondering on what he could do from then on… and fell asleep as he did so. When I woke him up, he told me he lost track of time while looking at the moon."

Takeru… I swear, why must you always do this? Unable to halt the rumbling of one of mine fist, I can picture the scene with clear clarity. Lucky you are to now have either me or Maya stationed here.

"However, he could have come down with hypothermia. Is he truly alright?"

"Worry not, Mana." Hoisting his chest forward, a smirk spreads like wildfire in him. "That unawareness of his is so profound, so sturdy that it seems to make him able to also ignore the weather as well, ahaha!"

"Daizaburou-sama, please, this is no laughing matter! Yuuhi-sama will not be pleased with this report." I fear she might decide to visit the dojo herself should he have actually incurred any injuries or become bedridden.

"As I said, there is nothing you should concern yourself with. He is fine, albeit formless in this training." Folding his arms after leaving his empty cup on a small table, he leans back onto the sofa.

"Is he giving you trouble?"

"No, it's just… I never trained anyone that resembles him, not in all of my years. Undaunted by the challenge, unrelenting in his own convictions, yet humble and warm, welcoming and 'friendly' as very few are in the Guard. While his skill with a blade is not yet sufficient to bestow him the honor of being called a Mugen Kidou Master, I fail to see him not reaching the aptitude required before the end of the year despite his insistence on using Maya's style."

"I see… So, could you tell me in detail how are they faring?"

Nodding with a smile, and standing up to procure some sweets from a shelve, he then told me all about their daily lives here. How Shion is far ahead of any other trainee when it comes to finesse with a blade and how she simply cannot seem to learn how to properly cook, how Mion's defensive style and composure are what one would expect of my sister and yet she is always most tardy whenever tasked with cleaning the windows, and how Takeru is simply too relaxed for his own good and how that gets him in trouble with the other trainees, but then he's the one who adapted the fastest to the cleaning duties.

"It was truly a welcome surprise to have him willingly volunteer to aid in the chores." He says, a hint of a smile and a quiet current of acceptance in his voice. "Never did I think that he would agree upon the first question with a mere 'Sure'. Frankly, his presence here worked in my favor to force the other trainees to humble down from their prideful stances. And truth be told, his cooking skills aren't half bad."

"As one would expect. Takeru truly doesn't like to sit still." That boy is too sweet for his own good. Yohime-sama did say that he was always wishing to help Maya back home as well.

"Ahaha, indeed. Well, I suppose you should be going to visit them. I shall deal with these papers, we can continue tomorrow with the details of Raiden's security. Please do enjoy your stay here, brief as it might be."

"So I shall do, Daizaburou-sama." Standing up, I tried to bow down, but he again loudly laughed away, swaying a hand in the air.

"No need for such formalities, grasshopper. The way here must have been tiring, please do make yourself comfortable. I left word to the cooks, your dinner should be at the ready. I believe both Mion and Shion would welcome your company during this night. Go to them, Mana."

"Yes, thank you kindly." Returning the smile, I leave the suitcase in the room, exiting towards the kitchen.

It is a relief to know that those three are alright, despite the setbacks they might be facing. Treacherous this last trail of their training might be, yet I must trust that they shall triumph in it.

Also, a great burden is off my shoulders now that I know Master will aid me in protecting Meiya-sama. We may not yet know who sent those men towards our House, nor how they obtained our inside intel, yet the threat has been made clear to us. I would wish myself able to banish the assumptions that Masahide-san has suggested yet I cannot simply do so.

Someone might be planning to weaken our fellowship, and use Meiya-sama to impersonate Yuuhi-sama. Perhaps someone from outside the succession branch, perhaps someone within the fellowship who is being influenced by another Regent. Yet, one cannot deny the odd movements, the odd bystanders near Raiden-sama's abode on the days before the attack was carried out. It may be a coincidence, however no option must be left outside of the table.

I know such was the reason to hasten the training of our younger members, yet… With eyes blazing we must face the threats, whoever it is behind this ploy. I can only pray that Masahide-san is mistaken in his suspicions.

Not taking too much time to arrive at the kitchen, the chatter of the young trainees reaches my ears. Walking into the room, all eyes fell on me. Their expressions widened as the clearing skies after a storm, I quickly waved a hand to relieve them of the pressure of bowing to me.

"At ease, fellows. I am no inspector. Please, proceed with your meal." More than half of them eased up and returned to their plates, the others however kept eyeing me as I walked towards the two shapes that were eating by themselves in a table near a corner.

"Greetings, Mion, Shion."

"Good evening to you, Sister." Mion said, bowing down. Shion quickly did the same. "I did not hear you were visiting." Tracing some hair behind her ear, she smiled my way.

"Well, had you heard of it, it would mean I did not do a through enough job." Smiling, they chuckle for a moment. I sit by Mion's side, with Shion in front of us. Whatever it was they were eating, they had already finished it. "So, I heard you're faring well so far."

Not a second after the words left my lips, their own twisted oddly. My gaze lost contact with Mion's, her arms slightly closed onto her body.

"We have been… progressing at a steady pace until now, Mana-sama." Sending a hand to her hair, she answered. And yet, she also couldn't look me in the eye.

"Is that so? Well, would you like to speak of it?" Never losing my smile, I nod their way. Slowly, they seem to begin to thaw what held them captive.

"Ahem… You see Sister, Master has been refusing to impart further trainings to us. And yet, no amount of meditation nor sparring has made him relent in his silence."

"It is truly concerning." Her brows arched, that soft tinge of venom that sometimes resides in her sister's words lurking forward. "And despite our efforts, we constantly find ourselves unable to ascertain the answer to his queries."

"I see… Have you pondered on his words from a different angle? Have you taken the time to glimpse at the skies, to stop dwelling within yourselves?" Both of them look down, lips yet again twisting.

"… However, we do not know what is it that we are doing wrong, Sister."

"Then, dispel this hastiness you seem to have been imprisoned by, and simply meditate on the answer to the questions, and what they entail. Do not let your veneer be bent so easily, Mion, Shion."

Straightening themselves, they return a nod. And yet, I cannot say that they understood my words. That hurry itself is what is holding you back, those fears of not measuring up, of not being 'enough' by yourselves. I know you must be under great duress, having to measure up and be compared to mine and Maya's own efforts, but I trust you shall triumph over this hurdle, as we did when facing our Fathers.

On an unrelated note, where could my dinner be? I would like to avoid going to the kitchen myself, it would be most rude for a guest to do so. However, I am beginning to feel the burden of the travel. Whatever shall I-

"Hey there, Mana-nee!"

"Oh?" Looking to my right, I saw him bringing my plate, dressed in a loose gray dress with an apron over it. "… Takeru? Where you the one tasked with cooking my meal?"

"Yeah, today was my turn in the kitchen. I'm all done with that, though." Leaving my plate, whose smell immediately brought waterfalls to my mouth, he then sat in front of us by Shion's side. He did not bring a plate with him, so I suppose he must have ate his own serving in the kitchen.

Glancing around, I could detect quite a few squinting gazes, narrowed and inquisitive stares towards him. As usual however, he does not seem to even register them. Sigh… I truly do not know whether your unawareness is a good or a bad trait, to be honest.

"So, didn't knew you were visiting. What's up? Are you gonna be part of a training?" Smiling my way, making his unkempt hair sway, I couldn't help but to return the gesture, seeing him unchanged.

"Takeru, please remember that Mana-sama is here as a Royal Guard." Elbowing him, the bridges between their souls began to sway and screech, a rapid current flowing under them. "You should speak formally to her, as we have been doing."

"What's your problem now? Mana-nee is Mana-nee, and we're on break."

"Regardless, Sister's attire should be enough to know how you should speak to her. It would be most unfortunate for you if you were once again reprimanded for forgetting your manners." She told him, what but a thunder tearing her composure into a subdued, bothered, and concerned frown.

"'Forgetting' would imply I had any manners to begin with." Folding his arms and nodding, he smirks back at her.

As those two pouted at him, I couldn't help but to chuckle. You truly haven't changed at all.

"It is alright. Takeru speaks the truth, we are on break for the moment. However, we also are in the dining room. Showing some decorum would serve you well, Takeru."

"Oh, I know. It's just been a long time since we've seen you." Easing up into a smile with the serenity of a descending petal, he nods again. "So, is everything alright?"

"Yes, I am fine. I heard you're having some troubles with the sword as of now?"

"Well…" He looks up, scratching the back of his head. "Sort of."

"Looks may be deceiving Mana-sama, yet Takeru has been making decent progress so far." She again smirked his way, showing him her teeth and pointing a finger upwards. Mion giggled as Takeru rose a brow, puffing one cheek.

"What the hell are you trying to say, you dumb Pickle?"

"That you have, surprisingly, managed to measure up to the training despite being still a young child."

"You're just a year older, don't get cocky because of that."

"Now, enough teasing. You all are doing well, in and out of the dojo. Isn't that right?" They all nod, relaxing into a calm smile.

"So…" However, he then looked down, twisting his lips as if a twister spawned within his mouth, joining his hands as if he had an injured pigeon between them. "Is everything alright back home?" His query also made the cousins tense up, locking their gazes onto me.

As I ate, we discussed what had happened since they were sent here. Sighing the pressure once learning that the Main House was safe and sound, happy to hear that everything was back to normal, and that nothing had happened to me where I was, they then told me about their own endeavors.

As Master had said before, Mion and Shion are most troubled by their setbacks in their cleaning efforts, Takeru mocking them about it helped not a single bit, and me agreeing with his points, despite scolding him for the teasing, made them pout much, as if they were once more little kids playing cards back home.

They then retaliated, with much pungency and freed audacity, about his lacking results with the blade, especially from Shion who also employs the same style as he. Sadly, it seems he also hasn't been deterred from wobbling as always used to. If not for that eccentric way of moving, he would already have been tasked with the last test in the dojo.

As the trainees left, some still daring to send their eyes towards his shape, the cousins relaxed in their manners and we could enjoy a more personal talk. Both of them repining about not being able to go to the Isumis concert, Takeru complaining about how Yuuhi didn't allow him to go to the manga circle with Arisa-san before coming him. Telling them what I could about Maya and Yuuhi-sama, of how everything was back in the city, they seemed to relax further. To be sent here after that incident, I am sure that much was the pressure you felt on your shoulders. And yet, there is nothing I can do about it.

"… Also, Yohime-sama confirmed to me that once you return you all shall begin your training to become surface pilots."

"Really?!" Slamming his hands on the table and jolting up, his clear cheer made me giggle.

"Indeed. Of course, a banquet with your favorite meals also awaits you all. The finest mackerel and matsutake are already reserved for you, Takeru."

"Awright! Now I'm really motivated to do this!"

"… What about us, Mana-nee?" Mion asked, clearly ballooning a cheek.

"Of course, your meals are also at the ready."

"… That means they expect us to finish our training soon, I suppose?" Shion's tone descended in its vigor, uncertainty lunging forward into the quiet shiver of one of her hands.

"There is no such time limit placed on you. We simply trust you shall deliver a satisfactory result." Smiling at them, the cousins seem to barely be able to nod. Just as how rain would force a flower to bow down under the pressure of the water, as how a rock would eventually be cracked wide open by the continuous inner piking, the cousins' complexion seemed strained, kept in place by tight wires.

I suppose that mentioning that was insensitive of me. It is obvious now, they truly are taking this far more heavily than Master thought. What could I do to aid them in-

"And that's what we're gonna do! Right, Pickles?" Smiling much, with the hesitation of a bull when seeing red, he nodded their way. And their mouth and eyes widened, lacking an answer.

"Um… Well, we are indeed making an effort." She caressed her ponytail, looking down. "However, what holds us back is nothing like anything we have faced before."

"And we're gonna break through it, no problem!" Raising a fist, quick and ferocious as a chasing hippo, one could see the fire roaring in his eyes, as he likes to say. "But, you know what? If you keep being this down, I'm gonna pass the test first and eat all the cake by myself."

"… You take that back." Mion's eyes shot wide open, folding her arms far too tightly.

"It seems you have forgotten how to address your sisters, Takeru." A brow of her twitching, Shion again smirked his way.

"Heh, that's better. Would be such a shame to be the only one passing the test." He shrugs, they again pout at him.

Hehehe… Even when they bicker as usual, it is good to see you're still supporting them well, Takeru. I would be wishing to have you three, especially you, to begin to act more according to what being a Royal Guard entails, yet… for now, you should enjoy these fleeting moments.

I am sure Yuuhi-sama will be much pleased with this report, to hear you three are still able to smile and play around with each other like this. Even if she won't like to hear his complains about the manga circle a single bit.

… I truly hope you can finish your training quickly. Not so that you can join the training to be formally accepted into the Guard, but so that you can keep her company again. She truly does miss you all much, especially your smile Takeru.

That reminds me…

"Takeru, are you allowed to cook in your free time?"

"Hm? Yeah, why?"

"Well… I was wondering, could you perhaps prepare something for her ? It has been a long time since you've been here training, after all."

"Oh! Yeah, I'll see what I can do. Though…" He arches his brows, folding his arms.

"What is it?"

"Mana-nee, there are no apples in the dojo." Mion says, sighing.

"Is that so? That is a shame." She has come to favor them much, largely because of his cooking.

"Don't worry, I'll fix up something new for her!" Again smiling, he nods. "And some ginger and lemon drinks for you, since you seem kinda tired."

Aww… He still remembers that? And to think he would wish to take even more time out of his already tight schedule for me…

"Thanks, Takeru. I shall be probably leaving before dusk tomorrow so, do you think you can find the time?"

"Yeah, of course Mana-nee." He pounds his chest, but then grimaces as he placed too much force into his swing. Us three chuckle at the outcome, he blushes as he scratches his head. "A-Anyways, I'm gonna have to hustle to make everything in time. Pickles, you'll help out with the cleaning, right?"

"But of course." Shion says, plucking her lips. "There was no need to ask, silly." Raising her hand, they do a high five smirking at each other.

"Hehe… Thank you, you three. I am sure she shall enjoy the meal much."

All of them smile, again asking me about what I am supposed to do here. Speaking of what little I can, we spent the remainder of the evening enjoying ourselves.

Suspicions and Misunderstandings

Chapter 26: Suspicions and Misunderstandings

---

November 22nd. Near 10 PM.

(Barracks, close to Takeru's room.)

[Mana]

---

"Mana-sama, the coast is clear."

"Roger, you may stand back Ebisu. Keep me updated in case anyone comes by." She nods, standing aside and retiring from this place.

With hurried steps the distance between me and that room is closed, taking a moment to glance around as I gripped the handle, a slight hesitation as his bitter expression when we spoke of food returned to my mind, the metal was twisted and I proceeded into the darkness that was covering his personal resting place.

Flickering the switch on, nothing seemed out of place. Another officer's quarter like all in the barracks. Of course, for it to belong to a cadet is nothing short of an irregularity. Only because of who belong to Squad 207 is this allowed. And yet…

"… How odd. For his bed to be properly tidied up." His desk also seems neatly organized.

No, I've no time to waste. There is one surefire way to confirm my suspicions. Turning to face the closet, closing my eyes momentarily as I opened it, an ordinary sight welcomed me once I looked into the row of clothing. Yet, as I pushed my hand into the back of it, a soft yet firm contact met my fingers. Pulling the hidden object out, gripping it with undeserved tension, perhaps doing so far slower than I should have, what could my eyes do other than imitate a full moon, what could I do other than feel a sudden shiver as seizing as a searing slash on my sides.

Quickly removing the cloth that hid it, I was left with something only a few select have in this Empire of ours. A Minaru Kamui. And not just one of the many we have…

"This is… in more than prime condition. The handle brimming with softness with not a single stain or rugged spot in its cloth, the handguard shining as dawn would, polished to perfection, the sheathe also has barely no scratches."

And then, as I drew the blade out, there was also no doubt that it had been under only the most thoughtful care one could have given it. It does look… far less sharper than what one could expect of our blades, almost as if it was dulled on purpose to not deliver on its killing intent. And yet, bringing it to eye level, swinging it twice, any doubts regarding its finesse were dashed. This blade could tear a finger from a TSF if it were necessary. Perhaps, it was repaired at some point, and for some reason someone chose to grind the edge away. I suppose, to follow the laws of where it was at the time. However… However, this… means…

"… He wasn't lying, he did possess one of our swords. However, no Minaru Kamui had left the Empire. He couldn't have received it in Yukon. Therefore… That means…"

As if trying to crack ice, my jaw mows up and down. The blade begins to clutter and resonate as my hands quiver. And, as I took in the words he pronounced into my ears once more, as the reiteration aligned perfectly with how he used to be… I simply… realized that…

"Takeru-sama… was alive all this time?"

His smile comes back, all the times he kept both Mion and Shion company, whenever he would try to cheer me up when I was overburdened with my work with what little he could cook, until he learned to make that ginger and lemon drink.

Elbows and wrists shake as if the ground were coming alive, a hand eases its hold on the handle to wipe the few tears that spawned on me. This is no lie, this is no replica. This is a legitimate Minaru Kamui, and one that was always cherished and well kept. And… And his reactions and words…

Yuuhi-sama said he had perished, that there was absolutely no conceivable way in which he could have survived, and yet…

"How could we explain this?… No, why… why did we not know?" As sudden as a summer rain, frowning much, indignation and frustration come pouring forward.

Whatever has caused this turn of events? Why was he in Yukon, and for two years? How did he keep his blade? And… And…

How was he taken from us on that accursed day of treason? Whatever athwarted him from our hands, away to Alaska? More considering how he used to be, I sincerely doubt he could-

A rumbling on my stomach slides down to my knees, leaving me little choice but to support myself on the desk. Those old days, those accursed days of endless battle. And the glare, the unspoken judgment, the adusted wreath in his stride.

Nothing of that is left in his current gaze. Takeru-sama has… been healed, somehow? Has the gash the war inflicted on him being mended after this time? He even referred to the cousins as he used to do before… Despite his situation, and mine own abrasive behavior, never once did he retaliate mirroring my intentions. Holding his elbow, simply yearning for some peace after the incidents… Alive. Takeru-sama is alive…

I pinch a cheek with much force, yet the blade in front of me does not change. There was no acting in his reactions before… Then… This is… no ploy, no attempt to deceive us? He truly was…

"For the Holy Emperor… You were alive… alone and without memories…" Quickly drowning the tears and the sigh, straightening myself up, I take one deep breath. "I have to reporting this. Yuuhi-sama has to be made aware of this, posthaste!"

I know she was most adamant in wishing for this 'faker' to be removed from this place, to be executed for the grave offense of impersonating Takeru-sama, and I am well aware that speaking against her wishes will be a tall ordeal. I doubt she will easily believe my words…

"… Yet, it is what I must do. Still, I do not have all the answers… I should be cautious in my report." Sheathing the blade and again covering it with its cloth, I place it on my person.

I would be wishing to examine this room in more detail yet I cannot risk being found out, and I must deliver the news to Yuuhi-sama.

Because our Takeru-sama is alive. And more importantly, safe, sound, healthy… and calm.

I know not of what tamed the embers in his eyes, the raging waves in his soul, however I only have thankfulness towards it. I only wish… this situation can be salvaged before it is too late.

Exiting the room, glancing to make sure no one saw me, I threw caution to the winds, the abyss, and whatever else proverbial synonyms could be used and proceeded to rush towards my room, shaving many years of use from my boots.

---

Next Day. Near 7 AM.

(Detention Barracks. Takeru's Cell.)

[Takeru]

Rolling to a side, to the other, rubbing my legs together to send the cold away, I try to bring my sheets closer to my face. That makes them leave my feet, and I shiver as I take in the coldness.

Opening my mouth as wide as a hippo's to yawn, stretching my stiff back, I gaze up to an unfamiliar ceiling.

"Uuugh… Right, the detention barracks." Yawning again, I sit down.

My shoulder is still hurting a bit, my back is all stiff. At least I think I had a nice dream, don't feel that heavy, cold feeling I always have when I have a nightmare.

I sit up and look around. No sign of people. I'm starving… Guess I won't get breakfast this early.

I rinse my mouth, reluctantly take another cold shower, and throw myself back in the bed, waiting until someone decides to come pay me a visit.

…

After just a short while, as I was about to doze off, I heard some steps in the distance. Three or so people, maybe? Sitting up again, I move my neck in circles to fight off the sleepiness. Three MP with rifles come up to my cell, looking at me with the friendliness of a Soldier-Class. They're nothing but dogs of the high pigs, in the end.

"Cadet Shirogane, you will come with us. We will restrain your hands now, please do not resist." I let them cuff me and we're off to wherever they're taking me.

I know I did something horrible but, do they have to look at me like that? The people that we pass on our way look at me with either frowns or as if they were smelling something that was in the fridge for too long. Those soldiers did something worse than what I did by your standards, since they harmed Meiya. Oh well, whatever.

Nothing they say will hurt more than what I see in the mirror or in my dreams, anyways.

We end up going to the same interrogation room I went yesterday. They surround me, gripping their guns.

"You'll enter alone, know that we will stand guard outside. You better not try anything, we have authorization to shoot you." Yeah, keep glaring at me. Sure is Sagiri in here.

"I understand, sir."

Once they open the door, not letting me out of their sight, one pushes my back with his rifle. Sighing and shaking my head, in I go. Mooroka-san was waiting while drinking some tea, sitting as he was yesterday.

"Good morning, Cadet Shirogane. Take a seat, please."

"Good morning, Secretary." I give him a small bow, he finishes his tea and looks at me as I sit down.

"Well, let's get down to it. Due to some last minute negotiations, the HC Council has decided to give you a chance to remain in the UN. The presentation of to your contributions to the XO's missions helped much in your case, and some of the more…" He stops, drinks some more, and sighs as he placed the cup back on the table "… fervent in the organization were convinced to desist in their intentions to execute you, to avoid a needless argument between the UN and the Empire over what was nothing but an unfortunate accident, I am sure." Then, he rests a hand on his chin while looking straight at me.

"… Thank you very much, sir. I shall not let your trust go to waste."

"Yes, so I expect. Now then." He opens a folder he had by his side. "Herein lie the conditions the UN proposed to allow you to remain stationed in this base. However, let me tell you that you can refuse the terms if you wish. Nobody will force you to remain here, you can opt to go back to America if you so desire."

"Understood. What will my punishment be if I decide to stay?"

"First, regardless of your choice, the patent of your simulators will be taken by the UN. Consider this the main punishment you'll receive, and in grand part why you are given the chance to remain here. You will lose all rights regarding them, your name will not be mentioned at all in their documents, and of course you won't receive any monetary compensation. You also will be forbidden from taking them or any diagrams or documents regarding them with you if you decide to leave."

Okay, this was unexpected but welcome nonetheless. If they thought I wanted to profit from them, and did this with that in mind, it means the consoles did their work. They bought me my chance to stay here. Well done, my gaming partners. Now, let's see what are the rest of the punishments.

"I understand, sir. It is a shame that I'll lose them, but at the least I got to complete them and see them work. This isn't the end of the world. What are the rest of the punishments?"

"Alright, the rest of the punishments will only apply if you choose to stay here. For a duration of twenty days, starting today, you will be forbidden from accessing the barracks. You will have to sleep in your cell for the duration of this punishment."

Ouch, that may hurt a bit. The shower in the cell only has cold water, so that's gonna suck. Also, anyone could walk in at any time so goodbye privacy. And security, if Yuuhi sends an assassin after me I'm as good as dead. If Tsukuyomi-san got all paranoid after seeing the blade, dead I shall be.

"You will also be forbidden from entering any of the PXs on the base as well, you will lose one meal a day, so you'll only eat breakfast and dinner, and you'll have to eat the same rations that were provided to you during your CCSE."

Ok, this is a major one. So I lose lunch, I will have to eat that sorry excuse of food, and I won't be able to eat with the squad. Well, the last one might be for the best, who knows how they will react to the news of me being a murderer? Heh, for all I know Meiya and Chizuru might have gotten all negative again after letting the fact sink in and will start treating me like shit again.

"You will also be denied any free time you might have after your training drills are over. As soon as they finish, you will have to immediately report to the XO and will have to perform any duties she might have for you. To clarify this, this means that instead of having your lunch break you will have to continue to work without rest for the duration of this punishment."

I don't know if this is bad or not. I mean, that's what I've been doing since I came back, but losing all of my free time and rest during the afternoon and evening will be hard, especially if I have to eat those rations from now on.

"Those are the conditions the UN has established if you wish to stay here. Cadet, do you have an answer ready?"

Hmm… The conditions are really harsh. What I'm worried about is the fact that I'll have to remain in the detention barracks, if someone wants me dead anyone could snuck in there and shoot me while I sleep. I guess I'll have to trust in Sensei? But does she even want me here now, after all the trouble I caused? Heh, if I die I'll either loop again or stop the negativity. Win-Win for me. Though… I still wonder why she didn't vouch for me. Guess… she really will throw me away once I'm not useful anymore?

Inhaling deep, licking my lips to change rails, I return his stare and give a nod.

"I accept the terms, Secretary. Thanks for giving me another chance, I assure you I will be on my best behavior from now on." He smiles faintly and hands me a folder.

"Those are the official documents regarding your punishment, you shall be taken to the Vice Commander now, since she's your legal tutor for the time being, to have her sign them. You will probably receive your orders regarding your afternoon activities from now on then. That is all from me. Best of luck in your endeavors from now on. May we meet again on a more pleasant situation." He gets up and gives me a small nod, that I return.

As he leaves the MP enter the room, saying that they'll take me to a briefing room to meet with the XO.

We make our way there, with a tense silence hanging in the air. They're still holding their guns as if they had to shoot at any time, were they not notified about my decision? Once we arrive they give me the same talk as before and after it they open the door.

And inside the briefing room, sitting near Sensei, there was someone I did not expect to see…. What the hell?

"Oh, about time. Take a seat, Cadet Shirogane." Sensei addressed me without looking at me, waving towards a chair.

I sit down and take a quick glance to the person that was sitting to my left, who was intently staring since I entered the room. Yui Takamura, what is she doing here?

"Well, let's do this quickly. Cadet Shirogane, the mission I'll assign you for the duration of your punishment will be to aid 1st Lt. Takamura in her mission." Wait, what?

"It'll be a pleasure to work alongside you, Cadet. I'm expecting great things from you." Takamura stares into my eyes with a firm, glowing gaze and a small smile.

Okay, stop. What is happening here?

"Shirogane, to clarify what your mission entails, you'll be 1st Lieutenant Takamura's assistant for the duration of your punishment. You'll work alongside her in the development of the EML-Railgun that will take place on the same floor where you developed the simulators."

You made me Takamura's assistant? You fucking what?! I demand an explanation right now.

"Excuse me, Vice Commander. What am I supposed to do as her assistant?" I stare at her, but she doesn't even look at me as she plays with her bangs.

"Exactly what that means. You'll be her assistant, you'll help her carry documents, sort and write reports, guide her in the floor until she's familiar with it, and all kind of assistant stuff. Basically, you'll be her dog for twenty days. Also, she will oversee your training from now on when she has the time. This means she'll monitor you in the TSF simulators and mock battles you will do as part of your training course." She finally looks at me with a devilish smile, narrowing her eyes. Those violet eyes were different than her usual eyes, something was stirring in them. I don't like that look on her, at all. I've got a bad feeling about this.

"Do not worry, Cadet. I will try to not burden you much, I've heard of your… situation, so I shall try to not impose much onto you. I hope our time together can be a fruitful one." She then offers me her hand, and I shake it.

She doesn't seem… No, her firm gaze reminds me somehow of Meiya. She, too, is one of Yuuhi's pawns. Why is Sensei… Could it be? No, she… she wouldn't… Right?

"Likewise. It… It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance, 1st Lieutenant." She gives me a small smile as she grips my hand. First holding it softly, and after one second she tightens her grip. A firm, resolute handshake.

"Well, let's get the paperwork done. Hand me the folder, Cadet." I give her the folder and we start with the paperwork. It wasn't that much, we finished in just a few minutes.

"Will that be all, XO?" Sensei, you have to call me to your office. I have a lot of questions and things to tell you.

"From me? Yes. However, you will remain here and answer some questions from the 1st Lt., since you'll be working together this is a good chance for you to get to know her a bit. After this, you'll go to the Storage Center for your breakfast rations and will then start assisting 1st Lt. Takamura in her mission. Was that clear?" She didn't look at me, she's looking at nowhere while slowly playing with her bangs. It's almost as if she were talking with herself.

… She's sending me to the wolves, isn't she?

"… Roger."

"Well then, I'll take my leave." She gets up and leaves with hurried steps.

Why did she do this? To leave me with Takamura, to make me her assistant… Does she not want me to stay here? Her attitude, her tone, the way she addressed me… Did she… abandon me? This is how she used to be during my last loop, why did she-

"Cadet Shirogane?"

"Y-Yes?" Crap, I forgot she was here for a sec.

"Please, do not be so stiff. I know I might look intimidating, but I do not wish to make you uncomfortable. Well then, I heard that you were also stationed at Yukon, right?"

"Yes, I was."

Dammit, if she actually starts asking me stuff like where did I eat or what did I thought of the base my cover's gonna be… Why did Sensei leave me alone with her? Why is she going to be monitoring me? I guess that… she might be considering removing me from her side .

"It must have excruciatingly arduous, to withstand all that being merely a cadet."

"Huh? Yeah, it… was really hard."

"I was also tasked with protecting the city. My squad also… was wiped out trying to stop the Red Shift. I cannot imagine what you must have went through during all this time." Closing her eyes, a hand goes to a strand of hair.

Is she making conversation to make me lower my guard? Typical, start by relaxing your opponent before sending them a tricky question. Not falling for that.

"It was indeed a hard time."

"As another survivor, I hope we can get along." And then, a small smile. "Well, first things first, what can you tell me about yourself?"

"About me? There's not much to say, 1st Lieutenant. I'm a simple guy." I really don't want to be with you, what the hell is… No, calm down. They want you to make a miss, they want a reaction out of you.

"Then, can you tell me why did you choose to come back to the Empire?"

"… Well, when Prominence was scrapped I lost any chance to keep training as I was. While I had the chance to stay in the US branch of the UN, I got a proposition from the XO to come to this base. Since I didn't have many memories about my home, I wanted to come back to find out anything I could about me."

"Hmm… Well, how has been your stay here so far? What can I expect to find in my day-to-day routine?"

"It's been fine, overall. People don't like me because I was abroad, but I got used to it. There isn't anything noteworthy about our day-to-day orders, I suppose that if you have to eat in a PX you should either go a bit earlier or a bit later since they tend to get crowded in the middle of lunchtime. Also, listen to the mechanics and engineers closely, they can get very upset about the smallest details." Just answer the questions nicely, don't be a jerk. You complained when Meiya got paranoid, don't do the same yourself. Don't give them any signs.

"Yes, I… was reprimanded by them yesterday." Nodding slowly as she crosses her arms, her brows come down a bit. "So, if you don't mind me asking, do you have… any preferences regarding your piloting career?" She slightly leans forward, moving some of her hair off her face. Why is she staring at me with such eyes? She really does remind me of Meiya, just that the fire is violet instead of purple.

"Preferences? No, I guess not. I mean, I'll probably be assigned to the frontlines since I'm here if I get commissioned."

"Well, there are other roads available to you."

"Other roads?"

"Yes, for example… Have you ever thought about becoming a test pilot?" Yes, that's what I was doing with the XM3 and the parts Sensei made with the intel I brought.

"Well, I gave it some thought, but only the best pilots get that job. I haven't even entered a simulator yet, so I have no idea how good I'll actually be." Gotta keep the mask up.

"I see, of course. But if you had the chance, would you consider it?"

"If I had the chance? Hmm…" I mean, considering the sheer amount of BETA that are out there, maybe it would be for the best if I stayed developing crazy weapons and tech on the rear.

Someone who can do the insane stunts I do would be very valuable as a test pilot. And in this world, where the Japanese see me as an enemy, it might be for the best that I stay away from the Empire after I'm done helping Sensei with the 00 Unit. I can't forget my real goal here either, I have to stabilize myself or go back to my world. So, I either erase Sumika forever… or stay here for the rest of my life. In the second road, getting out of the Empire as soon as possible becomes a top priority for me, so let's leave all the windows open, in the case I need a way to make a living here so-

No, wait. Don't forget who you're talking with. She's probably doing some scouting. If I say yes then Yuuhi will know that I want to leave the Empire. And she'll probably be more aggressive towards me. But… I probably can't hide anything for too long, I still don't know what came over Sensei. If… If Sensei is cooperating with Yuuhi now…

"Forgive the sudden question, you must be troubled with all that happened in your CCSE and I suddenly ask you such a hard question." Saved by the clock, she makes a small bow. "Well, is there anything you'd like to ask me?" Yes, why the hell are you here and why do I have to be your assistant.

"Hmm… Exactly what do you expect me to do for you, 1st Lt.?"

"I didn't expect you to be assigned as my assistant, to be honest. I requested the XO an escort to not get lost on the base, since the underground levels are like nothing I've seen. I also asked for someone who could help me with the reports and all the documentation. I never expected she would assign you to me." She… sounds as if she knew me. Let's push them buttons.

"Why did you not expect 'me' as your assistant?" I narrow my eyes as I entwine my fingers like Sensei does.

"Huh? Well, I didn't expect a Cadet-"

"You didn't say 'I didn't expect a Cadet', you said 'I didn't expect you to be assigned to me'. Did you knew of me beforehand by any chance, 1st Lt. Takamura?" She flinched. Gotcha.

"… Ahem, let me frank with you. I did hear about you before coming here." No shit, Sherlock. You're just another pawn after all. "I was notified of your exceptional results in your trainings." Wait, what? What kind of lame excuse is that?

"Of my training? If you don't mind me asking, why were you notified of my activities?"

"Please do not be alarmed. I merely heard about you because of our connection. Since you also were in Yukon, I was told of another survivor who was at the base I was going to be transferred." Nice excuse. So my cover is being used to cover you, huh?

"I see. Forgive the rude tone, I've been through a lot these last few hours." I give her a small bow. Gotta keep appearances up, no matter what she says. "So, can you tell me what you expect me to do?"

"Yes, I merely want someone who guides me around until I'm familiar with the lower floors since there are a lot of hallways and rooms. I won't ask you to write many reports, but I'll rely on you to deliver them. Also, you'll have to carry documents for me while I'm working."

She's younger than me, yet she talks as if she were in her late twenties. Being a member of the nobility must be so sad. They are always so stuck up about regulations and poise, they can't be more bothersome because the day doesn't have more hours.

"Alright. Then, about you monitoring my training… Why was that decided? Do you know?" She straightened her posture and joined her hands by her lap.

"I do not know. The XO simply wished to have someone watching over you, to avoid any incidents from happening." She's lying. How do I know? Because she's not meeting my eye and her hands are moving a bit. She got nervous when I asked her that. Got you.

"I see. I'll try to not give you any trouble 1st Lt., I'll do my best to aid you from now on." She smiles at me as her tension disappears.

… You know, she's kinda cute when she smiles like that. Sadly, she's here to either kill me or help an assassin do its job. Sensei better have a good explanation for this.

"Likewise, I might be very strict but I do wish to get along with you. The project I'll be tackling is a very important one, so if the XO trusted in you to be my assistant, it means you are a reliable person. I am expecting good things from you, Cadet Shirogane. Well, shall we go to get your breakfast?" She gets up quickly, puts a folder under her arm, and, after brushing her hair off her face, sends a small smile at me. Wait, why is she coming along?

"Um, 1st Lieutenant… I also have to go get my clothes from my room, so maybe you should-"

"Oh, do not worry. I have enough free time. I also haven't eaten breakfast yet, so maybe we can eat together while I explain you in detail your duties and the project you'll be a part of in my office. Is that alright?" She's asking me as if I could choose. She's mocking me, must be laughing at me internally going by that smile. Ugh, damn Royal… No, calm down.

"Alright, let's go then. Just one last thing."

"Hmm? What is it?"

"I have a bad habit of calling people by their first names from time to time, so sorry in advance. I might end up calling you Yui or Takamura without any honorifics at some point."

"Oh, is that so? You are aware of the habit and haven't fixed it? Well, I suppose… I shall let it slide if it happens. Just don't do it frequently."

"I'll do my best." I probably won't. Once I get tired I stop giving a damn about the poise, the manners, and all that. If Mom couldn't fix me, no one will.

"Alright then, let's go."

I leave behind her, the MP are no longer here. The storage room is in the other side of the base, this will take a while.

Sigh… I don't like this, I'm gonna die any day now if Sensei crossed me. Well, let's do all I can. On a good note, if I learn more about the railgun I might recover some memories from my time after Babylon. I am curious about that blue Takemikazuchi.

On a completely unrelated note… Takamura doesn't seem to be very strong. If I wanted to snap her neck, I could probably do it. She doesn't have her sword with her, so I could kill her if I suspect she's onto me . Though, she pretty much decided we'll be eating together and I think she'll try to keep it that way. It's like she's been ordered to monitor my every move.

If Yuuhi pressured Sensei, she probably had no choice but to comply. If the Empire becomes a hindrance to the UN, Alt. IV will suffer the consequences. In such a scenario, what will Sensei choose? To side with the leader of the nation that supports her life project? Or to protect with someone who can't prove his identity, who is being targeted by her greatest ally, who keeps giving her problems all the time? I mean, I got on the UN's bad side now, I pretty much shot myself in the foot.

Well, no point in getting depressed. Alone I arrived here and alone I'll leave. Whether I leave alive or I die trying I have no choice but to keep going. In a time of crisis, people are divided in two groups: Those who start crying and those who start selling tissues. And I'm gonna go sell all those tissues, goddammit! Though, gonna keep some for personal usage, since it seems I'm out of allies here. Sigh… I wonder if Kasumi will still be nice to me, at least?

But, anyways, I can't just give up. I have the power to loop back, and in the worst case I can pass my knowledge to another Takeru in another parallel world. It's like… It's like I could load a save and retry again. Or as if I was abusing save states. Pfft, I'm such an idiot. Well, being able to laugh in dire situations is one of my good traits.

"Cadet Shirogane? We're here."

"Oh? Sorry, I didn't notice." We already arrived? Wow, I really space out when I get lost in thought.

"I see, try to not do that please. I will need you to follow me, so it'd be a problem if you went in a different direction because you got lost in thought. Be more mindful of your surroundings, if you weren't following me you would have ended up in the other corner of the base." What's her problem? Not even Chizuru complained so much. Does she gets off when she scolds people?

"Sorry, I'll be more careful from now on." Let's get this done.

I enter the storage center and the one in charge there gave me my rations, quite harshly if I say so myself. Well, I can't complain. I did kill two of their comrades so I am the enemy now.

Whatever, I'm here to fix the causal leaks and help as much as I can. If they don't want my help, I'll just sever my connection with this world. It's not like I have anything that ties me here. Sensei is acting weird, and she did threaten my life once, my squad probably hates my guts now, Yuuhi and the Empire want my head on a silver plate, I also got the UN against me. All of this, in just a month. Great job, Takeru. Great job.

Hopefully, Sensei has an explanation for this. I still need her help to stabilize myself and either go back or stay here. I mean, she won't betray me right? She still needs me to complete the 00 Unit.

Or could she lock me up and force me to help her? That's right… The worst case here is not me dying, is me being locked up after being stabilized here. Did… Did the notes I gave her had any info about that?

No, don't get paranoid. Tonight, I'll go talk with her. That should clear up this misunderstanding. Or so I hope.

Meanwhile, let's try to get along with Takamura. I do not need more problems, I'll have to deal with a lot of shit for twenty days so hopefully everything stays calm for a few days at the least. I do need a rest from all this.

---

Same Day . 0 5:09 PM.

(Yokohama Base, B17F. Planning Room.)

---

"Cadet Shirogane, could you bring me report 09-11-TE?"

"Let's see… Oh, here it is." I hand Takamura the report. She starts rushing through the pages until she reaches the one she's looking for. "Sir, what could we use as a coolant for the system?" She's talking with the engineers that got put in charge of planning and assembling the railgun.

So far so good. She's strict and very noisy, but honestly she doesn't seem to be a bad person inside. I'm sure that if I weren't being chased by Yuuhi we could have been friends.

All I've been doing is hand her reports and carry documents, this is easier than I thought it would be. It's also nice to see that the engineers here still treat me normally. Well, they do have some foreigners on the team so I guess they're more open minded than the rest of the Empire.

"Shirogane, put the report on the shelve please." I grab it and stash it away, they keep debating.

"This will be tricky, 1st Lt. Takamura. I don't think we could make the rails exactly like the report specifies."

"Then, what materials could we use?"

I go near the table, they have been coming and going about a lot of things since we started working. This thing does seem terribly impractical, though. I know how awesome it is, I remember how many BETAs it killed in a single shot. But if we can't even… Hmm…

"Then, there is the problem of the ammunition. The backpack would be too expensive to build, and since we have to make special ammo for it, its cost would only grow more. There is the problem of overheating too." The Chief Engineer points to the schematics that were both in the reports and the ones they had made.

Takamura brings one finger to her lips as she scans all the papers on the table. It seems like we will have to make some compromises to get this thing running. I mean, since we have to make it again from scratch, can't we just use smaller ammo? Like, 90mm or 75mm? Pretty sure all the energy from the induction would still be enough to make mincemeat out of the BETA, going by my memories of it when I infiltrated the JFK Hive. That way we could also have the same amount of ammo, even at a smaller size. That would also lower its weight a bit, right? Hey, shouldn't I… like, speak up or something?

"Um, 1st Lt.? Can I ask you something?"

"Hm? What is it?"

"You've been talking about making the backpack smaller and shortening the rails a bit, but why don't we change the ammo the railgun would fire? According to the data, the bullets are fired with a lot of energy from it, so if we have to lower its specs, shouldn't we lower the caliber of the ammo?"

"But that would make it weaker. If we lower the amount of ammo it can carry as well as its caliber, its performance would drop significantly. It will already be less powerful since we will lower the amount of bullets per barrage it can fire, we can't make the barrages even weaker." She raises a finger as she talked. She's like a fusion between Chizuru and Meiya.

"But wouldn't that allow us to not lower the final amount of ammo? I mean, if we have to rebuild it from scratch and we already have data on how destructive it can be, can't we instead redesign it to carry 800 payloads of 90mm or 75mm ammunition? That not only would make the backpack smaller and lighter, but the rails as well since we would build them to shoot smaller payloads. Wouldn't that save us time and resources down the line?" She starts stroking her hair as she looks at the diagrams again.

"Hmm… Instead of lowering the amount of 120mm we can carry, we lower our caliber while… And we lower its weight as well… It is worth considering, I suppose. Chief, what do you think?"

"It's a neat idea, that's for sure. There is no need to recreate it exactly as it was if we don't have the resources." The Chief scratches his head as he starts doing some operations on his computer. I can't understand half of the math behind this, but it seems using common sense worked out.

"Sigh…" Takamura looked down as she crossed her arms, dejected as me when I received my math tests.

"What is it, 1st Lt.?"

"Nothing. Just… I can't believe I didn't consider lowering the caliber of the ammo before. I was so focused on bringing the railgun back that I was absorbed into making it like it was. You are right, its firepower is already great and right now we need to focus on making it practical to build. Thanks for speaking up, Cadet."

"Don't mention it, just doing my job."

"Hehehe, well I'll be damned Shirogane. Seems like we hit a gold mine." The Chief says as he grins happily. He shows us the final numbers of his calculations.

So… For one, we could actually carry eight hundred payloads in the backpack using 76.2mm ammo. That number drops to seven hundred if we want to use 90mm. The lesser weight would play in our favor too I suppose. Then, thanks to the smaller ammo, the rails can also be made a little bit smaller and more compact. According to the numbers, we could somehow manage to make them with their original length. Sure, in the end the railgun might end up being a bit weaker than how I remember it, but it's gonna be a godsend once we get to Sadogashima.

"It does seem like we found the most convenient point to sacrifice. Chief, let's redo our schematics with this in mind. Shirogane, can you bring me the last three reports again?"

"Sure, let's see… Here you go."

---

Two hours later…

---

"Mmgh… Damn, what pain." I stretch my arms to the ceiling as I walk towards the Storage Center.

My suggestion ended up being useful and the team started making all these drawings and calculations about the railgun so fast that it was honestly scary. They work fast and efficiently. That meant that I was running around delivering reports and folders for a long while. Man, that was tiring.

Well, glad I was useful. Takamura does seem like a good person, she's nothing like Meiya and Chizuru when it comes to interacting with foreigners. Shame we are on opposite teams. Oh well.

I enter the place and go to the desk where the attendant was.

"Excuse me, I'm here for my rations." I hand him my ID and he passes it through a reader. Without saying a word, he goes into the door that was behind him, connecting this little office to the actual storage room.

Well, I'm used to it by now. I'm starving, and to make matters worse Takamura wants to eat with me again. Something about having questions for me and whatnot.

The clerk comes back and hands me a small bag. It's… a bit more heavy than I thought it would be. Definitely heavier than this morning's one.

"Those are your rations, Cadet. Here's you ID Card." He hands me back my card, a small frown as he did so.

Sigh… Whatever. I leave the room, making my way towards Takamura's office. This morning she kept asking me questions about how I spent my time here, my training regimes, and what I expected to do after being commissioned. I suppose that's her job though, scouting me.

Once I finish my dinner, I'll go have a talk with Sensei. Not only I need some answers about Takamura and the chasers, but I also have to tell her of the memories I got from this world's Takeru.

Also, thanks to my interactions with Takamura today, I discovered something interesting about his feelings. He hated the Royal Guard, but not its members. When I thought about it, I realized I didn't start hating Tsukuyomi-san or Maya-san despite them being Guards here. I also don't hate Takamura or Meiya, despite them being pawns of Yuuhi. And surprisingly, I don't hate Yuuhi either, I just want her to stop trying to kill me. I mean, I'm here to help and bring some peace back to this place, and I think he also felt somewhat the same. So he didn't hate the people, he hated the way they did things.

When I saw Takamura not being an ass with the foreigners of the team, taking advice from them and not looking at me like I was some sort of psychotic murderer it dawned on me. That deep hatred I felt when I was facing the Wasp Squad, when I was fighting against Mion, I hated them because they ignited the memories of something unfair happening to me, like when the CO told us of Alt. IV being scrapped during Christmas. I think the Guard screwed him badly, but instead of hating the people he started to resent their ways.

That's why he felt alone and misunderstood. No one shared his views on how things should be done, and so he grew more and more hateful towards the Royal Guards as a whole. I mean, that's why he still wished to save the Empire. He hadn't given up on it and I don't feel like he wanted to fight against them either.

Well, not like knowing that helps in any way, since they still want to off me.

Now, if I remember correctly I have to take a turn here, and then after two hallways I gotta take another turn to the right.

"Special-kun?" Hmm? Oh, what have we here?

"Hey, Ayamine. So you guys are already back?" What's up with that patch though?

"… Where were you?" And here we go again.

I don't like her gaze. She might be making her usual poker face but I can tell by those tense brows that she's suspicious of me. I know, different people. Still hurts, though.

"I was working."

"On what? Another special mission?" Narrowing her eye, her lips plucked.

"Sigh… It's part of my punishment." Wide as a watermelon, then narrowed as if she were cutting onions, her eye remained scanning me. She must hate me now, huh?

"Punishment? You… What happened?"

"Nothing much, just sent to deliver some reports and folders around. Though, since, well, you know, I killed those soldiers, I'm under a strict overall punishment."

"… I see."

"When did you guys got here?"

"Today at morning. We got a lecture from the Instructor this afternoon." She looks down, her hands are tightening into fists. Let's not bother her anymore, I also have no permission to stand around.

"Well, congrats on passing the test. I suppose I'll see you during the lectures. Later." I knew it was gonna be like this. But man, doesn't it hurt to be treated like-

TUG

Hm? Why can't I move all of sudden? As I look behind me, Kei was holding my sleeve. Or more like, gripping it. Staring at me without looking away, her brows kinda down. I can tell she's somewhat upset. What's it gonna be? Regular throw or an STA?

"The PX is this way. Let's go." She starts pulling me in the opposite direction of where I was going. Putting some force into my feet, I manage to stop her.

"Ayamine, stop it. I can't go to the PX."

"Why?"

"It's part of my punishment. For twenty days I can't go there, that's why I have to eat the rations we were given during the CCSE." I show her the bag I was carrying. She doesn't let me go, eyes still narrowed.

"… Really?"

"Yeah, it's how it is." I shrug her hand off, looking away. "It's for the best, don't wanna be around a bunch of people who'll just talk shit behind my back anyways." I really don't. It's for the best.

"I… see." What's up with her? Holding her chin, as if she were pondering something, she stays silent.

"Well, I'll be going. Can't be found doing nothing." And anyways, it's not like there's anything we can talk-

TUG

"… Ayamine, let me go." And if you're gonna throw me, just do it already.

"Got a question."

"Sigh… What?" She probably wants to poke the wound, ask me why I murdered her 'fellows'.

"Are you still part of the squad?" She gets closer and she stares into me with that poker face of hers.

"… If you have a complain, take it to the Instructor." Maybe you'll convince her to have me train on my own, to not mix with the traitorous American.

"So, yes?"

"Sigh… Yeah, I'm still in the squad despite what I did. That all?"

"… Are you the only one getting punished?"

"Huh? Why would anyone else get punished? I was the one who acted out of place. Are… you insinuating I would push the blame onto you guys?" Biting my lips, acid again came up my throat. She lets me go, still staring at me.

"No… Just curious."

What is going on inside her head? Can't read her expression at all. She isn't upset, she would have thrown me if she were. Not picking a fight, but not feeling sorry for me either… Whatever, different people. Don't be an idiot or you'll get hurt again. Your beloved ones are gone, remember that well.

"Well, I still have to go do some work so I'll be on my way if that's all you wanted."

Sigh… Really, what's her deal? I was sure she was gonna be super pissed at me remaining in the squad, but-

TUG

"… Okay, this is getting ridiculous. What do you want now?" As I turn around, she looks right back at me, lips and brows tense into a line.

"… Why did you kill them?"

…

"… Doesn't matter. No one believed me when I told them." I shrug her off, this time with more strength. "I did it, and that's that."

"… Were you told not to talk?"

"Huh?"

"The Instructor told us to not say Mitsurugi was hurt when she came back from seeing you off. Told us we had no proof, so we better just shut up about that."

I see… So NotMarimo-chan had those orders, but didn't tell me a thing about it before I got in the chopper. Sensei's work to keep me in the dark, I'm sure. Question is, why?

"… Are you not gonna defend yourself? Not gonna call anyone from America?"

"… Look, do me a solid and don't bring it up. Stop trying to look for dirt, and just leave me alone." Of course she would come to laugh at my misery, of course she would keep being as she was. I'm an idiot for expecting otherwise. They're not who I remember them as, we're no longer in good terms. I have to stop seeing them as my allies, from here on in I have to fend for myself.

"So, you're not going back to America?"

"… Here or there, there's no one waiting for me."

"Huh?"

"Have work to do, gotta go."

Sigh… It's on me, for expecting them to change. This is how they are here, and I am not… welcome here. I am the stranger in this place. I always was an outsider.

"Hey, Special-kun."

"… What?" Turning around, she was giving me a side glance. Then, she rose a hand.

"See you tomorrow."

"… Yeah, later." Waving once at me, she then turned around and went her way.

What… was that? I don't get it. Was she… seeing my reaction? Is she still against me or not? Sigh… Understanding the inner workings of Kei's lanes would take me more time than all my loops until now, so let's cease and desist there. Let's hope she can be willing to make peace.

I made my way to Takamura's office quickly, and knock on the door once I found the place.

"It's open." I hear her voice from inside and enter the office.

"Excuse me. Good evening, 1st Lieutenant."

"Good evening, please do sit down. Well, what did you think of your first day as my assistant?"

She was eating some sort of mix of meat and potatoes. Ugh, this is torture… That thing smells really nice too. I'm stuck with this…

"It wasn't as bad as I thought it would be. It's a very light work, honestly."

"Light? With all the things you had to carry around, you thought it was light?"

"I mean, compared to fighting BETA this is nothing. I wasn't even doing any math on my head or trying to figure out sizes or costs. I just ran around delivering papers, you were the one doing the hard stuff." It's honestly surprising, she really is a capable woman.

"Well, I can see what you mean. But most soldiers would think such a workload to be most tiring and bothersome. Also, the report I asked you to write was very well redacted. Did you receive any lessons for that?"

"No, I'm just used to it after stu-… I mean, after working under the Vice Commander." I almost blurted out that I went to college. I'm a walking danger when I'm hungry and tired. I open my rations and… Hm? What is this? D Rank? It's also the right amount of it. The hell?

"Of course, after working under her for a month you must have improved many of your abilities. Well, regardless, I thank you for your efforts today. Your advice on changing the ammo was truly helpful, I was too focused on making it like it was before that I didn't think of that." She gives me a small bow. Is this her plan to eventually make me lower my guard?

"Don't mention it, I'm just doing my part."

"If you say so. So, can I ask you what do you think of the railgun?"

"Hmm… It may be really expensive to build, but I believe it will be a great asset once completed. And since it will be lighter now, with the right TSF it might also be possible to move with it."

I know that blue Takemikazuchi could move in and out of a hive with it, and if we make it lighter that would get even easier. If we had it during Kashgar, the mission would have went so much more smoothly. We could have had some backpacks on the XG to recharge the thing, Tama would have made short work of all those hallways infested with BETA.

"Move with it? You think that's possible?!" She dropped her fork as her eyes widened.

"I mean… It's not impossible, right?"

"Well, theoretically… But it would be very risky. Not many TSFs could pull off such a feat."

"Couldn't the Takemikazuchi do that?"

"Hmm… It may be able to, since it is made to be more robust than all of our other TSFs… Sigh, if only we hadn't lost both prototypes…"

"1st Lt.? What is it?" Her shoulders dropped and she lowered her eyes as she finished speaking.

Oh right, they lost both prototypes of the Second during the Incident, she must have remembered that. Damn, I just had to.

"Oh, nothing. Just talking to myself. But you do have a point, if we make it lighter than it used to be, it might be possible for a high performance TSF to move with it. Anyways, you did a great job today. I hope you keep it up from now on." She smiles at me again. Really, it's a shame I have to be on my guard around you.

"I'll do my best to not disappoint."

We continue to eat with only the tickling of a clock sounding through the room, she enjoying her food, me sharpening my teeth against mine.

"I heard that tomorrow you'll have your piloting test, right?"

"Yeah, will you be monitoring my performance?"

"Yes, that's the idea. I know that it is hard to adapt to it, but don't be scared of how much it shakes. I believe that in the UN's testing they also have you pilot for awhile."

"Wait, for real?" Another difference to the list. So we will have to actually pilot for a while. Huh, neat.

"Yes, I believe they shall have you go through all the different speeds at first, and then you'll have to actually pilot in the simulator. I recall hearing it's done in this way to measure the ability of the pilot to adapt to any situation, quick thinking is crucial for survival after all. Also, it works to see how good one is when you just begin, so that when you start learning all the theory you see how much of a difference it makes." That sounds reasonable, I guess.

"Well, I hope I don't crash into a building or something."

"Ahahaha, do not worry about that. From what I've heard, not many pilots here have lasted much during their first ever simulation."

I might need to fake it here, or is it too late for that? I mean, I will eventually stop messing around so is there any point in holding back? No, if I learned anything from this loop is that I shouldn't show all my cards right away. And we will be using the old OS, so I might end up feeling uncomfortable. That might work in my favor. I'm gonna barrel roll myself into a tree or something.

"That is a relief. 1st Lt., if you don't mind me asking, how was your training regime?"

"Mine? I was one of the first women to be trained on a special school of the Empire back in Kyoto. I graduated at a very young age, that's why I already have experience despite being younger than you." That also makes sense, since this world's me was a 1st Lt. despite being only sixteen. I wonder where did he train?

"That must have been hard." I better shut up now that I think about it. She must have been in Kyoto during the fall, last thing I want is to make her remember any bad memories she might have.

"Yes, it was… However… It also gave me many teachings that forged me into who I am now. Even if I'm on the UN, my heart does not forget where it belongs." Arching her brows a bit, her tone became a bit more firm and loud.

Oh shit, here we go again. The Empire this, the Empire that. They truly do resemble a flock of sheep. Or a music box, only able to repeat the same sounds over and over again.

"I see."

"Cadet Shirogane, if I might… Can I ask you about the incidents in the CCSE?"

…

"Go ahead."

"Ahem, then… Why did you took the blame for the incidents?"

"Why? Because I was the one who did them, of course. I killed those men, I harmed another three. Regardless of why I did it, the blood is already on my hands."

"Hmm… That's a peculiar way of thinking. You still feel remorseful about killing those inexcusable soldiers?"

"I mean, of cour-… Wait, what?"

"Hm? I'm talking about the men you attacked. I understand that all of us are comrades in service of the Shogun, but you shouldn't feel bad about your actions."

"… I think we're talking about different things here."

"Huh? Were we not talking about the incidents of the CCSE?" She brings one hand to her chin as she furrows her brows.

"Yes, so why are you… Well, calling them in that way? I killed them, I have no justification for that." She closes her eyes and moves her hair our of her face. Then as she opens her eyes with a weird glow in them, she addresses me again.

"I do not think it unproper to feel guilty about that. No one likes to have to point their weapons towards a fellow, however, their actions were most shameful. You should not regret acting in self-defense to protect your squadmates."

Okay, stop. Pause. Someone tell the world to stop spinning for a sec, I need to figure out what the hell is going on here.

"1st Lt. Takamura, my punishment was given to me because I had nothing to prove that I killed them with a convincing enough reason."

"What are you talking about? I've heard from some people on the floor that you did it to save your comrades. It seems those soldiers were abusing their power when you found them, and it was what compelled you to such extremes during the fight as they did not relent in their intentions."

"How… But… When I was given my punishment, my explanations did not convince the people that were questioning me. They said I had no proof to prove that. Who was the one saying that?"

"Who? I don't know, I still don't know most faces here. When I went to the PX to get my food I overheard some people talking about you, about how they went overboard with your punishment."

How is this… No, why is this happening? Did one of the girls spoke up despite the warning of the Instructor? Maybe Sensei spread a rumor to help me? Or is Takamura lying just to get on my good side?

"Are you sure? Everybody is still treating me like they usually did, I don't think anyone thinks too highly of me. I doubt people would actually say that." Her gaze turns stern as she taps the table, with a bit too much force.

"I am telling the truth. Are you not misunderstanding your punishment, perchance?"

"No, I mean, I can't go to the PX, I can't go to my room, I lost my free time." And the consoles.

"Hmm… It is odd. Well, perhaps your superiors are trying to teach you not to be so reckless from now on? In any case, do not dwell on it with such oppression, I'd like to believe you learned a valuable lesson from this regretful turn of events." How convenient, you're awfully understanding towards me despite being a noble. I wonder why. "So long as you remember to restrain your temper I am sure you will be fine from now on. And if you need advice on your piloting training I'm more than willing to lend you a hand." Why is she beaming at me like that? She's being too obvious, does she think I won't notice how kind she sounds? Does Yuuhi suspect I'm a surface pilot?

"I guess… Maybe I'll ask the XO when I go report to her tonight. And, when you say helping me out, what do you mean exactly?"

"I could spar with you on the simulator and teach you some footing techniques I've learned, for example."

"And why would you do that? Aren't you super busy with the railgun?" Why is a Royal Guard being this nice to me, after what I did? What does she gain from this?

"Well, yes. But I'd like to thank you for your help, and… Ahem, considering your scores and numbers, I believe you have much potential. I merely wish to give you a hand." It does look like they suspect I'm a pilot. I mean… If Sensei is cooperating with them…

"Please don't trouble yourself with me. I'll manage somehow." She drops her shoulders and eyes dejectedly.

"I see. Well, I'll be monitoring your training so don't worry too much about it. In the same way you're supporting me in my project I'll support you in your training, so if you need help do not hesitate to ask." Help, huh?

"1st Lt., if I may… Could you consider helping my squad instead of just me?"

"Your squad?"

"Yes, it would be unfair if only I got to learn under you. So, if you have the time, would you spar with my squadmates as well? Of course, if it's too much of a bo-"

"Alright."

"Just like that?!"

"Well, you asked me so sincerely that I'd feel bad if I refused. And I do like to help people reach their potential. Back in Yukon, one member of my squad had…" Looking down, she squints her eyes. "some trouble with his machine. When I sparred with him, he could find a hint that drove him forward, and eventually he managed to dominate a new style fitting for his TSF. That feeling was truly… How to say it? It wasn't just rewarding… I was truly proud about that." Smiling a bit, placing a hand near her neck, she looks up once more."So, if I can do the same for you and your squad, it'll be an honor to help. After all, lending my strength to my fellows will only make us stronger. I do expect you all to take this seriously though, since I won't hold back." She crosses her arms as she stares at me again, with violet flares in her eyes.

"Oh, don't worry about that. We are used to being drilled to the ground by our Instructor." Regardless of my situation, if she's willing to help the girls that will only make them better. Even if you end up going against me, thanks for this Takamura.

We talked for a little while about my squad, who they were and how I saw them, and what I thought they needed the most help in. Thankfully, she is willing to lend me a hand in this. This will work wonders, especially for Tama.

After some small talk about today's work, once I finished my rations, I excused myself and went my ways. Walking towards the elevator on B5F, ignoring those glares people were throwing at me, the insults behind my back, I felt a small chill on me. Unable to look away from the ground, licking my lips over and over, I pick up the pace.

I guess now… It's time to see what's your take in all this, Yuuko. Are we… still in the same team?

Invited to a Masquerade

Chapter 27: Invited to a Masquerade

---

November 23 rd . Near 8 PM.

(Elevator.)

[Takeru]

---

Down and down, down it goes. A chime beeps out, the door opens. Sighing as I placed my hands on my pockets, I stomped my way to the office.

Would be faking it if I said I'm not scared of her answer, but I gotta face her frontally. Otherwise, she might doubt my resolve or intentions. That is, unless she'd rather dispose of me. I do have a mountain of questions for you Yuuko, so you better be ready to answer them. I don't need to know everything that happens behind the curtain but I'd like confirmation on whether or not we're on the same team.

I tried my best today to not get paranoid, but considering everything that happened no one could blame me for being nervous right now. I might have some plays to make, but that's all. Without her cover, anyone could kill me in my sleep. And Tsukuyomi-san did already take my sword, so Yuuhi should already be informed of that, too. Sigh… First this talk with Sensei, then I see what choices I have on the table.

Reaching the end of the hallway, licking the inner side of my teeth, feeling a quiver below my ears, I knock the door as I usually do.

"Come in." The beep sounds, the door is unlocked, and in I go.

"Good evening, Sensei." Sitting as usual, the mountains of papers in the desk, she was focused on her laptop.

"Good evening, Shirogane. Did you need anything? I'm terribly busy right now." So you still refuse to look my way, huh.

"As per my instructions, I came here to see if there are any other things you want me to do. And because I have a lot of things to ask you."

"I have no more orders for you today. Return to your cell, that's all." That's all? Does she really think I'll leave like this?

"Sensei, I have something to ask you. It's about-"

"Cadet Shirogane, return to your cell. That's an order." She drilled knives through her eyes into mine. Returning the glare, folding my arms, my feet moved not a single bit.

"I'm not leaving. We need to talk."

"Should I call the MP and get you some bullets you can trip onto?"

"Come on, you can't do that!"

"I'm the XO of this base. So yes, I can!" She gives me devilish smile as she spins in her chair. Ugh, is she being serious or is she mocking me?

"I know I must have caused you a lot of problems, but can you listen to me?" She stops spinning and looks at me again, with a frown on her face and fire in her eyes.

"Oh no, you don't. You have no idea about all the problems you've caused me."

"Err… Well, yeah. I don't know, but-"

"Shirogane, I did tell you someone wanted you out of here. Yet, you went and did all you could to stay. It seems you didn't quite get my message."

"Your message?" That does… sound pretty definitive to me.

"You caused me a lot of trouble, you got a lot of eyes onto you. You're being a real pain right now."

"… You say that after all I did for you?"

"Yes. Now, go back to your cell. I have nothing to say to you right now." She again waves towards the door, returning her attention to her PC.

"But I do. And it's important." And you're going to listen.

"Let me guess, this is about the chasers that went after you?"

"Yes. Why didn't you notify me of it?"

"I couldn't do that. That's all."

… That's all? That's all, you say?! They could have died!

"And why couldn't you? I believe we had an agreement." Taking a step forward, can't help but frown. She fixes her posture and again sends her flares on me.

"You're just a Cadet here. You couldn't know of that. If anyone noticed you had that kind of knowledge, things would have gotten more ugly than what they are now. I trusted you could manage somehow, but you went and murdered people. Our people, Shirogane. And that is giving me a lot of unwanted problems when I should be focusing on the theories. You know, those things that will allow me to complete the 00 Unit and save mankind?"

"Well, maybe I could have avoided killing them if I knew they were coming at us." I return the glare, she frowns as she entwines her fingers.

"You couldn't possess that intel and I couldn't get myself more involved in those political ploys. That is all. Do not forget why we're working together. Return to your cell, now."

So you're willing to hide things from me if they're problematic for you? Of course she would. She's looking out for herself. I forgot I was talking with the woman who put a gun to my head despite all that I gave her, the one that sent me to my world knowing what would happen to it.

Actually… I will never know whether that Sensei already knew of what happened to me when I came back. She didn't care to screw that version of my world she sent me back to after Marimo-chan's death if it meant making me 'ready' to tune the 00 Unit. And even if she did offer me a gun twice… That might have been a lie, those guns could have had no bullets in them. And she might have known of what would happen to me when I returned to my world, but chose to not try to make me stay. I'm sure I would have given her a lot of problems, considering that we did deceive the Americans during Ouka. She had lost a lot of power back then, my presence would only have made her position worse, me being an outsider.

And this Sensei might be the same. Once I'm not useful to her, she'll throw me away. And if it is to achieve her desired result, she'll do anything. I know that well already. But as much as I want to punch her right now… I need her. But this does confirm it. I need allies. For the day you no longer have a use for me.

"I know that I gave us a lot of problems, and I'm sorry about it. I'm not… proud of what I did. But there's still something I have to talk with you about." She sighs and rolls her eyes.

"If this is about how they were harming Mitsurugi when you-"

"I inherited some memories from this world's me, Sensei."

She twitches. Her eyes freeze as she looks at me. For a moment, she didn't say a thing. Gazing at me, as if scanning me for a reaction, couldn't help but to rise a brow at her sudden radio silence.

"You… got some of his memories?"

"Bits and pieces. Feelings, more than anything."

"… Is that so. And is any of that information relevant to Alt. IV or any of the tech we're developing here?"

"Well, no. But-"

"Then I don't care. And you also shouldn't." She waves towards the door, signaling me to leave.

"So you won't even hear me out?"

"Sigh… I'm busy right now. And the memories you got from this world's Shirogane have nothing to do with you, so just forget about them. Right now, you're useless. Stay put and don't give me more problems."

And without pause she returns her attention to her computer. Heh, what did I expect from her? Just because she was being nice I forgot how she truly is.

"… Useless, huh?" I turn around, heading towards the door. "Man, what a shame. It would suck if we had some major incidents coming at us right about now."

"Huh? Major incidents? Shirogane, what are-" I send her a side glance as I stop by the door.

"It's such a shame we don't have a dashing, brave, chestnut haired soldier that can warn us of those. We're stuck with bothersome, bratty, useless me. Shucks. Well, I'm sure I'm just getting in your way right now, so I'm going to cry myself to sleep on my cell. Goodnight, Sensei." Giving her a small smile and a salute, I leave her office. Her shouts come after me shortly after.

"Shirogane! Shirogane, stop right there." I stop, glance back at her as she was coming out of her office for a second, and continue walking towards the elevator. Fuhuhu! "Shirogane, I order you to stop."

"Oh, what is it, Sensei? Want to keep reminding me of how useless I am right now?" She comes to me, with the face of a hungry lion.

"Stop messing around, what was that about some major incidents?!" She moves one hand up and down, pointing at me. Her face is completely distorted into a scowl.

I shrug her off. Want some intel? You're gonna have to earn it now.

You pissed me off. You're the only one who can protect me here, if you don't speak to me I have no security I'll be alive tomorrow morning. Yet you stay quiet, ignore my plea of help, and push me away.

I'm not useless, nor powerless. I have something else to use, I know of three incidents that will happen. One of them might happen because of us this time. But I won't be an idiot, I won't reveal my cards so easily. You want this intel? I better get something good in return, because I want to help you in fixing this mess, and I won't reach my peaceful world if I you don't help me. So I need you to drop that cold mask and listen to what I have to say.

"Don't worry Sensei, I'm sure you have better things to do than wasting your time with this useless Cadet." I turn around and continue towards the elevator.

"… Stop right there."

"Hmm? What is it? Weren't you super busy?" I grin at her and I'm met with a frown.

"Shirogane, let's go back to the office. Looks like we have a lot to talk about."

"Do we?"

"Yes, we do. Now, come on. Stop wast-"

"And what do I get from it?" She freezes again, staring at me for some seconds. She brings one hand to her chin as she gets closer.

"I've been doing a lot of things to keep you safe, you know. Just because I don't talk to you doesn't mean I'm not your ally."

"And for how much longer will you be on my side? For all I know, and going by your attitude, as soon as I speak you'll no longer have any use for me. You always discard anyone who brings you down, to cut your losses. If I'm more trouble than I'm worth, you'll discard me too. You wouldn't let my presence here get in the way of Alt. IV."

One of her eyes twitched, for less than a second the hand on her chin did too. Slowly, as a snail, she began to get even closer, never losing the poker face.

"And why do you think I've been covering you? Why do you think I called you before you boarded the copter? You were supposed to stay quiet and let me deal with everything, yet you went and alerted HC of your involvement in the consoles' development… Thanks to that, I'm facing many inquiries about you. And yes, I'm covering your back from all the vultures that are trying to find dirt to throw at you."

"I did all I could with the limited knowledge I had. You didn't vouch for me, and they told me they were planning to execute me. So, I used them as a shield to make the UN less willing to off me."

"… So you truly thought I had left you to fend for yourself?"

"Or at least didn't or couldn't do anything from your position. Someone wanted me out, someone with much power, enough to make you be riled up about it, and I rather not have to restart another loop, thank you very much."

"And you think I don't know that?" Frowning much, she places a finger on her chin. "Do you truly think I wasn't going to protect you?"

"Then, why didn't you vouch for me?"

"Because I had my hands full negotiating with those who wanted to execute you, to ease the punishment on you so that you could stay, and to find some dirt on who was the one who ordered the chasers to do what they did."

"… And? Did that work?" For a sec, she bit her lower lip. Folding her arms, her eyes gain a sudden interest in the nearby walls for some reason.

"No, but regardless, this whole affair would have turned out better for us if you had let met take care of everything."

"You should have told me that before I left the island, or you know, have the Instructor warn me about not pressing about how no one would believe me about how Meiya was harmed."

"… I believe that was an obvious outcome." Folding her arms, inhaling through her nose, she looks to the wall. "In any case, I was planning to keep everything under wraps, by force if necessary, but you had to let them know of the consoles."

"I mean, wasn't what I did for the best? If you couldn't dissuade them on your end without making much noise, better to solve this quickly, right?" Again, one of her brows twitched as the edge of her lips returned in for a second.

"If everything had been solved, then yes, you would be right. However, I cannot guarantee that the storm has passed as of now."

"… What do you mean?"

"I don't know how or why, but the order to execute you was pulled back without warning, and not because of me, I'll have you know." Placing a hand on her chin again, she looks right into my eyes, hers still filled to the brim with fire. "They're onto you now, many people are looking into your situation here, Shirogane. And many with ill intentions. You made Mitsurugi and Sakaki pass the CCSE, you've made many enemies here."

"That's no surprise, we already knew the Shogunate was coming for me. I suppose they were the ones placing the pressure on you." She nods, allowing herself to sharply sigh, fuming wordlessly at the situation. "So… Bothersome people to you are coming at me, then?"

"… As I said, many are inquiring about your situation in this base, and your prior location as well. And I'm taking the necessary steps to silence them, yet the fact that people now know of the little sims you 'made' will keep the eyes of many onto you. Some are only curious about your background, others want to inquire about why I allowed you to develop thes e machines without giving reports about it, and others are… still wishing you to leave, since you got the pigeons out of the cage."

"… And despite that, you wanted to still keep me in the dark?" Biting my lips, I return her glare as she again stares at me in radio silence.

Why would you be bothered about me fixing this as swiftly as I did? They already were planning to deport me, or very probably kill me going by how dead serious she's being. So, what is it with you now, Sensei?

"Could you illuminate me on what has you being this… doubtful towards me?" Frowning a bit, her verbal gun aims at me and fires off glacial shells.

"Well, after all you just told me, and considering you didn't warn me of the chasers and put me under Takamura, maybe we're no longer playing for the same team." She then takes a step closer to me, her face filling my view.

"… Surely you're not saying what I think you're saying, Shirogane?"

"I dunno. I told you before that if I saw you were not taking me into account I'll consider our partnership as finished."

"Don't be ridiculous! You're a crucial part in Alt. IV, you're my bodyguard and-"

"And you left me in the dark, and were planning to keep doing so. You didn't vouch for me when I got interrogated despite what you knew, you left me in the detention barracks where I may end up murdered in my sleep, and now you don't even want to hear me out. Don't forget that I've seen many times this side of you, and every goddamn time I saw it bad things happened to either me or the ones I care about. So Sensei, is our pact still in effect?"

"Of course it is. Stop being stupid, I don't know why you're so scared. No one is laying a finger on you while you're on my base. I'd like to remind you that I am not those other versions of myself you met before, I am not going to backstab you in such a way." She's offended, obviously. But she's also lying.

"Are you sure about that? Because yesterday 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi came to question me at night. I got lucky she didn't murder me, but if I have to stay there for twenty days… Sensei?" Her eyes are widening, and now she frowns. Did she not know of this?

"When? At what hour? Why have I not heard of this?!" She got close and grabbed me by the collar, shaking me for a little while.

"So you had no idea a member of the Royal Guard went down to the detention barracks yesterday night?" She lets me go and then she crosses her arms. Fuming like a bull seeing a Tank-Class, one could practically hear the rumbling sparks coming out of her eyes.

"No! Why did… Did the guard let her through because he thought she would… Ugh, more nationalistic pricks!" She ruffles her hair as a deep sighs escapes her lips. "Enough, let's go back to the office. We have a lot to talk about." She starts walking towards the door, but I remain still. "… Shirogane?"

"You do know that I could have been murdered yesterday, and you would have been none the wiser, right?"

"… I don't like your tone. What are you trying to say?"

"First, that since it seems I'm being targeted now I'm scared shitless of going to sleep. Second, that we can't trust the rest of the staff here to not suddenly do something against me. Third, that I can't trust in you to protect me in case that something goes wrong." One of her brows twitched again. "And fourth, you still haven't told me what do I get from speaking, nor reassured me about whether or not we're still on the same team." She sighs as she rubs her forehead slowly. After taking a sec to inhale deeply, looking my way again, she folds her arms real tight.

"Well, for one, I'll send someone trustworthy as the watchman of the detention barracks from now on. This isn't the first time the Royal Guard moves around the base without me knowing about it, remember the first time you met them?" Oh right, when Maya-san interrogated me. Sensei didn't knew about it until I told her. "That should take care of points one and three. As far as point two, don't worry. Nobody would dare to lay a hand on you while you're here. Don't forget who I am, nor that this base is under my command."

"There is one tiny, little problem. You see, I'm going to be doing mock battles in a TSF in a few days. Couldn't one mechanic do something to my Jump Units? Or to any other part of my TSF?"

"That's solved easily. I take Yashiro to the hangar, and anyone who tries to do anything funny gets kicked out. That should serve as an example. Good enough for you?" Will that truly be enough? Well, I can trust in Kasumi.

"I guess. And what about point four?"

"Let's discuss it in my office. Let's go already."

"… And you wouldn't be working with the Shogunate, would you?" She stops again and looks back, this time clearly pissed off.

"Shirogane, you are a key element for Alt. IV to succeed. Without you, I don't think we could stabilize the 00 Unit. You think I'll let anyone kill you?"

"The chasers could have, Tsukuyomi-san could have, Takamura may. I don't doubt Yuuhi will send an assassin after me sooner than we think." She flinched. That's weird, why is she furrowing her brows like that?

"Yuuhi? Are you talking about the Shogun? Why are you calling her by her name?"

"What's that look for? You know manners are not my thing, and yes, I'm talking about the Shogun. What other Yuuhi could I be talking about?"

"But why are you calling her by her first name? Even for you that's too much."

"Look, I don't care about poise and all that stuff. I'm sure she wants my head."

"… The upper or the lower one?" She then gives me a smirk.

"SENSEI!"

"And? Why do you think… You said you got some memories from this world's you, didn't you? Is that what got you so paranoid?"

"Maybe. I also met those two damn pickles during the CCSE, and if he was related to them, the Shogun must have known of him. I'm sure she already has a plan to kill me."

"Pickles? Related?" She blinks fast for a while before ruffling her hair, again letting a sigh out. "Alright, enough with this. I honestly have no idea what you're talking about. Yoroi did mention something about the Shogun having plans about you, I also got informed this world's you served the Shogun. That's why I've been so busy, trying to get us some clear support to protect you in case anything happened. I honestly didn't think they would come after you, why do you think that?"

"I told you already. I met two members of the Tsukuyomi family during the CCSE, and they must have reported what happened there to Yuuhi. If he was related to the Tsukuyomis, I'm sure they will want me dead as soon as possible." And now they have the sword, so double that up.

"And since I kept you in the dark, you thought I chose to hand you over before the Shogun became a hazard for Alt. IV?"

"Yeah, if it was a choice between me and getting in more trouble with the Empire, you'd get rid of me after all." She sighs rubbing her head.

"You truly are an idiot. Let's stop wasting time, we have a lot to talk about. Come already."

She turns around and briskly returns to her office. Well, I got her to talk. So she had a talk with Yoroi-san, huh? She knew this world's me was related to the Shogun and kept quiet. And you want me to believe you, of all people, didn't knew that Tsukuyomi-san came to my cell last night? Yeah, right. Nothing escapes your sight, not on this base.

Whatever, let's hear her out. Then I'll decide what to do.

After going back and sitting again, she tells me a summarized version of what Yoroi-san told her. This world's me fought on the Battle of Kyoto, he was recruited into the Guard officially after that, he served the Koubuin House and Yuuhi before she was appointed as the Shogun, and Sensei says she thinks he did some dirty work for the Shogunate. That last part was the important part. He felt conflicted regarding his views, so I bet those missions did a number on his mental health.

Then, almost taking no pause in her words, almost as if she had forgotten that oxygen was a thing, she tells me of all the pressure she received to send the Wasp Squad, and showed me her mail inbox. Ninety six daily mails, with pleas, threats, offers and bribes. What the actual fuck? She continues explaining me about NotMarimo-chan's report and what came after our encounter with the soldiers.

"Then when the report about you reached HC, I negotiated with them for quite some time. Some old shits wanted to make your squad execute you, to set an example for the other foreigners apparently. Honestly, I know the UN needs to gather personnel from the country where it's set up, but did they have to scout those idiots for the Council?!"

"I mean, if they hadn't done that, wouldn't that have given them more trouble with the Shogunate?" She strokes her bangs as she makes coffee.

"Yes, I know that already. It's just frustrating to deal with them. I used my connections and some suspicions I got to threaten that Captain. The UN couldn't allow that intel to reach the Empire, so they needed to silence you. But with my intervention, all I could do was try to stop the order to execute you without arising suspicions. I can't have anyone knowing you're vital to Alt. IV, or those damn Alt. V supporters may end up sending a kamikaze to get rid of you." I gulp at the notion. Imagine someone full of explosives rushing at you, ready to blow him or herself up just to off you. "Which is why this was taking its time, since as you said I couldn't make much noise about it." She then sends a narrowed side glance my way, her tone slowing down now. "I was planning to delay your punishment until I could show the UN the XM3, saying that you gave me the idea for it. But you had to go and let them know of the simulators."

"But in the end, that was what made many agree to do what you wanted them to, right?"

"Well, yes." Her brows arch down a bit. She hands me my cup, then slowly sits down by the blackboard. "But it made them aware of your involvement in the sims, and that was not necessary. There's also the fact that the execution order was retracted this morning without notice or explanation."

"And you weren't behind that in any way?"

"No, I was moving some strings, but in no way things would have settled down so quickly." She then drinks some coffee, brows still arched. I do too, looking up.

Wait… A sudden change in the decision to kill me… Something that changed overnight…

"… I think I know why that happened."

"Huh?" Clearing the second of surprise away, she leans her arms on the table, looking straight at me. "You do, hmm? Something in the memories of this world's you, perhaps?"

"No, not that. See, I sent 1st Lt. Tsukuyomi after my sword yesterday and-"

"Excuse me, why did you do that?" Fuming much, screw the fire, she has an entire flamethrower in her eyes now. "No, what did she want from you?"

Sigh… Telling her of what Meiya had told me of the sword, of what Tsukuyomi-san asked about when she visited me yesterday, and why I chose to hand over the blade, she began to spin in her chair, eyes closed but lips made into a small, tight line.

"… You do realize you just made yourself into a target for the Shogunate, do you?"

"It was better than having them grow suspicious of me, or putting you in trouble while trying to cover me."

"Sigh… I do acknowledge that, and I agree that hiding the sword wouldn't have done us any favors. Still…" Her spinning suddenly stops, then she rolls back to face me. "Why did they remove the execution order then? What else did you talk about with that woman?"

"I ended up telling her of the Pickles, and it's why she started asking me all those weird questions."

"… What are these 'Pickles' you keep mentioning, Shirogane?"

"Oh, I think it's how this world's me referred to the young Tsukuyomis that were part of the CCSE."

"Hmm… So, it is possible they were confused after the exchange. However, I can see why you grew so fearful. If the Shogun now knows of you possessing one of such blades, it is entirely possible that she is wishing to have you dead as you said. Sigh… Don't worry, I'll try to keep her at bay somehow."

"You think you can do that?"

Her brows arch down, as slowly as a progress bar fills up she squints her eyes while leaning her cheek onto a coiling fist. Then, she takes a sip of coffee, looking away.

"You already explained your situation with the blade, it was nothing but an error on your part because you lost your memory. No harm was done, so I'll pressure them to drop any intents they might have to harm you. And I was already preparing some countermeasures to allow you to stay here, considering how insistent Yoroi was when he came last time."

"Sigh… Good to know that. There is one thing you didn't explain, though."

"What is it?"

"Takamura. Why did you make me her assistant?"

"Oh, her. Don't worry, Yashiro read her mind while we had a meeting. I made a point to ask her about you, she doesn't have any bad intentions. If we can keep the Shogun from attacking you, she shouldn't be a problem. I also spread a rumor around the base, that you had to kill the soldiers because they harmed your squad. I don't need the whole base to get against you, and I honestly have enough dirt on the Council that if they try anything, I'll leak some sensible intel to Yoroi." So that's what Takamura was talking about. Even so, will just a rumor be enough? "Now, can you explain to me what happened during the CCSE?"

I tell her of my encounters with the soldiers, how I felt during the chase, what I heard during my clash with Mion, what she told me after that, my conclusions after calming down and reflecting on those feelings and about how I saw them at the end of the CCSE. Not interrupting me even once, which is kinda odd, she tapped her lips with two fingers as I spoke.

"… This is interesting." She's staring again at nowhere. She must be lost in thought again.

"That's not how I would describe this mess. Sensei, I think it's safe to assume that-"

"Shirogane, you said you couldn't really remember things clearly despite feeling like you absorbed the memories of this world's you, right?"

"Yes, that's right."

"Then, we'll make you remember them."

"Huh? How are-"

"If you have those feelings in you, that means that the memories of this world's you lie repressed in your subconscious, just like your memories from your past loops were repressed in you when you came back after your last loop. Normally, you would have to adapt to them first before being able to recall them clearly, but since we have Yashiro here we can use her to bring them out faster."

"Wait… Wouldn't that… like, change my personality? Wouldn't I become this world's Takeru?"

"Not if we do this carefully." Smiling again, she then points at me. "I mean, you didn't revert to your version of when you left that other world, you absorbed its knowledge and experiences into the you that had lived two years in your world. Of course, you might begin to share some feelings and ideas, but that's only because you already were similar to him in that sense."

"And you're sure this is safe?"

"Do you know of any other ways in which you can safely do this other than under my watch, and with Yashiro's help?" Placing a hand on her chin, her eyes sharpening, taking a hawkish tint, she leaned forward while resting an elbow on the table.

"Well, no, not really… So, we'll use that knowledge for what exactly?" She smiles like a devil as she raises a finger to the ceiling.

"To deceive the Shogun, of course!"

"… You mean making her believe I'm actually Takeru Shirogane?"

"Aren't you?" She puts one finger to her cheek and chuckles. Sigh…

"Well, yes. But I'm not their Takeru, even if I inherited some memories I am different than him. This isn't like when I got my own memories back, even if I share some traits with him I don't think I could replicate his mannerisms perfectly."

"Oh, don't worry about it. If you can't convince them, confuse them! They just need to see some similarities, all the other different things about you can be explained through your memory loss and experiences in Yukon."

"I think this will come back to bite us hard in the ass down the line…" And I don't think it's safe for me. If they ever find out I was deceiving them…

"It's that or getting the Shogun to come after your life. She now knows of that blade, and yet I assume she was the one who ordered to call off the execution order, for it to have happened so suddenly. I can deal with the members of the HC and the other politicians, but Her Purpleness is another matter entirely. There's little I can do if she convinces people to come at you again."

"So, since she seems to be doubting, you want to safely make me regain some memories of this world's me to calm her down and 'prove' to them I actually am who I say I am?"

"Yes, that would also immensely help me in dealing with your cover. Also, by seeing how you, as a Nucleus, absorb memories, I might be able to find a way to stabilize your self in this world far easier than I was expecting."

"Huh… So, you're really sure this will work?"

"Yes, I do." Saying it a bit louder, she narrows her eyes at me. I shrug and drink some more coffee. "If the Shogun called off the order, and the Tsukuyomi were close to him, they will surely lay off the pressure once they see you are, indeed, Takeru Shirogane."

"But what if they want me to assume his role then?"

"You lost your memories and want to keep living as you are now. No act, no lies, it's your life after all. Or, what?" Then, she again narrows her eyes, furrows her brows, and glances at me with more fire coming out. "You wouldn't be thinking on leaving to the Guard, would you?"

"What?! Of course I'm not. The hell did this come from?" Then, she gives me a side glance, the hold on her mug tightening a bit.

"Well, you seem already quite fond of Her Purpleness, calling her Yuuhi like that."

"Oh, shut up. You know I don't care about status that your plan relies on that this world's me was on good terms with the Shogun, what are we gonna do if-"

"I'm sure he was. If not, they wouldn't have called off the execution orders. The fact that they're taking their time, despite the reports the three Tsukuyomis must have delivered, is proof of that." I guess… I mean, Tsukuyomi-san got weird yesterday after I said that bit about the pickles.

"Guess we just gotta bite the bullet and see what happens, huh."

"Exactly. This is our best bet to guarantee your safety, if the Shogun gives you her blessing all the nationalistic pricks will start seeing you as a fellow instead of a traitor. And then, all the issues we're facing now will be gone."

"Well… I guess we can give this a spin and see how it goes, at least."

"Good. So, what was that about some major incidents happening?"

"What do I get from this again? So far, you've given me no reassurance that things will get better. We're just making assumptions in the air." And again, her brows twitch.

"Is there anything you want?"

I bring my hand to my chin, remembering the things I thought about before coming to talk to her. Originally I was going to propose her these ideas, but I think it'll be for the better if I take care of this myself. As much as I welcome her support, I won't be as foolish as to believe it to be unconditional.

"A few things, actually. This is the last bit of useful intel I have, since I'm sure the missions in the future will be very different. I don't know how the ripple will change history after we start Alt. IV officially. So, in exchange for everything I've done until now, I want you to give me real power."

"What do you mean?"

"I want an S5 Clearance pass for Hangar 90."

"What for?" She narrows her eyes, entwines her fingers, and leans forward.

"In case I have to escape from some pursuers. I also want that midnight blue Kagerou to be there, ready to deploy at any time for me." With that TSF I'm sure I could fight off anyone Yuuhi might send after me, even the Royal Guard.

"That one is already there, being used on another project. I suppose I could make you a part of it, under the guise of your punishment." Another project? Just how many things is she doing here? "Anything else?"

"I also want you to order me to do some 'paperwork' for you during my punishment. I want that as a cover, there's some things I want to research in the meantime. I'll need an office and a PC."

"Research? Exactly what do you want to research?" The fire gives way to embers, shining bright as she leans forward even more. Of course she'll be curious about it.

"Weaponry. There are a few ideas I have, but I don't know how practical they would be, so the first step is reading up on the intel we have here. My discussions with Takamura and the Chief Engineer today made me realize you people lack flexibility, I honestly can't believe they were fixed on using 120mm ammunition despite all the resources that would take."

"Wait, you were the one that suggested to use smaller ammo?"

"You didn't know that? Way to go, Sensei." Frowning again, no retort comes out this time. She takes a sip from her coffee and let's a sigh escape her lips.

"Can you tell me what do you want to research? I might be able to lend you a hand."

"Don't worry, I can take care of it on my own." Her eyes veer down, breaking contact with me, as she goes for her mug again. "Offense wise, we have our bases covered. But there are a few little things I'd like to change and make. Like for example, we put sensors in every single part of our TSFs, right? Why can't we put them on the weapons too?"

"On the weapons? What for?"

"To help in not hitting your allies in close combat. And to improve communication. During a the fight in the Original Hive, my comms got screwed up so badly I lost contact with my whole squad. I don't remember if I told you, but on the walls of the BETA hives there's this material that blocks electric signals or something like that. Well, even if we would have been screwed anyways, having more sensors to help in the cramped, filled with BETA, and narrow hallways of a hive would come in handy." Sensei was again looking at the ceiling, ruffling her hair.

"… Sensors on the weapons, huh? Anything else?"

"Yes, but I'll let those be a surprise for you. I have three or four ideas, but again, I don't know if they're worth your time yet. I wanna do something, I want to prove to the UN that I am useful and that they shouldn't kill me off."

"If that's what you want, I'll allow it. If you say you've got more things coming, I'll do my part. Is there anything else you wanted to do?"

"The last one is more of a weird… How to say it? Fetish of mine. Is it possible to…" She brings a hand to her mouth, looking up at nowhere. "… What do you think?"

"… Yes, it is possible. But… No, with that other… Hmm…"

"So it isn't out of our reach?"

"No, it isn't. And you're sure you can do it?"

"Yeah. With two of them I'm sure we could turn this thing around. And also, it would be useful for the future." And for myself too.

"Hmm… We don't have enough intel to work with that right now. That will have to wait, but I do have some preparations that would go well with your idea."

"Then you have your deal. I'll tell you a bit of what will happen, and all of it one week before it happens."

"… Say, Shirogane. Are you happy with that Kagerou you modified?" Without looking at me, she begins to spin in her chair.

"Yeah? Why? Think you can get me a Shiranui?"

"What if I told you I could get you a Takemikazuchi?"

"… By Takemikazuchi, you mean the Type-00 that belongs to the Royal Guard?"

"Yes, what else could I mean? Then, you could modify it to make it like the Takemikazuchi of that game, with those weird machineguns built into its waist or whatever. I'm sure you'll feel more safe with that than with a Kagerou."

"For real?" She nods. "No kidding?" I mean, that would be a dream come true, to pilot Valgern-On's version of the Takemikazuchi.

"No? I got a deal from the Shogun, to hand her the sensors, antennas, radars, and the new parts of the F-15 in exchange for ten Type-00 for my personal use. Currently, the Valkyries have nine members. Isumi, Hayase, Munakata, Kazama, Suzumiya, Kashiwagi, Tsukiji, Takahara, Asakura. If I count you, the Viking, we have exactly ten members in the A-01 Squad. So, it makes perfect sense to give you that last Takemikazuchi, since you also want to do tests with it."

She wasn't kidding, her eyes had that glow she gets when she finds a new toy to play around with. She then hands me a folder, with the details of the deal. A Type-00C, huh? Hmm… I did not expect this, that's for sure. Imagine how good it'll be with the new XM3, radars, sensors and Jump Units. Maybe we could give it a little horn with the new antenna design too. In any case, if I can get one of those I won't say no, but why did she not want to talk with me about all this?

"Sensei, if you planned this for me, why were you keeping quiet when I came to speak with you?"

"Because, as I said before, there are things I cannot let you in. Possessing such knowledge would place you in danger, or make you even more worried. To be honest, I was thinking that someone was planning to send an assassin to kill you since the execution was called off, but I didn't expect the Shogunate to be coming for you so suddenly."

"And since I'm a causal magnet, you can't risk me getting negative, huh."

"Exactly. I admit I should have trusted in you more, and it is in part thanks to how you handled the situation with the sword that we have a shot at pacifying Her Purpleness now. Shirogane, just to be clear, I am on your side. So long as you help me, you won't leave this base and no one will harm you. So, let's keep those nationalistic idiots at bay. We have a world to save, right?"

…

'So long as you help me', huh?

"… And this time you won't discard me or go around doing things behind my back?"

"I never planned to do that. I am not the other versions you met." Fuming much, she stops spinning to give me a scolding gaze. "You're my most important ally, so stop being so negative already, it doesn't suit you. You're the one that's always happy, what am I gonna do if you get all depressed? Do you want to make Yashiro sad too?"

"Hey, that's not… It's just…"

"No one will lay a finger on you, so you can rest easy. Keep your temper in check and don't fight with your squad anymore. And don't be suspicious of Takamura, she's on our side too. It'll take some time until we can prove your identity, so simply stay on your guard until this is taken care of. Are we clear?" Sighing, I give her a nod. "Good. Now, tell me what you think is safe about those incidents." I guess this is as good as it gets. I won't get anything else out of her.

"Sigh… Got it. But you better follow through with your promises." Rolling her eyes, she folds her arms and nods, awaiting my words. "Well, first things first, one incident doesn't have a fixed date. It happens when a certain thing is sent here. Do we have an OTH Cannon here?"

"Yes, we do. To think we would need it… I can't wait to see what happens." Seriously, why are you smiling about that? You should be shaking in fear, not shivering in excitement. Sigh…

"Well, I somehow found something that will help us with that, so hopefully we can avoid getting more eyes onto us."

"What do you mean by that? What happens with this accident?"

"We can either deal with it or use your influence to stop it. If we keep drawing attention to us we will only get into more trouble, so we have to deal with it ourselves this time. I casually stumbled upon something that will help us with that." Assuming Takamura's trainings help Tama gain some more confidence. "And we have the XM3 now on our side, I'm sure things will turn out okay." Or we go all KAPUT! and I have to restart the loop.

"You found something? Whatever, I'll let you deal with that. What about the other two incidents?"

"We can actually use those two to our advantage, I think. And one is part of the reason why I told Tsukuyomi-san about my sword." Eyes squinted for a sec, lips became a rigid line. "One involves a natural disaster, we can use it to appeal to the Shogunate."

"Appeal? So, you say we help them out? Despite how much they hate us?"

"Ohoho, yes I do. They hate us, but we have a certain person here that they won't be able to say no to." Sensei grins as the answer came to her.

"Mitsurugi, huh? So we use her to make sure this incident is solved peacefully?"

"Basically. If Takamura is willing to help, then we have two people that can help with that. It might not be much, but saving Japanese lives should be worth something for the Shogunate. We could emphasize how many resources we spent saving those people instead of giving our backs to them. And it lets the squad get some hands on experience, too."

"Hmm… Not a bad idea, if I say so myself. Then, what about the last one?" I need to choose my words carefully for this one.

"That's the tricky one. Last time, when I tried to prevent the second accident, things got out of control pretty fast. I didn't know of the political situation of the Empire, and the ripple caused a horrible thing to pass. That is the third incident."

"So… I suppose this entails some sort of political struggle?"

"Sensei, how do you think I knew of the Shogun before absorbing this world's me's data?" She closes her eyes as she drinks some more coffee, then returns a firm gaze towards me.

"… So that's the one we have to avoid at all costs. What you're saying is, we have to prevent any more damage to our relations with the Empire?"

"Basically, we need to create a scenario where violence can't be used to further someone's political agenda. That's why I handed over the blade yesterday, to avoid anyone using that to spark that up." I don't want to mention Kei's letters, because that would get her out of the squad. I need every single pilot I can get for the eventual Kashgar raid. As much as she might hate me, I can't lose her skills.

"So, if someone had to be blamed, you would shoulder it on your own?"

"Well, I did bring the blade here myself… Wouldn't sit right with me to not do something about it."

"Sigh… Well, what's done is done. Then, with all the more reason, we need to fix our relationship with the Shogun. I'll prepare the office you asked me and give you a nice computer, so that you can work as much as you want. I'll contact the Empire to accept this accord the Shogun asked of me, I'll get us those Type-00C as soon as I can. Oh, by the by, your Fubukis are on the way already, they should arrive in two days."

"For real? Awesome. Oh, that reminds me… Are we training the squad with the XM3?" She waves one finger left and right as she smiles. W-What is she plotting now?

"No, first I want them to get a feel of the old OS. You did mention before that we trained them with the prototype last time around, right? This time, let's show them how important it is to cooperate with foreigners using the XM3. I'll give it to you, and only you, and they'll have to ask for it." I don't think that's a good idea. At all.

"Are you sure that won't make them more suspicious about me? Or more resentful towards the UN?" I can't help but to raise a brow at her, but she just shrugs.

"In the end, our goal is to make the Shogun give you her blessing, so it doesn't matter." I can see what you mean, but I don't think this will be fine for the time being. We don't even know how that business with his memories will turn out.

"Alright. I suppose that's that. Oh right! How are the theories? And the 00 Unit?" She then slumps into the chair as she ruffles her hair.

"The tests are not going well."

"… As in, we failed them or-"

"We couldn't generate a reaction from the Reactor with what I have now. If the communication happened, I have no way to confirm it for now. As I said before, I'll send the Valkyries to Sadogashima in a few days, and that also will work as a test for the XM3 too."

"Well, that sucks. What about the 00 Unit?"

"Sigh… Thankfully, we figured out how to fix the flaw of the data leak. But we are having problems adjusting the hardware to perform what we want it to do."

"Is it… not going to work?"

"Oh, not saying that. I can make it work." She rose a finger, fire again coming out of her eyes as she narrowed them a bit. "But we're in the middle of the optimization for that, between the tests on the Reactor and me reading the theories throughly. Since it's directly related to that whole emotional linkage of the second theory, and we are using prototype versions of the programs, the progress has been rather slow so far. Once we finish that ESP protocol, I believe there will be no leaks when the 00 Unit connects to a hive to recharge. But it is taking quite some time. More than what I thought."

"I see. I can't really help you with that. Oh, what I can tell you is that I did notice something about that theory." Her eyes spark back to life as she straightens her posture. This does work in my favor, so let's try to be nice to her.

"What did you notice?"

"The data that flows through me can be somehow controlled. I'm convinced my squadmates were receiving negative causal data through me, due to how paranoid they got. And when I got depressed and started doubting them, I also started getting more and more negative. As of late, it's been hard to control. So one's attitude does affect the leaks, especially when I'm around."

"Hmm… Then, with all the more reason, stop being so depressed. You're only making things worse here."

"I know… It's… Well, I'll do my best to not be so paranoid anymore. And if I could affect my squadmates, the 00 Unit will definitely be affected by it, and we can use that to draw the best solutions once she's up and running again." That's my hope here, the second theory is what will allow me to reach my slightly-more-peaceful world.

No matter how dark the future is, if Sumika can start pinpointing causal data from across all parallel worlds then we will be able to turn the tide of this war. Nobody can argue against results. That's my key to get out from this cage, not even the Empire would be able to keep antagonizing us after we recapture Sadogashima and neutralize the Cheorwon Hive.

"Well, that's good to know. I will have you monitored during these memory recovery sessions, to gather more data on the Nucleus and see if I can get a hint on how to proceed. That's all, go and rest for today."

"So… You're sure this will work, right?"

"… What is it? Are you still doubting me?" Leaning forward and squinting her eyes, a battalion of barrels aimed my way within her tone.

"Just… I don't think he was on good terms with Yuuhi. Do you have a plan in case the memory recovery goes wrong?"

"… Perhaps. For now, you shouldn't get negative about it. You are in need of some good rest, so simply go to sleep for today. We'll deal with the issues once they come up. Are we clear, Shirogane?"

"… Yeah. Goodnight, Sensei." She gives me a small smile as she finishes her coffee, I sigh as I stand up, going to the door.

"… Also, I'll make sure you remain safe in the detention barracks. Since people have to ask for permission to enter them, you're safer there than in your room for now. So-"

"I'll stay cool, I know. Thanks, Yuuko." Looking back, I give her a smile. She looks away as she ruffles her hair, bored as always.

"… Good. Now, off you go."

I nod, turn around as I wave her way, and leave the office. She locks the door as soon as I got out.

Walking down the hallway, passing on the idea of greeting Kasumi considering the mood I'm in, dragging my feet and feeling as if a mountain was on my shoulders, I reached the elevator and pushed the buttons to call it back down here.

Sigh… We could have avoided that discussion if she had talked to me from the start. Honestly, what did she expected me to do? It's not like I wanted to murder those guys.

Well, whatever. I'll start doing stuff from now on, since I can't rely on my knowledge from the other world anymore thanks to all the changes that are in this world. I do hope my weird ideas can actually work, they would be a godsend during Sadogashima if we managed to get a proof-of-concept done. And I would benefit from having useful stuff with my name on them, just in case Sensei decides to once more hide stuff from me.

But man… A Takemikazuchi… Just with that, Sadogashima got less scarier. It's still gonna be a hard mission, that's for sure. And that's without counting that other idea… Man, we just might be able to capture the Reactor this time around. I wonder if I can convince Sensei to not blow it up. I mean, we do need more G-Elements…

The elevator reaches the floor, the door opens, I get in and push them buttons, and then I lay onto a wall as the things begins to go up.

I never thought I would be happy about an eruption happening in my life, but if the UN can aid the Empire in the rescue efforts then things might go a bit better between both sides. We don't need Sagiri doing another coup.

So, it's time to start pulling my weight here, I can't start dragging my feet. This is a prime chance to get more and more power and support for me, and for Sensei too. With all the eyes that are on me right now, if I show them my piloting skills, more crazy inventions, and help during the rescue efforts, I might be able to clean a bit the image I have right now.

So, my dear and purple Yuuhi, don't send anyone to kill me for a few days. Stay put in the palace, or wherever you are, and let me do my thing. Though, if her relation with this world's me was bad I'm screwed. There will be no blessing whatsoever. If Sensei's plan works though, I might be able to remain in this place even after I stabilize myself here, if I choose to go that route.

Though, that's not the only thing on my plate now. Just a few more days and Sumika will be free from that tank, and the 00 Unit will be complete. I wonder if Kasumi will manage to talk to her before we have to kill her, I know the 00 Unit will have the same voice and face, but still… Even if she isn't my Sumika, I'd like to send her off. To let her hear 'Takeru's' voice one last time before she dies.

That's all I can do for her. She's the one I'll never be able to save here.

All the more reason to get my shit together and start delivering results. The railgun, my squad's training, these new weapons I wanna make, the incidents that will come. So first step, I gotta calm down. Let's believe in Sensei for now, even if I do have to somehow find me some support that doesn't rely on her.

Tomorrow it starts. From now on, no more bullshit. And I'll be damned if I let my feelings get in my way again. So, let's hit the sack and rest well. Let's see if I can fix my relation with the girls.

… I sure hope I can. Let me enjoy some peaceful days with all of you, please. I'm really tired to be always on edge. Please, I'm not asking you to love me again… Just… for a few days, let me see you as my friends. Before the war starts again.

" Yawn… Though, for now, let's just chill down and go to sleep." The door opens, and I step out from the elevator.

For a sec, I forgot where I had to go and was walking to the stairs to the barracks. Shaking my head and yawning again as a hippo, I turned around and began to make my way to my new resting place for the coming days.

Ignited

Chapter 2 8 : Ignite d

---

(Ruined Settlement. On Kyoto's surrounding area .)

[ Okamoto ]

---

Toppled buildings as far as the eye could see. What was once a chirping city is now nothing more than a desolated graveyard. And as stupid as it may sound, this graveyard is all they have left.

The small group of people refuse to give an inch, they don't want to leave their city. 1st Lt. Ichimonji is trying to reason with them, because if they rebel we will have to detain them. We, who act on the Shogun's orders, have the power to order these civilians to move out and come with us to a safer location. By force if necessary.

I don't like this, at all. I don't know why I was given an offer to be inducted into the Guard. I mean, I don't dislike the uniform, the pay, or the privileges that come with the position, but all this nonsense about status and power? I don't mix with this.

It doesn't help that most people here are so prideful. Look at 1st Lt. Ichimonji, for example. Instead of approaching the people more calmly, trying to actually talk with them, he's just screaming at them.

"-of the Shogun, this area is no longer safe. The Shogunate has taken hold of the ownership of these lands, you as vassals of the Empire should know what this means. You are currently illegally living in the Shogun's lands, shame on you! Desist in your futile struggles and let us guide you to a shelter. The Shogun only wishes you to be safe, why can't you understand that?!"

Yeah, keep shouting at them. Sigh… The things I do for money… Thanks to this whole situation my dream of having my own house is getting farther and farther away by the second. I know we just barely survived the first wave but, is this truly necessary?

"These are our lands! We're not the Shogun's slaves! The Emperor is our leader!" A young man screams at the 1st Lt., making the other people rise up.

"Yeah! You young'uns think that us peasants are nuthing' but a bunch a' ignorants? We are the Holy Emperor's vassals, not the Shogun's ones!" An old lady says quite annoyed while waving a wooden stick at Ichimonji-san.

"What she said! You samurai always do whatever you want! Why haven't we heard no words from His Excellency?! Huh?!" A younger woman, probably near my age, shouts while pointing at us.

I don't know much about it, but I haven't heard the Emperor talk once. Seems he used to do press conferences often after the war was over, but I don't recall him doing so since a few years back. What is he doing in the Holy Palace anyways?

"We, members of the Royal Guard, follow the orders of the Shogun. The Emperor speaks only to the Shogun, to avoid his words be twisted by some traitorous vermin. If you call yourselves loyal to His Excellency, you shall comply to our orders. Or else, you shall be branded as traitors to the Empire!" 1st Lt., I think that's not a good idea.

The peasants start kicking up a fuss, calling us names and raising their shovels at us. Ichimonji-san made a gesture with his hand, and another of our group shot once at a place near their position. The impact from a 36mm shell on the ground silenced all their vigor. Is this how the Royal Guard operates? Ruling by force? Were is the honor in this?

"I do not wish to taint myself with the blood of my people." He says, folding his arms, giving all of them a good look. "Desist on your actions, we are here by the Shogun's orders to ensure your safety. However, if you raise your arms against us one more time, under the laws of the Royal Guard, we will have to treat you as traitors." A gray Zuikaku points straight at the group of people, who start retreating into the small building they were living in.

This is wrong, this isn't what we should be doing. Harming our fellows? Isn't there a different way of doing things?

" Screw the rules, we gotta help our fellows! Isn't that what we should do as the guardians of the people?!"

Shirogane's words come back, those so firm yet rebellious words he uttered in the middle of the battle as he convinced his squad leader to send some help to the city. While the Guard was too busy trying to take control of the MDF unit I was in, he addressed the more pressing matter despite the risks that had for him. It was because of his insubordination that we made it in time to save the people that were evacuating from the Warriors, because of his bravery we were able to begin cooperating with the Guard during the invasion while we guarded the vehicles that would take those escaping to safety, not letting a single BETA get anywhere close to the highway or the subway.

The suit covering my hands gets stretched as I clench them, a sudden heaviness comes up on my stomach. Feeling my legs as stiff as when I had to carry Yuri on my back whenever she got hurt, my breathing a bit rugged as it was after helping Mom clean the house, and the underside of my fingers feeling the peeling pressure of the grocery store's plastic bags' torture like whenever I had to carry them back home by myself, I clench my teeth and inhale slowly, filling my stomach and exhaling a few times until I got rid of that awful feeling.

I may not be him, but… I am a Royal Guard now, and I gotta do my part to protect my common fellows.

"1st Lieutenant, Chain 6 asking for permission to speak."

"Permission granted, what is it?"

"I believe that continuing with this course of action will only bring us more problems. Please, reconsider your approach." His face that appeared on my vision through the Data Link looked quite different than his usual calm face.

Tilting his head slightly backwards, as if to imply he's looking down on me, half closed eyes with a fire in them staring right at me. We never got along well, me speaking against his actions will only make our relation worsen. But I'll be damned if I do nothing to avoid this mess.

"What do you suggest then, 2nd Lt. Okamoto?"

"I do not know. But I beg you to listen, if we keep intimidating all the people that survived the attack, they will only grow to resent us, and by extension the Shogun. It is not hard to imagine them eventually growing to despise us, and His Highness, if we don't show them any measure of kindness. I know it's a futile gesture, but I believe we should keep trying to talk peacefully with them. We of the Royal Guard should be the ones to uphold our honor code more than anyone, what example are we leaving with this brutal way of doing things?"

"So you're just wasting my time… What did I expect from a fresh inductee?" His face twists as if he were smelling rotten food.

"1st Lt., my origins have nothing to do with my words. If us as a group start giving people the wrong impre-"

"And who are you to decide that? We were ordered to evacuate the people, this group here is rebelling against us. They're insulting the Shogun, raising their weapons at us! I, as your flight commander, cannot allow any damage to befall any of you. I have made myself clear yet they are still refusing our helping hand, raising the few weapons they have at us. Why should we overlook this offense?"

"Even so, this is abuse of power against a defe-"

"No, it's subduing an enemy of Japan. We must remove this kind of attitude from its roots, these kind of people that raise their swords at us when things go rough are the worst kind. They only care about their wellbeing, as soon as things go badly for them they stop cooperating. We have already lost enough time with them. More than what they're worth, if they cannot see how much the Shogun cares for them. But at least this served to know what side you stand on, 2nd Lieutenant."

"I do not know what you speak of. I only wish to finish our duties without harming our fellows."

"I… I think so too, 1st Lt. Ichimonji. I don't think threatening them like this is the right way to do this." Another of my partners joined in the conversation, another one that was inducted. A man around my age, with dark brown hair and magenta eyes. Fukuha was his name, I think. "Please reconsider your stance, there is no need to be this hostile towards our fellows."

"Hmph, what can I expect from a bunch of inductees? Your education is severely lacking. We are the authorities, we are the Shogun's sword. Acting against us is the same as acting against the Shogun's life, and by extension the Holy Emperor's. If these people do not cease their hostilities, we will execute them for betraying their soil. Those of you who do not comply will also be treated as traitors!"

Us two kept trying to pacify him, reach a middle ground. However, he retained his cold demeanor not even flinching at our efforts.

Him, a member of the Tozama, wearing his pristine white and orange suit against us, a bunch of inducted people with not a hair of nobility in us, in our black uniforms. Rank is not as important as status, even if we eventually outranked him due to his standing he could still boss us around. Giving people power by birthright is clearly wrong, if this is how they use it.

"SILENCE!" He screamed as the discussion heated up. "These people have refused the aid we offered them, they tried to bite the hand that gave them food, and we, as public servants, have a duty to uphold. I expect you all to honor it. We cannot allow these peasants to sow unrest in the rest of the population."

The people were clearly shivering, unsure of what to do. They could hear him talking, but not what we were saying. They must be terrified right now. There is no talking with him, what is his problem?!

He addresses the people once more, and one of the old men in the group got closer to him. He's trying to reason with Ichimonji, apparently. After a short while, the old man went back to talk with the rest of the people, and after some words and shouts a group started coming closer to us, willing to evacuate. Around half of them stayed behind. Thank the Holy Emperor that this can end peacefu-

One of the young ones that chose to stay behind started hurling rocks at the ones that decided to evacuate. Shortly after, many of them mimicked him, and started to throw rocks and blunt objects at the peasants and us. Dammit, why can't they-

The 1st Lt. gestures towards one of our members, that raises his rifle towards… No, you gotta be kidding me…

BOOOM!

A Zuikaku painted in gray shot at their hideout once the ones that came towards us had taken some distance. The last building in the city that was still standing fell in a cloud of dust, nothing but a pile of rocks remain. The people stand in shock, no longer throwing things. The ones that came with us quickly rode a carrier, choosing to not look back.

The people cry, fall to their knees. One man rushed towards us and tried to punch Ichimonji, but he dodged it and returned the punch. Without even looking at the man, he briskly moved towards his TSF and rode it once more. Then, without a hint of hesitation in his movement… He shot at the people that didn't came to us. In a split second all the people… all of them were… this isn't… I didn't join the Guard for this.

"1st Lt. that wasn't necessary! They had already surrendered!"

"And what do you suggest we do then? They acted against my and their fellow's life, they were subversive elements that had to be removed from our Empire." Eyes closed, he maintains his usual tone despite what he just did.

"Sir, even if they were being aggressive, outright killing them is against the honor code we all got trained in when we were inducted." Fukuha says, also giving him a nasty stare through the projection.

"They raised their weapons at us. We had no choice but to proceed in this way." And he still goes on about that.

"Imprisoning them would have been enough, sir. If we had approached them with a different attitude then-" I'm cut short as the gray and white TSFs in our group surround the three black Zuikakus we, the commoners, were piloting.

"You sound displeased for some reason 2nd Lt. Okamoto, I wonder why that is? You wouldn't be on their side, wouldn't you?" They aim their swords at us, they have all the intention of bringing us down. So… This is how you truly are.

"… My apologies, sir." Biting my tongue within, I tap my glasses to calm down. Fukuha also apologizes afterwards.

"Apology accepted. I expect you three commoners can start to perform your duties as it's expected from you. Understood?!"

"Yes, sir." We all reply with a low, dejected tone. I can't help to grip the controls tightly, this is wrong on so many levels.

"Well then, Chain 2 to all units. We leave this area to the rest of the Rescue Corps. We move to the next settlement, I hope you all to be on your best behavior. Do remember that Raiko-sama isn't as lenient as I am."

"Roger."

The two flights under his command begin to heat up their boosters, the carrier with those who wished to evacuate takes off towards the city. Once it was away enough, Ichimonji gives the order and we take off.

And as we were flying, a private connection was formed with my unit.

"Chain 6, do you copy?"

"Chain 6 here, loud and clear sir." Sigh… Why do I do things? I need to learn to shut up.

"What exactly were you trying to do, challenging my authority?"

"As I said before, I just wanted to avoid unnecessary problems for us. I meant no disrespect sir." As much as I dislike it, he's the one in charge.

"You almost sent our unit into chaos. I know you must have heard this a thousand times already, but to be inducted into the Royal Guard is one of the greatest honors one could receive. It means someone trusted in you so much that they decided to bet their honor and credibility on you. And like it or not, you have a duty and an obligation to ensure that trust is not misplaced."

"I know that, sir. However, there is a big difference between being loyal and being blind. I do not believe treating our people so harshly is fair for them. They've lost everything, their families, their homes, their peace. Their grief is a great one. I think we could allow ourselves to be more-"

"You need no thoughts, you're a blade. You do not waver, you obey your holder until the day you break." Unable to hide my disagreement, I simply close my eyes for a moment. "I was like that once too, you know."

"Like that? What do you mean?"

"I was once inducted into the Royal Guard, I am no noble." He leans back into his seat as his eyes turn relaxed, losing the firmness I'm used to seeing in them. "I merely wished to honor the name my Father had bestowed me, so I enlisted in the IJA and broke my back in my training. I eventually became a surface pilot and was sent to the campaign on mainland Asia a few years back."

He takes a breath, and stares at me before continuing, returning to his usual sharp complexion.

"I was one of the few survivors of that carnage. Someone saw my skills during those fights and thought they could be useful for the Shogunate, and so I was inducted when I returned to the Empire. I also had to deal with this new way of doing things, but I believe this is the most appropriate way now. Dissidents must be silenced, order is above everything, in and out of the battlefield."

"But, why? Why go to such lengths?" The thought of something like that happening to Yuri or Arisa… It's enough to make me want to vomit my insides out, feel as if someone sucker punched my kidney. Thankfully, I know they're safe for now… but if the Capital ever falls…

He takes a deep breath, and after a moment of silence opens them again, going back to his sharper way of being.

"… I saw how everything fell apart because of the people's inappropriate conduct, both in and out of the battlefield. Their pilots were quick to run away, to panic, to break formation. The people didn't cooperate and rioted many times on their shelters, despite the fact that they were taken to safe areas away from the frontlines and had proper beds and meals, while the warriors that fought for them had to be treated in tents out in the wild, on something that could barely be considered a resting place, while eating E Rank synth food."

I say nothing and wait until he keeps talking. Seeing it on the news was one thing, but hearing it is… To think that's how Dad spent his last days alive… But even so…

"I do not wish the same to happen to my land. We must maintain order at all cost, lest we fall not to the BETA but to human misery. If our ruler's power is being defied by a bunch of peasants, what will happen when things get even worse than how they are now?"

I'm not so daft to not understand his words and how much this weights on him, but even so this is going too far. One thing is arguing with them, another is pointing at them with an Assault Rifle. They had no way to actually harm us, and they reacted like that because you got violent first. Maintaining order with an iron fist is never the correct way to do things in the long run.

"However, will this kind of treatment not force the people to act against us eventually?"

"Who will?"

"Huh?"

"Who will act against us? We are their lifeline, if they're so foolish to not see that, then they're not worth the sacrifices that have been made to keep their hides safe. Or perhaps, are you talking about yourself?" Again with that look, looking down on me.

"I would never act against the Empire, but to keep pushing the people like this… I frankly do not like it. I believe sincerity to be a virtue, so forgive me for speaking my mind all the time. But I don't believe this is what the Shogun wants." He sighs deeply as his adverts his gaze, eyes getting clouded.

"Nobody wants this. Not this war, not this ruins, not any of the things happening right now. But we are blessed, for we still have our land even if it's in ruins. I understand it can be hard to accept, but know that so long as you're part of the Guard everybody is expecting great things from you. You can feel however you wish on the inside, but never forget the effect your words can have on those around you. Don't let your emotions control your actions. This is the way of the Royal Guard, and only a few elites are chosen to perform this duty. Do not forget that."

"So… You're telling me I have to swallow my feelings and watch as we murder our fellows in cold blood?"

"They're no longer our fellows if they force us to draw our blades. However, I will overlook your offense today. Everybody makes mistakes, just make sure there is no next time. Raiko-sama will not let this misconduct go by without retribution, since she already has her hands full with Shirogane." It is a mystery to me, how do those two even get along. One would think she would have kicked him out of the squad ages ago, instead she's always reprimanding him… How weird, but none of my business. "And if you still have doubts, look to the Capital. See all that we had to sacrifice to merely keep them away for a single night."

"… Yes, sir. My apologies, I shall redouble my efforts."

"Good enough. Don't disappoint us, Okamoto. We expect much from you."

The channel is closed. He always speaks his mind and before waiting for a reply he goes away. Is this how it is then? This is what being a Royal Guard means?

Cold assassins, that's what we are. All to keep absolute order, to keep the people in check, to show that the nobles are the ones at the top.

I understand that we need to keep order to fight against the BETA. And I don't wish to have us lose anything else either, I know how heavy is everything we're sacrificing so far. But this isn't the way to do things. We… We are no different than dogs if all we do is follow orders blindly. Is this what the Shogun wants? Is this how we always did things? Perhaps this is how it always was, but since there was no war, no hunger, no visible death, we chose to look the other way so long as it didn't concern us. I thought… the nobility was better, that they were different than the cutthroat competition we commoners have between each other. Looks like there is no honor, no fellowship to be found here.

If they're branded as traitors, it must be for something. If they're executed, they must have done something. But what if… there was no reason more than to keep the people intimidated?

The next settlement comes into view. I can only pray that these people agree to our terms peacefully.

---

November 24th. 0 7:21 AM.

(Hallway.)

[Takeru]

---

Light pours from outside into the base, clouds slowly making their way to nowhere in particular. My feet barely lifting from the ground for each step, my hands refusing to leave the comfy lair that is my pockets. No one is on this hallway, yet my eyes continue to rebound around, to the ground, to the window, to the sky, to the ceiling. I sigh slowly, arching my brows a bit. Come on, man. No need to feel all antsy, what's the worst that can happen. R-E-L-A-X.

Par for the course, I had another bad dream. Still can't quite piece it together, but damn, it feels awful. There's this really annoying voice yelling at me over and over, and everything feels so… suffocating, so crushing. First I'm on a garden but then it gets set on fire, then I'm seeing a race for some reason but then the whole place collapses on itself, then I'm on some shelter, but the view was kinda… tilted, as if it was in diagonal to my vision, and this voice just kept following me, reprimanding me for some reason.

Thank God Kasumi came to wake me up as sweetly as usual. Seeing her being nice to me really made the cheer return to me, at least until I had to take a cold shower again. Sigh… I wonder when these dreams will stop bothering me.

I keep walking, making my way to our classroom. Today we should have our first lecture on TSFs, assuming NotMarimo-chan doesn't decide to rush through the modules again. Already got breakfast with Takamura, it was D Rank again and the right amount too. Seems like the rumor is doing its work, though people are still talking behind my back, looking at me suspiciously.

So, now's the time to see how they react. The fact should have sank already, they now know I am a murderer.

Kei was rather odd yesterday, she was upset at something that's for sure. But she did made a point to ask me if I was still in the squad. Part of me wants to believe she somehow understood I didn't kill without reason, but, well, she never liked me much. As for the rest, with how sensitive Tama and Mikoto are, they might see me as a monster. Meiya, being who she is, could have reverted back to a negative view of me once she meditated calmly the fact that I murdered 'fellow Japanese soldiers'. And Chizuru… hates foreigners.

Depending on what the Instructor told them, on how they reflected on what happened, it is possible they might not openly scorn me but maybe they will just put a barrier and not talk to me. Who would want to be on my side after what I did? Being the comrade of a murderer… No sane person would risk their honor standing by my side after what I did, after all. I should expect no helping hand nor tailwind, else I'd be setting myself up for disappointment.

To be honest, I don't know what would be worse, they hating me openly or they keeping their distance and ignoring me. Feeling as if static was filling my neck and chest, my fingers keep moving as if I was clumsily trying to play a piano. I know I said I was ready to be all alone, but facing them… is harder than I thought it would be on me. Sigh… Whatever happens, happens.

I reach the room, hear nothing from within. Licking my lips, my eyes look up, resisting the urge to peek into the windows. One deep breath, I move my neck left and right hearing it crack once. I blink at the doorknob for a second, grabbing it and delaying the action as I gulped. Come on, this isn't the end of the world. And anyways… If Yuuhi comes after me, it's all the same in the end.

And so, after sighing hard enough for the air to reach my hand, I open the door and step into the classroom.

"Good mor-" Before I could even finish speaking, Mikoto rushed to my side.

"TAKERU! Hey, are you alright? What was that about a punishment? Why can't you go to the PX? Hey, why?!" Her face was full of wrinkles, her eyes were sharp as scissors, and it seemed as if steam was coming out of her ears. Royally pissed off, to put it mildly.

"M-Mikoto, calm down. As you can see, I'm fine." She gives me a good look and then takes a step back, restoring my personal space. Sigh… That wasn't good for my heart, dude.

"Really? So? What was that about a punishment?"

"Shirogane-san, is it true that you can't go to your room? Where are you sleeping?" Now Tama came close too, with downcast eyes. Seems like they're the only ones here.

"Yeah. I was given twenty days of punishment, in which I can't go back to my room, enter the PX, and I have to help out someone here at the base. I'm staying in the detention barracks until the punishment is over." Both of them open their eyes wide and then share a glance before curving their brows. They don't… look rejecting.

"The detention barracks? Takeru, I've heard they don't have warm water down there. Will you be alright?" Is she worried? Look at how she joined her hands, she really is.… Thanks, Mikoto.

"Yeah, I'll manage somehow."

"Shirogane-san, will you really be alright? Ayamine-san told us you would have to eat the rations from the CCSE, and we're starting our piloting training today. Are you-"

"Tama, don't worry. I'll make do." I force a smile, ignoring the scratches on the back of my head, and they let out some air, giving me a smile back. But in a second, their faces got clouded again and they start avoiding my gaze, remaining silent. "So… Err…" Now I'm the one looking down. Sigh…

"Um… Shirogane-san?" Tama took a small step forward, her tone as hesitant as mine when I had to show Mom my math tests. "Would you… Can you forgive us? For abandoning you?" Tama and Mikoto gave me a bow. Wait, why are they apologizing?

"Tama, that was an accident. You two had nothing to do with it, so don't apologize." This day started weirdly, I thought they would be against me being here since I'm a murderer now.

"That's not true! Takeru, we didn't…" Mikoto's lips quivered and she looked down for a sec, but then she returned my gaze as she melted the stiffness in her posture. "We didn't try to help you, Meiya-san or Chizuru-san. You didn't deserve that, but we just ran away. Can you forgive us? Please?" Uuuhh… This is cheating, you can't double down on me with those teary eyes. My Mental Fortitude stat is decreasing by the second.

I felt a clog on my throat, unable to process words for a sec under their gazes, honest and clear, showing that they didn't see me as some sort of monster.

"… I wasn't angry at you and I'm not holding a grudge, so stop apologizing. I mean, I thought that you would be more… you know, rejecting towards me. I did kill those soldiers." I bring a hand to the back of my head, lowering my brows and slightly looking away from them.

"Shirogane-san, you did that to save Mitsurugi-san and Sakaki-san, didn't you?"

"Yeah, but that doesn't-"

"Yes, it does. Shirogane-san, e-even if you ended up killing them, I don't think… that what you did was wrong." Tama made fists coiled and hissed in every word. "What if those soldiers had killed Mitsurugi-san?"

"Well, but there was no proof that-"

"The soldiers were also very aggressive with us, too. Something was really weird with them!" Tama furrowed her brows, shaking just a tiny bit.

"Wait so, those soldiers also roughed you guys up?" Kei did have a patch on her eye yesterday. Did those bastards do that?

"Yeah! Takeru, you're not the only one who had to harm those soldiers." Mikoto frowns, having a mix of fear and anger in her rising voice. "If things had gone wrong we also may have had to resort to that. Her eye is better now, but they really hurt Kei-san during our fight. We just got lucky, really." Both of them drop their shoulders.

Tama is slowly playing with her hair and Mikoto is just staring to the floor.

"So you guys had it hard too, huh? Can you tell me what happened?"

They tell me of how they saw the struggle from the other side of the cliff, how they met and dealt with the soldiers and how they reached the evac point. So the soldiers weren't only after me, Meiya and Chizuru. They wanted our whole squad to fail. Considering all those mails Sensei showed me it's not surprising.

"It was really scary, you know. I thought we were done for." Tama closes her eyes and shivers slightly.

"Yeah, me too." Mikoto nods as her eyes almost close. "So it's not like we don't understand, Takeru. We also had to harm those soldiers really hard, too."

"But, well, you didn't resort to… killing. Nothing is going to erase that stain from my hands." We all look down, they don't reply and leave me alone with my thoughts again.

Funny, actually. I didn't have the guts to shoot during the coup or to give Yuuhi the medicine, yet now this really hurts my heart even if I still don't entirely regret what I did.

I murdered Meiya. Compared to her, these bastards are nothing. And yet, it was so… pointless. I killed them, and nothing changed. It could have been avoided, yet I can't really see how. I know that talking it out or trying to scare them off would have backfired, and despite that my heart is choking inside. So easy, so pointless, and it makes me as conflicted as the coup did. I took their lives and in the end… Yes, I did protect Meiya and Chizuru, but I still would have liked to have had the calmness to take another course of action. Maybe if I had and one of them would have gotten injured I would be wishing to have been more ruthless. Wondering about what could have been is pointless, I know, but I still would like to… I don't know, just stop all this messed up shit.

I don't want to shift the blame. I don't want to look away. And I don't want it to be 'forgiven' or for this to 'be the norm'. I will kill if I have to, but I would like for one day for this to no longer be necessary, for whatever made the soldiers do that crazy shit go away to hell and never come back.

I sigh, closing my eyes and arching my brows. Feeling as if I had swallowed an ice apple, now stuck on my neck, I claw at my fists. I wonder… Did you also feel like this? What made you fall in that rage, what pushed you over the edge, twin me? What did the Royal Guard do to you?

… Or is it, what did they made you do?

"Even so…" Mikoto's voice returns me to the classroom. She takes a breath as she played with the ribbon of the uniform, her gaze breaks like ice under a hammer when it meets mine. "I know how hard it must have been for you… When that man got up and was ready to lunge at me…" She begins to quiver, eyes rammed shut. "… I couldn't take out my knife. I knew that they were not going to ease up, but I couldn't do it. All I could do was hit his head with a rock to leave him unconscious, and in the end that almost cost us the test."

"Yoroi-san, that's not your fault! They were the ones who escalated that fight!" She places a hand on Mikoto's shoulder, yet she still doesn't open her eyes.

"No, he could have choked us unconscious if he wanted, Kei-san might have ended up with even worse injuries than what she has now. So…" Softly biting her lip, she looks at me, a tear running down her cheek. "I know how scared you must have been… and how brave you were to do what you did, Takeru."

"I… I didn't knew you guys had to go through so much shit, too." If I had taken care of him then… I should have maimed the Captain when I had the chance.

"Um… Yoroi-san, you weren't the only one who… harmed a fellow." Burrowing her head underground, Tama's tone jumps off a skyscraper. "There was one soldier I harmed gravely with a rock, when I saw her getting to the rifle before me. At the time I didn't doubt, but I'm sure she's gonna need surgery after what I did to her." Sniffing a bit, Mikoto patted her back, all I could do was bite my tongue within, wring my hands in anger. "I don't understand why they pushed us to that stage… What was the need to be so hostile?" She hangs her head, shaking again.

"I was shaking all throughout the battle, driven by adrenaline and fear. So… I can see why you did what you did, Takeru." Looking back at me, her lips twisted and she let out a sigh but she still returned my gaze, without any shadows or spikes. "If I had seen them harming Meiya-san and Chizuru-san like that… I don't know what I would have done, I don't know if I could have protected them at all. But I think you only were so… aggressive because they forced you to. I'm sure you're… not like that, that this was just a reaction to their aggression." Her tone seemed to be lacking some firmness, as if she were trying to convince herself.

"I agree with Yoroi-san, we heard from Sakaki-san what happened. They forced your hand, if they hadn't kept kicking them nothing would have happened."

"Of course, I'm not proud of what I did, and I am not like that… But I still made a miss. So… Uh, like, do you guys…" I scratch my head, barely able to meet their gaze as the ants again start walking on my back. "… still want me around?"

"Huh? Of course we do, Takeru!" Mikoto took a step forward, hands joined tight. "I know it must be really hard but you shouldn't… punish yourself so hard. We all only defended ourselves from them as best as we could, and they made the first aggression. You wouldn't attack anyone like that again without a good reason, right?"

"Yeah, I wouldn't. I'm… That's not how I want to be as a soldier." She smiles, seeming to finally let go of what kept her tense and compact.

"I can understand why you're so troubled." Tama said as she looked down. "All of us had to bloody our hands, one way or the other. Only that we were lucky to be together and managed to get away by injuring them, but you were alone. So, um, I at the least don't think you're a murderer. You just… tried to protect your squadmates when they were in danger." A feathery knife twists itself into me, hearing her voice honest and soft. They really… don't see me as monster.

The heaviness in my hands eases up a bit and I stop clawing at my palms. I inhale slowly, biting back the tears.

"Thanks Tama, Mikoto. Really… Thank you." This time I didn't have to force the smile.

"Ahaha…" Mikoto laughs dryly, sending her hands into her pockets. "A-Anyways, we don't want you gone. You're our comrade, Takeru. So… let's keep doing our best together from now on, without leaving anyone behind again." I nod at them, we finally all sigh and manage to somehow smile.

"Well, in any case, glad you could make it out without any lasting injuries. So, we're all good with each other?"

"Yes, of course. Shirogane-san, I… I will try to be more resolute from now on, to truly help the squad. I know I'm… the weakest one of the team, b-but I'll do my best to not hold any of you back. So, um… Let's do our best!" I smile at her and see the seriousness disappear from her face.

That's one thing we'll have to work on, since we need you to get in top form ASAP, before the HSST arrives. She might not have killed that soldier, but it's clear Tama is also blaming herself for what happened to them, between what she did to that woman how she hesitated at times to fight back. And since Mikoto rarely speaks about how she really feels, I'll have to keep an eye out for her too, without being too bothersome of course.

"Say Takeru, where were you yesterday? Despite it being our free day and having a lecture from the Instructor, we didn't see you at all."

"Oh, I was helping 1st Lt. Takamura as part of my punishment. I was mostly delivering reports and folders around."

"Oh, it doesn't sound so bad."

"Yeah, it really isn't. It's a light job, honestly."

Then, the door opens and the rest of the squad comes in. They twitch upon seeing me, my hands shook for a moment. Deep breaths, man.

"… S-Shirogane." Chizuru approached me from my left, slow as a turtle but still looking at me in the eye.

"Good morning, Sakaki."

"Good morning. How have you been?"

"Fine, no problems whatsoever." She nods and seems to be at a loss of words as her eyes veer around.

"Sakaki, if you cannot say it allow me to do it." Meiya also approached me. She spoke in her serious tone and was bearing a stern look, reminding me of how she was after Marimo-chan died. Sigh…

"Good morning… Meiya." Knees threatened to tumble under those sapphires, but I managed to hold her gaze. I think Tama and Mikoto flinched as they heard me calling her by her name.

"Good morning. Shirogane, is what Ayamine told us yesterday true? About your punishments?"

"Yeah."

"Why were you given such a punishment?" She's angry, going by how those sapphires of her are glistening. She must be upset about having a murderer on their team now that she had time to let that sink in. Looks like… I'm on the other side of the board.

"Because it was that or either getting kicked out of the army."

"Shirogane, that does not answer my question." She was again folding her arms, eyes closed, her voice still sharp.

"I mean… What did you want me to answer?"

"I'm asking about why you had to be punished! You saved our lives, why are you the one to be blamed? Didn't you tell them of what happened?" She opened her eyes, now filled with those purple flares, and didn't hesitate on a single word.

… She isn't upset or anything at me? Meiya held my gaze with visible fury, but not about me still being here. She… She didn't get all negative again?

"They didn't listen to me. They said I had no credibility, that I was a violent element, that there's no way that would have happened." Again, her eyes flare up as she takes a step towards me. For a second I thought she was coming at me, but she furrowed her brows and seemed to be now holding her hands quite tightly.

"Why did you not ask us to testify for you?! What would you have done if they kicked you out?!" No hesitation, no restrain in her words.

"Meiya, they told me they couldn't count on your impartiality, they refused to call you to testify." The little purple flares in her eyes turn into pyres of fire. She's… worried about me? Like, for real? She… really is…

"… What? Mmmgh! I won't let this stand, there's no reason for you to-"

"Meiya, stop it. That's that, you can't… you shouldn't do anything about it. I mean, I did kill them. That won't change, fair or not I deserve the punishment."

"Shirogane, what you're saying is to make me stain my honor once again." She tilts her head backwards, narrowing her eyes. The venom in her voice was so strong I took a step backwards unconsciously.

"What do you mean?"

"I owe you a great debt. It's thanks to you that I passed the CCSE and didn't sustain further injuries, and you wish me to stay put as I see my fellow being punished unfairly, while the culprits are free without even a reprimand? What would that say about me? What kind of samurai would I be if I let you take this unjust punishment?!" She called me her fellow, despite how much weight that word has here. She's… not lying?

Chizuru steps towards me, with a similar look on her face.

"Mitsurugi is right, Shirogane. When we went to talk with the Instructor to tell her about what happened, she told us you were taken to be questioned for your crimes and nothing we said could change her mind to allow us to write a report to help you. She also insisted that we should not bring this up again, since the decision had already been made. We… We all were very worried about you." She then adverts her eyes as she plays with her ponytails. She also doesn't seem to be lying, Chizuru can't even look at me in the eye so lying is out of the question.

"Sakaki-san is right. I also think you don't deserve the punishment." Tama rose a small hand, Mikoto nodded as she frowned. "They were the ones that started it, if they had harmed Mitsurugi-san the UN would have gotten in a lot of trouble. They also tried to harm us, so they should also be punished for what they did."

I… I did not expect all of them to be so supportive, considering I killed Japanese soldiers. They're not lying either. They're… really worried… about me?

"… Shirogane-san?" Tama looked up at me with puppy eyes, holding her hands near her neck. Uuuh… That is not fair play.

"I mean, I did kill them. That won't change. I murdered Japanese soldiers, so technically I am a traitor to the Empire. Are you sure you want to defend me like that?" I feel a tap on my shoulder. Meiya moved me to look at her, her face was twisted into the look of an angry hunter as the purple fire kept coming out of her eyes.

"Shirogane, you're no traitor. You saved me and Sakaki from those soldiers. Our lives were in serious danger, regardless of what the UN may say. So do not speak about yourself in such a way anymore, I promise you now that I will remove that burden from your shoulders as soon as I can. I just ask you to give me a little time, it's the least I can do to truly repay you for your actions." She gives me a small bow, her face tensed up when she met my eyes again.

She's telling the truth. And if she is… As happy as that makes me, as much as it lifted an asteroid off my shoulders and a knife from my heart, I have to stop her from getting into more trouble or from actually lifting my punishment. Yuuhi should already know, the Pickles probably reported it to her, but if Meiya speaks in my favor… I don't want to risk anything being misunderstood, so let's play it safe.

"Meiya, it's better for you to not do anything. It will only keep bringing problems and tension between the UN and the Empire. Think of the implications this accident could have. Just let it pass, I can take it." She pursed her lips as she holds back a retort. Then, softening her gaze, she gave me a nod.

"Sigh… If that is what you wish, I will do as you say. So, you weren't kicked out of the squad?"

"No, I managed to stay here. So it seems you'll have to bear with me until you get commissioned." I say jokingly to try to clear the air, but it only caused them to drop their shoulders. Except Kei, who was just laying against the wall staring at nowhere.

"Are you upset?" Meiya's voice was so small, creaking, that it reminded me of that call I received from that Meiya the day I recovered my memories, and that made me wince for a second. "Shirogane?"

"Err… Why would I be upset? You didn't do anything to make me angry at you. It's the other way around, I'm really happy to… well, hear you don't want me gone or anything. I said as much on the island, if you're willing to have me, let's just start over."

"So Shirogane, you don't… resent us?" Chizuru is being abnormally nice, and hesitant.

I mean, I know how sweet she can be, but that's to someone she really likes. I'm… I mean, for them I was… a foreigner, an enemy. And now I killed people. I still can't believe it, maybe this is all a dream.

"Why would I resent any of you, Sakaki?"

"We scored better than you, we didn't help you when you were questioned. And all of that is our fault, you bloodied your hands because of us." She holds one of her elbows with her other hand. I haven't seen Chizuru being so apprehensive with me ever.

"C'mon, don't be like that. Nobody forced me to do what I did."

"Still, you fought to protect us. Had we not left you behind…" She inhales, then finally returns my gaze as her tone recovers its firmness. "If we had fought back with you, this could have been avoided. And you could have left us behind, but didn't. So, well, I can see how you could resent us."

"Look, I did what I could because I wanted. I know that… I did something horrible, but I chose to do that. I did it, it's on my hands." Their eyes seem to almost close, pursing their lips. "So… You don't hate me or anything?" All of their eyes then turn wide at my question.

"Shirogane, what reason could we have to hate you?!" Meiya, you're… a little too close.

"Because I killed Japanese soldiers and I'm an American or something along those lines?"

"We don't… We don't see you as a foreigner anymore. You're our comrade, we already told you that during the CCSE, right?" Chizuru returned to her usual bossy tone taking a pose like Class Rep, making circles in the air with her finger.

"Indeed. Sakaki is right. Shirogane, you've done a great deed for us, defending us from a clear case of abuse. And instead of being praised for it, you're being punished. I truly do not think we should let this slide. Are you certain you do not wish me to speak with my contacts? If I tell them of what you did for me, I am sure your punishment will be lifted." Oh shit, Meiya's stubbornness activated.

Sadly, my punishment is giving me a cover to start my research and to keep a close eye on the railgun so I can't lose it, even if it means bathing with cold water at night. And… at the least I can see she truly means her words. They really don't see me as a murderer.

"Meiya, thanks for the gesture but I don't want to cause more trouble. Let's leave it at that, please?" I give her a little bow.

"Huh? But… Well, if that is what you wish…" Folding her arms and the embers inwards, she still doesn't seem convinced though.

"Well, so… How are you guys? I mean, I haven't heard about you since we parted ways. How were these days for you?" Relaxing my posture, trying to rise a smile, I look at them all.

"Oh, you won't believe this Takeru! Lemme tell you of how Chizuru-san started choking when she ate- Mmmmmggghh!" Chizuru put her hands over Mikoto's mouth. And she was blushing.

"Tamase, can you explain to Shirogane what happened in these days?" Smiling all the while, she spoke with a soft voice that hid knives within.

"Eh? Sure. But Sakaki-san, Yoroi-san is going purple…" Mikoto's eyes were two big white dots again. Chizuru lets go of her and she breathes deeply, placing a hand on her chest.

"Chizuru-san, that's so cruel. What did I do?!"

"What didn't you do is the question here." Meiya frowned at her as she caressed her ponytail. She was blushing too. The hell happened when I wasn't around?

Tama told me of how they played on the beach before coming here, about some of the food they ate, and about how the Instructor gave them a lecture on teamwork as soon as they landed here. Marimo-chan, come back to us. We need you more than ever.

"That sounds rough. Oh right, I forgot to ask, what was your score?"

"Ninety. It was truly a surprise, that's for sure." She beams at me, clearly happy of her result. "Ah… Sorry, I didn't mean to brag. You ended up with the lowest score, right?"

"Yeah, but that doesn't really matter. Our skills in the cockpit are what matters most."

"Exactly. Well said, Shirogane. Our real training starts here, and now we're on even ground with you so we won't let you get that number one spot so easily. All of us have to step up and drive ourselves past our limits, so that nothing like what happened in the CCSE occurs again." Chizuru is clearly trying to motivate the squad, Mikoto and Tama give a 'Yay' and raise their fists. Meiya just smirks and Kei… is staring at me. Guess she still doesn't trust me.

"Say, Special-kun…" Why did I have to look at her? Causality Magnet? More like Disaster Magnet.

"What's up, Ayamine?" She slowly got close to us, I can't read her at all. Is she going for a punch? Or will she throw more hate at me? I'll just have to endure.

"Is it true that you got beaten up by one of the soldiers during the second fight?"

"Yeah, that's the case."

"… How did that go? You didn't harm them, right?" God, it hurts to see her like this. And again, stabs and slashes tickle my neck.

"No, I didn't harm anyone."

"Those two told me you had to restrain the soldier to win."

"Well, yeah. That fight was real tight, though. I mean, Mion was really aggressive because she wanted to check if I was a spy or something. It really wasn't-" Why are they staring at me like that? What did I say? "Guys? What's up?"

"First name already? Special-kun, what a stud." Kei gives me thumbs up. Oh, so that's what happening. They're just surprised. Don't scare me like that, dammit.

"Shirogane-san, did you know that woman?" Tama being suspicious? That's a new one.

"Mion?" I feel a drill on my neck, Meiya's gazing at me quite angrily for some reason. "I… errr… I mean, I don't think so?" I know I gotta play my part in faking being this world's me, but I really don't know her.

"Do you know her or not?" Meiya was looking into me with those blue blades of her. Why is she so upset now? Wait… didn't something like this…

"Meiya, that's my own business, right?" I answer bluntly which only makes her eyes spew more fire.

"Oho? So you had some 'business' with her?"

"She was literally trying to beat the shit out of me. I just wanted to calm her down, show her that I was no spy."

"Takeru, even so, why did she have to beat you up like that?" Mikoto and Tama were now looking at me worriedly.

"You know, she had to restrain me to check whether I had a mask or not. Since she thought I was an American spy. Really, after we sorted that out she stopped being so aggressive." The little ones smile at me, but the other three seem to want to ask more.

"W-Well, but Shirogane, why do you call her by her name?" Chizuru was also giving me a side glance. Kei was smirking from ear to ear.

"I mean, if I had to call both them Tsukuyomi it would get confusing in my head." There are four of them now. And for some reason it doesn't feel right, I wonder if it has to do with his memories?

"Shirogane, that still doesn't explain why she was so aggressive with you, or why you use her name. You wouldn't happen to know them, perhaps?" Meiya was now sending a dubious look at me.

Didn't something like this happen when I called Maya-san that in front of her back in my world? She isn't getting jealous, right? No way, not after what happened.

"I told you already, I don't know them. Look, she wasn't going to believe my words, so I had no choice but to fight her head on. I mean, those two pickles were not going to back down so easily."

… Why are they looking at me as if they were goldfish? Even Kei's eyes are wide open now.

"Shirogane-san when you say 'pickles', who are you talking about?"

"Who?" Oh, I did it again. It feels so natural I just said it without a second thought. "About Mion and Shion, of course. Don't they look like a pair of pickles?"

"Shirogane, you can't go giving nicknames to members of the Royal Guard! If they heard you, you would get in a lot of trouble." Chizuru, again making circles in the air, scolded me as she always did. Heh, it's so good to have that little thing back, instead of that poison-filled voice. Finally some relief for my ears.

"So you also call Shion by her name…"

"C'mon Meiya, what do you want me to call them?"

"Well… Why do you call them pickles, however? You haven't given us nicknames even though you've been with us for far longer than them." She's a bit bothered. She did think I was on the Guard, so me calling them by their names is making her suspicious, I guess. It's still odd, though.

"Oh, he did name me Tama though." She should have stayed quiet, because now Meiya was glaring at her. Tama's eyes became two little white dots as she shivered.

"Um, guys? Can we… make peace already?" Let's stop this before things escalate. I do not want to deal with the wrath of a jealous Meiya.

"Fine, I'll let it go. But you should be more careful about how you approach women from now on. It's unproper for a Japanese surface pilot to act in such a way. Right, Sakaki?" Both of them nodded in agreement.

"Of course. Exactly what Mitsurugi said. You should be more tactful about your actions, Shirogane-kun."

… Shirogane-kun?

Wait… Is Chizuru receiving positive data now? Well, they should always be receiving it when around me, but these days I wasn't around. In this case, she's receiving stuff from my world's Chizuru, but she wasn't like this during the CCSE… The data leak shouldn't be so strong when I'm not nearby. Is that why they're not reacting as badly as they would originally have?

"Sakaki-san, what was that?" Tama asked as she looked at Chizuru with wide eyes.

"What? What is it?" Chizuru seemed puzzled, not noticing what was going on, why the others were giving her the stink eye.

"Chizuru-san, you just called Takeru Shirogane-kun." Mikoto was also narrowing her eyes at Chizuru.

"I did?! I mean… I just… Ahem, I was merely trying to be more friendly with him, seeing how he's taking what happened. There's no problem with that, right Shirogane-kun?"

"Sure, I don't mind." Chizuru smiles a bit as Mikoto and Tama give me the stink eye. Haha, they did the same during my first loop once.

"It will never cease to amaze me how relaxed you are." Meiya sighed as she caressed her ponytail.

"Come on, now. If she's more comfortable calling me that, just let her. I'm calling you Meiya and nobody complains. Or what? You want me to go back to calling you Mitsurugi?" She flinches at my words, staring blades at me.

"Of course I don't want that. I promised to allow you to call me by my name on my honor as an apology. So you can't call me anything but Meiya now, because you'd be breaking our accord." She kept nodding at her own words. She's so cute when she gets nervous, really.

It's still a surprise for sure, seeing them be this friendly. I sigh, relaxing my hands and releasing the stagnant air in me. I still have my squad, and it seems like we might be able to finally start building some trust between us. Well, it's not like they're head over heels for me, they're just being considerate towards me. I'm sure that even if I'm a stronger Nucleus the transfer couldn't happen so fast. But that's more than enough for me, I'm lucky they're still willing to talk with me after what happened.

"Okay. So… You're really cool with me staying?"

"Yes, I have no complains whatsoever. Let's keep working together, Shirogane-san!" Tama beamed at me with her usual cheerful smile. Mikoto gave a nod.

"I also wish for you to remain on the squad, it's obvious you were not at fault for what happened. We're all in agreement, right?" Chizuru crossed her arms and looked around the room to see the others' faces. But she stopped on a certain black haired one.

"… Ayamine, what about you?" I look at her and she just looks away.

"You're really on our side?" She says, still not looking at me. I look down, closing my eyes.

"I mean, yeah?"

"And you won't harm anyone in that way again?"

"Ayamine, that's rude. Shirogane-kun already proved us he isn't the type to harm when it isn't needed."

"Sakaki, it's fine. She has all the right reasons to doubt me. Ayamine, is there anything you would like me to do to prove you that I'm not some sort of madman?" This is my problem, so I'll deal with it myself.

"… Yes. I have a question."

"Go ahead. Fire."

"Why did you kill the soldiers? Feel like answering today?" Sigh… It really hurts, different world or not.

"… Because I saw Meiya was unconscious while getting kicked on the head and Chizuru crying in pain." Both of them look down, grimacing. "Honestly though, I was enraged at the time from my previous fight, so well… I'm not proud of my choices back then. That's why I'm taking the punishment without complaints. I lost it when I thought one of them might have been dead, but I won't put up excuses. I killed them because I decided to not hold back." She stared at me in silence for a second, keeping that poker face perfectly.

"Hmm… Then, is it true that you were trained on the UN and not by America?"

"Yeah, I was trained at Yukon Base." Regardless of the place, I only ever got trained by the UN. So, that is not a lie. She stares into my eyes for a while and after a while she leans back and returns to her usual bored face.

"Hmm… Fine. You're good." She raises her hand, showing me her palm with her eyes closed. She relaxed her posture, so she believes me for now.

"Well, glad we can get along." She probably is letting this go to not get in an argument with the rest of the squad. It's up to me to prove to them I'm not a psychotic murderer.

"A-Anyways! Let's do our best together from now on! Say Shirogane-san, did you know that we also have to pilot for a short while during our aptitude test?" Tama comes up to me as she bounces around the desks. It's so endearing, seeing you so hard to stay cheerful while trying to clear the air.

"Oh, that's gonna be hard. Takeru, don't take it too hard if you crash after some seconds. I don't think anyone could actually do very well on their very first try." Mikoto closed her eyes and with her hands joined she began to shiver.

"Yes, I've heard about it from Takamura. Well, today is just our first try so there's no point in overworrying." And I'm gonna crash myself into a building just for the heck of it.

"That's the idea. Squad, regardless of our score today, it's what we do from now on what determines our real aptitude! So, after we're done, how about we all go to the library to discuss about our impressions and read some books on tactics? Shirogane-kun, can you get permission for that?" Chizuru is definitely doing her best to lead the team this time. Well, considering what she went through…

"I don't think so. I will probably have to go help Takamura as soon as I'm done with the test." And after that I gotta start my research, and then Kasumi will try to make me remember some stuff from this world's me.

"… Shirogane, who is this Takamura you speak of?" Meiya was again folding her arms, giving me a firm stare.

"The 1st Lt. I've been assigned to help for the duration of my punishment. I'm basically her assistant."

"So, is it a tough work?"

"Nah, just handing some folders around. Nothing too complicated."

"Shirogane-kun, you're not intimidated by doing office work? I would get so nervous I'll probably end up mixing some reports in my head. Helping out in actual matters is no small job." Chizuru was again making circles on the air. "Well… It's a shame you can't join us, but we will keep you up to date with our studies so don't worry about it."

"Thanks, Sakaki. Really." She adverts her eyes. Is she embarrassed? I forgot how cute it was to see her like this.

"Good morning, Squad!" The Instructor enters the room, as I see her she smiles for some reason.

… Considering how she treated me during the final evaluation, how she chose not to warn me, and the report she sent to Mooroka-san… Yeah, I can't expect her to be nice to me. Marimo-chan does not exist in this world. My old Instructor or not, it is clear we stand in opposite sides of the board.

"Salute!"

"At ease. First, it is a surprise to be welcoming you back, Shirogane." Smirking much, she places a hand on her desk. "Glad you were allowed to stay here. I expect you to remain on your best behavior from now on."

"Thanks, Ma'am. So I shall do." She nods, brushing some hair out of her face.

"Now, I have three things to tell you today. Number one, I'll be giving you a long lecture on how TSF are controlled until noon. After that you'll have to read up the documentation on your own. Second, I've been informed your Fubukis will be arriving tomorrow."

"EH?! Really?!" Mikoto bolted up in joy, and then immediately sat down again as the Instructor's gaze drilled her eyes shut.

"As I was saying, your TSFs will arrive tomorrow. Since you're the only Cadet squad here for the time being you'll have priority to use the simulators during the afternoon. However, if you wish to train for more than that make sure there are no commissioned officers waiting to use the sims. Understood?"

"Roger!"

"And lastly, just because you're going to be training to become surface pilots doesn't mean you'll get a nicer treatment." She smiles widely. Oh God, what now? "You all, with the exception of Shirogane due to his punishment, will have to run twenty klicks with full gear everyday after we're done with the morning lectures and before you go for lunch."

I could feel the temperature crash down in a second. Everybody got tense at the notion of having to keep running twenty klicks on full gear from the start just before the simulator training. Marimo-chan is nowhere to be found here.

"Roger."

"Now then, here's your textbooks. But before that… Shirogane."

"Yes, Ma'am?"

"I've heard you'll have to leave as soon as you finish your training, and that you haven't got authorization to perform extra training if you so desired, is that true?"

"… Yes, Ma'am."

"Hmm… Well, it's a shame. I was wishing to include you on the evening courses." Is she doing this on purpose, or did Sensei just not tell her? Can't tell, haven't seen Marimo-chan being like this ever. "I expect you to perform at your best with the little time you have so that you do not fall behind." I nod, she then proceeds to hand us our textbooks.

Going back to the desk, grabbing some chalk, and then writing on the blackboard 'Basics of TSFs' History and Design', she turned around with a huge smirk.

"Now, let's start the class!"

First Answers

Chapter 29: First Answers

---

November 24th. A few odd minutes before 1 PM.

(Classroom.)

[Takeru]

---

Dear Marimo-chan, this is Takeru Shirogane.

I write to you to let you know I am deeply sorry for any and all problems I did assuredly give you, both in school and as an Instructor. From the bottom of my heart, forgive me.

This might sound odd coming from me, but there is a reason behind such an apology. You see, I've come to realize just what a truly great teacher you were for me, and for the rest as well. To say that we miss you, even if the girls by my side never met you, is an understatement. You truly were a stellar tutor in both worlds, and you didn't deserve all the trouble I gave you.

… Save for that one time in the hot springs, that is. That was your fault.

Hopefully, one day we might meet again, and then I shall apologize in person for-

"Shirogane! You must be so bored, looking out the window like that, hmm." Smirking much, NotMarimo-chan placed a finger on her cheek by her lips' side. "Why don't you answer the questions on the next page by yourself, since you're so confident in your knowledge to not pay attention to the lecture?"

Marimo-chan, please come baaaack! I'll behave this time, I swear!

Sighing and picking up the book, I then moved to the page we were looking at. And, as usual, thanks to Marimo-chan's excellent tuition, I answered everything correctly and fast.

Sadly, that only made NotMarimo-chan smirk more, and she then told me to do the same for the next page.

We're rushing the modules again. At this point all the questions are a cake for me, but again the girls answered some questions wrongs so far. I mean, the 'How many arms a TSF has' question does not belong here, Cpt. Isumi asked me that after I joined the Valkyries last time. What the hell?

But it's so nice to have a class without the girls avoiding my gaze, actually willing to debate with me. I could finally relax my back and forget about how tough stuff has been as of late for a little while.

Save for, you know, the Instructor's hellish hellbent intent on making me answer all the hard questions by myself.

"Well, that shall all for today. Remember to keep reading up on your own the remaining pages, tomorrow we're tackling the basis of movements and tactics."

"Roger!"

"Alright, Shirogane, you come with me. Since you can't go walking on your own, let's get you in your suit already. Girls, after you're done with your lunch, come to get changed into your suits as well. Dismissed!"

"Salute!" We all answer in unison as we get up.

"See you later guys."

"Later, Takeru!" Mikoto practically rushed towards the PX, book under her arm. I don't recall her being that into TSFs before, though.

… Oh, right! Didn't we have a tradition here? To make someone eat a lot more or something?

"Hey, guys. I might be wrong on this, but wasn't there a tradition here for when one does its first piloting… Guys?"

The color left their faces. Tama's eyes became whirlwinds and she started swaying left and right. Chizuru and Meiya crossed their arms as they let a heavy sigh escape their lips. Kei simply looked down, but with a clear, obvious, open for all to see bitter pout.

"You're not wrong, Shirogane." The Instructor pats my shoulder, signaling me to follow her. "You lucked out since you're being punished."

"Uhh… Later, guys." They don't answer back. We walk into the hallway, but the girls are seriously taking their time to get out. "Um, Instructor? What is the tradition about?"

"All fresh Cadets must eat double their normal fill before taking the aptitude test." She says, rather happy about it.

"Why?"

"What do you mean, why? Not only they would be under great stress but they would also be feeling rather tight in their stomachs." Then, she shoots a gaze my way, dead serious. "You've seen BETA already, haven't you? What did you do when you first saw them?"

"What did… I went berserk and started to attack them." She stops in her tracks and looks at me with wide eyes as her iris becomes smaller. Her eyes end up being two white dots.

"You… attacked them?!"

"Yeah, it was nuts, I know. But well… I got… enraged to hide my fear?" I know I said no more bullshit, but I can't help it.

"That's… impressive. Most greenhorns either freeze or start throwing up when they see them. It gets worse when they start to kill and eat people. So, we feed our Cadets more food than normal to make them used to control the urge. But really… Of course you wouldn't be intimidated by some soldiers when you attacked the BETA in a tank. Hehehehe, I'll be watching your performance closely today, Shirogane." Why is she smiling about it? Shouldn't she, like, tear me a new ear for what I did.

"About that… I think someone else is going to be monitoring my test today." She stops again and looks at me as she narrows her eyes. Reminder to self: Shut up, goddammit.

"Shirogane, why haven't I heard about this until now?"

"I… err… Didn't the Professor tell you?"

"Not a word. Ugh, what am I gonna do with you, Yuuko?!" She then begins to stomp her way forward, mowing down any dust that was lingering on the floor. Sorry Sensei, but this is your fault.

But… She seems odd. I expected some backlash, some of those same words that people have been whispering behind my back all this time.

"Um… Instructor?"

"Yes?"

"Are you not going to… say anything about what I did?"

"… I believe you already had enough on your plate." She says, without looking back or changing her stern, filled with knives tone. "Moreover, I do know that… some matters must remain unspoken." She turned back, narrowing her eyes. "Therefore, I think you should not let this hinder your training. Focus on what you can do from now on, Shirogane. And, just to be clear, I do not see you as a murderer.

However, I believe you already know of how… precarious this whole situation is."

"Yes. I can see what you mean."

"Well then, let's not bring this up again. Of course, I trust this was nothing more than an unfortunate accident, a limit situation where both parties share the blame. Your conduct so far makes me believe you are not a violent element as some claimed, but you will have to prove that to the rest of the base." She stopped walking and directed a frontal gaze at me, sizing me up for a sec. "And, surely, you will be on your best behavior from now on during your coming training courses, Cadet. Isn't that right?"

"Of course, Ma'am." I clamp up my lips, returning her gaze. Stone cold and unfaltering, she nods and we walk again…. I really miss you a lot, Marimo-chan.

Does she really believe that? That felt like empty business talk in some parts. I don't know if she was being honest or if she was just telling me what Sensei told her to. Sigh… I can't expect everyone to be nice to me, at least she's being civil instead of raising her voice and hurling more insults my way.

Yeah, don't be an idiot again. Different world, she isn't your Instructor. She's just doing what she was ordered to do, you saw her real feelings when she gave you the score in the CCSE. And she didn't report anything about the whole issue, probably under Sensei's orders. But… She doesn't seem troubled in the least.

… At least this makes it easier to dissociate her from the Marimo-chan I knew.

We eventually made our way to the changing room. As I open my locker I see a small note on it. 'This is the same suit you've been using, don't worry about your data, it's all here.' Thanks Sensei.

Again I'm using the black suit, which is appropriate since I'm actually a commissioned pilot. Well, I'm kinda jealous of the girls since I've never used the Cadet suit. Or any other suit for that matter. I wonder if it'd feel different, to use other suits.

As I get out I see that Takamura was talking with the Instructor.

"… is why I'll be monitoring… Oh, Cadet Shirogane, good afternoon."

"Good afternoon, 1st Lt. Takamura." I salute her and she returns the gesture.

"So we don't have any Cadet suits for you, huh? So, how does it feel?"

"Fitting? It does seem to do its work as intended."

"Oho, so you don't think it to be frail?" Instructor, I'm not giving you the chance to hit me.

"I tried to hit myself but I didn't feel a thing." She smiles at me as she starts walking around, giving me a good look. "Uh… Instructor?"

"Well, even your posture is different than other Cadets."

"For real?"

"Yes, most are still a bit ashamed of the… open areas in the suit." She points a finger to the chest, then to the back.

"Thankfully, I got an officer's one, I guess. So, what are we going to be doing until the rest arrive?"

"I suppose we could begin setting up your suit while we're at it."

Nodding once, I start up the suit functions, and then I am made to have a one-on-one lecture with NotMarimo-chan. Why her smirk keeps growing the more correct answers I give, I've no idea. And, why is she also asking me about the obscure tidbits? I am taking my time on purpose, saying I heard this from an officer, but there's no way I would know this if I were a Cadet. Takamura also chimed in from time to time, to note some differences the Guard's suits have, due to how they seem to be tailor made to sync up with the Takemikazuchi as perfectly as possible.

As we were in the middle of the questioning, the five overfed shapes of the girls made their way to us.

"We have arrived, Instructor!" As if they were lifting a whole box filled with bricks, they made a salute. Damn, now I'm feeling bad for them.

"Good, go in and get changed on the double. Shirogane is already almost done with the lesson on fortified suits here." She then gave me a pair of pats, or more like force palms, on the shoulder.

Then, the girls looked at me. Meiya, for some reason, immediately looked away, as did Chizuru. Kei narrowed her eyes, hand on her chin, probably suspicious I have an officer's suit. Tama just tilted her head, wondering the same as Kei. Mikoto, though…

"Oh, man! An officer suit! It looks so cool! Say Takeru, how does it feel?"

"Like I'm both naked and in heavy armor at the same time. Look." I then punch my stomach, to a grand total of zero damage points.

"Come on, enough chitchat. Squad, into the room!" Not a second after her order, the five of them marched in.

And then, the lesson continued for a while… and another while…

… And as we were running out of topics regarding the suits, as I was told of more models than I thought ever existed, about why certain colors are banned to be used on the suits, and about why NotMarimo-chan thinks the French suit's color scheme is the most heinous thing ever created by mankind, the girls slowly, as if a snail and a turtle had fused together, came out of the room.

Hiding their chests with their arms while their faces rode into the sunset, unable to lift their gazes from the ground. Save for Kei, who gave no shits about it. This is crazy, really. The first time I saw them in those I almost got a boner, now it's just normal to me. I feel like I've lost an irreplaceable part of myself along the way.

"Well, let's go to the briefing room near the simulators, I'll give you the talk about the suit in detail there."

And so, we began our walk to the sims, me marching in front of the girls to save them the embarrassment. As we got to the room, the giant boxes look as they always do. I've been here during night for the XM3's test so I kinda forgot how this place looked with light. Some people avoided looking my way, others scowled at me. I focused on the machines, that were free as of now.

"Impressive, aren't they?" Takamura comments as she sees me staring at the things.

"Yeah." Well, I'm sure this time I also won't have a problem with this, but I still should take it-

"Huh? Who're you?" Hmm? Looking towards the voice I see some people that I didn't think I would see here.

Hayase, and the rest of the Valkyries behind her. Looking alive and radiant, nothing like… those last moments we shared together.

"Good afternoon, 1st Lt.!" The Instructor salutes her, the rest of us follow in kind, me lagging for a sec as I took in their faces, biting the inner side of my lips to calm myself.

"Oh, Instructor. There is no need for that with us!" Munakata looks at me with the smile of a devil. I do not like this situation, at all. "So, who's the boy? I thought Squad 207 was the only Cadet group being trained here!"

Akane seems to be giving me a hard stare, as well as the others from her group. Tsukiji and Kashiwagi are whispering something, while other two girls I don't really recognize were also staring. The one with green hair said something to Akane, which made her frown, and then the blonde one tried to pacify them. But the seniors don't seem to be hostile towards me. Not in the hateful sense, at the least.

"Yes, he's part of Squad 207 too. He joined during October, and let me tell you, he's scoring better numbers than you Hayase." Thanks Instructor, I totally need Hayase to get on my case before I even join the Valkyries. Yep, no problem whatsoever.

"Oho? Aren't you a hotshot? I'm 1st Lt. Mitsuki Hayase, who're you?" I give her a salute as I answer.

"Cadet Takeru Shirogane, Ma'am."

"Hmm? Aren't you too stiff? What's up, scared?" She smiles as she slightly bends over, that cheeky little smile she always wore whenever she challenged me in the sims. Heh, nice to see you truly are the same, on the outside at least.

"My apologies, I'm under orders to behave well."

"Huuuuuh… Me thinks the pup is scared." Looking back at Munakata, never losing the cheeky grin, she chuckles. I just smile back, and that seems to put her off a bit, not expecting a calm reaction.

"Ahem…" Cpt. Isumi steps forward, probably to stop Hayase from going into another of her rivalry tangents. "Say Instructor, can we stay and watch the cadets' test?"

"Huh? Well… I've no objections, so if you're free there is no issue."

"Don't worry, we've got authorization from the XO to have the afternoon free to see…" She briefly sends a gaze my way, smirking for some reason. "Their first test, as a form of gallery of spectators.

Best wishes on your first step to become commissioned pilots, Cadets." She, and then the rest of the Valkyries, give us a salute that we all return.

"N-No, it is an honor to… perform for an officer." Chizuru's lips turn and twist, unable to look up firmly.

Wait… Is she… Oh, does she also have a rivalry with Akane in this world?

"Hey Chizuru, don't sweat it!" The person in question stepped forward, giving her a wink. "And all of you girls, too. Good luck in there!"

"Yeah, the first time is hellish for everyone here." Kashiwagi folds her arms, smiling as widely as she always did. "Poor Tsukiji seemed like a broken wind-up clock after the session."

"Uuh… Yes, it was horrible." Hunching over, she quivers a bit. Her honest reaction made Tama and Mikoto laugh a bit, but the other three remained as cool as ever.

"Well, let's not keep them any longer." Cpt. Isumi said, taking some steps back. "Welcome to the Training School, Cadets. Sgt. Jinguuji's real course starts here." Then, she cracked a smirk, as did Hayase and Munakata.

The girls opened their eyes wide, seemed surprised and quite a bit scared at the claim. The Instructor sighed and shook her head.

"Please try to not scare them more than necessary, Captain."

"I am merely speaking out of experience, Ma'am. Suzumiya and her squad can attest to the quality of your piloting training, after all."

The five of them twitch and look away as NotMarimo-chan locked her gaze onto them, arms folded and a small smirk rising in her. Just what the hell is this training of hers about?

"Hmm… You don't seem shaken at all, Shiroganeee." Hayase said, getting a bit too close, tip of a finger on her chin, the grin still in place.

"Well, I'll just have to overcome the training, whatever it is. I didn't come this far to fail."

"Oh, now you're speaking my language!" Small embers rose in her eyes, here we go again. "Do try to give us a decent show at the least, hotshot."

"What is it, Hayase? I didn't knew you were into younger boys." Munakata, please no! "So you already forgot about the Viking? To think I catched you sleep talking about-"

"MUNAKATA! Shut up!" Hayase's face goes crimson as she shouts at her, while Munakata smiles wickedly.

The rest of the seniors chuckle at their exchange, the younger ones seem to… not want to join in their fun. Akane was shooting me one of those glares, for some reason.

The five girls are simply staring at the two of them bickering, some sending me a gaze with a raised brow. I just shrug back.

But… Hayase sleep talking about the Viking? This does not bode well for my eventual arrival to the Valkyries. Assuming we manage to keep Yuuhi at bay, that is.

"Fuhuhu! Why are you getting so angry?" Hand in her waist as usual, she smiled at Hayase, who seemed to want to lunge at her throat on the spot. So basically, same as always. "It's normal for you to want to establish dominance over your love interest."

"I said shut up! This isn't about that!"

"Mitsuki, you shouldn't be ashamed. Weren't you the one who spoke to him first?" Wow, Haruka-san teasing her, too?

"Oh, now you turn on me too?!" Folding her arms, she faked a pout.

"… Perhaps you should leave the drama for later. We're troubling the Instructor." Akane, you're doing all of us a favor.

"Sigh… You two never change. I suppose you can stay, so long as you don't make much noise or disturb the cadets." Folding her arms and giving them one of the serious glares, all of the Valkyries returned a lazy salute her way.

"Of course we won't give you trouble!" Regaining her grin, she nods. "I'll be expecting a nice show, Shirogane." Uuuh, great. I'm already on her sights.

"I'll try to not disappoint."

"Hmm? You're not intimidated by Hayase after all this? Aren't you confident!" Munakata, please stop. Before it's- "Hayase, I think he's looking down on you. See? He's totally unfazed, like he doesn't even register your existence." Goddammit Munakata! Captain, don't just stand there smiling!

"Oho? Is that so, Shirogane? If you have anything to say, why don't you-"

"1st Lt. Hayase." Takamura got between me and her, I can't see her face but to make Hayase flinch she must be sending her some violet flares. "It is unproper for a Japanese surface pilot to threaten a Cadet in this way. The same goes for you, Munakata-san. You should reconsider your way of treating your peers."

"Huh? Ah… Well… I was just… W-Who are you, anyways?" Hayase was stuttering. This is a new one.

Most of the rest of the Valkyries were shocked into silence. Cpt. Isumi coughed and stepped forward, giving us a small bow.

"Forgive us, we tend to play around like this in our unit. We were just testing the cadets, nothing more. We're sorry, right Hayase?"

"Yes, sorry about that. Shirogane, forgive the screams."

"Nah, it's cool." If you didn't do that, you wouldn't be you.

You did manage to get me out of that cloud I was in, even if my heart lost some health points. I still can't deal with you two, but thanks for cheering me up in your own way.

"Cadet Shirogane, you shouldn't be so lenient with them. They were clearly intimidating you." Takamura, you're legit more intimidating right now though.

"Thanks for worrying 1st Lt., but there was no danger whatsoever."

"Why do you say that?"

"Because I'm in a Fortified Suit and they're not. So, if they tried anything, I have the advantage." Mikoto and Tama giggle, Kei just nods with a smirk, Meiya and Chizuru sigh and give me a doubtful gaze.

"Heheheh, you're really special Shirogane." NotMarimo-chan again force palms my back a few times. "See, Hayase? Not only his numbers, but his attitude is better than yours. Maybe you should learn to keep that short temper of yours in check before you try taunting cadets."

Instructor, stop adding fuel to the fire! I might be calm now, but in a few days she's gonna be all over me asking for a match!

"Grrr… Well, let's go get something to drink while we wait. Good luck, hotshot." She grins at me as they leave, Munakata also gives me a smile. The rest give us a salute with a smile, going their way to the nearby open space.

So I'm Eight and Hotshot for Hayase now. I can only pray she doesn't find out I'm the Viking, cause that will put me in quite some trouble. It is good to see they were similar to how I remember them, though.

"Cadet Shirogane, are you truly alright?"

"Don't worry, I'm used to it. And I didn't take offense, I also don't really care about formalities that much. But Instructor, was there any need to taunt her like that?" She just chuckles at me.

"I didn't taunt her. I just spoke the truth, you do have the best numbers of any cadet that was trained here, and I trained a quite a few 'hotshots' before you. Let's see if you can also get a high score on today's test."

Sigh… There is just no stopping the Instructor here, huh. Well, I just gotta bite the bullet and cleave through whatever this hellish training is about. And lend a hand to the girls, if they want it.

"Um…" Tama hesitated for a moment, looking down. "Is what they said true? That your real training starts now?"

"… In a way, it isn't wrong. However, if Suzumiya and her squad could overcome this hurdle, so can you. Surely you're not getting cold feet, are you now?"

"No, Ma'am!" All six of us answered.

"Good, now let's take care of the briefing."

We make our way into the briefing room, then the Instructor and Takamura start the explanation while taking their turns.

Now that I think about it, I never used the helmet of this thing, or the Feedback Protector. Man, it might be scary to fight the BETA in it, but that Pile Bunker looks sick as F. I wonder why we don't have more melee options than swords here, another thing to research today.

Once that was done and all suits were properly set up, she coughed and pointed to the door. We follow her out, back to the rails by the side of the sims.

"So, allow me to explain what you will be doing. You'll go in pairs, in pods one and two, and we'll have you stay seated for fifteen minutes. I will be monitoring your performance at all times. Also, as you already know, your simulation will be displayed on those monitors there for everyone to see."

What?! The girls look to the ground, Tama was already shaking. So that's why the Valkyries are here. Maybe Sensei sent them on purpose?

"After you go through the three speeds, you'll have to pilot for two minutes. First in an open space and then in an urban environment. Just to let you know, the best time we have is from 1st Lt. Hayase, at one minute and three seconds." Huh, so Hayase was top tier material since the start. "Well, let's start this. Sakaki, pod one. Mitsurugi, pod two. Here you have your bags, in case you need them."

"Um… Instructor. May I ask a question?" Chizuru spoke as she took her bag.

"What is it?"

"Why has the 1st Lieutenant joined on the briefing if you'll be the one monitoring us? Will she be helping in our simulation?"

"1st Lt. Takamura is here to oversee Shirogane's simulation." She couldn't hide the twinge of bother that was deeply rooted in her voice.

"Eh? To oversee…" Great, negativity I can already feel you.

"So she's Takamura… Could she be…" Meiya was glaring at her, which made Takamura flinch surprisingly.

"Ahem… I should have introduced myself earlier. I am 1st Lt. Yui Takamura. While I've been stationed here on a loan from the Empire, I've been assigned to monitor Cadet Shirogane's tests during his training course."

"Um… 1st Lt., is Shirogane-san in trouble?" Tama, thanks for asking.

"No, this is just to lend a hand. I was also stationed at Yukon like him, so I was asked to watch over him." She spoke in her usual work tone, which made the girls start fidgeting. They're throwing glances at me now.

"I see. But why only him?" Wow, for Meiya to speak up. What is worrying her now? Going by her eyes, it looks like she knows who Takamura is.

"It was simply an order, nothing more." They stare at each other for some seconds.

Takamura was composed and calm, while Meiya was furrowing her brow with yet again fire coming out of her eyes. Is she worried Takamura might do something to me since she's on the Guard?

"We've lost enough time on this. Sakaki, Mitsurugi. On the simulators, now."

"Chizuru! Good luck!" Akane yells at her while waving one arm, the rest of the fresh members also wave at her.

Chizuru smiles as she slowly waves back before getting into the pod.… Meiya didn't even look at them. Guess she still doesn't feel welcomed by the rest, huh.

Meiya and Chizuru's TSFs appear in the monitors. And the simulation starts, the rumbling starts in the two sims, echoing about the room.

"Uwah… Look at them move!" Mikoto's color was draining from her face as she stared at the pods shaking.

"This looks much more worse than what we did back last spring." Tama's voice was frail and tense. Kei was just staring, but she also must be nervous.

The images on the monitor change to an urban environment, they're on the last speed. After some sharp turns, the scenery changes to a prairie again. Some circles appear on the air, I suppose they have to fly through them?

Chizuru seems to be doing okay, Meiya however was having trouble moving her TSF. After they pass through ten circles, the image changes to a city again, and they have to start taking turn. At first they had some space, but as they got closer and closer to the center of the city, the buildings got closer and in the way. Meiya was the first to crash, Chizuru crashed shortly after.

0:27, Meiya. 0:34, Chizuru. Barely near half a minute, and Hayase got double than that? Wow, she must have been good from the start. The sims calm down and both of them get out of the pods.

I see some of the Valkyries laughing, others groaning. Are they… making bets? Seems like they're enjoying themselves, even if there seems to be a clear line between the seniors and the fresh ones.

As Meiya and Chizuru got close, I saw they were pale and walked wobbly. Grabbing the iron bars they slowly approached us.

"Sakaki, Mitsurugi. Well done. Ayamine, Tamase. You're next." The other two went into the pods with heavy steps.

"Chizuru-san, Meiya-san. Are you alright?"

"Uuuuuhhhh…" Chizuru sat down on a nearby bench and started to slowly rub the back of her head.

"Meiya-san, what about you?… Meiya-san?" Mikoto was completely ignored as she kept walking past the extended hand that was offered.

"Hey, Meiya? You okay?"

"Eh? Ah… Y-Yes, S-Shirogane. I'm alright." Unlike Chizuru, Meiya's face was burning red. She doesn't look sick, maybe what she ate is making her stomach hurt?

"Meiya-san, are you sure? You don't look so good." Mikoto lent her a hand as she sat down near Chizuru.

"Yes, it was… an eye opening experience. Uuuh…" She slumped onto the bench as her breathing got more calm.

The sims start shaking again. As the starting drill finishes, the prairie with circles appears again. Kei's TSF flies through shaking slightly, while Tama's on vibrator mode. As they reach the city, Tama crashed at the first tall building she met, while Kei kept going despite her tense maneuvering. She ended up crashing at the same spot as Chizuru, go figure.

0:19, Tama. 0:34, Kei. This is not good for Tama's self esteem, Kei is going to be so annoyed that she scored the same as Chizuru. They get out, Tama was walking as if she were drunk with swirly eyes. Kei walked slowly as she rubbed her forehead.

"Good work, cadets. How are you feeling?" The Instructor greets them as they approach us.

"Hauuuhhh…" Tama can't even speak. Mikoto helps her to the bench.

"… Urk." Kei was slowly making her way to the bench too.

"Kei-san, how are you feeling?"

"… Fine."

"You look white as a sheet though." She gives me a bothered stare as she sits.

"This is nothing."

"Kei-san, you're tied with Chizuru-san with the best time so far." Mikoto jiggles at her but Kei closes her eyes as she frowns.

"… Fuck." I knew she was gonna react like that, but it's still funny to see.

"Tamase, Ayamine. Good work. Yoroi, Shirogane. Your turn." We nod at NotMarimo-chan's words and then go towards the sims.

As we do, I hear a whistle coming from the Valkyries, but I ignore it and continue to walk on. I'm not reacting today. As we got on the steps to get inside, I looked to the side and saw how Mikoto's shoulders are slightly shaking.

"Hey, Mikoto."

"Hm? What's up?"

"Don't worry too much, yeah? Just relax and do your best." I remember I did this during the tournament to ease his worries, so maybe I can do the same for you.

"Uuuh… Well, you're right. Let's do our best, Takeru." She smiles faintly, but she's still tense as the air on an exam room.

"Mikoto, you must chill. I know, think of it as a game. It's just you and me having some fun."

"The Instructor is gonna kill us if she hears that." She starts shivering. "But I'll do my best! Don't think you'll have it easier because you're stronger."

We grin at each other and get inside the pods. I sit down and put the bolts in place. That's done, now the upper ones… Okay, all done. Now, what do I do? Do I go seriously? I mean, I won't be shaking around like the others, so let's take it easy.

"Cadet Shirogane, can you hear me?" Takamura's face appears in my vision.

"Loud and clear, 1st Lieutenant."

"Are you comfortable in that position?"

"Yes, no problems."

"Alright, remain in standby. Once Cadet Yoroi finishes the bolting we'll start the test."

A few seconds after that the start code appears on my sight, the prairie appears all over me and I feel the pod start moving. That being said…

This is a joke. The sims should move even more than this, this is nothing like a TSF. Ugh, I can't even get in the mood to pilot like this. The prairie looks nice and all you want but… Oh, we're in the city now. The thing picked up its pace and now we're going at the third speed. Which is still slow. I mean, I'm used to all the G-Forces of my stunts with the XM3, so this is like going back to Squash 64 after playing Mereengue.

"Cadet Shirogane, the manual part of the test will begin shortly. Get ready to pilot."

"Roger." I grab the controls and put my feet on the pedals.

Then I feel some response from them and I slightly move them forward. The prairie appears before me with the same circles in the air. To the left, to the right, dash ahead, to the right, boost upwards. Ugh, this is such a chore.

I reach the city and start moving around. I jump over some houses, before landing I dash to my left and jump again when I can towards the following circles. This feels really stiff, it's really unresponsive. No wonder we're losing the war with this thing, it's not even that I can't cancel or that it's less sensitive, this is a straight limiter on the pilot. By teaching you to only move within these boundaries you'll never think of doing piercing maneuvers, or to use the aerodynamics to their fullest.

Ugh, I can't even get motivated for this. I'm actually having trouble making the thing move as I want it to move, I have to time my jumps earlier or the thing just won't respond.

Whatever, there's two circles next that require one to jump between some big buildings, I'mma crash here. Let's speed up a lil' bit, and now do a barrel roll~!

CRASH!

[DAMAGE SUSTAINED - TEST OVER]

Ahh, that was fun. I rarely get to actually mess around in these things so this was actually a one in a lifetime treat. How much time did I last, though? I kinda spaced out there for a sec as I was complaining about the OS. Oh well, whatever.

After the thing stops shaking I get out of the pod, Mikoto is getting out too and she looks like she's made out of jelly, wobbling like the Frost Climbers.

"Hweh…"

"Mikoto, you alright?"

"Everything… spinning…" Lending her my shoulder, I help her go towards the rest.

"Good work, you two. But I'll be damned, I didn't think you'll actually do it Shirogane." The Instructor was again smiling at me, Takamura's eyes had small flames on them. What are they talking about?

"Shirogane, that was truly impressive!" Meiya was beaming at me, Tama was also looking at me with sparkly eyes.

"What are you talking about?"

"Cadet Shirogane, you broke the record. Your time was 1:18. You're now the Cadet with the best starting time." Takamura points to my monitor, a giant smile plastered on her face.

"What a surprise. Special-kun stormed the course again." Kei deadpanned me as always, and despite the small doubt it seems she also is intrigued.

"Huh, neat. And what about Mikoto?"

"Yoroi lasted 0:42, it was a surprise for sure." Chizuru patted Mikoto on the shoulder, she finally seemed to have regained her composure and smiled at her.

"T-Thanks, Chizuru-san. But it was more turbulent than I had thought… Hweeeh…"

"Yeah, that was rough." Tama closes her eyes as she starts shivering.

"Well squad, let me give you your results." We all form a line, standing in attention, except for Mikoto. "Sakaki, Mitsurugi, Ayamine, Yoroi, Tamase, all of you are progressing fine. You did better than I expected of you, considering about much trouble you've been until now. Seems like training you wasn't a big a waste as I originally thought."

She can't contain herself, can't she? The girls had recovered the color on their faces, but now were again looking to the ground. Takamura grasped a strand of hair, to prevent herself from speaking up probably.

"Now, Shirogane. Your data from Yukon was lost in the incident, so we have nothing to compare today's data with. However, these numbers are really something else. You were calm and composed throughout all the simulation, did the shaking not bother you?"

"Well, honestly no." No point in lying now.

"Hmph, you've scored the best score any Cadet got in their first run. Not just from the squad, but from any cadet that has been trained in the 207th Training School to date." As expected, the girls are left speechless. Though, in my defense, I also did that during my first loop. This isn't cheating. "I hope you can keep it up. That's all for today, squad. Dismissed!" She then beckons us to follow her back to the changing room.

As we left the sim room, I saw the Valkyries looking our way. Akane and Tsukiji waved at the girls, the green haired one shouted a goodbye and the blond one gave them a court bow.

However, Kashiwagi, Munakata and the Captain had the biggest, cheekiest grins I ever saw in them, they rose a hand to salute me. And… Hayase was looking straight at me with a huge grin on her face, eyes squinted while tensing a fist, with Haruka-san doing her best to calm her down. Before we left, she made a gun with that coiled hand, and 'shot' it at me.

So… I just made her lose a really big bet between her and the others, didn't I? She's not gonna let me off easily, ain't she?

"Takeru, did the shaking not bother you at all?" Mikoto's eyes could pop out of her face any second now.

"I mean, what can I say?"

"Well, regardless of that he still beat all of us with his score. You too, Yoroi. I didn't expect you to get so farther ahead from us." Chizuru seems puzzled at Mikoto's results. It is surprising though.

"Yeah, Yoroi-san beat all of us too." Tama, cheer up. What are we gonna do if you start getting depressed?

"Miki-san, don't look so down. You just gotta practice to get better!"

"Shirogane." Meiya tapped my shoulder as the rest continued to talk.

"What is it?"

"Say, can you tell me if it's true that you weren't bothered by the shaking?"

"Huh? Oh, well… No, I wasn't that bothered by it." She sighs as she softens her gaze.

"I see. That's another hurdle to cross, huh?"

"I mean I… Yeah, I already had some battle experience, you know? In the tank?" I remembered the excuse I gave them about me fighting in a tank, she nods at me.

"Oh right, I had forgotten about it. Of course, you already have experienced the heat of a real battle. Even so, to surpass the previous record… You truly are special." She smiles faintly at me, thank God she isn't getting all negative and suspicious.

"Please stop with the praise. I mean, how was your run? You did seem pretty beat up, and your mech was swaying a lot. How did you feel?"

I was expecting her usual resolute tone or a philosophical remark about how she has to continue to hone herself, but instead she adverted her eyes as her face turned red again.

"It… It was… I mean, it was certainly… harder than I thought it would be."

"Well, don't beat yourself up. All of us have some bad days."

"No, it's not… Uh…" She bit her lip as she returned my gaze. I… I've seen that gaze before… And not out in the open…

"… Meiya? Hey, you seem kinda out of it, you sure you're okay?"

"Yeah, I'm fine. I just had a… daydream while I was in the pod. That distracted me and… N-Nothing, I am fine. Twas nothing but a mistake on my part to let such thoughts come to me at that time." She folds her arms and looks away.

The way she looks like… She said daydream… In a sim pod… Which made her… Ooooooohhhh… You're telling me she saw that memory? This… is kinda awkward now.

"Sorry."

"Eh? W-Why would you be apologizing?" She turned even redder, but she couldn't look at me in the eye. Yep, she saw it.

"I shouldn't have asked. Sorry to bother you, Meiya." I give her a small bow, but she starts fidgeting as she seems to try to find words to speak.

"No, this isn't… your fault. It was my own fault for thinking of… o-of such matters." Stop being like that, I'm trying to calm you down here.

"Shirogane-kun? What are you two talking about?" Chizuru to the rescue.

"Meiya seemed to have a hard time on the sim, I went and made her relieve that, so I was apologizing."

"I see. Not that I can blame you, Mitsurugi. It was harder than I thought it would be." We both nod at her words, heaving a sigh for the same and a different reason at the same time.

"Squad, we're here. All of you have the rest of the day free, consider it your last share of easy time. Let me remind you that until you all haven't completed all the basic training drills on the simulators, you won't be allowed to pilot your TSFs. That's all, leave your suits in your lockers. Well, then."

The Instructor leaves, and we all enter the changing rooms. Since I'm alone here I quickly get back into my fatigues and get out. Takamura was waiting for me, leaning on a wall.

"Well, shall we get going? Or would you be wishing to speak with your squad for a while?"

"Thanks, but let's get going. I'm sure they must have a lot to talk about already. The project can't wait." She nods at me and we go our way.

I should leave Meiya alone for a while, she'll only get more vivid memories if I stay close to her, and I'm pretty sure I don't want this Meiya, who seems to be even more resolute about her duty, to have sexual daydreams about us in the middle of our training. Imagine how bad she'll feel if every time she has to get in the sim pod she has the same visions. I also don't know which one she saw, since we… kinda did it in the sim pods quite a few times.

Since they were welcoming enough to trust in me again, let's give them some space to avoid any weird causal stuff from flowing into them. After all, Meiya wasn't the only one who I did it with in the sims. And it's not like those times were-

"It was truly surprising, I did not expect you to retain such poise during your test." Takamura brought me back to reality before my thoughts spiraled out of control. "The incident must have affected you greatly."

"… Yeah, it did." If by incident I assume all the deaths in my world, then yes.

"Your movements were also quite precise even if you were fumbling with the controls at times. I think you'll make a very good surface pilot, Cadet Shirogane." She beams at me again.

"Thanks, but, can I ask why are you so interested in my piloting skills?"

"Huh? Why? Well, I think you have potential, and as a fellow survivor I just want to help you. Really, that's all." She looks at me squarely in the eye. Her tone however hides something underneath. I can't tell if it's good or bad, but she's not telling me the truth.

"Well, in any case, if I impressed you I'm off to a good start. What did you think of my squad's performance?"

"They did well for their first real simulation. Except Tamase."

"Do you think you could help her?"

"Hmm… That might be a bit complicated. I did get permission from the Instructor to aid them during the evenings, since it'd free her own schedule." Bureaucracy and Sensei's overworking schedule playing to our favor for once.

Of course, Tama's specialty are guns and Takamura is more oriented to close combat. Aside from some footing and movements she might not have much advice for her. She might have it easier with Meiya and Kei.

"If you can find any advice for Tama, please look out for her. She isn't very confident, so she tends to get down easily. Maybe forcing her to push her limits gradually would work?" That's all I can think of to help Tama, since she herself has to find her resolve.

"I'll do what I can within my boundaries."

"That's more than enough. Thanks, Takamura. For real."

"No, it is nothing. I did give you my word, so I must follow through." The honor code also helping out, huh? Color me surprised, it would be a first for those damn rules to do anything good. "By the by… Whatever does 'for real' means?"

"Oh… It's… Uuh… My way to say 'Really', basically." Not this again, goddammit.

We made some talk about the test until we reached the office. Things picked up from yesterday and I had to run around delivering more folders than yesterday. It does look like we're on the right track for the railgun now, by the end of my work we already had some schematics done for the remodeled version of it.

With some luck we will make it in time for Sadogashima.

---

Same Day. 0 8:53 PM.

(B19F. Takeru's Office.)

---

Nothing but the sound of my clicks and typing could be heard in here, in the small office Sensei prepared for me. Looking like a small classroom, with a small blackboard behind me, a small desk where the PC was, a shelve with who knows what kind of papers, and little else.

"Hmmm… So this Tornado has the blades mounted on the outside of its arms…" It does look more practical than having them sheathed. Doesn't the Takemikazuchi have a small dagger ready in its arms too?

I look up, away from the screen as I stretch a bit.

Been reading up on weapons and TSFs since I finished aiding Takamura at 1900 hours, but this thing is really slow. The PC looks to be running on Weóndows 95 and with all the documents I have open, it's running really slow at times. It's UI is also really old, but considering that widespread usage of PCs has probably stagnated it isn't surprising.

But boy, did I not learn a lot of useful tidbits of info today! Honestly, we're gonna get rich with the F-15's parts. It seems to be one of the most widespread TSF in the world in usage right now. Now, those Europeans are crazy. They put blades mounted on the arms of that Tornado, they made an axe, and a spike shield. I mean, I could have seen a shield being turned into a claw or something, but to have the shield shoot out its spikes… Gun shield, best shield. You can even use it to bash the hell out of the Grapplers. Imagine someone sorting with only those shields as a weapon… Knowing the lack of supplies in the frontlines, that probably has happened once, or will happen at some point.

But the Soviets are not far behind, they made literal chainsaws for their TSFs. Shame we don't have much info about those. I might ask Sensei if we can somehow copy that. I also found a gatling gun, the M61 Vulcan, that was redesigned to be used on TSFs way back when the first TSAs were created. It's light enough to mount it on a TSF and powerful enough to be worth it. Since it uses 20mm ammo, I could put two small containers on the back of a TSF's legs to hold the bullets. The GAU-8 Avenger is too heavy, and the machineguns of the A-12 are a secret of the American army, so that's my best bet to see if the idea works outside of Valgern-On.

I'm glad Sensei kept her words with this, but I was expecting she would since this is profitable for her. And thanks to this setting I'll be able to do stuff to my leisure now.

I hear a knock on my door, I answer and Kasumi enters the room.

"Good evening, Takeru-san."

"Hey, good evening Kasumi. Did Sensei sent you to start on that memory thing?" She nods.

"Are you ready? I wanted to do it near Sumika-san, to link any memories you might have of his childhood to her."

"Give me a sec, I'll save these docs real quick."

After some clicks here and there, I saved everything I had noted down today, and then we leave the office.

"So, how do you think this will go Kasumi?"

"I don't know. I never really tried to bring someone's memories back to the surface. I can't really talk with Sumika-san, it's a completely different thing. I will do my best, though." She moves her bunny ears as she looks at me, determination oozing from her eyes. I return a smile, patting her head. She moves her bunny ears again as I do.

We reach the cylinder's room. The santa rabbit is still hanging in there. Kasumi signals me to sit near the cylinder and after I do, she presses her head against my back.

"Takeru-san, close your eyes and relax. Also, here." She passes me some sort of tiara-like object that looks a bit like her bunny ears, probably what Sensei will use to monitor my brainwaves during this session. "It might take me a while, so just be calm. The images might be somewhat distorted and lack color, but you remain calm and listen to me. Since I'm intruding on your mind it might hurt a bit, but please do remain calm at all times."

"Alright. I'll stay cool, I do trust in you, Kasumi. But don't force yourself if you can't do it."

"Don't worry, you can leave it to me." She smiles at me from behind, and then puts her head against my back again.

I take a deep breath and close my eyes. For a while I feel nothing different, seeing pitch black darkness.

But then I felt a tingly feeling on the back of my head. When a slight tinge of pain appeared, I started to calm my breath, focusing on that feeling. Slowly, my body began to feel a bit stiff.

"Relax, Takeru-san. You're safe, nothing is wrong."

"I know."

"Take a deep breath." I do as told, I feel the tingly sensation get stronger. "Calm down, think of being in peace."

"Like, sailing on a boat or something?"

"If that is what you imagine, then yes."

Eyes still closed, I remembered that cruise Meiya sent me and Sumika once. The lights of the city, the slow rocking of the ship. Left and right… Left and right…

"Yes, calm down. Focus on the lights." Slowly, the pain faded away. "Calm down… You're safe now…" I felt like nodding off, leaning back a bit.

At some point, I realized I had stopped feeling my body. A similar sensation compared to when I jump between worlds, but without the nausea and the world spinning around. The tingly feeling is still there, somewhere. Then, the lights I was remembering start to twist and curve. As if it were a stain spreading, a visage comes closer to my sight, giving me some form of vertigo for a sec until everything came into place.

The colors stop being blurred, the shapes take noticeable forms, I can begin to tell the depth of what's around me after a while.

I find myself looking at some sort of street. It looks really run down though. Also, everything looks so much bigger.

"Bro! Wait right there!" A child shouts in the distance. I can't really control anything here, similar to that time I couldn't materialize and ended up getting punched by Sumika back into this world.

"Bleh! Jouji, you slowpoke!" My view moved back, and I saw two boys running towards me.

Both with black hair, one had a red bandanna on his forehead, was wearing a white shirt and blue shorts. The other had a red shirt and black shorts. Their clothes look really old, like in the style the ones my Dad had on those old pictures he showed me. The last shriek of fashion in town, before it was brutally murdered.

"Takeru! It's not fair!" The bandanna-less boy shouted as they tried to catch up. However I, or rather this little version of me, turned around and started sprinting again.

He jumped over fallen stuff that someone left lying around, took a turn to his left and went near some sort of park. Then, without slowing down, he jumped on some sort of fence climbing game, and reached the top in no time at all. Way to go, little me.

"Uuuh! Bro, you just wait!" The boy with a bandanna tried to do the same, but ended up falling. That must have hurt a lot.

"Hey, Jouji! You okay?"

"Uuuuuhhhh…" His eyes were two big whirlwinds. Little me got down from the game and went near him.

"No, you're not. C'mon, get up." He helps this Jouji up, as the boy rubs his head. Hey, he's nicer than I was when I was little.

"Hey, did Jouji hit his head again?" The other boy got closer.

"Yeah, he's really dumb."

"Like you're not! Bro, you're the dumbest of them all! Only you would think in climbing like a monkey!"

"What?! I'm not a monkey!"

"Yes, you are! Like the ones in that book you're always reading!"

Little me and Jouji start arguing about who's dumber, with the other boy trying to make peace between them. This looks like your everyday life, is this in the Hiiragi district? It doesn't seem that different from my life back home, considering how much I fought over the most silly things with the boys in Pee Park.

Hehehe… I forgot how… nice this was. Just fooling around with your friends. I'm glad he also had someone like that. So he wasn't always alone.

"H-Hey! Takeru, Jouji… S-She's here." The second boy says as if he just saw a ghost.

Little me looks towards where he's pointing and I see a tall figure getting… What the hell?! You've got to be kidding me.

"Takeru, what did I tell you about playing outside?"

"That I shouldn't do anything dangerous?"

"And did you?"

"No? There is no proble-Eeeh! It hurts! Maya-nee, let go of my ear!" Maya-san came closer, looking infuriated, and pulled his left ear quite strongly it seems.

"No problem?! What would I have done if you fell from that height?! Gosh, what am I gonna do with you? I let you out of my sight for a second and you run off to the park."

"Let me go! I won't do it anymore!"

"You always say that. No more playing outside this week."

"EEH?! No fair!"

"Silence. You have no right to complain. Now, let's go back home." Maya-san starts pulling little me away, who tries to resist in vain.

"Don't worry Takeru! We'll go visit you later!" The boy whose name I don't know waves at little me, after a while the one named Jouji starts waving too.

After some steps, Maya-san lets go of his ear and instead grabs his wrist, and so they keep walking quite fast. Little me waves at them with his free hand, before turning forward.

"Maya-nee, let me go. It hurts."

"Hmph, pouting won't help you." She says as she arranges her glasses like she usually does.

They keep going somewhere, but with a clear direction. This person is without a doubt Maya-san, she looks to be around my current age but she isn't wearing her Guard suit, or a dignified one either. She looks like a commoner, wearing a crimson and white dress. Her hair is tied in a similar fashion to my world's Maya-san.

But… This only brings more questions. Little me called her Maya-nee, she said going back home. As for how she scolded him, it would seem they're actually siblings. But that's impossible, since his last name is still Shirogane.

Mion did seem to like him, and Tsukuyomi-san did act weirdly last time we met after I called those two pickles. And now this. Were our families that close?

Maya-san is looking out for him a lot, she's actually worried about him. He's still complaining at her.

… She does look like an older sister right now. Family, huh?

… Is that why he was so hurt? Because the Tsukuyomis were Guards and he felt betrayed by someone he trusted a lot?

No, they're the retainers of the Koubuin family. Why is she taking care of little me? She doesn't seem to be bothered, it feels… Like when Mom always scolded me, but finished the rant with a kiss to my forehead. Why is she here? What is he to her?

Slowly, the image starts to lose color and twists itself in a whirl. Everything mixes itself into a weird gray, where all shapes are part of some sort of giant abstract 'something'.

"Takeru-san, I can't focus on that memory anymore. Do you still feel fine?" I hear Kasumi's voice from somewhere.

"Yeah, no problem. Can you keep going?" I didn't really reply. It's like my thoughts simply reach her without much effort.

"Yes. Give me one second."

I feel a slight jolt, the whirlwind moves again. Color returns to the visage in front of me, the shapes slowly return to reflect a normal view. Now, where is this place?

Again everything looks big, so I'm again seeing little me's memories. This place looks like… an old fashioned house? No, looks far more regal than that.

Looks actually like those houses of the nobles I saw on TV back home, but for real. He's walking behind someone in a red Royal Guard uniform. I start hearing two voices bickering.

"It's cheating! You can't clap my ears!"

"All is fair in a battle. You're merely jealous because I always win!"

Are those… Yep, it's them Pickles. Mion and Shion are arguing with each other, something about Shion cheating in some training. Both of them are wearing a red gi, similar to the ones people that do martial arts have. Mion's short hair has a small ponytail behind, while Shion's barely reaches her shoulders.

Little me rubs his hand, he has a bruise, he's on a gray gi instead. So they already trained? Uh… I wanted to see him fight, dammit. Now that everything came into view I can recognize the person walking in front of the three kids. Tsukuyomi-san, wearing her red Guard uniform, looks back at the girls as they argue before speaking.

"Alright, you two. Stop fighting already, Yuuhi-sama does not like noise on the table." Tsukuyomi-san opens a big door, and we enter into a bright room.

There was a table, its wood shiny and all, with a really nice looking cloth covering it. The wooden chairs having some curls, some design on their top and legs, remind me of some old and expensive store that was in the shopping district back home, only more regal and with the wood having a slightly darker color.

And looking our way, there was a small figure sitting on the left side. Wearing a white kimono-like robe, with a small purple ponytail, she smiled at us. Yep, that's Yuuhi.

"Oh, good evening. How was your training?" Her silky voice is a treat to my ears. It's hard to think this cute little thing wants to kill me now.

"I won both matches!" Shion declared proudly as she sits, puffing her chest.

"I couldn't win…" Mion drops her shoulders as she sits by Shion's side on the right side.

"Takeru, your arm is hurt." As little me sat by Yuuhi's side, she grabbed his arm and started softly rubbing his bruise.

"I'm fine Yuuhi, don't worry." He's calling her by her name, sitting by her side… Just who are you? Why are you here?

"Truly so?"

"Yeah! I might have lost once, but I'll do better next time." He seems to be beaming at her, because she immediately recovered her smile. He's also talking to her informally, like I usually do.

"Alright, no more talking. Here's dinner, so eat while it's still warm."

Tsukuyomi-san brought the food to the table and the little kids started to eat with her. It does look like he was part of the family, going by how everybody is treating him.

… Eating with your family. Something so trivial, something so irreplaceable.

One day, it was the last day I ate with my world's Meiya, one day it was the last day I talked with Grandpa, and those days, the days of the accidents… might have been the last days I spent with my world's versions of everyone.

But I didn't knew that.

It's obvious why they want me dead. I'm replacing someone that was like family to them. What would I do if someone tried impersonating…

… Didn't I replace Sumika with the 00 Unit in my last loop? Didn't I keep mixing my world's and that world's versions of them in my head?

… Who did I fall in love with again?

… Am I such a superficial person? Did I just not care? I just wanted someone to sleep with?… Or, did I actually love each and every one of them?

The happy voices around me only enlarge the clouds in my heart. Now I feel like shit, planning on replacing him like this. I mean, why did he grew so resentful towards the Guard if he was so close to them? Why didn't they reach out to him? Or did something happen between them when Yuuhi became the Shogun?

"Tsukuyomi, would it be alright for all four of us to go play for a while?" Yuuhi asks as she finished eating.

"Hmm… I guess you could all play some shogi?"

"Mana-nee, we're gonna lose again." Mion protested at Tsukuyomi-san's choice. Little me nodded in agreement.

"Nobody can beat Yuuhi in a game of Shogi." Little me's comment made Yuuhi blush a bit.

She does kind of remind me of the memory of that little Meiya of my world when we met in the park. That Meiya was more soft and less… aggressive? Frontal? Yuuhi does somewhat remind me of that polite and sweet side of my world's Meiya. The side… I might never see again.

Sadly, I now understand why she wants me gone.

"I'm not that good… Shion, do you want to play?"

"Only if I win something." She brought a finger to her lips as she grinned. So she was a devil since she was a kid.

"What would you be wanting? Oh, a new dress perhaps?" Little Yuuhi tilted her head with a big smile, but Shion's grin grew wider and wicked.

"I want Takeru to play with me all day tomorrow!" Wait, what?

"Shion! That's mean, you can't… do…" Mion was protesting against her cousin's idea but fell silent suddenly. And I can see why.

In the corner of my sight I could see blue flares come out of Yuuhi's eyes as she pouted. I mean, it isn't very intimidating for me, seems more cute and sweet than anything, but the kids seem to be scared of her.

"No. Takeru stays with me tomorrow." She then hugs little me tightly, as if to enforce her point.

"Yuuhi-sama, you don't have to get jealous. Tomorrow you'll all have time to play together." Tsukuyomi-san's attempt to calm Yuuhi failed spectacularly.

"But he'll have to leave again after tomorrow…" Still protesting, she doesn't let go.

Leave? Where is he leaving? No, why is he leaving? I want answers, not more questions!

"See Shion? You're making Yuuhi sad. You dumb pickle!" Yeah, you tell 'em!

"W-What? I didn't…" Shion looks down, Mion grins at her making her pout and look away.

Then little me's vision goes towards the purple girl that was still hugging him. She doesn't look like she wants to let go.

"Don't worry, Yuuhi. Tomorrow we'll play a lot together! And next time, I'll bring you more souvenirs, so cheer up!" He patted her head and she slowly looked up at him, her eyes recovered the usual shine. She can't be so cute…

"You promise? You'll come back?"

"Yeah!"

Yuuhi smiles again and let's go of little me, Tsukuyomi-san laughs quietly as she watches. They seem to be awfully close. If he was so important to her, of course she would want to dispose of someone passing as him.

But… He said he'll come back with souvenirs. Did he came and went from the Hiiragi district to wherever this place is? Why? Where are my parents?! Actually… Who are my parents here? Are they… still alive?

They keep eating, talking about some festival, about how hard the trainings are. But again, slowly the images become distorted and start losing color. The shapes again mix and blend into that gray thing.

"Kasumi? How are you feeling?"

"I'm… fine. I can still…"

"You sound tired. Let's leave it for tonight. I mean, these two memories gave us a lot to work with. Take it easy, yes?"

"Alright."

Everything fades to black, and I feel a slight warmth all over me. As if rising back to the surface after diving in a pool, the tingly feeling slowly dissipates and I open my eyes, and see that I'm back on the cylinder room. My limbs feel all stiff as if I was sitting for hours on end, like when I had to study for my first finals.

"Ugh… Kasumi, how are you feeling?"

"Fine. Just a bit tired." She rubs her head with her eyes closed. She's having trouble calming her breath, so she did exert herself.

"That was awesome, I could see it as if I was there on real time. You did a great job, Kasumi." She giggles as she opens her eyes, I took the tiara out of my head.

"That's a relief. But we didn't get to see Sumika-san…" Then, a wild pout appears.

"Don't worry, we can keep trying. And even if we only saw two memories, that still gave us a lot of answers." And a lot of questions, too.

"Yes. Seems like he was part of the Shogun's household. But he also was in a normal city. He's weird." She moved her bunny ears as she breathed a sigh.

"Yeah, no kidding. I don't know whether he got adopted into the Tsukuyomi family or if my family also served the Koubuin House. Well, we'll find out eventually." I slowly try to get up. My legs feel really numb. Kasumi seems to also have trouble standing up.

"This was… more draining than I thought. I'll wait until tomorrow to show these images to Sumika-san."

"Yeah, don't exert yourself anymore. I'll be going back to my cell before it's too late, can you tell Sensei of what you saw?" I lend her my hand as she stands up, it feels as if she were made out of literal paper. This must have been really taxing on her.

"Yes. You go on and rest. By the way, how did you feel during the session? I didn't harm you?"

"No, it was really relaxing. It was kinda nice, to be honest. I do feel a bit stiff, but it's like all the tension I had stockpiled today vanished into thin air, all thanks to you."

"I see. So, should we continue with this approach?"

"I don't see why not, I did say that I kind of enjoyed it too, that feeling before seeing the memories. I did feel pain at the start, but the mental image of the ship helped out. How about you? Are you really fine?"

"Yes, don't worry. I am just exhausted, since I didn't knew how much I had to focus. Well, if it went well that's good enough. Let's be on our way."

I nod and we exit the room, talking about the whole feeling and the session as we walked on the creepy corridor as we stretch to remove the stiffness from our bodies.

"You should rest well today, just in case. Night, Kasumi." I hand her the tiara, and then wave at her.

"Bye bye." She waves back before entering Sensei's office.

As I make my way to my cell I can't help but wonder about what I saw.

He was apparently living with Maya-san when he was little and called her Maya-nee, so they were close. Where were my parents? Were they living with us? Maybe we were some sort of vassals of the Koubuin House? No, if that were the case, why were they in the Hiiragi district and not near Yuuhi?

And then, the second one. He seemed to be really close to Yuuhi, and from the looks of it I was training with Mion and Shion. Tsukuyomi-san didn't seem to treat me differently, so who was him?

Well, one thing is clear. Sensei was right, he was on good terms with Yuuhi. No wonder she and the Tsukuyomis are so mad with me. I wonder what will I see tomorrow, I sure hope I can see something about his life in the Guard this time. Or about his life with Sumika.

Anyways, today was a fruitful day. It seems I'll be able to get along with my squad for the time being, the railgun is proceeding steadily, my research started off with a good pace, and I got to learn some nice tidbits of info about him.

But I'm spent.

I'll have to be careful during training to not end up exhausted. Well, let's hit the shower and then go to sleep, tomorrow will be another long day.

…

"… Family, huh."

Ripples of Change

Chapter 30: Ripples of Change

---

November 24th. Almost 3 PM.

(Changing Room.)

[Chizuru]

---

"So you still are suspicious of him?" I stare at Ayamine, who was in the middle of taking off her suit.

"You saw that he has an officer's suit, and he passed the first test as easily as always. Isn't that really odd?"

"… I do concede that his performance was amazing, however, I don't believe the shortage of male cadet suits is his fault." Tapping my glasses, I then continue to get out of the suit myself.

"Wasn't he transferred from overseas? There was enough time to request a suit if there wasn't one for him." She insists.

"Um… Maybe asking for a single suit wouldn't work, right?" Tamase suggests, unable to lift her gaze from the ground.

"Could have asked for a delivery for the next batch of cadets ahead of time." And Ayamine doesn't let it go.

"You wouldn't still be thinking of treating Shirogane-kun as an American, would you?"

"… And if I do?" Giving me one of her habitual side glances, she raises a brow.

"I believe we made it clear to you that he isn't like them. Shirogane-kun was always just trying to fit in."

"Then, why is he also a star pilot from the get go?"

"He might just be talented. Don't let your jealousy speak out again."

"Did you even see how he was when he got out?" A hand on her chin, she looks up. "He wasn't even groggy, wasn't affected by all the shaking. And he's got someone from the Guard watching him."

"Sigh… Look Ayamine, we all agreed to treat him fairly from now on. None of those things are in his control."

"Doesn't mean I can't keep an eye on him."

By the Holy Emperor, what is wrong with her? I do understand her concerns, however, none of them are his fault. And… I cannot simply look away after all he did for me.

"It would be a hindrance to the squad's unity for you to continue down this road, Ayamine."

"… I can treat Special-kun however I want, so long as we get results in the trainings." Narrowing her eyes, our gazes clash once more.

"And, as the squad leader, I'm asking you to refrain from doing something you might regret later. Just like how you acted on your own when we saw those small sims and almost made him unwilling to show us the other ones. Remember?" She plucks her lips into a small circle, looking away.

"Not my fault that you want to force us to do whatever you want all the damn time."

"What?! I wasn't-"

"Really? You always insist on following orders, but didn't you also treat him like shit when you wanted? You know, despite it being bad for the squad?"

"I… I was wrong back then. I already admitted to it. And if we keep acting in that way, we'll only make our trainings worse."

"That's your opinion. We don't have to act friendly with each other if we don't want to." Coiling a fist, she shrugs before I could retort. "I will follow your order to not be vocal about my opinions, but that doesn't mean I'll just turn a new leaf because you want me to. Special-kun will have to show me he truly isn't a traitor."

"Kei-san, please." Yoroi, who was already in her fatigues, took a few steps towards us. "If you just close up, then this will end like our argument during the test." She keeps staring at Ayamine, who, despite her poker face, was now facing away from Yoroi.

"… You can think whatever you want about me, just like I can think whatever I want about Special-kun."

Having finished to get into her clothes, she sits down and grabs her boots, seeming intent on remaining silent.

"Ayamine, we can't have that attitude in the squad anymore. You saw what it did to us during the test."

"And will debating about it solve anything?" She frowned once she sent a gaze at me.

"Huh? I'm just asking you to-"

"No, you're harassing me. I am free to act as I see fit as I've been until now. Stop bitching about it."

"And precisely because of that, I'm telling you to give him a second chance!"

"Um…" Tamase, tapping her fingers, came a bit closer to me. "I don't think Ayamine-san means anything bad. I also don't think it's fair to treat Shirogane-san as we were, but she only needs to see for herself he's being honest, right?"

"That is true." She smiled, until I tapped my glasses. "However, we can't let this go as it is, otherwise this might, and certainly will, come back to haunt us later."

"Chizuru-san, I don't think insisting will change her mind."

"… I get it, I'll give her some space. But, just don't treat him unfairly from now on."

"Tch… Already heard you the first time." Going down to tie up her boots, we all got back into getting ready to leave.

"A-Anyways, it sure was a surprise, how a real simulator works!" Yoroi smiles, joining her hands. "For a moment I thought I was gonna faint."

"Yeah…" Tamase sighs as she gets her boots in place. "I wonder if I'll be able to endure the trainings from now on…"

"Don't worry, Miki-san! Akane-san and the rest seemed to get the hang of it by the fourth day, right?"

"I agree with Yoroi. The suits will accumulate more and more data each day, so by then the shaking won't cause us that much dizziness anymore."

Remembering those days, when we were left to do independent reading back from the beginning of the course while the Instructor tutored Akane and the rest in their piloting sessions, when they got sent to a table far away so that they didn't have to hold back to discuss their trainings, it made me so frustrated.

While basic TSF operation, the situation of the war, and some outlines of the systems used was available from the start, I truly didn't think the suits and all the things involved would be of such excellent, state-of-the-art technology. I do understand why they didn't want to let us know of it ahead of time, and yet… back then we barely had the morale to follow through the basics again.

… And the only reason I'm standing in a changing room is because he protected us, when we did nothing to deserve his help. He wasn't even fazed when Akane's squadmates pressured him, as if trying to make him react aggressively.

So, I should start doing an effort to regain everybody's trust, while also looking out for him. So, just like he did with Yoroi when she had just returned, I should focus on lending them my own strength.

"I was thinking on going to the library, to reread the books and try to find a hint towards how we should proceed. Does anyone want to join in?"

"Oh, yeah! I am so looking forward to reading up on how the Fubuki works!" Yoroi's smile could barely be contained by her lips.

"Sigh… We need to focus on the standard movements before that. We won't get to pilot a TSF until then."

"Man, I wonder if we're gonna get to see them when they bring them here." Swaying slowly, she closed the locker with her suit.

